4. C. was possessed of a fire-clay field, to which he had made a private railway, communicating with the M. & K. railway, belonging to the appellants. The appellants, in 1845, obtained an Act for constructing a branch from their railway, in making which they interfered with the private railway. By the Railways Clauses Act the appellants were bound, within a certain period, under penalties, to cause a substituted railway to be made instead of the one interfered with. C. entered into an agreement for a lease with M. of the fire-clay field, by which it was stipulated that the lessee should have the use of the private railway. The agreement also provided, that in case the appellants should fail to make the substituted railway, C. would do so at his own expense. The company not having made the substituted railway, M. brought an action against C., and recovered damages. C. then sued the appellants for the amount on an implied indemnity, and for special damage:—Held, that C. could have maintained an action ex delicto against the company for neglecting to restore the substituted railway, and that the provision contained in s. 47, as to penalties, did not extinguish such right of action, the remedy under such section being only cumulative. Nor was C. confined for a remedy to the statutory tribunal which the Legislature has provided where losses are sustained in the formation of railways. That tribunal is only established to give compensation for losses sustained in consequence of what a railway company may do lawfully under the powers of the Act by which it is constituted. For anything done in excess of those powers, or contrary to the provisions of the Act, the proper remedy is in the ordinary tribunals of the country. Caledonian Railway Co. v. Colt, 3 Macq. H. L. Ca. 833; 7 Jur., N. S., 475.

Held, also, that C. was not entitled to recover the money paid by him to M., as the action brought by the latter was ex contractu on an agreement to which the appellants were not privy; whereas the cause of action by C.

against the appellants was ex delicto. C. should have himself made the substituted railway, and then sued the company for the cost and any other special damage. Ib.

1. Upon one of the sections of a railway, deposited with the clerk of the peace, and referred to by an Act (afterwards passed) authorising the formation of the line, there was a note to the effect that a particular road, therein delineated, was to be stopped up, and another, therein also delineated, was to be a substituted road for it :—Held, that the public and the landowners were not thereby affected with notice, so as, upon the ground of acquiescence, to be precluded from obtaining an injunction, upwards of four years afterwards, on the company's proceeding to stop up the road. Att.-Gen. v. Great Northern Railway Co., 4 De G. & Sm. 75 ; 14 Jur. 684 ; 15 Jur. 387.

The works for stopping up the above-mentioned road were commenced in October 1849, but it was not rendered entirely impassable till February 1850 :—Held, that an application for an injunction in February 1850 was not too late. Ib.

The provisions of the Railways Clauses Consolidation Act 1845, requiring a substituted road to be made in certain cases :—Held, not to be satisfied by an existing road, which was alleged to be as convenient as any new substituted road could be. Ib.

A bill stated that a railway company was interfering with a public road, by digging a trench and lowering the level of it, and causing a permanent and complete obstruction. The bill prayed for an injunction restraining the company from obstructing the road or rendering the same less convenient for the passage of carriages, etc., than it had previously been, until it had made a proper substituted road. An injunction to that effect was granted. The company then changed its plan, and, instead of lowering the road, carried the railway across it on a level, with posts and gates which were closed only during a few short and ascertained periods in the day, when trains crossed :—Held, that the general terms of the injunction were not restricted by reference to the particular nature of the injury complained of, but that it had in spirit, as well as terms, been violated. A sequestration was ordered to issue for the contempt, and was only stayed upon appeal, upon the defendants paying all the costs, and undertaking to construct a road in conformity with the provisions of the Railways Clauses Consolidation Act, and in the meantime to provide and maintain a free passage at all times. Ib.

Where an injunction was granted in May against a railway company, and a sequestration was directed to issue in November for a breach of it, the Court refused to suspend the latter order pending an appeal from both orders, although the result of the sequestration would be to compel the defendants to construct a bridge (which would become unnecessary if the order should be reversed), and to stop the traffic on the line in the meantime. Ib.

2. Section 16 of the 8 & 9 Vict., c. 20, authorizes the permanent diversion of public roads, and not only a temporary diversion for the purpose of constructing a railway. Phillipps v. London, Brighton, & South Coast Railway Co., 4 Giff. 46 ; 9 Jur., N. S., 348 ; 7 L. T., N. S., 663.

3. Where a railway company had obstructed an alleged public right of way, and the evidence showed that the public right had been so dealt with that it had been lost, and did not establish a private right of way, the Court refused an injunction against the company, and left the plaintiff to pursue his remedy by action on the case, under the provisions of the Railways Clauses Act, 8 & 9 Vict., c. 20. Freeman v. Tottenham & Hampstead Junction Railway Co., 11 Jur., N. S., 107 ; 13 W. R. 335 ; 11 L. T., N. S., 702.

4. The Court will, by mandatory injunction, restrain a trespass the continuance of which will inflict irreparable damage upon persons in possession. Damage which it is impossible to measure will be deemed irreparable. London & North Western Railway Co. v. Lancashire & Yorkshire Railway Co., 36 L. J., Ch. ; 4 L. R., Eq., 174 ; 17 L. T., N. S., 43 ; 15 W. R. 810.

A bill was filed to restrain a railway company from placing an obstruction, partly on a public footway and partly on land belonging to the plaintiffs and a rival railway company, so as to block up the access to a station of the plaintiffs, and alleged that the injury to the traffic by allowing the obstruction to remain would be irreparable, and that the Act was done without any colour of title by the defendants :—Held, that this was one of the exceptional cases in which the Court would interfere to restrain a trespass by a stranger. Ib.

5. A railway company was empowered, for the convenience of the public, to widen a bridge over a lane, but the time for the compulsory purchase of land had expired ; the soil of the lane was vested in a board which had the powers of surveyors :—Held, that as the soil was vested in the board for the convenience of the public, the Court would not interfere by injunction, as the inconvenience to the public passing along the lane would be none, or very small. Wandsworth Board of Works v. London & South Western Railway Co., 8 Jur., N. S., 691 ; 10 W. R. 814.

Held, also, that the inconvenience to the public whilst the works of the bridge were going on was not enough to induce the Court to interfere. Ib.

6. A railway company while constructing a railway laid down sleepers and rails for some distance over one side of a highroad, and ran locomotives and trucks over it. No fence had been put up between these rails and the portion of the road left for the ordinary traffic, which was in places narrow :—Held, that although the evidence did not show that the public had been greatly inconvenienced by this proceeding, the highroad had thereby been rendered "dangerous and extraordinarily inconvenient," and that the railway company must be restrained by a perpetual injunction from using the highway till it had made a substituted road. Att-Gen. v. Widnes Railway Co., Widnes Railway Co. v. Widnes Local Board, 30 L. T., N. S., 449 ; 22 W. R. 607.

7. When a railway company has diverted a road ultrà vires, but with a bonâ fide view to the convenience of the public, a court of equity will not compel it to replace the road so as to make its work intrà vires, if the result will be to cause greater inconvenience to the public, or the complaining section of the public

Att-Gen. v. Ely, Haddenham, & Sutton Railway Co., 6 L. R., Eq., 106 ; 37 L. J., Ch., 822 ; 16 W. R. 834.

In such a case an information was dismissed without costs, and without prejudice to the attorney-general proceeding against the company at law. Ib.

If a railway crosses a highway without diverting it, a bridge must be made for the highway over or under the railway, according to the Railways Clauses Consolidation Act, 1845, s. 40, but the highway may be diverted, under ss. 16, 53, and 56, to a place where there is a level crossing, if the road so diverted will be more convenient than a bridge. S. C. 4 L. R., Ch., 194 ; 38 L. J., Ch., 258 ; 17 W. R. 356 ; 20 L. T., N. S., 1.

1. A railway company was by its special Act empowered to stop up, certain streets and passages in the metropolis, including L. C., and to appropriate and use such streets and passages, or parts so stopped up, for the purpose of the railway and works, and it was authorized to grant leases of superfluous lands. The company erected a station at the north end of L. C., and thereby completely stopped it up as a thoroughfare, and it purchased all the houses along each side of the street, but did not expressly purchase or pay for, or take any conveyance of the soil of the street itself ; nevertheless it treated the whole of the space formerly occupied by the street as well as by the houses on each side of it (which they had pulled down) as vested in it, and it surrounded it with hoarding, stopping up the south end of the street, and leased a plot of land comprising the ground at the south end of the street to the defendants for building purposes. Builders occupying premises in the street running at right angles to L. C., claimed a special right of access to them over the end of L. C. for the purpose of conveying long ladders and poles to their premises, beyond the right of the public in the street as a highway. They filed a bill to restrain the railway company from building so as to interfere with this alleged right, and moved for an injunction :—Held, that the railway company having stopped up the one end of the street which it required for the purposes of its station, and having purchased all the houses in the street, had a right to stop up and appropriate the rest of the street, and accordingly the motion was refused. Temple v. Flower, 41 L. J., Ch., 604 ; 20 W. R. 587 ; 26 L. T., N. S., 657.

The railway company and the attorney-general ought to be parties to such suit. Ib.

2. A railway Act obtained by the Great Eastern Railway Company for extending its line into the city of London, and making a station, incorporated the Railway Clauses Act 1845, and declared that plans and sections had been deposited, and then gave a general power to stop up streets within a given area. Sun Street was within the area, but the plans and sections had described it as crossed by an arch, and in a subsequent Act, where many of the levels were altered, it was spoken of as crossed underground by a tunnel. The railway company proposed to build a station on the soil of Sun Street :—Held, that the company might do so ; for that the street being within the area described, there was nothing inconsistent in the provisions of the Acts, the power to cross the street by an arch or a tunnel not affecting the right to use the surface of the soil for a station to be built within the area described in the Act. Att-Gen. v. Great Eastern Railway Co., 6 L. R., H. L., 367. Affirming 22 W. R. 281.

Held, also, that ss. 13 and 14 of the Railway Clauses Act, 8 & 9 Vict., c. 20, were controlled by the section in the special Act which gave power to stop up the streets within the defined area. S. C. 7 L. R., Ch., 475 ; 41 L. J., Ch., 505 ; 20 W. R. 599 ; 26 L. T., N. S., 749.

Upon a motion for an injunction, the Court had granted an injunction restraining the company from permanently stopping up the street until the hearing of the cause. S. C. 25 L. T., N. S., 867.

In matters of great importance which can only be properly determined at the hearing, the Court is in favour of restraining destructive operations until the hearing. Ib.

8. Stations.

3. The intention of Eton College to exclude the Great Western Railway Company from having a station within three miles of Eton being admitted or apparent, and they having procured to be introduced into the Act clauses prohibiting the company from forming, making, or laying down a railway or tram or other road to the south of the line, approaching within three miles of the college, and for making or constructing a depôt, station, or yard, etc., within three miles of the college, without the consent of the college, and the company having set down and taken up passengers without such consent within the prohibited space :—Held, that the words did not restrain it from so doing, the company being entitled to do all the Act does not upon a strict construction restrain it from. Injunction refused. Eton College (Provost) v. Great Western Railway Co., 1 Rail. Ca. 200 ; 3 Jur. 163.

4. Under a compulsory power in a railway Act to take land for the "railway and works" :—Held, the company might do so for the purpose of building a station. Cother v. Midland Railway Co., 2 Ph. 469 ; 5 Rail. Ca. 187 ; 17 L. J., N. S., Ch., 235.

5. Where by a clause in a railway Act it was provided that "it should not be lawful for the railway company to make or establish any public station, yards, wharves, waiting, loading, or unloading places, warehouses, or other buildings and conveniences for the depositing, receiving, loading, or keeping any passengers or cattle, or any goods, articles, matters, or things, upon the estate of R. G. without his consent" :—Held, upon demurrer, that the word public did not necessarily apply to every building, and that if it did, every convenience connected with the railway must, upon the question of demurrer, be considered as public, and therefore within the restriction of the clause. Gordon v. Cheltenham Railway Co., 5 Beav. 229 ; 2 Rail. Ca. 800.

The Court also granted the injunction, the case of acquiescence having failed, and the evidence of inconvenience to the public being scanty. The Lord Chancellor, on appeal, directed the opinion of a court of law to be taken as to the construction of the Act. S. C. 2 Rail. Ca. 872.

1. Where the Legislature has vested special powers in a particular body for special purposes, a general Act subsequently passed will not override those special powers. By a clause in a railway Act, after reciting that plans and sections of the widenings, enlargements, and other works proposed to be made, describing the lands intended to be taken or used for the purposes of such widenings and enlargements, and for the stations, works, and conveniences to be connected therewith, and also books of reference, had been deposited with the clerks of the peace, the company was empowered to "widen, alter, enlarge, and complete its railway, and other works, in, upon, or over the lands delineated on the plans and described in the books of reference, and to enter upon, take, and use such of the lands described upon the plans, and in the books of reference, as might be necessary for such purposes, and to purchase and acquire any easement, right, or limited interest upon, over, through, or in any of the lands";—Held, that this authorized the building of a station upon part of the lands described, and not only such works as were necessary for the mere widening of the railway, the station being necessary for the public convenience. London & Blackwall Railway Co. v. Limehouse District Board of Works, 3 Kay & J. 123; 26 L. J., Ch., 164; 5 W. R. 64.

2. The Court refused to restrain one railway company from using the station of another, under an agreement which was made between the two companies before a connection had been established between the company using the station and a third company, which brought such third company into competition with the company to whom the station belonged, it not being clear that the right of the defendants to use the station was not intended to be given by their special Act, the agreement being open to the construction that the extent and terms of the station accommodation were from time to time to form the subject of reference to arbitration, and there being no award specifying the time at which it should determine; the rival or competing company having also been in existence at the time the agreement was made, and the plaintiffs being therefore at that time aware of the possibility of the competition afterwards arising; and, supposing the question to be doubtful, the balance of convenience preponderating against granting the injunction. Midland Railway Co. v. Ambergate, Nottingham, & Boston & Eastern Junction Railway Co., 10 Hare 359; 1 W. R. 162.

3. A first-class station means a station at which all trains other than express, mail, or special trains are in the habit of stopping. Flood v. North Eastern Railway Co., 21 L. T., N. S., 258.

Where, therefore, a railway company had taken land with respect to which there was a covenant existing "that the land should for ever thereafter be used as a goods depôt, and as a first-class station for taking up and setting down passengers travelling along the company's line of railway"; and the company had only allowed third-class or merely local trains to be advertised to stop at the station built on the land, and there was no goods depôt provided:—Held, that the company was bound by the covenant; and an injunction was granted to restrain it from allowing the ordinary fast trains to pass the station. Ib.

4. On the purchase of land by a railway company in 1838, the company covenanted with the landowners that a piece of the land purchased should "for ever thereafter be used and employed as and for a first-class station or place for the purpose of taking up and setting down passengers travelling along the railway." The station was built and the railway was completed in 1842; the railway company was afterwards made part of a company with a much greater length of railway. In 1869 the landowner filed a bill to compel the company to build a larger station and to stop all trains at that station:—Held, that as the existing station had not been objected to, and had remained for many years, and as the passengers were not numerous, the Court would not compel a larger station to be built; but that as many trains as stopped at any other station between the termini of the original railway, excepting mail, express, and special trains, must stop at this station. Hood v. North Eastern Railway Co., 5 L. R., Ch., 525; 18 W. R. 473; 23 L. T., N. S., 206. Affirming 8 L. R., Eq., 666; 20 L. T., N. S., 970; 17 W. R. 1085.

5. A contract entered into by a railway company with a landowner to build a railway station at a particular spot, nothing being said as to the user of the station, or the degree of convenience and accommodation to be afforded by it, is too vague and indefinite to be enforced by decree for specific performance; but the Court will give damages for the breach of such contract, and in assessing those damages will give the landowner the benefit of all such presumptions as, according to the rules of law, are made against wrongdoers. Wilson v. Northampton & Banbury Junction Railway Co., 43 L. J., Ch., 503; 9 L. R., Ch., 279; 22 W. R. 380; 30 L. T., N. S., 147.

6. A railway company purchased lands from C., and agreed to erect a station at A., and that the trains should stop there for passengers and luggage. It entered into possession of the lands before the conveyance was executed, but did not erect a station, and C. served a writ of ejectment upon it. The company then filed their bill against C. praying for the specific performance of the contract. A decree was made ordering specific performance, and that C. should execute a proper conveyance of the lands, and that such conveyance should contain a covenant by the company to erect the station, and that trains should stop there for passengers and luggage. This conveyance was duly executed. Under Acts of Parliament of 1867 and 1873, confirming agreements between the company and the L. S. W. Company, the latter company was empowered to take a lease for 1,000 years of the S. railway, and to work it, and was, during such lease, to be liable to all duties and obligations to which the S. Company, if the Acts had not been passed, would be subject and liable. No station was erected. On bill filed by C. against both companies:—Held, that though the L. S. W. Company was a necessary party to the suit, no case whatever had been made out against them, inasmuch as it was not bound either in law or in equity by the covenant entered into by the S. Company with C. to erect a station, but that it would be bound, when the station was made, to stop its trains there. Churchill v. Salisbury & Dorset Railway Co., 23 W. R. 894. Varying 23 W. R. 534; 33 L. T., N. S., 216.

1. Three railway companies, under an Act of Parliament, being entitled to the joint use of a station, one of them, as it was alleged by one of the others, unfairly used the station to the detriment of such other company, which filed a bill to restrain the use of the station by such other company, except in accordance with the Act. A general demurrer was put in to the bill, on the ground chiefly that a committee of the three companies was, under the Act, the proper tribunal, and it was overruled. Mid-Wales Railway Co. v. Cambrian Railways Co. 21 L. T., N. S., 16.

9. Streams, User and Diversion of.

2. A railway company, in exercise of the powers conferred on it by an Act of Parliament, which gave compensation to persons whose property might sustain damage from its operations, was proceeding to erect an arch above a mill race, for the purpose of sustaining an embankment on which the railway was to be constructed, and it appearing that injury would be done to the mill, if the arch were of the proposed dimensions, but that the injury would be avoided if the arch were of certain larger dimensions, an injunction was granted to restrain the company from making over the mill race an arch of less than certain specified dimensions. Coats v. Clarence Railway Co., 1 Russ. & M. 181; 8 L. J., Ch., 72.

3. A railway company made excavations upon its own land, the purpose of which was the partial diversion of the stream of water of a navigable river; and the works so prosecuted necessarily occasioned the obstruction of a private road. The plaintiffs, who were the owners of a fulling mill, which was supplied with water from the river, alleged that the proposed diversion of the stream was illegal under the powers of the Act. The plaintiffs, who had a right of way over the private road, also alleged that the company was interfering with the road without the performance of the conditions imposed by the railway Act, as preliminary to interfering with the road:—Held, that although the company were working on their own land, the plaintiffs must be held to have had notice of the intended works of the company; and had by an acquiescence for eighteen months, during which the company had expended a large sum of money on the works, precluded itself from asking for the interposition of this Court by injunction. Semble, the plaintiffs, although interested, by the situation of their property or the nature of their business, in preserving open the navigation of the river Calder, but not otherwise interested in the navigation, were not entitled to sustain a suit to enforce clauses in the railway Acts protecting the Calder navigation from injury by the railway works. Illingworth v. Manchester & Leeds Railway Co., 2 Rail. Ca. 187.

4. A railway company is only justified in diverting streams and roads as authorized by the 16th section of the Railways Clauses Act 1845, when such diversions are strictly necessary to enable the company to carry out the undertaking, and therefore the right to make such a diversion cannot be insisted on where it is only convenient or economical for the company to do so. A railway company, in order to avoid the expense of making two bridges within a very short distance of each other, diverted a stream and carried it along the east side of their line, so that it no longer entered the plaintiff's land, which lay on the west side of the line. The plaintiff only used the stream for the purposes of watering cattle; and although the company provided (by means of culverts) for a sufficient flow of water for this purpose in the old bed of the stream:—Held, that the diversion of the stream being only convenient and economical, and not strictly necessary, was not justified by the Act, and that the plaintiff was therefore entitled to an injunction to restrain the company from interfering with the flow of the stream, as formerly enjoyed. Pugh v. Golden Valley Railway Co., 15 L. R., Ch. D., 330; 49 L. J., Ch., 721; 42 L. T. 863; 28 W. R. 863. Affirming 12 L. R., Ch. D., 27; 48 L. J., Ch., 666; 4 L. T. 30.

The power conferred on a railway by the 16th section of the Railways Clauses Act 1845, to divert the course of a river or road, "in order the more conveniently to carry the same over or under, or by the side of the railway, as it may think proper," is to be taken as cut down and qualified by the proviso that it be an act necessary for making, maintaining, altering, or repairing, and using the railway. Ib.

5. By an Act of Parliament authorizing the construction of a railway, it was provided that nothing in the Act should authorize or empower the railway company "to obstruct the navigation of a river, or any part thereof, or to divert any of the waters therein or which now supply the river":—Held, that this clause applied only to the time of construction of the railway, and did not take away the rights of the company as a riparian proprietor. Att-Gen. v. Great Eastern Railway Co., 23 L. T. 344; 18 W. R. 1187. Affirmed 6 L. R., Ch., 572; 19 W. R. 788.

The ordinary right of the riparian proprietor is to take so much water as he requires for domestic or similar purposes:—Held, that the fact that the railway company did not require water for such purposes did not entitle it to take it for other purposes, such as supplying their locomotives. Ib.

6. A railway company whose line crossed a stream in the immediate neighbourhood of one of their stations, took water for supplying its engines and for the general purposes of the station. On a bill filed by a millowner lower down the stream, it appeared that the abstraction of water did no damage in wet weather, and never shortened the working of the mill for more than a few minutes a day:—Held, that the company, as riparian owner, was entitled to take a reasonable quantity of water for its purposes, and that in this case the quantity taken was reasonable. Sandwich (Earl) v. Great Northern Railway Co., 10 L. R., Ch. D., 707; 49 L. J., Ch., 225; 27 W. R. 616.

1. The owner of land not abutting on a river, with the licence of a riparian owner, took water from the river, and after using it for cooling certain apparatus returned it to the river undiminished and unpolluted :— Held, that a lower riparian owner could not obtain an injunction against the landowner so taking the water, or against the riparian owner through whose land it was taken. Northam v. Hurley (1 E. & B. 665), and Sampson v. Hoddinot (1 C. B., N. S., 590) distinguished. Kensit v. Great Eastern Railway Co., 23 L. R., Ch. D., 566 ; 52 L. J., Q. B., 608 ; 48 L. T. 784 ; 31 W. R. 603.

10. Tunnels.

2. Semble, that under the Railway and Lands Clauses Acts companies are entitled permanently to use the land for the purposes of tunnels without doing more than paying for the permanent user and occupation of the land. Pinchin v. London & Blackwall Railway Co., 2 W. R. 696 ; 2 Eq. Rep. 1172; 1 Jur., N. S., 241 ; 24 L. J., Ch., 417.

3. A railway company, having constructed a tunnel, proceeded to dispose of the ground under which the tunnel ran, and contracted on the 5th June to sell a portion to B., subject to the condition that he was to erect no buildings nor make any excavations, etc., but according to a specification approved in writing by the principal engineer. B. entered immediately, and sent in plans in August to the resident engineer, for the approval of the principal engineer. The resident engineer never submitted them to the principal, but told B. verbally that he might proceed. B. thereupon proceeded till the 26th October, when the conveyance was completed, and the company's solicitor, finding him carrying on building operations, asked if he had the approval in writing of the principal engineer, and told him he must procure it. The principal engineer then for the first time saw the plans of the proposed buildings, and immediately condemned them as dangerous to the tunnel, and therefore, of course, also dangerous to the proposed houses. B. insisting on proceeding, the company caused an information to be filed to restrain him, on the ground of danger to the public. A counter information was thereupon filed against the company to restrain it from running its trains, on the same ground of danger to the public. The fact of danger to the public by the continuation of B.'s plans was fully made out. An injunction had been obtained on the first information, and refused on the second:—Held, at the hearing, first, that the approval of the company's resident engineer was not binding on the company ; and, secondly, that the defendant B. having been allowed to continue his works from August to the 26th October was, under the circumstances, not such an acquiescence on the part of the company as to exempt B. from being restrained from further prosecuting his building. Att.-Gen. v. Briggs, 1 Jur., N. S., 1084.

4. A railway company acquired land under special Acts, which contained no provision as to sale of superfluous lands, but incorporated the Lands Clauses Consolidation Act 1845. It made its line in a cutting, which it covered over with an arch forming a tunnel :— Held, that the company had no right to grant building rights over the crown of the tunnel. Re Metropolitan District Railway Co. and Cosh, 40 L. T. 482.

5. In 1871 the plaintiff became the purchaser in fee simple of hereditaments, described in the deed of conveyance as "all that piece of ground with the sixteen messuages thereon." The houses were divided into two blocks by a cul-de-sac or passage open at one end only, which had been dedicated to the use of the public for twenty years, but the soil of which the plaintiff claimed as his private property by virtue of his conveyance. A railway company, being about to tunnel under this cul-de-sac, gave the plaintiff a notice to treat in respect of three houses on each side of it, but not in respect of that part of the cul-de-sac between them, the company contending it was a public way or street :—Held, that the cul-de-sac was a public way or street, and that the company was entitled to tunnel under it without paying the plaintiff any compensation. Souch v. East London Railway Co., 42 L. J., Ch., 477 ; 16 L. R., Eq., 108.

6. Circumstances of acquiescence and part performance, under which a railway company was held bound by an agreement for making a tunnel running into and upon their land, although no contract had been executed pursuant to the 8 & 9 Vict., c. 16, s. 97, and although the terms of such agreement were not ascertained without some difficulty. Laird v. Birkenhead Railway Co., 1 Johns. 500 ; 6 Jur., N. S., 140; 29 L. J., Ch., 218.

11. Injuries by Exercise of Powers.

7. Where a public company is exceeding its powers, a court of equity cannot refuse to interfere by injunction, notwithstanding that irreparable mischief is not shown to result from the proceedings of the company. River Dun Navigation Co. v. North Midland Railway Co., 1 Rail. Ca. 135.

8. Parties injured by the conduct of a railway company, in exceeding the powers conferred upon it by Act of Parliament, are entitled to the most effectual remedy within the power of a court of equity ; and where it appeared that the injury complained of would be remedied by suspending an injunction, an injunction which had been granted was suspended for three weeks. Spencer v. London & Birmingham Railway Co., 1 Rail. Ca. 159.

9. The sixty-ninth section of a railway Act enacts that, in all cases in which, in the exercise of any of the powers thereby granted, any part of any quay, wharf, or other communication shall be found necessary to be cut through, taken, or so much injured as to be impassable, or inconvenient for the transporting, conveying, landing, shipping, or depositing of any goods or merchandise, the company shall, at its own expense, before any such quay, wharf, etc., shall be cut through, taken, or injured as aforesaid, cause another equally convenient quay, etc., to be set out and made instead thereof. The railway was made to pass injunction to restrain the obstruction of the works, has not jurisdiction to award and secure to it possession of such temporary easement. Ib.

1. Specific performance will not be decreed of an act which the defendant cannot lawfully carry into execution, and which would be useless to the plaintiff if it were carried into execution. A railway company ordered to make a drain contracted for. Powell v. South Wales Railway Co., 1 Jur., N. S., 773.

II. OPENING LINE.

2. An information was filed praying a declaration that a railway company, constituted for making a principal and a diverging line of railway, was bound to construct the diverging line as well as the principal, and to open the whole for public traffic simultaneously, and for an injunction to prevent it from making one line until another was made, or until the notices to treat were given to the landowners preliminarily to making such other line. A general demurrer to this bill was allowed, the Vice-Chancellor guarding himself from expressing any opinion as to what he should have done if this had been a bill by a shareholder, or an information and bill, instead of an information only. Att.-Gen. v. Birmingham & Oxford Junction Railway Co., 3 Macn. & G. 453; 16 Jur. 113. Affirming 15 Jur. 1024; 4 De G. & Sm. 490.

If the public interests represented by the attorney-general were entitled to have the second line of railway made, they should proceed by mandamus. Ib.

The fact that the writ of mandamus could not be obtained till after the Long Vacation did not give any equity that could support the information. Ib.

Whether the Court would have granted the relief asked if the proceeding had been by bill by a shareholder or an aggrieved landowner, quære. Ib.

Whether, at the hearing, an injunction can be granted which the bill or information did not seek, quære. Ib.

3. The defendants were, by Act of Parliament, authorized to make a short line, uniting their main line with the plaintiffs' line; but the defendants were prohibited from opening their main line until the junction should be completed. In default of the defendants making the junction within a specified time, the plaintiffs were authorized to make it. The defendants proposed opening their main line before the completion of the junction:—Held, that the plaintiffs had a sufficient interest to entitle them to an injunction to prevent this proceeding, and that it was not necessary to resort to an information for that purpose, and an injunction was granted, although the delay in opening the main line might be prejudicial to the public. Cromford & High Peak Railway Co. v. Stockport, Disley, & Whaley Bridge Railway Co., 24 Beav. 74; 3 Jur., N. S., 628; 5 W. R. 636.

Held, on appeal, that it is not imperative on the Court to enforce by interlocutory injunction a statutory prohibition, and where a railway company was about to violate a clause in its Act expressly prohibiting the opening of a main line until a junction line was opened, but which appeared to have been introduced merely for the purpose of obliging the company to complete speedily the junction line, the Court, on an undertaking being given to complete the junction line, with all practicable diligence, suspended an interlocutory injunction granted by the Court below to restrain the opening of the main line. S. C. 1 De G. & J. 326.

4. When an inspector of the Board of Trade reports to the Board of Trade that the opening of a railway will be attended with danger to the public by reason of the incompleteness of the works, and gives the grounds of his opinion, the requisitions of the 5 & 6 Vict., c. 55, s. 6, are satisfied. The Board of Trade has exclusive jurisdiction in the matter, and the Court will not enter into the question whether the reasons given by the inspector do not show on the face of the report that he has come to a wrong conclusion. Att.-Gen. v. Great Western Railway Co., 4 L. R., Ch. D., 735; 46 L. J., Ch., 192; 25 W. R. 330; 35 L. T., N. S., 921. Affirming 35 L. T., N. S., 302; 24 W. R. 1015.

The term "incompleteness" in that section includes defectiveness or imperfection generally, and such incompleteness may arise from the state of the works upon a neighbouring line with which the railway in question is connected. Ib.

5. Under statutory powers junctions were made between the main line of a railway company and two branch lines of railway on opposite sides of the main line, so that trains coming from one of the branch lines ran for some distance along the main line, and then passed on to the other branch line. Some years afterwards the company laid down a line of railway parallel to its main line for about a mile, and substituted for one of the original junctions a new junction, nearly opposite to the other original junction, so as to form between the two branch lines a level crossing over the main line. The company also made two new stations on this new line:—Held, that the new line was a railway or a portion of a railway which, under 5 & 6 Vict., c. 55, s. 4, could not be opened without previous notice to the Board of Trade. Att.-Gen. v. Great Western Railway Co., 7 L. R., Ch., 767.

6. When a petition was presented by a judgment creditor, for the appointment of a receiver of the tolls of a railway company, and it appeared that the line had not been used by the company, although a portion of it had been occupied, and maintained by another company, without payment of compensation:—Held, that the railway had not been opened for public traffic within the meaning of its Act. Re Beddgelert Railway Co., 19 W. R. 427.

7. A railway company, being empowered by their Act to make a double line of mixed gauge lines, opened the down line of rails on the mixed gauge with the sanction of the Board of Trade. Afterwards they gave notice to the Board of Trade that the up line was ready to be opened, and the Board of Trade appointed an inspector, who reported that the up line was not safe by reason of the incompleteness of the permanent way. The Board accordingly gave notice to the company, under the 5 & 6 Vict., c. 55, to postpone the opening of the line for a month. The company disregarded the notice and opened the line. The attorney-general filed an information to restrain the company from using the up line without the sanction of the Board of Trade :—Held, on a motion for an injunction, first, that the Board of Trade were not functi officio by reason of having sanctioned the opening of the down line. Secondly, that the Court of Chancery will interfere at the instance of the attorney-general to restrain an act which has been declared by a competent authority to be illegal, without considering the grounds on which the act has been declared illegal. Thirdly, that in the present case the Court would grant an injunction without looking at the grounds on which the inspector had given his certificate. Att.-Gen. v. Oxford, Worcester, & Wolverhampton Railway Co., 2 W. R. 330.

1. Jurisdiction of Court of Chancery.

1. A railway company was, by its special Act, required to construct and maintain such culverts, drains, etc., under the railway as two justices should, upon the application of any landowner in case of dispute, judge to be necessary for his accommodation. In 1841 the company constructed an embankment for the railway across lands belonging to the plaintiff's predecessors, and made a culvert under the embankment for the purpose of draining the lands. Twenty years afterwards the plaintiff came into possession of the lands, and found that, owing to the height of the bottom of the culvert, the water could not be properly drained off. Upon a suit by him to compel the company to provide a proper drain: —Held, that the Court of Chancery, independently of the question whether it had jurisdiction or not, would not interfere in questions of accommodation works, but that such questions ought to be referred to two justices, as provided by the Act. The Court will refuse to exercise a concurrent jurisdiction as well after the completion of the railway as during its construction. Hood v. North Eastern Railway Co., 11 L. R., Eq., 116; 19 W. R. 266; 23 L. T., N. S., 433.

The Court of Chancery will not entertain a suit to enforce the making or repairing railway accommodation works unless recourse has been had in the first instance to justices, where by Act of Parliament they have jurisdiction in the matter. S. C. 40 L. J., Ch., 17.

2. Where land is taken by a railway company, not under its compulsory powers, but by private contract, the jurisdiction of the Court of Chancery to secure to the vendor the easements he contracted for is not ousted by the provisions of the railway Acts. Sanderson v. Cockermouth & Workington Railway Co., 2 H. & Tw. 327; 19 L. J., N. S., Ch., 503. Affirming 11 Beav. 497.

2. Private Ways.

3. A railway company, about to sever the plaintiff's land by its railroad, agreed to purchase the necessary portion of land, "subject to the making such roads, ways, and slips for cattle as might be necessary" :—Held, that, although it was very difficult to execute an agreement thus expressed, yet that the plaintiff was entitled to a specific performance; that the word "necessary" must receive a reasonable interpretation. The expression was held to mean "such roads, ways, and slips for cattle as might be necessary and proper for convenient communication between the severed portions of the plaintiff's land"; and a reference was therefore directed to ascertain what was necessary and proper. Sanderson v. Cockermouth & Workington Railway Co., 2 H. & Tw. 327; 19 L. J., N. S., Ch., 503. Affirming 11 Beav. 497.

Where land is taken by a railway company, not under its compulsory powers but by private contract, the jurisdiction of the Court of Chancery, to secure to the vendor the easements he contracted for, is not ousted by the provisions of the railway Acts. Ib.

4. The Metropolitan Board of Works, under the powers conferred on them by the Thames Embankment Act 1862, cut off from its river frontage a piece of land belonging to the defendant. The question of compensation was referred to an umpire, who made his award in the belief that the land had been made inaccessible to carriages by the embankment works. By s. 62, the Board of Works was bound to provide means of access to the land. The defendant filed a bill to compel them to make the land accessible to carriages, and at the same time commenced an action for the whole amount awarded. The Board of Works filed a bill for an injunction against the action: —Held, that the action must be restrained until the hearing of the cause. Metropolitan Board of Works v. Salisbury (Marquis), 20 W. R. 507; 26 L. T., N. S., 390.

S. was entitled to houses in Cecil and Salisbury Streets, and to a piece of low level ground at the south ends of these streets. The low level communicated by means of two lanes at the banks of the streets with the Strand on the north side, and by means of wharves, with the river Thames on the south side. In 1862 the Thames Embankment Act authorized the construction of the embankment road and of the ornamental gardens alongside of the river. These improvements were completed in 1870; their effect was to deprive the low level ground in question, and also the two streets, of all communication with the river or with the embankment on the south side. S., as the owner of the depreciated property, had obtained 10,000*l.* as compensation assessed by an umpire; but under s. 62 of the Act of 1862, S. was entitled besides to full and free communication to the embankment road and the river, and he claimed that such right belonged to him in respect as well of the houses in Cecil and Salisbury Streets as of the low level ground, and that the right in dispute was to a wheel or a cartway, and not to a footway merely. The makers of the improvements had offered to construct a convenient footway across the gardens to the embankment road, but such

3. A railway company is bound to apply all its moneys and property for the purposes directed and provided for by the Act of Parliament, and not for any other purposes whatever. Any application of or dealing with the capital funds, or money, in any manner not distinctly authorized by the Act is illegal; and where directors, for purposes not authorized by the Act, are proceeding to involve the company or shareholders in liabilities to which they never consented, relief may and ought to be given in this court. 5. Although it is competent to directors of every railway company, on complying with the Wharncliffe Order, to apply to Parliament for an extended line, or for any other extension of their powers, they will be restrained from defraying the expenses of such application out of the assets of the company, and from issuing new shares, purporting to be shares in the company, except for the purposes and under the powers of existing Acts. Vance v. East Lancashire Railway Co., 3 Kay & J. 50.

6. It is improper and wrong for railway companies to embark their funds in other railway undertakings; and they have no right to engage or pledge their funds, or entangle their affairs, in unauthorized transactions, upon the speculation that they may obtain parliamentary authority for doing acts which are beyond their powers at the time when they are done. Logan v. Courtown (Earl), 13 Beav. 22; 23 L. J., N. S., Ch., 347.

Motion to restrain a company from declaring a forfeiture of shares, by reason of the non-payment of calls, alleged to be made for illegal purposes, refused; although it appeared that the directors had conducted the proceedings, in many particulars, in a very improper manner, it being sworn that money was wanted to satisfy existing legal obligations of the company, and it being denied that the company sought to enforce the calls for illegal purposes. Ib.

7. An incorporated railway company having powers within a fixed time to complete a branch line, commenced, but afterwards, by a vote of the proprietary, suspended for a time the works. Before its powers expired, the works, on a resolution of the shareholders, were resumed, and actively prosecuted. After a lapse of nearly a year, the powers having then expired, and the branch railway still being unfinished, two shareholders, on behalf of themselves and the other shareholders, filed a bill to restrain the further prosecution of the works. On a motion for an injunction:—Held, that the plaintiffs having been aware of the intention to construct the line, and not having applied with diligence, the Court would not grant the injunction. Ffooks v. South Western Railway Co., 1 Sm. & G. 142; 17 Jur. 365; 1 W. At a Wharncliffe meeting subsequently held, a resolution was passed by a majority of more than thirty to one, authorizing the presenting by the company of a bill in Parliament to enable it to dispose of the concern. One of the dissentients at the Wharncliffe meeting moved to restrain the company from carrying out the agreement, and from presenting the proposed bill in Parliament, and from applying any part of its funds towards its promotion. 4. Where purchases of land are made under the compulsory powers of an Act of Parliament, the purchasers on the one hand, and the vendors on the other, have a right to confine the exercise of the ownership to the specified purpose. Bostock v. North Staffordshire Railway Co., 2 Jur., N. S., 248; 25 L. J., Ch., 325; 3 Sm. & G. 283; 5 De G. & Sm. 584.

By an Act of Parliament a company was formed for constructing a canal, and the lands to be taken for that purpose were to be vested in the company "to and for the use of the navigation, but to or for no other use or purpose whatever." By a subsequent Act, the company was authorized to purchase lands for the purpose of making a reservoir for supplying the canal with water, but under the powers and restrictions contained in the former Act. By subsequent Acts the canal, and all powers and obligations, became vested in a railway company. The canal company took land from B., and thereon form the Rudyard lake or reservoir, adjoining which B. was possessed of a mansion-house, etc., and was entitled to a right of fishing in part of the lake, but the railway company was possessed of the land covered with the water of the lake. In 1851 the company issued a programme for the celebration of a "grand fête or regatta" on the lake, against which the solicitors of B. remonstrated; but the company persisted in holding the fête, which resulted in injury to B. and her property. On the issuing of a programme for another fête, B. filed this bill, praying that the company might be restrained from holding the fête, and on an undertaking being given by the railway company, the motion stood over. Subsequently an action was brought by B. against the company, but the jury could not agree on a verdict. In December 1851 the motion for an injunction was again made, when the Court continued the order previously made until after the next assizes. At the new trial a verdict was returned for B., with nominal damages. An injunction was again moved for, and granted; but the Court directed a case for the opinion of the Queen's Bench. On the questions submitted to the judges, a majority of them certified in favour of B. The legal right of B., to protect which the suit was instituted, having by a court of law been affirmed:—Held, that that legal right ought to be protected, and accordingly a perpetual injunction was granted to restrain the railway company from using the reservoir to the injury of B., or for any other purposes than those mentioned in and authorized by the Acts of Parliament. Ib.

The rights of ownership in fee conferred on public companies by Act of Parliament are, by the settled doctrine of the Court, restricted and qualified by the terms of the legislative contract; and therefore where in an Act of Parliament it was said in express words that the fee-simple and inheritance of property were to vest in a company "to and for the use of the navigation, but to or for no other use or purpose whatever":—Held, that the words were inserted for the benefit of the vendors of the land, and the company was restrained from using the land for any purpose not authorized by the Act. Ib.

A provision in an Act for making a railway, that certain land to be purchased by the railway company should be appropriated to, and used solely for, the purposes of the railway and the buildings connected therewith (except such part as might be required by the Board of Ordnance, or for widening approaches to the station), and should not be used or employed for erecting thereon any coke ovens, or for any other purposes (the necessary railway purposes only excepted) by which any nuisance might be created, or the other property of the vendors in any way damaged:—Held, to refer to the use of the land, or the mode in which it was to be laid out or applied, and not to refer specifically to the use of the buildings which might

At a Wharncliffe meeting subsequently held, a resolution was passed by a majority of more than thirty to one, authorizing the presenting by the company of a bill in Parliament to enable it to dispose of the concern. One of the dissentients at the Wharncliffe meeting moved to restrain the company from carrying out the agreement, and from presenting the proposed bill in Parliament, and from applying any part of its funds towards its promotion. On the company undertaking not to apply any of its funds towards promoting the bill, the Court refused the motion. Mathias v. Wilts & Berks Canal Navigation Co., 34 L. T., N. S., 346.

2. It is not lawful to apply the funds of a company in an application to Parliament for powers to extend the business of the company beyond the objects for which it was constituted, and the Court will interfere, by injunction, at the suit of a shareholder, to restrain any such application. Simpson v. Denison, 10 Hare 51; 16 Jur. 828,

The same principles which regulate the rights of parties in ordinary partnerships are applicable in determining the duties of the managing bodies in joint stock companies, as between them and members of such companies. Ib.

3. User of Land, Extent of.

4. Where purchases of land are made under the compulsory powers of an Act of Parliament, the purchasers on the one hand, and the vendors on the other, have a right to confine the exercise of the ownership to the specified purpose. Bostock v. North Staffordshire Railway Co., 2 Jur., N. S., 248; 25 L. J., Ch., 325; 3 Sm. & G. 283; 5 De G. & Sm. 584.

By an Act of Parliament a company was formed for constructing a canal, and the lands to be taken for that purpose were to be vested in the company "to and for the use of the navigation, but to or for no other use or purpose whatever." By a subsequent Act, the company was authorized to purchase lands for the purpose of making a reservoir for supplying the canal with water, but under the powers and restrictions contained in the former Act. By subsequent Acts the canal, and all powers and obligations, became vested in a railway company. The canal company took land from B., and thereon form the Rudyard lake or reservoir, adjoining which B. was possessed of a mansion-house, etc., and was entitled to a right of fishing in part of the lake, but the railway company was possessed of the land covered with the water of the lake. In 1851 the company issued a programme for the celebration of a "grand fête or regatta" on the lake, against which the solicitors of B. remonstrated; but the company persisted in holding the fête, which resulted in injury to B. and her property. On the issuing of a programme for another fête, B. filed this bill, praying that the company might be restrained from holding the fête, and on an undertaking being given by the railway company, the motion stood over. Subsequently an action was brought by B. against the company, but the jury could not agree on a verdict. In December 1851 the motion for an injunction was again made, when the Court continued the order previously made until after the next assizes. At the new trial a verdict was returned for B., with nominal damages. An injunction was again moved for, and granted; but the Court directed a case for the opinion of the Queen's Bench. On the questions submitted to the judges, a majority of them certified in favour of B. The legal right of B., to protect which the suit was instituted, having by a court of law been affirmed:—Held, that that legal right ought to be protected, and accordingly a perpetual injunction was granted to restrain the railway company from using the reservoir to the injury of B., or for any other purposes than those mentioned in and authorized by the Acts of Parliament. Ib.

The rights of ownership in fee conferred on public companies by Act of Parliament are, by the settled doctrine of the Court, restricted and qualified by the terms of the legislative contract; and therefore where in an Act of Parliament it was said in express words that the fee-simple and inheritance of property were to vest in a company "to and for the use of the navigation, but to or for no other use or purpose whatever":—Held, that the words were inserted for the benefit of the vendors of the land, and the company was restrained from using the land for any purpose not authorized by the Act. Ib.

5. A provision in an Act for making a railway, that certain land to be purchased by the railway company should be appropriated to, and used solely for, the purposes of the railway and the buildings connected therewith (except such part as might be required by the Board of Ordnance, or for widening approaches to the station), and should not be used or employed for erecting thereon any coke ovens, or for any other purposes (the necessary railway purposes only excepted) by which any nuisance might be created, or the other property of the vendors in any way damaged:—Held, to refer to the use of the land, or the mode in which it was to be laid out or applied, and not to refer specifically to the use of the buildings which might be erected upon the land; that "buildings connected therewith" did not mean buildings only connected locally with the railway, but meant buildings especially applicable to the uses of that particular railway, and that the construction of the clause was not to be governed by considerations of what would or would not be connected with other and different railways; that the building erected by the company being used as a custom-house for the examination of the luggage of passengers landing from the Continent, many of whom travelled by the railway, such user was for the purpose connected with the railway, and that the use, being to some extent for such purpose, it did not cease to be so, within the meaning of the provision, merely because all the purposes for which the building was used were not purposes connected with the railway. Dover (Harbour Wardens) v. South Eastern Railway Co., 9 Hare 489; 21 L. J., N. S., Ch., 886.

Where there is a parliamentary power to sell in fee, but with a restriction of the rights of ownership in the purchaser, and a conveyance to an owner in fee is made under such power, sound construction requires that the restriction imposed upon the purchaser, who becomes the owner in fee, shall not be extended beyond its necessary limits. Ib.

1. A railway company purchasing land for the railway acquires an absolute fee simple, but such fee simple is acquired solely for the purposes of constructing and using the railway. Norton v. London & North Western Railway Co., 9 L. R., Ch. D., 623; 47 L. J., Ch., 859; 39 L. T., N. S., 25. Affirmed 13 L. R., Ch. D., 268; 41 L. T. 429; 28 W. R. 173.

A railway company has no right to erect hoardings to prevent prescriptive rights being acquired for windows looking across the line of railway. Ib.

A railway company is liable to an action for nuisance for using its rights so as to injure the neighbouring landowner where it might use them without such injury. Ib.

A railway company may by its conduct abandon land outside its fence which was formerly its own, so as to permit the adjoining owner to acquire such land by adverse possession. Ib.

2. A railway company, having the usual powers under its special Act to take and use land for the purpose of the railway and works, cannot, whether for valuable consideration or otherwise, alienate for any purpose except the purposes of the Act any portion of its land, not being "superfluous land" within s. 127 of the Lands Clauses Act 1845, and not being land taken for extraordinary purposes within s. 45 of the Railways Clauses Act 1845, nor any easement over the same. Mulliner v. Midland Railway Co., 11 L. R., Ch. D., 611; 48 L. J., Ch., 258; 27 W. R. 330; 40 L. T. 121.

Where a railway station is erected on arches on land thus taken, the part of the land under the arches is not "superfluous land" within s. 127 of the Lands Clauses Act 1845. Ib.

The B. railway company, having, under its Act, acquired land, constructed its railway, and erected a station which was partly built on arches, sold to its contractors its superfluous land, and also purported to convey to them without consideration a right of way under one of the arches leading to part of the land so sold though not being a way of necessity thereto. The contractors sold the land and alleged right of way to the plaintiff. The M. railway company had, under the said Act, entered into a working agreement with the B. railway company, whereby, after the line was opened, the M. railway company was "to manage, work, and use" the railway and works, and to develop the traffic. The M. railway company now required the arch in question as a closed yard for loading and unloading goods. In an action by the plaintiff to restrain the M. railway company from interfering with his right of way:—Held, that the alienation of the right of way under the arch was ultrà vires: that the M. railway company was entitled to use the land under the arch in the way proposed; and that, its title being prior to that of the plaintiff, who must be taken to have notice of the company's rights, his action could not be sustained. Ib.

4. Lease of Line and Working Agreements.

3. An agreement between two railway companies, made without the authority of the Legislature, whereby one company delegates to another all the powers which have been conferred upon it by Parliament, is an unlawful attempt to effect that which parliament alone can authorize, and is against public policy, and in such a case the Court will not interfere to assist either of the parties in obtaining a collateral benefit which the agreement would give, or aid them in any manner which would promote the object of the agreement. Great Northern Railway Co. v. Eastern Counties Railway Co., 9 Hare, 306.

4. A railway company entered into an agreement to lease its line to another company. The agreement contained provisions which were legal, and others which were ultrà vires, but an application was to be made to Parliament for power to carry out such provisions as should be ultrà vires:—Held, that as the agreement provided for a number of things to be done, which were all for the purpose of accomplishing an object that was ultrà vires, the parties had no right, by virtue of that agreement, until they had obtained the authority of Parliament to do even those acts which, independently of the agreement, they did not require the authority of Parliament to do. The Court, in granting an injunction to this extent, refused to restrain two directors, appointed under the agreement, from acting, on the ground that the shareholders had power to remove them, and that their removal might be detrimental to the business of the company. Hattersley v. Shelburne (Earl), 10 W. R. 881; 31 L. J., Ch., 873.

5. The Brighton Railway Company and the South Western Railway Company jointly became purchasers, under an Act obtained in 1847, of a line of railway called the Portsmouth Extension Railway, including the station known as the Landport station. The 13th section enacted, "that each of the two companies might at all times thereafter use the joint line for the purposes of conveying passengers, animals, and things upon the same, and for all such other purposes as should be necessary for the traffic or business thereon of the respective companies." There were provisions for the tolls to be demanded, and for enabling the companies to enter into a contract between themselves for the purpose of ascertaining the profits of the joint line, and the division of such profits. The South Western and the Portsmouth Companies entered into an agreement in 1858, by which they agreed to apply to Parliament in the then ensuing session for an Act to enable the latter company to lease its line to the former company for the term of 999 years, at a rental of 18,000*l.* a year; and, if unsuccessful in obtaining the Act, that they should repeat their efforts in 1860, and that in the meantime the South Western Company should work the Portsmouth line and pay the rent. By this arrangement the traffic on the South Western Company was greatly increased. On a bill filed by the Brighton Company to restrain the other companies from using the joint station for the traffic coming from the Portsmouth line, and for an account:—Held, that the Act of 1847 did not create a joint tenancy carrying with it the right of using for every kind of traffic a station appurtenant to the joint line, and that the South Western had no right to use it except for what was properly traffic of that company. London, Brighton, & South Coast Railway Co. v. London & South Western Railway Co., 4 De G. & J. 362; 5 Jur., N. S., 801; 28 L. J., Ch., 321.

Held, also, that the agreement between the South Western Company and the Portsmouth Company was ultrà vires and illegal, and that the conveyance of passengers and goods under it did not constitute traffic which could be considered traffic of the South Western Company within the meaning of the Act of 1847. Ib.

Held, therefore, that the Brighton Company was entitled to an injunction restraining the South Western Company from using the joint station for the purposes of any traffic destined for or coming from the Portsmouth Railway, or any part thereof. Ib.

1. An Act of Parliament empowered one railway company to grant, and another company to accept, a lease of a railway upon such terms as should be agreed upon, provided that the power to lease should not arise till the Board of Trade had certified that it had been proved to their satisfaction that half the capital of the leasing company had been raised, and applied for the purposes of its Acts; and it was also provided that no lease should be of any effect unless previously sanctioned by three-fifths of the shareholders of each company voting at a special meeting:—Held, that no lease, or binding agreement for a lease, could be made before the certificate had been obtained. Kent Coast Railway Co. v. London, Chatham, & Dover Railway Co., 3 L. R., Ch., 656; 19 L. T., N. S., 174; 16 W. R. 1027.

Heads of agreement for a lease were sanctioned by majorities of three-fifths at meetings of the two companies without any certificate of the Board of Trade being obtained, and were acted upon for several years, but no formal lease, or agreement for a lease, was ever executed. The heads of agreement were also invalid as providing for payment of the rent out of profits not so applicable:—Held, that the arrangement was not ratified by references to it in subsequent local and personal Acts of Parliament not expressing any direct intention to confirm it. Ib.

2. Where a contract between two companies proves to be one by which one of the contracting parties will gain considerable advantages, at the expense of the other, while the other will receive no corresponding benefit, whether such contract is or is not legally valid, equity will not aid in enforcing it by a decree for specific performance. Shrewsbury & Birmingham Railway Co. v. North Western Railway Co., 6 H. L. Ca. 113; 3 Jur., N. S., 775; 26 L. J., Ch., 482.

A private Act of Parliament authorized one railway company to accept a lease of another railway; the directors of the first company then entered into an agreement with the directors of a third company, the stipulations of which were to be performed during the continuance of such lease. No lease within the provisions of the Act was ever granted. The agreement appeared to be, if legally valid, at least unfair to the shareholders of one of the companies:—Held, that equity could not enforce it by a decree for specific performance. Ib.

An Act of Parliament recited three other Acts, one only of which had relation to an agreement entered into between the plaintiffs and defendants. By the first section, on the completion of the works of the three lines of railways, by the recited Acts authorised to be made, so as to be opened for public traffic, or at such other period as might be agreed upon, the S. U. R. Co. were empowered to grant to the L. & N. W. R. Co. a lease in perpetuity of the undertaking. By the eleventh section of the same Act, it was enacted, that as each of the lines of railway should be completed, the same should be worked and used by the L. & N. W. R. Co., and for the purposes of such working, the L. & N. W. R. Co. were to exercise the powers before given by the Act to the S. U. R. Co. in relation to every such completed railway. Other sections of the Act spoke of the "lease of the said railways," and the "making of such lease":—Held, that, according to the true construction of the Act, there was no postponement of the rights of the parties to the benefits of the provisions of the lease, until the whole of the three lines had been completed. S. C. 2 Macn. & G. 324; 2 H. & Tw. 257; 20 L. J., N. S., Ch., 90; 14 Jur. 921, 1125.

3. The S. railway company was authorized by its Act to "make and maintain" a railway, with all proper stations, approaches, and works, and was empowered to transfer or sell the railway before or after completion, and all the powers of the company, to the D. railway company. By a working agreement, the terms of which were incorporated in the Act, it was provided that the S. company was to complete the line, and that, when completed, it should be maintained and worked by the D. company in perpetuity, and that it was to pay an annual sum to the D. company. On the completion of the line the D. company took possession of and worked the same under the agreement, but no sale to it of the railway had been effected. While the D. company was thus in possession the S. company, acting under the alleged powers in the Act, in order to provide a better access to a station on the line, erected some stone steps in the station yard, which the D. company removed. In an action for a mandatory injunction to compel the D. company to restore the steps :—Held, that, on the true construction of the Act and working agreement incorporated therewith, the D. company was entitled to the exclusive possession and right of maintenance of the railway and works ; and that the erection of the steps was a work of maintenance, and was a wrongful act on the part of the S. company. Sevenoaks, Maidstone, & Tunbridge Railway Co. v. London, Chatham, & Dover Railway Co., 11 L. R., Ch. D., 625 ; 48 L. J., Ch., 513 ; 27 W. R. 672 ; 40 L. T. 545.

Under power to "maintain" a railway and works, reasonable improvements, consistent with the purpose of the undertaking, are included. Ib.

1. The Caledonian Railway Company, for thirteen years up to July 1879, had been proprietor of the D. and A. railway, and had incurred certain liabilities in respect of payment of dividends to preference and ordinary shareholders of the D. and A. line. The preamble of the North British Railway (D. and A. Joint Line), passed July 1879 (42 & 43 Vict., c. 155), set forth that it was expedient that the Caledonian and North British Companies should have equal rights and powers, and be subject to equal liabilities over and with respect to the D. and A. line. Section 3 provided that on and after the 1st of February 1880, called the "vesting period," all interest which the Caledonian possessed should be transferred to the Caledonian and North British jointly and in equal proportions in manner hereinafter provided by the Act. Section 6 provided that the consideration for the transfer of the joint line shall be as follows: "(1), From and after the vesting period the company (the North British) shall pay to the Caledonian Railway Company half-yearly, on the 1st of March and 1st of September in each year, a sum equal to one-half of the aggregate of the following half-yearly payments, for which the Caledonian Railway Company is now liable in respect of its acquisition of the D. and A. railway." The Caledonian Railway Company claimed that under this section there was a half-yearly payment amounting to 5,903*l.* 15*s.* due on the 1st of March 1880 :—Held, that the liability to make payment in 1880 did not arise till September, the time of payment applicable to the first six months following the 1st of February 1880. Caledonian Railway Co. v. North British Railway Co., 6 L. R., App. Cas. (Sc.), 114 ; 29 W. R. 685.

2. A railway company having agreed to let its line to another, which had taken possession under the agreement, filed a specific performance bill against the other, which thereupon gave notice that it would pay the rent into court. The plaintiffs then gave the defendants notice, that unless the rent were paid to the plaintiffs, interest would be claimed on it under the 3 & 4 Will. 4, c. 42, s. 28. The defendants obtained ex parte an order that they might be at liberty to pay the rent into court, and paid it in accordingly :—Held, that they thereby obstructed the recovery of interest at law, and that the Court had jurisdiction to order payment of interest. Hull & Selby Railway Co. v. North Eastern Railway Co., and the Lancashire & Yorkshire Railway Co., 5 De G. M. & G. 872.

3. By a contract under seal between a railway company and J. it was agreed that the rolling stock of the company should be valued and handed over to J., who was to work the railway at certain mileage rates, to be paid monthly, subject to a deduction by way of remuneration for the use of the stock, and also to a deduction on the value of the stock, as a "depreciation fund." Valuations of the stock were made at the commencement, and during the continuance of the contract, on the assumption that the "depreciation fund" was merely a "guarantee fund" in the hands of the company, and was not to belong to them eventually, save so far as it was necessary to meet actual depreciation. On the faith of the depreciation fund being a guarantee fund only, J. made considerable expenditure, which diminished or prevented the depreciation of the rolling stock. Upon the determination of the contract, J. brought an action at law against the company, in which it was determined that the depreciation fund was not a guarantee fund, but belonged to the company in all events. It was held by the Lord Chancellor of Ireland, but overruled on appeal, that an equity had arisen from the dealings between the parties subsequently to the contract, and that J. was not precluded by the result of the action from obtaining relief in equity. The Lord Chancellor was of a different opinion as to the rule of equity, and Lord Wensleydale as to the facts assumed by the Lord Chancellor of Ireland, as the ground of the equity on which he decided. Per the Lord Chancellor.—The fact that a person has acted upon a mistaken view of his right under a contract, does not entitle him to relief in equity or at law. Midland Great Western Railway of Ireland Co. v. Kinder, 6 W. R. 510 ; 4 Jur., N. S., 643.

5. Running Powers.

4. In 1848 the East Lincolnshire Railway Company agreed with the defendants that a station on the defendants' line should be used equally by both companies, but should be subject to the by-laws of the defendants, and that a committee of three from each board should be appointed to arrange the working of the traffic, etc ; that the cost and maintenance of the station and the working should be borne by the two companies equally ; that the defendants should afford to the East Lincolnshire Railway Company facilities for access to the Great Grimsby Docks ; and that the East Lincolnshire Railway Company should give up a piece of land to the defendants ; that the defendants should have the right of running with their engines, etc., on the East Lincolnshire line between Great Grimsby and Louth ; and that the East Lincolnshire Railway Company should have the same right over the defendants' line between Great Grimsby and New Holland, paying in either case 66 per cent. of the gross receipts to the company whose line was used ; and that each company should provide station accommodation for the other at New Holland and Louth respectively for three years, as therein mentioned. The said East Lincolnshire line of railway became vested in the plaintiffs, as lessees thereof, for 999 years. Disputes arose between the companies, which ended in the defendants preventing the plaintiffs from running their engines, etc., on the line between Great Grimsby and New Holland, and giving them a formal notice to determine the agreement. On motion, an injunction was granted to restrain the defendants from obstructing the plaintiffs running their engines, etc., over that part of the defendant's line mentioned in the agreement: Held, that the agreement was permanent, and could not be determined without the consent of both parties, and was not a mere licence revocable at the will of either. An agreement to grant an easement of this nature to a corporate body need not be by deed, and might be permanent, although it was to the company only, and not to the company and its successors. Great Northern Railway Co. v. Manchester, Sheffield, & Lincolnshire Railway Co., 5 De G. & Sm. 138; 16 Jur. 146.

Held, also, that the terms of the contract were not too vague, but that the user conceded was one consistent with the proper engagement of the railway, the subject matter of the contract, and with the rights of the granting party; held, also, that this Court will grant an injunction, restraining the defendants from acting contrary to a negative agreement, although it cannot specifically enforce the performance of the whole of the agreement. Ib.

1. The object of the eighty-seventh section of the Railways Clauses Consolidation Act (8 Vict., c. 20) is to enable one railway company to contract for the passing of its trains to the limits of the railway of another company, with the incidents which ordinarily attach to such power of passing, including that of stopping at the stations on the line, and carrying passengers and goods to and from such stations. But it does not enable one railway company, under colour of passing over the line of another company, to carry the whole of the traffic of the other railway over which it may agree to pass. Simpson v. Denison, 10 Hare 51; 16 Jur. 828.

An agreement by one railway company for the payment to another of such an amount as will, after answering all expenses and liabilities, furnish a certain dividend on the paid-up capital of such other capital, is not an agreement for the payment of a toll within the meaning of the eighty-seventh section of the Railways Clauses Consolidation Act. Ib.

By an agreement between the G. N. Railway Company and the A. Company, the G. N. Company was, first, to bear harmless the A. Company against all its guarantees to canals or otherwise; secondly, the G. N. Company was, until an Act of Parliament could be obtained, to work the traffic of the A. Company, and to pay it such toll as should, after answering the expenses and liabilities of the A. Company, pay a dividend of 4 per cent. on the paid-up capital of the A. Company; and after obtaining the Act of Parliament, the G. N. Company was to guarantee 4 per cent. to the A. shareholders; and thirdly, the G. N. Company was, in the next session of Parliament, to apply at its own costs for an Act of Parliament to ratify this agreement, and to keep on renewing such application, if unsuccessful, always at its own expense. The Railways Clauses Consolidation Act 1845 was embodied in the Acts of the G. N. and A. Companies. On a bill by two shareholders of the G. N. Company to restrain their directors from carrying out this agreement, or from defraying out of the fund of the company the costs of such applications:—Held, that the arrangement was not within the purview of the Railways Clauses Consolidation Act 1845, s. 87; and that payments mentioned in the agreement were not tolls within the meaning of the section. Ib.

Quære, what is a toll, and how ought tolls to be reserved within that section. Ib.

Semble, a toll is a payment for the right of passing along a highway, public or private; it is a payment connected with the passing over, and should probably be reserved with reference to the number of carriages passing over the line. Ib.

2. Whether s. 92 of the Railways Clauses Consolidation Act does or does not convert railways into public highways, and whether that section be or be not controlled by s. 87 of the same Act, giving powers to companies to enter into agreements as to passing over or along each other's lines, yet when an agreement as to the terms of passing over or along each other's lines has been entered into between railway companies, their rights in respect of such passing depend upon the terms of the agreement, and are no longer governed by the provisions of the Railways Clauses Consolidation Act. Great Northern Railway Co. v. Eastern Counties Railway Co., 9 Hare 306; 21 L. J., Ch., 837.

Construction of an agreement between two railway companies, enabling one to pass over and use the railway stations, watering places, and sidings upon and appertaining to the other, and giving the right of access to such parts of the stations and appurtenances as were necessary to the traffic on and over the other, with a covenant to give the same facilities and assistance as its own traffic of the like character should receive. Ib.

One railway company having granted to another the use of its lines and of all conveniences upon the lines, cannot object to its grantees using the rights so granted for any purposes to which it may be able to apply them, even if the grantors were not entitled to use them for such purposes, semble. Ib.

An agreement between two railway companies, made without the authority of the legislature, whereby one company delegates to another all the powers which have been conferred upon it by Parliament, is an unlawful attempt to effect that which Parliament alone can authorise, and is against public policy; and in such a case, the Court will not interfere to assist either of the parties in obtaining a collateral benefit, which the agreement would give, or aid them in any manner which would promote the object of the agreement. Ib.

3. Where an agreement was entered into by two railway companies giving mutual rights of running trains on each other's lines, and company A. had possessed and enjoyed for several years the rights granted to them, while company B. took no steps to enforce the stipulation in their favour, and allowed the time to expire within which it should have been performed, an injunction was granted to restrain company B. from disturbing the enjoyment of the rights of company A. Great Northern Railway Co. v. Lancashire & Yorkshire Railway Co., 1 Sm. & G. 81.

1. Where a railway company, over whose line another railway company has running powers, is empowered to make regulations as to the construction of the carriages to be used on the railway, the onus lies upon the company having the running powers to show that the regulations are unreasonable and unnecessary. Rhymney Railway Co. v. Taff Vale Railway Co., 29 Beav. 153; 7 Jur., N. S., 202; 30 L. J., Ch., 482; 9 W. R. 222; 4 L. T., N. S., 227. Affirmed 4 L. T., N. S., 534.

The fact of the regulations having been wholly or in part relaxed in the past is no reason for the Court to interfere to restrain them from being strictly enforced in the future. Ib.

2. A railway, associating, allying, and connecting itself with another, does not thereby become equitably "amalgamated" with it; and an agreement to amalgamate as from a time past may possibly in equity amount to amalgamation, but an agreement to do so at a future period will not until that period arrives. Shrewsbury & Birmingham Railway Co. v. Stour Valley Railway Co., 2 De G. M. & G. 866.

Pending the progress of a bill through Parliament, authorizing the S. V. Company to lease its line to the N. W. Company, the bill was opposed by the S. B. Company, and, upon a compromise, a clause was inserted, securing to the S. B. Company the use of part of the land and the joint use of a station, subject to the cesser of these rights in the event of the S. B. Railway Company being leased to or amalgamated with a fourth company, viz., the G. W., who were rivals to the N. W. Company. At this time the S. B. Company was under no engagements to the G. W. Company. Subsequently, however, those two companies entered into agreements, giving facilities and preference to each other's traffic, and agreed to amalgamate at a future time, if the sanction of Parliament could be obtained:—Held, that this was not such a change of circumstances produced by the conduct of the S. B. company as to exclude it from equitable relief by injunction for the enforcement of the right of user conferred on it by the Act. Ib.

The Court may interfere between two railway companies entitled to the joint use of a station by prescribing regulations for its management; but such interference is not to take place without grave occasion. The Court may also direct a partition of the station, and appoint a receiver, if necessary. But where provisions exist for the settlement of disputes on the above subjects by arbitration, the Court will withhold its interposition until the remedy thus provided has been resorted to. Ib.

3. A railway company contracted with another for the use of the line of the latter for a term, at graduated tolls, according to the tonnage carried, which were to be a charge on the tolls and dues of the former company. The former company had no express parliamentary power thus to charge its tolls:—Held, that the charge was of too doubtful legality to be enforced by an injunction to restrain the former company from paying a dividend to its shareholders until the sums due upon the agreement were provided for, no case being made out showing a probability of there being no fund forthcoming to answer the demand at the hearing. South Yorkshire Railway & River Dun Co. v. Great Northern Railway Co., 3 De G. M. & G. 576; 22 L. J., Ch., 761; 1 W. R. 203.

Semble, that a railway company cannot legally or equitably mortgage its undertaking without the authority of Parliament. Ib.

Semble, that such an agreement is not a contract for the use of a line, nor for an apportionment of tolls within the 87th section of the Railway Clauses Consolidation Act, 8 Vict., c. 20. Ib.

4. Heads of a proposed agreement were arranged between the directors of two railway companies, by which one company was to allow the other company, for ninety-nine years, to work the lines, and use the property and plant of the granting company, except certain specified lands and buildings, upon certain terms of allowance for working expenses and charges, and the maintenance for works and ways, the property and plant to be restored on the termination of the agreement, on terms of profitable return to the granting company; and provision was made for application to Parliament for powers, if needful. On a bill by a shareholder in the granting company, on behalf of himself and all other the shareholders in that company except the directors, against that company and the other company:—Held, first, that the proposed agreement was a delegation of some of the statutory powers of one of the companies to the other, which was contrary to the policy of their Acts, and could neither be granted nor accepted without further powers from Parliament; that it was a contract savouring of illegality, which, at the suit of any shareholder, this Court would restrain; and the Court, on motion, restrained the company from perfecting the agreement. Secondly, that such an agreement is not distinguishable on principle from a lease, to grant which is clearly not within the statutory powers of the granting company. Thirdly, that s. 87 of the Railways Clauses Consolidation Act merely gives to one company a limited power to run a portion of its traffic only, when it is necessary for the purposes of its own traffic, over the line of another railway company. Fourthly, that an agreement for an application to Parliament for powers necessary to enter into the above terms, and upon a stipulation that they should not be acted upon until the necessary powers should have been obtained, would be lawful, and would not be restrained. Fifthly, that the suit being by one shareholder, on behalf of himself and the other shareholders in the granting company, against that company, and the other company proposing to enter into an illegal agreement, without making any directors or other persons parties, seeking an injunction against the granting company to restrain them from perfecting the agreement was properly framed. Winch v. Birkenhead, Lancashire, & Cheshire Junction Railway Co., 5 De G. & Sm. 562; 16 Jur. 1035.

5. When two railway companies gave mutual running powers to one another over parts of their respective lines, with a stipulation that local traffic should be respected:—Held, that by local traffic was meant the traffic between two stations, both being on one of the lines over which the running powers extended. Midland Railway Co. v. Manchester, Sheffield, & Lincolnshire Railway Co., 22 L. T., N. S., 601.

1. A. company, being owner of a station, entered into agreement with B. company to make a new junction between their respective lines, so that B. company may use such station. C. company, having running powers over A. company's line, subsequently entered into an agreement with B. company for use of B. company's line. An attempt of C. company to go from B. company's line to A. company's line over the junction was resisted on the ground that C.'s agreement with B. did not give a right to use such injunction, and even if it did, such agreement was ultrà vires and invalid, as being a delegation of statutory powers, and as such against public policy:—Held, that the effect in law of the right to make the junction was to make the two lines one continuous line, which the public had a right to use, and therefore also a company working under arrangements with companies owning the two lines. That the agreement as stated did not amount to a delegation of statutory powers, nor was it ultrà vires. Midland Railway Co. v. Great Western Railway Co., 42 L. J., Ch., 438; 8 L. R., Ch., 841; 21 W. R. 657; 28 L. T., N. S., 718.

2. By an agreement between the directors of two railway companies, the North Western Company was to have running powers over the Llanelly Railway Company's lines, subject to its by-laws; was to be at liberty to have its own staff at its stations, and be allowed a reasonable sum for cartage, clerkage, etc.; the latter company was to be at liberty to call on the North Western Company to carry passengers and goods for the Llanelly Company upon its local lines, and both sets of directors bound themselves to send by each other's lines all traffic not otherwise consigned. A chief consideration for this agreement was an advance of money by the North Western directors to the Llanelly Company's directors; but no mention of this consideration was made in the agreement. Though there were in the agreement provisions for referring to arbitration any differences that might arise as to the agreement, there was not any mention of any time for which it was to endure, or how it might be terminated:—Held, that all the provisions of the agreement showed that it was a permanent and not a terminable agreement; and that, consequently, a notice to terminate it at the end of six months from a given time was invalid. Llanelly Railway & Dock Co. v. London & North Western Railway Co., 7 L. R., H. L., 550; 23 W. R. 927; 32 L. T., N. S., 575; 45 L. J., Ch., 539. Affirming 42 L. J., Ch., 884; 8 L. R., Ch., 942; 21 W. R. 889; 29 L. T., N. S., 357.

Such an agreement appeared to be authorized by the Railways Clauses Act 1845 (8 & 9 Vict., c. 20, s. 87); and any differences arising between the two companies occasioned by any hardship felt in the working of the agreement, on either side, might be made the subject of arbitration under 22 & 23 Vict., c. 59. Ib.

The usages and rules of law applicable to the determination of contracts for hiring, service, or partnership, have no application to contracts between railway companies. An agreement between railway companies not ultrà vires, and by its terms unlimited in duration of time, can only be determined, failing mutual consent, by an Act of Parliament. Ib.

The agreement provided that the London and North Western Company, in the event of its exercising its running powers, should be at liberty to have its own staff of clerks at the stations on the company's line, and should carry the local traffic of the Llanelly Company if required to do so:—Held, that this was not a handing over of the management of the one company to the other such as would be contrary to the spirit of the railway Acts if done without express parliamentary sanction. Ib.

6. Rolling Stock.

3. The doctrine of ultrà vires as explained in Ashbury Railway Co. v. Riche (7 L. R., H. L., 63) is to be maintained, but is to be applied reasonably, so that whatever is fairly incidental to those things which the Legislature has authorized by an Act of Parliament ought not (unless expressly prohibited) to be held as ultrà vires. Att.-Gen. v. Great Eastern Railway Co., 5 L. R., App. Cas., 473; 49 L. J., Ch., 545; 42 L. T. 810; 28 W. R. 769. Affirming 11 L. R., Ch. D., 449; 48 L. J., Ch., 428; 27 W. R. 759; 40 L. T. 265.

In an Act of this kind granting special powers, what is not permitted is prohibited. Ib.

Semble, the test applied in Ashbury Railway Co. v. Riche to the powers of a joint stock company (limited) registered under the Companies Act 1862 applies with equal force to the case of a railway company incorporated by Act of Parliament. Ib.

An Act of Parliament authorized a company to make a railway to T. and S. There were two other railway companies which were afterwards combined into one called the Great Eastern Railway Company. This latter company entered into a contract with the T. and S. Company, with which it was in connection in several respects, to supply it with rolling stock upon receiving a certain annual payment, and having certain other advantages. The contract was adopted by the shareholders of both companies. An action was brought against the Great Eastern Company, and an injunction asked for to restrain it from executing this contract. One of the Acts relating to the two companies contained (clause 14) the following provision: "The two companies may enter into agreements with respect to the working, maintenance, and management of the extension railway [this was the T. and S. Railway], or any part thereof, and of the railways of the two companies connected therewith [these were the two companies which had been incorporated under the name of the Great Eastern], and with respect to the apportionment of the traffic, and of the tolls, fares, and charges for traffic on the extension railway, and the railways of the two companies, the appointment of a joint committee, or any other matters incident to the carrying out the purposes of this Act." The 15th clause of the Act was in these words: "The directors of the T. and S. Company, and the directors of the two companies respectively, may (subject to the sanction of the shareholders) enter into any contracts or agreements for effecting all or any of the purposes of this Act, or any objects incidental to the execution thereof, and every such contract or agreement may contain such covenants, clauses, powers, provisions, and conditions as may be mutually agreed upon between the parties thereto": —Held, that the contract of the Great Eastern Company to supply the T. and S. Company with rolling stock was not ultrà vires, but was warranted by the words of these sections of the Act. Ib.

1. A railway company being in want of money, and being advised that it had no power to borrow, sold part of its rolling stock to a waggon company for 30,000*l.*, at the same time making a contract with the waggon company for the hire of this rolling stock at a rent which would repay the 30,000*l.* and interest in five years. At the same time three of the directors of the railway company guaranteed to the waggon company the payment of the rent. The waggon company brought an action against the sureties and the railway company for rent due:—Held, that the transaction being bonâ fide, and what it purported to be, was not an illegal and void transaction under 7 & 8 Vict., c. 85, s. 19, and 30 & 31 Vict., c. 127, s. 4, by being a cloak for borrowing money. Yorkshire Railway Waggon Co. v. Maclure, 21 L. R., Ch. D., 309; 51 L. J., Ch., 857; 47 L. T. 290; 30 W. R. 761. Reversing 19 L. R., Ch. D., 478; 51 L. J., Ch., 253; 45 L. T. 747; 30 W. R. 288.

Held, also, that if the transaction had been a mere device for borrowing money, it would have been illegal. Ib.

Semble, although the fact of the railway company having a debenture debt could not affect the liability of the railway company on the contract, debenture holders have some sort of security on the rolling stock for the time being, subject to the right of the railway company to use and otherwise deal with it in the ordinary course of business, but the railway company cannot sell the whole of the rolling stock to pay debts which are subsequent in priority to the debentures. Ib.

2. A railway company sold its rolling stock to a waggon company for a sum of money, and the waggon company let the rolling stock back to the railway company at a rent, on payment of which for a term the railway company was to become repossessed of the rolling stock, the rent being equal to the purchase money and interest. The Court of Appeal decided that the transaction was a bonâ fide sale and re-hiring, and not a sham transaction as a cloak for borrowing. (See Yorkshire Waggon Co. v. Maclure, 21 L. R., Ch. D., 309.) A receiver of the railway company's undertaking having been appointed under s. 4 of the Railway Companies Act, certain moneys which represented rent of some of the rolling stock let by the railway company to another company, and proceeds of sale of other rolling stock, were paid to the receiver. Debenture holders, who had become such after the date of the above-mentioned agreement of sale and re-hiring, and also the waggon company, claimed the money:—Held, that, although by s. 23 of the Act "all money borrowed . . . by a company on . . . debenture stock . . . shall have priority . . . debenture stock . . . shall have priority . . . over all claims on account of any debts . . . or engagements" (except as in the section specified), that section was subject to s. 4, by which moneys received by a receiver under the Act were not payable to creditors until after due provision for the working expenses of the railway and other proper outgoings in respect of the undertaking; and that the rent of the rolling stock was a "working expense," and a "proper outgoing," and entitled to priority over the claim of the debenture holders. Re Cornwall Minerals Railway Co., 48 L. T. 41.

Distress.] 3. By 30 & 31 Vict., c. 127, s. 4, the rolling stock of a railway company is protected from distress. Eyton v. Denbigh, Ruthin, & Corwen Railway Co., Rickman v. Johns, 38 L. J., Ch., 74.

7. Traffic Arrangements.

Of Railways inter se.] 4. By an agreement between two railway companies, which was to last for fifty years, the Great Northern Company should book and invoice, and cause or permit to be conveyed or despatched by and along the lines of the Sheffield Company, all traffic originating upon any of the lines of the Great Northern Company, for which the railways of the two companies formed a convenient route, "not otherwise specially consigned or addressed," or the subject of agreements (if any) subsisting with other companies. The Sheffield Company in like manner contracted to carry on its lines (mutatis mutandis). By an agreement between the Sheffield Company and the Midland Company, by which running powers and access to Manchester over the Sheffield lines were conceded to the Midland Company, the effect was to give the latter company a through route to Manchester wholly independent of the Great Northern Company. On application for an injunction to restrain the Sheffield company from carrying out this latter agreement:—Held, that the Sheffield Company had not been guilty of fraud or breach of that agreement, and the injunction refused. Great Northern Railway Co. v. Manchester, Sheffield, & Lincolnshire Railway Co., 5 L. T., N. S., 667.

5. The managing body of a railway company has no power to enter into a contract fixing and regulating the future traffic which may be carried upon a line of railway which the company may thereafter be empowered to construct, so as to give to another railway company an interest in such traffic and profits. Midland Railway Co. v. London & North Western Railway Co., 2 L. R., Eq., 524; 15 W. R. 34; 35 L. J., Ch., 831; 15, L. T., N. S., 264.

Certain railway companies, including the plaintiffs, entered into an agreement by which, having provided that it should relate to and include all traffic of whatever description despatched or carried from either of two specified routes from or to the several places therein mentioned, they stipulated that all through traffic from or to any of those places should be carried and sent by them along and over the said two routes, and the gross profits divided between them in certain proportions; a special clause in the agreement provided that none of the companies, parties thereto, should, by any of the devices there particularized, or by any other means or inducement whatsoever, cause or promote the said traffic to go or pass, so that the same should not be treated as part of the traffic to which the agreement related, and the profits derived therefrom be apportioned accordingly. The plaintiffs subsequently acquired and opened a new route to and from the termini specified in the agreement. Upon the question whether the traffic proceeds of this new route were within the terms of the agreement:—Held, that the agreement only embraced the traffic on the then existing lines, that there was nothing to prevent the formation of a new line by the plaintiffs, and that it was not compulsory upon them to bring into the common fund the proceeds of their new route. Ib.

Semble, that the agreement would have been illegal and ultrà vires if it had contained an express or implied condition prohibiting any of the companies from making or being party to the making of any new line, except on the terms of the agreement. Ib.

1. An agreement between two railway companies, that the one company will not carry traffic over a particular portion of its line:—Held, obiter, not illegal. Lancaster & Carlisle Railway Co. v. North Western Railway Co., 2 Kay & J. 293.

Quære, whether an agreement by the directors of one railway, that in return for being entitled to carry traffic over their line on the line of another railway company, the directors of the first company will, out of the assets of their own company, make certain payments to the latter, is or is not void, as being beyond the powers of the directors. Ib.

2. There is no principle of public policy which renders void a traffic agreement between two lines of railway for the purpose of avoiding competition. Though a public company constituted for a particular purpose will not be allowed to apply its funds in a manner not sanctioned by the constitution of the company, the Court will not interfere with a traffic agreement between two lines of railway to divide the net earnings in certain definite proportions. Hare v. London & North Western Railway Co., 2 John & H. 80; 7 Jur., N. S., 1145; 30 L. J., Ch., 817.

Two groups of railway companies, being respectively the owners of independent conterminous routes, agreed to divide the profits of the whole traffic in certain fixed proportions, calculated on the experience of the past course of traffic:—Held, that such an agreement, being bonâ fide, was not ultrà vires. Ib.

3. Alienation by an incorporated railway company of the tolls to arise from any portion of its line of railway is contrary to public policy as well as ultrà vires of the directors of the company. Therefore, where a Bill before Parliament, for the purpose of enabling one railway company to grant to another railway company a lease of its contemplated lines of railway, was opposed in Parliament by a third railway company, and the third company eventually withdrew its opposition to the Bill in consideration of an agreement, by way of arrangement as to traffic, entered into between the first and second companies and the third company, whereby it was stipulated that the third company should receive a certain proportion of the tolls to arise from the traffic along a specified portion of the line of the first and second companies, and that the first and second companies should, on the other hand, receive a specified proportion of the tolls to arise from the traffic along a particular portion of the line of the third company, such agreement to be determinable at the option of the third company only, but otherwise to be permanent between the parties thereto, the Court refused to decree a specific performance of such agreement at the instance of the third company, notwithstanding that the other parties thereto had obtained the consideration therefor by the withdrawal by the third company of its opposition to the Bill in Parliament. Shrewsbury & Birmingham Railway Co. v. London & North Western Railway Co., 17 Jur. 845; 22 L. J., Ch., 682; 1 W. R. 172.

4. An agreement was made between A. Railway Company and B. Railway Company, that A. should have the use of B.'s station at S., paying such charge for additional accommodation, arising from the traffic of A., as arbitrators should determine; and that the traffic of A. (that is, traffic using both lines, or any portion thereof) between S. and R., or any points intermediate to these, should be carried on, as respects engine power, etc., at the costs of A., who should pay to B., for the use of its railway and in respect to the traffic specified, a pro ratâ proportion (according to the distance passed over the two lines respectively) of the tolls arising from such traffic; with this proviso, that nothing therein contained should authorise B. to receive for the use of its railway between its point of junction with A.'s line for a greater distance than half the length between such point of junction and the terminus of B. at S.; nevertheless B. should be entitled to charge for the use of such portion of its railway for a length of two miles at the least. A special verdict found that the length of B.'s line from S. at its point of junction with A. was four miles and no more:—Held, that the right of A. to use B.'s line was extended to all traffic passing over the original line of the former to or from the points named on whatever of the line its transit commenced or ended; but that the pro ratâ proportion of toll payable was according to the distance over the two lines referred to in the agreement. Lancashire & Yorkshire Railway Co. v. East Lancashire Railway Co., 4 W. R. 780; 5 H. L. Ca. 792; 2 Jur., N. S., 767; 25 L. J., Exch., 278.

With Public.] 5. A contract was made between the agents of a railway company and the owners of a coal mine, to carry the coals at a stated tonnage for twenty-one years; and it was agreed that the contract should be reduced into a more formal instrument, and should contain all the terms stated in the "correspondence," which was one that had taken place between the parties and their agents respecting the same. The coals were so carried, and after a time the company's business passed to, and the company was consolidated with, a new company, formed under an Act of Parliament, which continued the carriage of the coals at the same rate. It then alleged, that the agents for the old company had exceeded their authority in making the contract for twenty-one years, and demanded an increased rate of tonnage, which was paid, under protest, by the owners of the coal mine. On a bill filed against the company for specific performance of the agreement, and for the execution of a formal instrument:—Held, that, whether at the date of the agreement there was authority in the agents to accede to such a term as twenty-one years or not, looking at the acts of the parties, the company was bound for that time while it subsisted as a company, and before the Act of Parliament passed, even if it was not bound by it at the date of the agreement. Sowerby v. Pontop Railway Co., 10 Jur. 942.

The Act of Parliament contained a clause binding the company by all contracts of the old company, and a clause precluding it from taking less rates of charges from any persons than it required from the public generally. The charges made under the contract, and the increased rate of charges to the plaintiffs, were both less than the rate charged to the public. Quære, whether, according to the true construction of the Act, the agreement having existed before the Act of Parliament, the company might not be bound to regulate their charges to the public in general by their particular contract. Ib.

1. A merchant residing at B., and carrying on business in the towns and throughout the district traversed by a railway, in 1846 entered into an agreement with the railway company that he would, in consideration of the company granting him yearly, during so long a time as he should carry on business at B., a free pass over its line, between the towns of B. and C., have, for so long a time as the scale of charges of the company, and of a canal company, should bear the same proportion to each other as they then bore, all his goods carried by the railway company, in preference to the canal company. That arrangement continued to 1849, when the merchant, at the request of the company, to prevent the annoyance to them of constant applications for free passes, consented to pay 5*l.* as a nominal consideration for such free pass. This arrangement continued to 1857, when after a correspondence on the subject, arising out of his application for a renewal of the pass, the company refused to renew it. The agreement of 1845 was not executed by or on behalf of the company. A bill was filed by him for specific performance of the agreement:—Held, that the agreement, being uncertain in its terms, could not be specifically enforced. Sturge v. Midland Railway Co., 4 Jur., N. S., 273; 6 W. R. 233.

2. The Court will not interfere by injunction to restrain a railway company from determining even upon a notice which may be irregular and insufficient, an agreement with contractors for the performance of certain duties in reference to the goods traffic of the line; the agreement involving personal service, and as such being one of which the Court would not grant specific performance. Horne v. London & North Western Railway Co., 10 W. R. 170.

3. A ship belonging to a railway company was held to blame for a collision. A person took a through ticket for the journey by rail and by the ship, and brought an action against the company on the contract for delay and loss of luggage caused by the collision:—Held, that the company was within s. 514 of the Merchant Shipping Act 1854, which limited their liability to 15*l.* per ton of the registered tonnage of the ship. London & South Western Railway Co. v. James, 21 W. R. 151; 8 L. R., Ch., 241; 42 L. J., Ch., 337; 28 L. T., N. S., 48.

An injunction was granted to restrain further proceedings in actions for damage to goods, for damage to the ship which was run into, and for damage for loss of life. Ib.

4. A trader opened a credit account with a railway company for freight. An account of what was due was to be delivered once a month, and payment was to be made within seven days after delivery; and the company was to have a general lien, for all the moneys due upon any account, upon all goods in the hands of the company. The trader filed a petition for liquidation; and a receiver and manager of his estate and business was appointed, who, in order to carry on the business, bought goods with his own money and sent them to the railway company consigned to the trader. The company refused to deliver the goods until it was paid what was owing to it by the trader for freight due when the petition was filed. The receiver paid the money under protest, and the goods were delivered. The Court of Bankruptcy, on the receiver's application, ordered the money to be repaid:—Held, on appeal, that the company would have no defence to an action by the receiver for the money paid to it, but that the Court of Bankruptcy had no jurisdiction to order repayment. Exp. Great Western Railway Co., Re Bushell, 22 L. R., Ch. D., 470; 52 L. J., Ch., 734; 48 L. T. 196; 31 W. R. 419.

8. User by Public.

5. Upon the construction of a contract between an individual and a railway company:—Held, that nothing had taken place which could give him a right to use horses, as the moving power, against the will and consent of the company. Thorne v. Taw Vale Railway & Dock Co., 13 Beav. 10.

A plaintiff sued as one of the public to restrain a railway company from closing it:—Held, that such a suit could not be maintained. Ib.

6. The Court will enforce, by injunction, the provision of s. 115 of the Railways Clauses Consolidation Act (8 & 9 Vict., c. 20), that no engine or other description of moving power shall be brought or used upon a railway, unless the same shall have been approved by the railway company as therein mentioned, notwithstanding the practice of railway companies has been to rely on each other with respect to the fitness of their respective engines, and not to enforce the provision of the Act; and notwithstanding also, that, to enforce such right of inspection, would occasion great inconvenience to the public traffic, and although it may appear that the provision is sought to be enforced, not from any apprehension of the use of improper engines, but for the purpose of impeding the traffic over its line of a competing company. Midland Railway Co. v. Ambergate, Nottingham, & Boston & Eastern Junction Railway Co., 10 Hare 359; 1 W. R. 162.

Although the expression "the railway" is, by the interpretation clause of the Railways Clauses Consolidation Act (s. 3), defined to mean "the railway and the works by the special Act authorized to be constructed," and these have been construed to include a station, yet it is very doubtful whether the power reserved to the public by the Railways Clauses Consolidation Act (s. 92), to use "the railway" with engines and carriages, upon payment of tolls which are calculated at a certain rate per mile, includes the power of using also the stations of the company. Ib.

1. A colliery company having railways from its collieries, with junctions with the line of a railway company, claimed the right, under the Railways Clauses Act 1845, s. 92, to use the railway. After some correspondence as to the engines to be used for that purpose, the railway company protested against the colliery company using the railway with engines belonging to another railway company, and also without an examination of them under s. 115. The coal company then attempted to run a train on to the line, but found the gates at the junction locked. They were likewise told that the signals and points would not be worked for them. A bill was then filed, alleging that the engines had been approved for another purpose in 1857, and praying for an injunction to restrain the railway company from obstructing the coal company in the use of their line:—Held, that though the word "railway," in the interpretation clause, includes "signals" as "works," still that there was no obligation under that or the 92nd clause upon the railway company to work the signals for the persons using the railway. Powell Duffryn Steam Coal Co. v. Taff Vale Railway Co., 9 L. R., Ch., 331; 43 L. J., Ch., 575; 30 L. T., N. S., 208. Affirming 22 W. R. 182; 29 L. T., N. S., 575. And see S. C. 26 L. T., N. S., 357; 20 W. R. 460.

Held also, that, inasmuch as the colliery company could not run over the line unless the points and signals on the line were properly worked by the railway company, the Court could not grant relief, as it does not order the performance of a continuous act like working signals, the doing of which requires continuous attention, and cannot be seen to by the Court. The absence of a proper method of enforcing the provisions of s. 92, is no reason for extending the jurisdiction of the Court. Ib.

Approval, under s. 115, of the engines to be used, is a condition precedent to the user of the line under s. 92. Ib.

9. Tolls and Charges.

2. A party interested in the subject matter of a private Act of Parliament, will have his rights affected by its provisions, though it may have been introduced and passed without notice duly given to him. Edinburgh Railway Co. v. Wauchope, 8 Cl. & F. 710; 3 Rail. Ca. 233.

A private Act of Parliament, made for the construction of a railway, gave to W., a landed proprietor, through whose land the railway was to pass, "the sum of one halfpenny per ton upon all goods and articles upon which a tonnage duty is charged or chargeable in virtue of this Act." The section which empowered the railway company to levy a tonnage duty contained this clause: "For every carriage conveying passengers, or goods or parcels not exceeding 5 cwt.," a sum named. There were other clauses fixing the duty payable for goods, but there was no other which referred to passengers:—Held, that the company was empowered to levy a tonnage duty on carriages according to their weight, when containing passengers; and that the sum to be paid to W. must be calculated on the tonnage so levied. Ib.

W. had for some years received money on the tonnage levied on goods and parcels alone:—Held, that this did not prevent him from afterwards claiming payment on the tonnage duty on passengers. Ib.

3. Where an option is given to a party sending packages, containing small parcels, to pay according to an average, or to pay for the parcels separately, if the principle of an average be legal, and the amount of it reasonable, although the alternative requiring the party to pay for the separate parcels may be per se illegal, that will not render the demand to pay according to average illegal, and the Court will not grant an injunction until the illegality be established at law. Pickford v. Grand Junction Railway Co., 3 Rail. Ca. 538.

Quære, whether the defendants, being carriers only to Birmingham, can legally make the same charge to A. for delivery of goods at Birmingham, as they make to B. for delivery of goods at Worcester, B. agreeing to give the company his whole custom, and agreeing to pay on certain articles an increased price. Ib.

4. Tolls within the meaning of the Railways Clauses Consolidation Act should be fixed with reference to the number of carriages of one railway company which pass over the line of another railway company, under the terms of the agreement between the two railway companies. Semble. Simpson v. Denison, 10 Hare 60; 16 Jur. 828.

An agreement by one railway company for the payment to another of such an amount as will, after answering all expenses and liabilities, furnish a certain dividend on the paid-up capital of such other capital, is not an agreement for the payment of a toll within the meaning of the 87th section of the Railways Clauses Consolidation Act. Ib.

Quære, what is a toll, and how ought tolls to be reserved within the 87th section of the Railways Clauses Consolidation Act 1845. Ib.

Semble, a toll is a payment for the right of passing along a highway, public or private; it is a payment connected with the passing over, and should probably be reserved with reference to the number of carriages passing over the line. Ib.

5. Alienation by an incorporated railway company of the tolls to arise from any portion of their line of railway is contrary to public policy as well as ultrà vires of the directors of the company. Shrewsbury & Birmingham Railway Co. v. London & North Western Railway Co., 17 Jur. 845; 22 L. J., Ch., 682.

6. Semble, that a railway company cannot legally or equitably mortgage its undertaking without the authority of Parliament. South Yorkshire Railway and River Don Co. v. Great Northern Railway Co., 22 L. J., Ch., 761; 1 W. R. 203; 3 De G. M. & G. 576.

Semble, that such an agreement is not a contract for the use of a line, nor for an apportionment of tolls within section 87 of the Railways Clauses Consolidation Act, 8 Vict., c. 20. Ib.

1. A railway company, incorporated by statute, was empowered to make a line between certain termini, and to impose certain tolls and charges for carriage of goods on that line. The company afterwards obtained several other Acts, and, among them, one passed for making a junction and branch railway, and incorporating the Lands and Railways Clauses Acts, and including a number of enactments, in which the words "the railway" were used in some places so as to be applicable only to the junction and branch lines, but, in others, also introducing, as to "the railway," a fresh system of tolls and charges:—Held, that the term "the railway" must be considered to mean the whole system of railway belonging to the company, and that it was over it that the tolls and charges imposed were intended to extend, and not over the junction and branch lines only, and that the old and higher rates on the main line were impliedly repealed. Bristol & Exeter Railway Co. v. Garton, 8 H. L. Ca. 477; 7 Jur., N. S., 173; 30 L. J., Exch., 241; 3 L. T., N. S., 251.

2. A company obtained an Act (8 & 9 Vict., c. 169) authorizing it to construct a railway and to demand tolls for the conveyance of passengers and goods thereon. The charge for the conveyance of goods was generally thus expressed, "per ton per mile not exceeding," etc. One clause provided that "for articles or persons conveyed on the railway for a less distance than four miles" there might be, "in addition to the prescribed tolls for conveyance, a reasonable charge for the expense of stopping, loading, and unloading." No publication of this charge in the form of a "toll" had been made upon the toll-board:—Held, that this "charge" for stopping was not properly a "toll," and that the non-publication of it on the toll-board in the form required by the Railways Clauses Consolidation Act 1845, ss. 93 and 95, did not prevent the company from demanding it. The judgment of the Court below was on this point affirmed. Pryce v. Monmouthshire Canal & Railway Co., 4 L. R., App. Cas., 197; 49 L. J., Exch., 130; 40 L. T. 630; 27 W. R. 666.

The 105th clause of the Act granted tolls for "a fraction of a mile beyond four miles," etc.; the company claimed such tolls when the whole distance traversed was less than four miles. The House was divided: two judges were of opinion that the charge was, on the whole, warranted by the words of the Act; the other two judges, applying the principle that no charge could be imposed on the public but by the clearly-expressed intention of the Legislature, held, that in this case the Legislature had not clearly expressed an intention, nor had intended, to authorize such a charge. The judgment of the Court below stood affirmed. No costs were given. Ib.

3. The Monmouthshire Canal Act provided that, upon auxiliary railroads made by private individuals under the authority of the Act, the tolls should not exceed the rate charged by the canal company, which for the articles of limestone and iron-stone was restricted to 2½*d.* a ton per mile; and it also empowered the canal company, by agreement with the landowners, itself to construct auxiliary railroads, on which tolls not exceeding 5*d.* a ton per mile might be charged. Certain landowners and owners of iron works, and, among others, the assignees of the Beaufort works, formed a joint company, and under the powers given by the Act, constructed a railroad, connecting a lime quarry, called the Trevil quarry, with the several iron works, and with the railroads of the canal company. In the partnership deed of the railroad company, the lessees of the Beaufort works covenanted for themselves, their heirs, executors, administrators, and assigns, so long as the covenantors, their executors, administrators, or assigns should occupy the Beaufort works, to procure all the limestone used in the said works from the Trevil quarry, and to convey all such limestone, and also all the iron-stone, from the mines to the said works, along the Trevil railroad, and to pay a toll of 5*d.* a ton per mile for the same:—Held, that the covenant, securing a toll of 5*d.* a ton per mile to the shareholders of the Trevil railroad, was a fraud upon the canal company and the Legislature, and, therefore, ought not to be specifically enforced by injunction. Keppell v. Bailey, 2 Myl. & K. 517. Coop. temp. Brougham, 298.

4. The Birmingham and Derby Junction Railway, commencing at Derby, communicates with the London and Birmingham Railway at Hampton-in-Arden. The Midland Counties Railway forms a communication between Derby and the London and Birmingham Railway at Rugby. The Birmingham and Derby Railway Act empowers that company to receive from passengers conveyed by the company's carriages tolls not exceeding a specified amount. A subsequent Act, for authorizing an alteration in the line of railway, provides, that the charges by the first Act, authorized to be made for the carriage of passengers, goods, or other matters or things, shall be at all times charged equally and after the same rate per ton, or per mile, in respect of all passengers and goods of a like description, and conveyed or propelled by a like carriage or engine, passing on the same portion of the line only, and under the same circumstances; and that no reduction or advance in any charge for conveyance by the company, or for the use of any locomotive power to be supplied by them, shall be made, either directly or indirectly, in favour of or against any particular company or person travelling upon or using the same portion of the railway, under the same circumstances. After the opening of the Midland Counties Railway, the Birmingham and Derby Junction Railway Company charged passengers, conveyed by its carriages from Derby to Hampton-in-Arden, 8*s.*, while it charged other passengers proceeding from Derby to Hampton-in-Arden, and thence to London, only after the rate of 2*s.* between Derby and Hampton-in-Arden. An information was filed praying an injunction to restrain the imposition of an unequal charge between the termini at Derby and Hampton: it was admitted that the charge of 8*s.* did not exceed the rate allowed by the Act:—Held, on motion for an injunction, that the clause above set forth was only meant to prevent the exercise of a monopoly, to the prejudice of one passenger or carrier in favour of another. That, even if this Court had jurisdiction in such a case, it would not interfere, unless it were clear that the public interest required it; and that in this case, it being admitted that the higher charge was not more than the Act permitted, it did not appear that the public were prejudiced by the arrangement. The motion was refused with costs. Att.-Gen. v. Birmingham & Derby Junction Railway Co., 2 Rail. Ca. 124.

1. Section 90 of the 8 & 9 Vict., c. 20 (Railways Clauses Act 1845), requires equality of tolls for similar services rendered by railway companies to all persons; and s. 2 of the 17 & 18 Vict., c. 31 (Railway and Canal Traffic Act 1854), forbids the giving of any undue or unreasonable preference or advantage to any particular person or company. A charge made by a railway against A. for services rendered by that company to him must not, therefore, be greater than the charge made by the same company against B. for rendering him services of the like nature. London & North Western Railway Co. v. Evershed, 3 L. R., App. Cas., 1029; 39 L. T., N. S., 306. Affirming 3 L. R., Q. B. D., 134; 47 L. J., Q. B., 284; 37 L. T., N. S., 623; 26 W. R. 863.

E. was a brewer at the town of Burton, where three railways had their stations. With one of these railways (Midland) certain brewers in the town had direct communication by sidings, which enabled goods to be sent to the trains, and taken from the trains of the Midland with greater ease and less loss of time than by the way of ordinary cartage. The Midland charged them nothing for cartage, and made a rebate in the charge for station to station conveyance. These brewers had no such communications with the North Western, but it was often convenient for them to send by that railway; and the directors of that railway, in order to compete with the Midland, allowed these particular brewers the same advantages as to cartage and rebate as the Midland did. As to all others in the same trade (E. amongst the rest), the directors of the North Western made the ordinary charge for cartage, and allowed no rebate on the charge for conveyance on the line:—Held, that this was an inequality and an undue preference within the meaning of the statutes. Ib.

Where E., one of the persons thus paying the higher rate, had for some time paid it in ignorance of the facts, but afterwards, on finding that he was subjected to this higher charge, paid it under protest:—Held, that he was entitled to recover back, in an action for money had and received, the difference he had so paid under protest. Ib.

2. Money paid in excess, in disregard of the equality clauses in railway Acts, can be recovered back in an action for money had and received. Great Western Railway Co. v. Sutton, 4 L. R., H. L., 226; 38 L. J., Exch., 177; 18 W. R. 92.

3. A special Act, relating to the company, provided that where goods were carried on the company's railway, or partly on its railway and partly on some other railway of which it was a joint owner, or which it had a right to use, for a less distance than six miles, the company should be entitled to take tolls as for six miles. The Act also provided that the tolls for goods carried over the company's line and over portions of other lines of which it was a part owner, or which it had a right to use, should be computed as if the company's line and the portions of the other lines formed one railway. Goods were passed over the line of which the company was sole owner for a distance of less than six miles: the same goods on their transit to their ultimate destination passed over another line of which the company was a part owner for a distance of more than six miles. This latter line was under the sole management of another company. The goods were accompanied by two declaration notes, one made out in the name of the first company and the other in the name of the other company, but the station of ultimate destination mentioned in both notes was the same:—Held, that the company was not entitled to split the contract, that the two lines must be treated as one, and that the six-mile clause was not applicable. Lancashire & Yorkshire Railway Co. v. Gidlow (No. 1), 42 L. J., Exch., 129; 21 W. R. 649.

The same Act of Parliament, while providing the maximum rate of tolls to be charged, made an exception in respect of special services to be rendered by the company for loading, unloading, collection, and delivery of goods:—Held, that the company was not entitled to charge for special services, though found by a jury to have been actually rendered by it; the customer charged for such services not having had the offer and option first distinctly given him of either availing himself of such services at the company's rate of charge or of doing them himself, such services being incidental to the ordinary business of a carrier, and such as the customer, without notice, might have supposed were covered by the company's charges for toll. Ib.

4. A railway Act gave the directors of the company power to charge a sum for the conveyance of coal along the line, "including the tolls for the use of the railways and waggons, or trucks and locomotive power, and every expense incidental to such conveyance," which sum was to be a maximum sum, except in certain cases, the exception being thus expressed: "Except a reasonable sum for loading, covering, and unloading of goods, and delivery and collection, and any other services incidental to the business of a carrier, where such services, or any or them, are or is to be performed by the company." The services in respect of which the excepted charges were claimed to be made were those of taking the waggons of a colliery owner from his own sidings and attaching them to the trains or returning them from the line of the railway to the sidings of the colliery owner; and whatever particular difficulty arose in this work was occasioned by the position of the points effecting the junction of the line with the sidings:—Held, that these were not services which came within the meaning of the exception. Lancashire & Yorkshire Railway Co. v. Gidlow (No. 2), 7 L. R., H. L., 517; 32 L., T., N. S., 573; 24 W. R. 144.

At some of the stations the colliery owner had been allowed to leave his coals on the ground adjoining the lines:—Held, that this might have been made the subject of an agreement for payment for any advantage thus obtained by him, but did not come within the description of a service contained in the exception. Ib.

Another clause in the same Act required that the company should at all times "provide sufficient locomotive power, when and as the same shall be required, and as soon as an adequate and sufficient load shall be in readiness, to convey all merchandize." The directors required the colliery owner to furnish a declaration of his having ready fifteen waggons with a minimum load of four tons in each waggon, and gave orders not to forward his coals in a smaller number of waggons containing coals. While this restriction existed the coals of other owners were carried in smaller quantities. The regulation requiring fifteen waggons was an unreasonable requirement:—Held, that this restriction was not warranted by the words of the section, and that the colliery owner, having suffered in his business from such restriction, was entitled to damages on that account. Ib.

The colliery owner had paid several of these sums, which in his action he sought to recover as overcharges, but he had paid them under protest and for the purpose of obtaining possession of his goods:—Held, that his payment of them under such circumstances was not a fact which would disqualify him from recovering them in an action for money had and received. Ib.

1. As to the reasonableness of charges, the principle is not what profit it may be reasonable for a company to make, but what it is reasonable to charge to the person who is charged. Canada Southern Railway Co. v. International Bridge Co., 8 L. R., App. Cas., 723.

Receiver.] 2. Where there were several judgments against a railway company, the tolls of which were wholly inadequate to meet the debts of the company, the judgment creditors held entitled to a charge on the tolls, and one of the judgment creditors was appointed receiver. A sale of the lands was refused, but inquiries were directed as to the best means of making the railway profitable. Furness v. Caterham Railway Co., 4 Jur., N. S., 1213; 27 L. J., Ch., 771.

3. A receiver was appointed over the tolls, etc., of a railway company, and certain parties recovered damages in an action against the company for injuries suffered by a collision. On an application in the suit, in which the receiver was appointed, an order was made that he should pay such damages as part of the working expenses, etc., of the half year in which the accident occurred. Exp. Thurgood, 18 L. T., N. S., 18.

4. Statutory bondholders of a railway company are not entitled to an equitable charge on the tolls and traffic receipts of the company, or to have a receiver appointed over such tolls and receipts for the purpose of paying their demands. Imperial Mercantile Credit Association v. Newry & Armagh Railway Co., 2 Ir. R., Eq., 524; 16 W. R. 1070. Reversing 2 Ir. R., Eq., 1; 16 W. R. 335.

5. When a receiver is appointed over a railway, the Court has jurisdiction to control expenditure in the management and repairs of the railway, though the directors individually are not parties to the suit. Belfast & County Down Railway Co. v. Belfast, Holywood, & Bangor Railway Co., 3 Ir. R., Eq., 581.

The remuneration of directors is a proper expenditure, and should be allowed, though the company is insolvent. Ib.

Repairs and improvements of the line and stations, wire fencing, gas fittings, and the like, are expenses properly paid out of revenue, if there is no capital immediately available for such purposes. Ib.

6. When a petition was presented by a judgment creditor, for the appointment of a receiver of the tolls of a railway company, and it appeared that the line had not been used by the company, although a portion of it had been occupied and maintained by another company, without payment of compensation; that the contract on which the judgment was recovered had been entered into previously to the passing of the Act; and that the service of the petition had been effected at a house which had formerly been, but was no longer, the office of the company, and on a person who had acted as, but who was not properly constituted, the secretary:—Held, that service of the petition was insufficient. Re Beddgelert Railway Co., 19 W. R. 427.

Held, also, that the railway had not been opened for public traffic within the meaning of the Act; and that as the judgment had been recovered upon a contract entered into before the passing of the Act it could have no effect. Ib.

10. Trains.

Express.] 7. The trains called "express trains," in the bills of the Great Western Railway Company, are not within the exception contemplated in a covenant to cause "all trains carrying passengers, not being goods trains, or trains to be sent express or for special purposes," to stop for refreshments at the refreshment rooms of the lessee of the company; and the lessee has a sufficient interest, without his sublessee, to carry on a suit; and where the material rights of parties rest on covenant each is primâ facie entitled to sue either at law or in equity, though such party may be liable at the time in respect of other covenants. Rigby v. Great Western Railway Co., 4 Rail. Ca. 175; 1 Coop. C. C. 7; 10 Jur., 488. See also Rolfe v. Rolfe, 1 Coop. C. C. 8. n.; 10 Jur. 61.

Objection of remedy at law being ineffectual by reason that each breach of covenant must be made the subject of a separate action, removed by an undertaking to pay such damages as should be ascertained in the manner to be directed by the Court. Ib.

The bill was filed to restrain the company from running certain trains without stopping at the Swindon station, for the purpose of refreshment of passengers, in violation of a contract between the plaintiff and the company for that purpose. Upon the motion for the injunction being made, the Vice-Chancellor, before granting it, required the plaintiff to establish his right at law, the company undertaking to keep certain accounts. Proceedings were accordingly taken at law, and resulted in favour of the plaintiff. Upon the application for an injunction being thereupon renewed, the company asked for a case to a court of law, upon a question of law, which they, by inadvertence, had omitted to have tried under the former proceedings, and they resisted the injunction being granted in the meantime. The Vice-Chancellor thought the company entitled to a case, but granted an interim injunction to the plaintiff. Upon appeal, the Lord Chancellor discharged that part of the Vice-Chancellor's order which granted an interim injunction, and in lieu thereof required an undertaking from the company, not only to keep the accounts which had been directed in the first instance, but also to pay what might be found due to the plaintiff for the injury he might sustain by their continuing to run their trains in the manner complained of. A case was accordingly taken to law, and the opinion thereon was in favour of the plaintiff. Pending the proceedings at law, the plaintiff's interest under the covenant ceased, and the injunction became unnecessary. The Court, on motion by the plaintiff for the costs of the proceedings at law and in equity, and for a reference to take the accounts which the company had been ordered to keep, made an order for a reference, but reserved its direction as to the costs, on the ground that they might possibly be affected by the result of the account. S. C. 19 L. J., N. S., Ch., 470; 14 Jur. 710. And see S. C. at law, 4 Exch. 220.

1. A railway company having covenanted with a landholder that they would use a piece of land purchased from him as a first-class station for the purpose of taking up and setting down passengers, was restrained from running any trains other than mail or express or special trains without stopping at the station built thereon. Hood v. North Eastern Railway Co., 17 W. R. 1085; 20 L. T., N. S., 970; 8 L. R., Eq., 666.

A train on a local line running in connection with trains between London and Scotland cannot be said to lose its character of an express train by stopping at junctions connecting the line with other important lines, although it should stop at two such junctions within eight miles of one another. S. C. 19 W. R. 523.

2. A railway company covenanted with the builders of refreshment rooms at a station on the line of railway that all trains which should pass the station carrying passengers, not being goods trains or trains to be sent express or for special purposes, and except trains not under the control of the company, should stop for a reasonable period of about ten minutes. The postmaster-general, proceeding under the 1 & 2 Vict., c. 98, which was passed before the covenant was made, required the company to run a train carrying mails at a certain hour, and stopping at the station for five minutes only: —Held, that such a train was a train "not under the control of the company" within the meaning of the exception. Phillips v. Great Western Railway Co., 7 L. R., Ch., 409; 41 L. J., Ch., 614; 26 L. T., N. S., 532; 20 W. R. 562.

3. When a branch railway Act gave a landowner the right to stop by signal all ordinary trains:—Held, that accelerated trains forming part of fast through trains from London, were not ordinary trains, though the fares charged were at the ordinary rate. Turner v. London & South Western Railway Co., 17 L. R., Eq., 561; 43 L. J., Ch., 430.

When an Act confers upon a landowner a private right creating a burden upon a railway and restraining the directors from regulating the traffic so as best to accommodate the public, it must be construed strictly. Ib.

4. In 1846 two competing lines of railway, the D. N. and the L. & Y., being before Parliament, L. agreed with eleven persons (the promoters of the D. N. railway) to give them certain portions of land, at different prices; to withdraw all parliamentary opposition from them, and offer every description of opposition to the L. & Y. railway; and that if an amalgamation took place on any grounds, he would not oppose the amalgamated company. In case of the amalgamated company obtaining their bill, they were to adopt this agreement and all the covenants, etc., one of which was that the D. N. Railway Company were to build a station near T., at a point to be approved by L., at which station all trains should stop. The two companies did amalgamate, by the name of the "G. N. Railway Co." Litigation took place, both in equity and at law, upon the construction of the agreement, the validity of which was never impeached in such litigation. The G. N. Company now refused to stop their express trains at the T. station:—Held, first, that the agreement was legal in itself, was now decided by authority, but, semble, that if such authority had been wanting, it would not have been open to the defendants now to impeach it, after having brought it forward as a defence in former litigation. Secondly, that the balance of inconvenience on stopping such trains was in favour of a specific performance of the agreement, and that the Court would not hesitate to interfere to restrain a breach of it on interlocutory application. Thirdly, that the Amalgamated Company's Act having been passed without opposition by L., which might reasonably be supposed to be in consequence of the agreement, acts done by the company under their Act were to be looked at as if one under the agreement. Lindsay (Earl) v. Great Northern Railway Co., 17 Jur. 522; 22 L. J., Ch., 995; 10 Hare 665; 1 W. R. 257.

Cheap Trains—Government Duty.] 5. The Midland Railway Company was entitled, upon payment of a percentage, to use a loop line belonging to the Great Western Railway Company, for the purpose of traffic originating in or extending to its own line, and it exercised its powers by its own trains and servants, but the moneys paid at the stations on the loop line were collected by the clerks and servants of the Great Western Railway Company:—Held, that the Great Western Company was bound to keep the accounts, and pay the duty required by 5 & 6 Vict., c. 79. Great Western Railway Co. v. Att.-Gen., 1 L. R., H. L., 1; 12 Jur., N. S., 417; 35 L. J., Exch., 123; 14 W. R. 519; 14 L. T., N. S., 33.

The 7 & 8 Vict., c. 85, exempts from the duty imposed by the 5 & 6 Vict., c. 79, upon passenger traffic, the receipts of any company in respect of passengers conveyed by the trains at 1*d.* a mile, required by that Act to be run by every company, upon conditions subject to the approval of the Board of Trade. The Midland

Company ran cheap trains over the loop line, but could not comply with one of these conditions, and the Board withdrew its approval:—Held, that such cheap trains were not within the exemption. Ib.

1. A cheap train within the meaning of 7 & 8 Vict., c. 85, s. 6 (the fares of passengers travelling in which are exempted from the payment of duty to Government) must necessarily be a train carrying third-class passengers at an uniform rate of 1*d.* a mile, both for the whole distance between the termini of the railway on which it travels and for the intermediate distances between any one station and another on such railway. North London Railway Co. v. Att.-Gen., 45 L. J., Exch., 315; 1 L. R., App. Cas., 148; 24 W. R. 852; 34 L. T., N. S., 297. Affirming 43 L. J., Exch., 223.

A cheap train must necessarily stop for the purposes of taking up and setting down passengers at every passenger station between each end of the trunk, branch, or junction line on which it travels. Ib.

The power conferred on the Board of Trade by 7 & 8 Vict., c. 85, s. 8, of dispensing with "any of the conditions hereinbefore required with regard to the conveyance of passengers," does not authorize the Board of Trade to dispense with either of the above-mentioned requisites. Ib.

11. Branch Railway.

2. The Taff Vale Railway obtained a lease from the trustees of the Bute Docks at Cardiff of land which they required for the purposes of their railway. The lease was for 250 years. With a view to securing that the proposed railway should not be used so as to take custom from the docks in which they were interested, the trustees inserted a covenant in the lease, on the part of the railway, that the company, so far as it was able, should cause all minerals which should be conveyed upon its line, or any part or branch of it for shipment, to be shipped into vessels in the Bute Ship Canal (West Bute Dock), or in some basin or cut thereto belonging. Also, that when any minerals which should have been conveyed along the Taff Vale Railway, or any part or branch thereof, should be shipped into any vessel in any dock or basin whatsoever other than the Bute Ship Canal (West Bute Dock), or in some dock, basin, or cut belonging thereto, the Taff Vale Railway Company should pay to the owners of the Bute Ship Canal for the time being the same wharfage dues in respect of such minerals as would have been payable for the same if such minerals had been shipped at the Bute Ship Canal. After the line of railway had been constructed on the land so leased to the Taff Vale Railway Company, the company took a lease of another line (the Penarth Railway) which terminated at Penarth Docks on the south-west side of the river Ely, the Bute Docks being on the north-east side of that river. The Penarth Docks and the Penarth Railway were one concern: the whole was leased by the Taff Vale Railway Company. The two were connected at a station on the Taff Vale Railway:—Held, that the Penarth Railway was not a part or branch of the Taff Vale Railway; that the words in the covenant, "any dock or basin whatsoever," must be controlled by some limitation, and the covenant so controlled must be confined to any dock or basin in connection with the Taff Vale Railway, or some part or branch of it, terminating in or at a dock or basin, and that as the Penarth Railway was not a part or branch of the Taff Vale Railway, the covenant did not apply to minerals shipped or unshipped at Penarth Harbour, though they were carried for a certain distance along the Taff Vale Railway. Taff Vale Railway Co. v. Macnabb, 6 L. R., H. L., 169; 42 L. J., Q. B., 153; 22 W. R. 65.

12. Book Stalls.

3. A railway company granted to two lessees the sale and exclusive licence and privilege for ten years, of selling books and other publications at such of the company's stations as the lessees should think fit, and of using the bookstalls thereat respectively, and covenanted that all books sent by the lessees to be sold, pursuant to such licence, should be conveyed by the company's train to any such station without any charge: and warranted quiet and peaceable enjoyment:—Held, first, as to stations where bookstalls were in existence at the date of the grant, that the company must be taken to have granted the user of those specific stalls, and if not, still it was incumbent on the company to show that stalls to which it attempted to remove the lessees would be equally convenient. Holmes v. Eastern Counties Railway Co., 3 Kay & J. 675; 3 Jur., N. S., 737; 5 W. R. 870.

Held, secondly, as to other stations, that if the lessees could be entitled, in any case, to erect stalls thereat, the Court would make a declaration to that effect, because the Court could not judge whether sales from stalls, or by colportage, should be adopted; and also, because such a declaration would lead to continual applications, with reference to the gradual increase in size of the stalls. Ib.

Held, thirdly, that the privilege of selling books, etc., authorized a bonâ fide sale to passengers and such other persons as ordinarily attended the company's stations on business connected with railways, and not a general agency, consequently that the lessees were not entitled to free carriage, except in respect of books to be so sold. And on a bill filed by the lessees, an injunction was granted, restraining the company from evicting them from bookstalls, existing at the date of the agreement, notwithstanding they, the lessees, failed in their contention as to the second and third points, and notwithstanding misconduct on their part, in not strictly and honourably performing their part of the agreement, the Court being of opinion that it would be impossible, under the circumstances, to estimate the damage to which they would be exposed if an injunction were not granted. Ib.

13. Refreshment Rooms.

4. In a lease by a railway company of their refreshment rooms at Swindon, the company covenanted with the lessee that all trains carrying passengers, not being goods trains or trains to be sent express or for special purposes, and except trains not under the control of the company, which should pass the Swindon station either up or down, should, save in case of emergency or unusual delay arising from accidents, stop there for refreshment of passengers for a reasonable period of about ten minutes, and that as far as the company could influence the same, trains not under its control should be induced to stop for the like purpose. The postmaster-general having in the exercise of his power required that trains carrying mails should not stop at Swindon more than five minutes:—Held, first, that those trains were not as regards stopping under the control of the company; and secondly, that the company was not by its covenant prohibited from carrying passengers by such trains. Phillips v. Great Western Railway Co., 41 L. J., Ch., 614; 20 W. R. 562; 26 L. T., N. S., 157; 7 L. R., Ch., 409. And see Rigby v. Great Western Railway Co., 4 Rail Ca. 175; 1 Coop. C. C. 7; 10 Jur. 488.

1. In 1840 a railway company entered into an agreement under seal to grant A. a lease for ninety-nine years of the hotel to be erected at X. station, with power for the company to determine the lease if any complaint as to the mode of carrying on the business should not be remedied within three months after notice of such complaint. It was also agreed that the lessees "should have the occupation of the refreshment rooms at X. station, subject to the same restrictions and provisions as relate to the carrying on the business of the hotel, both as regards the quality and prices of provisions, and management thereof." The lease granted in pursuance of this agreement was confined to the hotel, and contained no mention of the refreshment rooms. The refreshment rooms on the up line adjoining the hotel had been always occupied with it. In 1849 B., a director of the company (head of a firm at X., who were assignees of the lease of the hotel), erected at a cost of 200*l.* refreshment rooms on the down line, pursuant to an alleged agreement with the company that his firm should have a lease of such refreshment rooms for a term co-extensive with the lease of the hotel. The only evidence of such agreement was this minute in the books of the company: "A ground rent of 6*l.* per annum was ordered to be fixed for the new refreshment rooms built by the lessees at the down station in X." In 1867 the company gave notice to C., the assignee from B. of the lease and occupier of both refreshment rooms, that its arrangements with reference to a new station (recently erected) at X. would involve the determination of his tenancy of the existing refreshment rooms:—Held, first, as to the refreshment rooms on the down line, that no agreement of which the specific performance could be granted was proved, and that in any case the Court could not enforce specific performance of an agreement by a director with the company for the benefit of himself or his firm; and, secondly, as to the up line refreshment rooms, that the occupation was not determinable at the mere will of the company, and that C. was entitled to have the agreement of 1840 carried into effect by having a deed executed to him as the assign of A., with all proper provisions granting the right of occupation of the upper refreshment rooms to him, his assigns and nominees, being tenants of the hotel, subject to the provisions and restrictions contained in the agreement. Flanagan v. Great Western Railway Co., 7 L. R., Eq., 116; 38 L. J., Ch. 117.

V. MINES AND MINERALS.

1. Purchase of and Compensation for, 6031.
2. Working and Right to Support, 6033.

1. Purchase of and Compensation for.

2. In claims for compensation for not working mines adjoining a railway and railway works, s. 6 and s. 78 of the Railways Clauses Act 1845 (8 & 9 Vict., c. 20) must be read together. Smith v. Great Western Railway Co., 3 L. R., App. Cas., 165; 47 L. J., Ch., 97; 37 L. T., N. S., 645; 26 W. R. 130. Affirming 2 L. R., Ch. D., 235; 34 L. T., N. S., 267; 45 L. J., Ch., 235; 24 W. R. 443.

The 6th section gives a general right to compensation to "owners and occupiers of, and all other parties interested in, lands taken or injuriously affected by the construction" of the railway. Ib.

In s. 78, the person entitled to give notice to the directors of a railway company of his intention, within thirty days, to work a mine, is the owner, lessee, or occupier, who has the right and the power to work it. The directors are entitled to have an inspection of the mine, and to offer compensation to him for not working, which compensation may be settled as therein mentioned. The compensation thus settled is that to which he is individually entitled, according to the extent of his interest. If the lessee is the person thus giving notice, and receiving compensation, the owner, if he can show a right of his own beyond that of his lessee who has been compensated, is also entitled to compensation under s. 6. Ib.

The words "he" and "his," in two of the parts of s. 78, refer to the person entitled to compensation, whether owner, lessee, or occupier. Ib.

The word "lands" in s. 6 includes mines; and that section, in regard to the compensation thereby provided, is to be read with reference to the Lands Clauses Act. Ib.

After compensation agreed on, and obtained or tendered, a perpetual injunction may be granted against the working of the mines. Ib.

H. was the lessee of mines under a railway, his lease being of sufficient length to enable him to exhaust the coal; he gave the company notice of his intention to work the mines, and they gave him a counter-notice under s. 78 of the Railways Clauses Act 1845, and made compensation as provided by the section. Before the expiration of his term, H. surrendered his lease, and S. became owner of the mines in fee. On a bill by the company to restrain S. from working the mines:—Held, that the company, by compensating the lessee, became the owner of the mines; and was entitled to a perpetual injunction, but that S. might obtain compensation for any injury he had sustained, under s. 6. Ib.

3. Clay is a mineral within the meaning of the Railways Clauses Consolidation Act 1845, s. 77. Therefore a railway company was held liable to the owner of land taken by it in respect of clay from such land used for puddling bridges, which clay it was not necessary to remove in the construction of its line. Loosemore v. Tiverton & North Devon Railway Co., 22 L. R., Ch. D., 25; 51 L. J., Ch., 570; 47 L. T. 151; 30 W. R. 628.

1. The word "mines" in the 77th section of the Railways Clauses Act 1845 includes minerals, whether got by underground or by open workings; and therefore a bed of clay, on which the railway had been made, was as a mine excepted out of the conveyance of the land to the railway company, and might, unless the company were willing to make compensation to the landowner, be dug and worked by him. Midland Railway Co. v. Haunchwood Brick & Tile Co., 20 L. R., Ch. D., 552; 51 L. J., Ch., 778; 46 L. T. 301; 30 W. R. 640.

2. The company having, by the terms of its purchase, precluded the owners of lands from working minerals in a way injurious to their property, cannot, in the absence of statutory provision to that effect, be compelled to purchase those minerals of the owners. North Eastern Railway Co. v. Crosland, 32 L. J., Ch., 353; 7 L. T., N. S., 765; 4 De G. F. & J. 550; 11 W. R. 83; 1 N. R. 72. Affirming 2 John. & H. 565.

3. A railway company compulsorily purchasing land is not entitled to a conveyance of the mines and minerals, unless they have been expressly purchased, even where the land has been valued and taken at a large price as building land. Re Metropolitan District Railway Co. and Cotton's Trustees, 45 L. T. 103.

4. A corporation served the usual notice on a landowner before applying to Parliament for power to take his land. The Act, when obtained, gave the corporation power to take more of his land than was described in the notice:—Held, that the corporation was not prevented from taking more land than was described in the notice. Re Huddersfield Corporation and Jacomb, 10 L. R., Ch., 92; 44 L. J., Ch., 96; 31 L. T. 466; 23 W. R. 100. Affirming 17 L. R., Eq., 476; 30 L. T. 78.

Held, also, that under the circumstances the corporation was not obliged to take the mines and minerals under the land taken by them. Ib.

5. A railway company having the usual power to purchase lands under its special Act, has, by virtue of the 6th section of the Lands Clauses Act 1845, power also to purchase the minerals under those lands compulsorily at any time before the expiration of the time limited for the exercise of its compulsory powers, if it should deem it advisable. That power is not taken away by the 77th and following sections of the Railways Clauses Act 1845, which are for the benefit, not of the mine owner, but of the company, and only exempt the company from the obligation of buying the minerals at once, together with the surface lands. The words "expressly purchased," in the 77th section are not to be confined to "purchased by agreement." There is no distinction between the severance of ownership vertically, that is, of the surface lands from the mines beneath, and the severance of ownership laterally by the taking by successive purchases of surface lands from the same landowner. So a railway company having already acquired surface lands may subsequently purchase compulsorily the minerals under those lands. Errington v. Metropolitan District Railway Co., 19 L. R., Ch. D., 559; 51 L. J., Ch., 305; 46 L. T. 443; 30 W. R. 663.

6. The compensation in respect of which the bond is given by a railway company under s. 85 of the Lands Clauses Act, on entering upon lands before agreement, does not include compensation for minerals under the Railways Clauses Act 1845, ss. 78 and 81. Exp. Neath & Brecon Railway Co., 2 L. R., Ch. D., 201; 45 L. J., Ch., 196.

A railway company, being desirous of entering upon certain lands before agreement, made the usual deposit and gave the usual bond. Afterwards, by an agreement in writing between the company and landowner, it was referred to an arbitrator to determine the purchase money for the lands taken by the company, and also the "compensation for any damage sustained by the landowner by reason of the execution of their works, and which, under the special Act, the Lands Clauses Act, or the Railways Clauses Act, the landowner was entitled to claim against the company":—Held, that the bond did not include compensation awarded by the arbitrator in respect of minerals under the Railways Clauses Act, ss. 78 and 81, and that the company, having paid the sum awarded as the purchase money and compensation in respect of the lands taken by them, had performed the condition of the bond, and was entitled to the return of its deposit. Ib.

7. Though a mine owner may give notice under the statutes 8 & 9 Vict., c. 20, and c. 33, of his intention to work out the minerals under a railway, the railway proprietors are not bound to any fixed period after that notice within which they must give a counter notice. They can stop the working at any time thereafter that they fear danger to the line, by a notice of their willingness to pay compensation for the minerals they desire left standing. By the 70th section of the Railways Clauses (Scotland) Act 1845 (77th section of Railways Clauses Act, England) the minerals under a railway remain the property of the owner of the land, unless they are expressly purchased by the company. The 71st section (78th section) provides that if the owner or lessee of minerals not purchased by the company is desirous of working them, he shall give the company notice in writing of his intention to do so thirty days before the commencement of working. Power is given to the company "on the receipt of such notice" to inspect the mines, and if it is desirous that such mines or parts thereof should be left unworked, and if it is willing to make compensation therefor, it is empowered to give notice to that effect. If such notice is given, then it is declared that the owner or lessee shall not work the mines or minerals comprised in such notice. The 72nd section (79th section) provides that if before the expiration of such thirty days the railway company does not give notice of its desire to have such mines left unworked, it shall be lawful for the owner or lessee to work the said mines in such manner as such owner or lessee shall think fit for the purpose of getting the minerals contained therein. A. and B. were the lessees of the minerals, viz., limestone, under a railway passing through Caldwell. They, on the 8th of July 1878, gave notice in terms of the above sections to the proprietors of the railway that they were desirous of working, and intended to work, the "mines and minerals including limestone" lying under the railway. The proprietors of the railway did not, before the expiration of thirty days, give notice to A. and B. of their desire to have such mines and minerals left unworked, but they did give such notice on the 20th of February 1879, offering compensation for the limestone unworked. A. and B. contended that the notice of the 20th of February 1879 was too late to prevent them working out the limestone; such notice to be valid required to be given before the expiration of thirty days from the date of their notice of the 8th of July 1878:—Held, that the notice of the railway proprietors was valid. Dixon v. Caledonian & Glasgow & South Western Railway Co., 5 L. R., App. Cas. (Sc.), 820; 43 L. T. 513; 29 W. R. 249.

Held, also, that the incidental dictum—that after thirty days had expired the time had passed for the railway proprietors to give a counter-notice—in Smith v. Great Western Railway Co. (3 L. R., App. Cas., 182)—was no judicial authority here, as it was said where it was in no way material for the decision, and where the point could not have been fully argued, no counter-notice having been given in that case. Ib.

2. Working and Right to Support.

1. A conveyance of land to a railway company, for the purposes of the line, gives a right by implication to all reasonable subjacent and adjacent support connected with the subject matter of the conveyance, and therefore, although in the conveyance to the company minerals are reserved, the grantor is not entitled to work them even under his own land, in any manner calculated to endanger the railway. Caledonian Railway Co. v. Sprot, 2 Macq. H. L. Ca. 449; 2 Jur., N. S., 623; 4 W. R. 659.

In a grant to a railway company for the purposes of the railway, if the line which divides the land granted from the land retained traverses a quarry, it may be that no adjacent support is necessary, and that the grantor may dig or remove the whole contiguous soil. Ib.

But if the dividing line traverse a bog or bed of sand, it will be incumbent on the grantor to leave untouched such an intervening measure of lateral support as will prevent any part of the land granted from retreating. Ib.

S. had in 1834 sold to a railway company land over which the railway was to pass, but by the same deed stipulated in these terms—"Reserving always to me, and my heirs and successors, the whole mines and minerals, of whatsoever description, within the lands conveyed, and full power and liberty to us, or any person or persons authorized by us, to search for, work, win, and carry away the same, and to make aqueducts, levels," etc. Subsequently several Acts of Parliament passed giving further powers to the company, and providing for cases of dispute with the landed proprietors as to value of land for purchase, mines, etc. S. continued to work out his minerals until August 1848, when he received notice from the company that his works were of a nature to endanger the line. A suit having been brought to try the question, and judgment given:—Held, on appeal (reversing the judgment below), that S. by his conveyance had contracted an implied obligation to afford to the land so conveyed for the purpose specified, viz., a railway, all necessary adjacent and subjacent support by his other land, underlying or contiguous to it. Ib.

Held, also, that the subsequent Acts of Parliament were not retrospective, and could not alter the effect of the previous bargain and conveyance. Ib.

2. B. gratuitously granted a portion of his land to a railway company for the purpose of forming a line of railway thereon, with a reservation to him and his heirs of all the mines and minerals in the land so granted, and with full liberty to dig, search for, work, and carry away the same, so as the same be done without entering upon or breaking the surface of the land thereby granted:—Held, that the company was entitled to the subjacent and adjacent lateral support necessary for the maintenance of the railway. Caledonian Railway Co. v. Belhaven (Lord), 3 Macq. H. L. Ca. 56; 3 Jur., N. S., 573.

3. The grant to a railway company, under its Act and the railway Acts, of the right to make, maintain, and use a tunnel, does not give the company such a right to support to its tunnel that the grantor, acting duly in accordance with the Railways Clauses Act, ss. 77, 78, cannot work or have the benefit of mines under and adjacent to the tunnel. London & North Western Railway Co. v. Ackroyd, 8 Jur., N. S., 911; 31 L. J., Ch., 588; 10 W. R. 367; 6 L. T., N. S., 124.

4. A conveyance of a strip of land was made to a railway company in 1834 under an Act of Parliament, which provided, that all coal or other mineral should be deemed to be excepted out of any purchase of lands by the company, and might be worked by the owners and lessees thereof, so that no damage or obstruction be done or thereby occur to or in such railway or other works; and in case of damage, reparation was to be made by the owners or lessees. And whenever the working should approach within twenty yards of any masonry or building belonging to the company, notice should be given to it, and it might deliver a declaration requiring the minerals under such masonry or building to be reserved for its protection, and in that case it should purchase the same; and in case it should not deliver such declaration, that the owners or lessees might work the minerals under the masonry or buildings, in the usual and ordinary manner of working mines, doing no avoidable damage. The land was taken for the purpose of building thereon a bridge of great weight, which was subsequently built by the company. At the time of the purchase there was beneath the land, and a large tract of adjoining land belonging to the vendor, an old mine which had been accidentally flooded, and had long previously been full of water. In 1859 a lessee, deriving title under the vendor, threatened to drain the mine and renew the workings:—Held, that in addition to the special protection afforded by the Act in respect of workings within twenty yards' distance of any masonry or building, the company was entitled, by way of necessary incident to the grant of the land, to such lateral support from the adjacent land of the vendor not situate within the twenty yards as might be necessary to uphold the bridge; and that the lessee was properly restrained from working minerals under the adjacent land not the property of the company, and not within the limits of twenty yards, so as to affect the stability of the bridge. Elliot v. North Eastern Railway Co., 9 Jur., N. S., 555; 32 L. J., Ch., 402; 11 W. R. 604; 8 L. T., N. S., 337; 10 H. L. Ca. 333; 2 N. R. 87. Affirming 2 De G. F. & J. 423; 3 L. T., N. S., 520; 30 L. J., Ch., 160; 7 Jur., N. S., 6; 9 W. R. 172. Reversing 1 John. & H. 145; 6 Jur., N. S., 817; 29 L. J., Ch., 808; 8 W. R. 603.

Held, also, that the circumstance that the conveyance of the land was compulsory and not voluntary could not, in the absence of any special enactment, affect the construction of the conveyance, nor prevent it from passing to the company the necessary right of support as an ordinary legal incident. Ib.

Held, however, that although the water might afford additional support to the surface, the company had no right to speculate on the continuance of such an accidental circumstance, and that the lessee ought not to be restrained from withdrawing the water from the spaces left in the old workings, if such effect should be produced by working the colliery in a proper manner. Ib.

In cases similar to the foregoing, it being impracticable to define beforehand the limits within which the workings ought to be restrained, an injunction is properly expressed in general terms against working so as to produce the particular evil apprehended. Ib.

1. A railway company is entitled to the vertical and lateral supports of the adjoining lands of the proprietor from whom the lands or easements required for the railway were purchased: and such proprietor is not at liberty to work the minerals adjoining the railway in such a way as to cause damage to it. North Eastern Railway Co. v. Crosland, 11 W. R. 83; 4 De G. F. & J. 550; 32 L. J., Ch., 353; 7 L. T., N. S., 765; 11 W. R. 83; 1 N. R. 72. Affirming 2 John. & H. 565.

In 1835 the Leeds Railway Company, constituted under an Act, which excepted mines from land purchased, and allowed the landowners to work them, provided they did no damage to the railway, bought land for its railway. In 1836 the York Railway Company was constituted under an Act, containing provisions as to mines similar to those of the Railways Clauses Act. Afterwards the York company purchased the Leeds Railway under the powers of an Act of 1844, which provided, by s. 4, that on completion of the line the Leeds Act should be repealed, provided that the repeal should not affect anything done under the Act, but that all acts done under it should remain as valid as if there had been no repeal. The 9th section provided, that all the provisions of the York Railway Act, so far as they were not repealed, altered, or otherwise provided for by the Act of 1844, or by any statute, should apply to the Leeds Railway:—Held, that the provisions as to mines in the York Railway Act were not, by the Act of 1844, made applicable to the Leeds Railway, so as to give the owners of the mines under the lands purchased by the Leeds company a right to work them to the injury of the railway, if the York Railway Company did not choose to purchase them, but that the unqualified right to support, which was incident to the grant of the lands for the purposes of the railway, remained unaffected. Ib.

2. A railway company bought land without the minerals thereunder, and constructed a railway upon the land. The landowner made a lease for fifteen years of the minerals. The lessee gave to the company notice of his intention to work the minerals; the company gave him notice, and paid him under the Railways Clauses Act 1845, s. 78 compensation for leaving the minerals. The lessee fell into arrear with his rent, and surrendered the lease to the landowner. A purchaser from the landowner gave to the company notice of his intention to work the minerals, and claimed compensation without regard to the payment already made to the lessee, and began to work the minerals so as to endanger the railway:—Held, that the company had obtained a right to support from the minerals, and that the landowner would be restrained from working the minerals, but might obtain compensation under the Railways Clauses Act 1845, s. 6 or s. 81, and might have obtained compensation under the Lands Clauses Act 1845, s. 68. Great Western Railway Co. v. Smith, 2 L. R., Ch. D., 235; 45 L. J., Ch., 235; 24 W. R. 443; 34 L. T., N. S., 267. Affirmed 3 L. R., App. Cas., 165; 37 L. T., N. S., 645; 47 L. J., Ch., 97; 26 W. R. 100.

3. A railway company which had taken lands for the purposes of their railway, under the Lands Clauses Act (8 & 9 Vict., c. 18) and the Railways Clauses Act (8 & 9 Vict., c. 20), and had them conveyed to them by a conveyance in the usual form, is not entitled to prevent the owner of the mines, subjacent or adjacent, from working and winning away the same without making compensation. It makes no difference that the mines and minerals are necessary for the support of the railway. Great Western Railway Co. v. Bennett, 2 L. R., H. L., 27; 36 L. J., Q. B., 133; 15 W. R. 647; 16 L. T., N. S., 186.

If the company, after notice of intention to work, refuses to make compensation for the mines requisite for the support of their railway, it can only compel the mine-owner to work his mines in a proper manner according to the custom of the district. Ib.

4. The plaintiffs, who were owners of a coal mine, claimed damages against the owners of an adjoining mine for having broken their barriers and worked their coal. The wrongful acts were committed in 1863, while the adjoining mine was being worked by the Hartlepool Railway Company. The boundaries of the two mines were settled by mutual agreement in 1862, and after negotiations a release was executed in 1864, by which all previous wrongful acts were condoned and released on both sides. An Act of Parliament was passed in 1863, by which the Hartlepool Railway Company was to sell its mines within five years; and in 1865 the railway company was amalgamated with the North Eastern Railway Company, and all its assets and liabilities were transferred to it:—Held, first, that although it was ultra vires of the railway company to work mines, the Act of 1863 implied that the company was to have power to work its mines until the mines were sold, and that upon the amalgamation with the North Eastern Railway Company the latter became liable for the wrongful acts of its predecessors. Ecclesiastical Commissioners for England v. North Eastern Railway Co., 4 L. R., Ch. D., 845; 36 L. T., N. S., 174; 47 L. J., Ch., 20.

Held, secondly, that the wrongful acts committed in 1863 were not condoned by the release of 1864, the plaintiffs having had no ground for suspecting that while the release was in negotiation the previous settlement of boundaries had been broken. Ib.

Held, thirdly, that the Statute of Limitations only commenced to run from the time of the discovery of the wrongful acts, there being no laches attributable to the plaintiffs for not having discovered the damage prior to 1870, two years before the filing of the bill. Ib.

VI. JUDGMENT CREDITORS.

1. Registration of Judgment, 6035.
2. Sale of Surplus Lands, 6035.
3. Receiver, 6035.

1. Registration of Judgment.

1. A judgment may be registered as a mortgage against an incorporated railway company, under the 13 & 14 Vict., c. 29. Exp. Bagnall, Re Bagnalstown & Wexford Railway Co., 13 L. T., N. S., 63.

Where, in an affidavit to register judgment as a mortgage, the company is described as a railway company, it is unnecessary further to set forth the trade of the company, inasmuch as the description "railway company" clearly imports that the trade of the company is that of a common carrier. Ib.

2. Sale of Surplus Lands.

2. A writ of execution having been sued out on a judgment debt against a railway company, upon petition, the Court ordered inquiries and a sale of the company's lands in default of payment of this debt. Re Hull & Hornsea Railway Co., 2 L. R., Eq., 262; 35 L. J., Ch., 838; 14 W. R. 758; 14 L. T., N. S., 855.

3. Upon the petition of a judgment creditor of a railway company, under 27 & 28 Vict., c. 112, praying for the sale of surplus lands of the company, the Court will not make an immediate order for sale, but will direct inquiries. Gardner v. London, Chatham, & Dover Railway Co., Exp. Grissell, 15 W. R. 324; 15 L. T., N. S., 644; 2 L. R., Ch., 385.

The Court will not make an order for immediate sale, unless it sees with certainty that the property in question is saleable. Ib.

Nature of the inquiries directed. Ib.

Form of order on petition by a judgment creditor for sale of superfluous lands of a railway company under 27 & 28 Vict., c. 112, s. 4. Ib.

4. A judgment dated in April 1867 was obtained for 30,000*l.* against a railway company, and an elegit issued in June. In November the company filed a scheme of arrangement, and in January 1868 an order for sale was made under the writ. In July 1868 the scheme was dismissed, and a petition presented by the creditors for an inquiry whether the lands in respect of which the elegit had been issued were surplus lands, upon which ground the company opposed the claim:—Order made for the inquiry as in Gardner v. London, Chatham, & Dover Railway Co., Exp. Grissell (2 L. R., Ch., 385). Re Bristol & North Somerset Railway Co., 20 L. T., N. S., 70.

5. Upon the petition of a judgment creditor of a railway company an order was made, without directing inquiries, for a sale of surplus land of the company, not required for the undertaking and not used for building purposes, which had been delivered in execution to the petitioner under an elegit, the registry of which was still in force. The company was ordered to execute a proper conveyance. Re Calne Railway Co., 9 L. R., Eq., 658.

6. An existing railway company was authorized to make an extension line, by an Act which enacted that the capital might be raised by an issue of new shares, to be called extension shares, and that the works authorized by it should, for financial purposes, form a separate undertaking, and that the capital and new shares created under its powers should constitute a separate capital; and that the profits of the extension line applicable to dividend should be wholly applied in payment of dividend on the extension shares; and that the extension shareholders should not be entitled to dividends out of any other profits of the company, and that the company might raise by mortgage any additional sums not exceeding 28,000*l.*; but not till all the extension capital had been subscribed for and half of it paid up; and that the money raised by new shares or mortgage should be applied only for the purposes of the extension Act. A contractor, to whom the company was indebted in respect of the construction of the original line, obtained judgment against the company, extended certain surplus lands acquired under the powers of the extension Act, and then applied to the Court for a sale:—Held, that the creditor was entitled to an order for sale; for that, whatever might be the rights of the different classes of shareholders inter se, the lands were lands of the company, liable to be sold for payment of any judgment debts of the company. Re Ogilvie, 7 L. R., Ch., 174; 41 L. J., Ch., 336.

3. Receiver.

7. The company having raised large sums of money by bond and on mortgage, and being also considerably indebted on simple contract, agreed with one of their simple contract creditors to suffer judgment to be entered up against the company at a future day. After this agreement, various negotiations took place between the bond and other creditors of the company and the company, with the view of postponing on certain terms the enforcement of all claims, as well by specialty as simple contract, against the company for seven years: these terms were accepted by the great majority of the creditors, but rejected by the simple contract creditor. After such rejection, but before the period for issuing execution had arrived, a bill was filed by one of the bond creditors against the company and its other specialty creditors for the enforcement of his alleged equitable lien, and for the appointment of a receiver. The receiver was appointed by the consent of all parties to the suit, and entered into the possession of all the chattels of the company. The simple contract creditor then sued out execution against the company:—Held, on the petition of the simple contract creditor, that, inasmuch as the order appointing a receiver was obtained by a surprise on the Court, and did not rest on an equity which could be maintained, and would not have been made if all the circumstances of the case had been brought before the Court, the simple contract creditor ought to be allowed to levy upon the goods and chattels of the company notwithstanding the order. Russell v. East Anglian Railway Co., 3 Macn. & G. 125; 6 Rail. Ca. 501; 20 L. J., N. S., Ch., 257; 15 Jur. 935.

Held, also, that inasmuch as all the facts of the case were admitted, and were before the Court on the petition, the Court would dispense with the usual reference to the Master to examine the petitioners pro interesse suo. Ib.

The 33rd section of the special Act empowered bond creditors and mortgagees of the company to enforce the payment of the arrears of principal and interest by the appointment of a receiver:—Held, that having regard to ss. 53 & 54 of the Companies Clauses Consolidation Act, the receiver indicated in s. 33 of the special Act was the receiver to be appointed by two justices under ss. 53 & 54 of the former Act. Ib.

1. A judgment creditor of a railway company to whom the company's land (including the line) has been delivered under an elegit is entitled to a receiver of the tolls and earnings, and is not accountable as a mortgagee in possession if he has not obtained beneficial possession. Kingston v. Cowbridge Railway Co., 41 L. J., Ch., 152.

2. When a petition was presented by a judgment creditor, for the appointment of a receiver of the tolls of a railway company, and it appeared that the line had not been used by the company, although a portion of it had been occupied and maintained by another company, without payment of compensation; that the contract on which the judgment was recovered had been entered into previously to the passing of the Act; and that the service of the petition had been effected at a house which had formerly been, but was no longer, the office of the company, and on a person who had acted as, but who was not properly constituted, the secretary:—Held, that service of the petition was insufficient. Re Beddgelert Railway Co., 19 W. R. 427.

Held, also, that the railway had not been opened for public traffic within the meaning of the Act; and that as the judgment had been recovered upon a contract entered into before the passing of the Act it could have no effect. Ib.

3. Under the Railway Companies Act 1867, s. 4, whenever a judgment creditor of a railway company is unpaid, the appointment of a receiver, or if necessary a manager, is a matter of right, and amounts to a sort of equitable execution. The words "if necessary" point to the necessity of carrying on the business, and whenever a railway company is carrying on business in the ordinary way and conducting its own traffic, a manager is necessary within the meaning of the Act, and such manager should be appointed by the Court. In order to make "due provision" for the working expenses of the company required by the section, the Court will assume control over the management of the railway and the power of seeing that the money spent is applied to the proper management of the railway. Exp. Cambrian Railway Co., Re Manchester & Milford Railway Co., 14 L. R., Ch. D., 645; 49 L. J., Ch., 365; 42 L. T. 714.

A receiver would be properly appointed when the railway is a leased line, or, under a working arrangement with another company, merely takes the rent and the tolls. Ib.

As a general rule the directors or some of them would be appointed managers where they were acting fairly, and the order will generally be made without prejudice to any application by the directors to propose themselves or some of their number as managers. Ib.

The only evidence requisite in support of a petition by a judgment creditor for a manager under that section is an affidavit verifying the fact that he is a judgment creditor, that his judgment debt is unpaid, and that the company is a going concern conducting its own business. Ib.

4. In 1879 a railway company, whose line was partially completed, gave its secretary (the petitioner) a certificate of indebtedness, and undertaking to pay a certain sum with interest, upon which he recovered judgment and issued execution. The amount was due for services, partly rendered prior to the passing of the Railway Companies Act 1867. It appeared that the company was in considerable financial difficulties, and that there were judgment creditors to a large amount prior to that of the petitioner. The portion of the line open (about eight miles) was being worked by another company, at a remuneration of 60 per cent. of the gross earnings. The Court, on the application of the petitioner, granted a receiver over the portion of the line open for traffic, with liberty to extend him over any part of the line which may thereafter be opened. Exp. Quinton, Re Southern Railway Co., 5 L. R., Ir., 165.

5. By a railway Act (35 & 36 Vict., c. 106), reciting that it was expedient that certain baronies adjoining the proposed line, which would be greatly benefited by the construction of the railway, should guarantee the payment of a limited dividend on the share capital of the company; and that, for such purpose, the lands within the said baronies should, when necessary, be chargeable with any deficiency of such limited dividend, it was enacted that if and whenever, after the opening of the whole of the railway, and for twenty-two years after, the receipts over the working expenses should not amount to a dividend of 5 per cent. on the share capital, the amount required to make up such dividend should become payable half-yearly by the baronies ratably, as by the Act prescribed; provided that so much of the receipts over the working expenses as should be necessary for such purpose should, during the said period, be applied to the payment of the said dividend, in priority to any sum due on any mortgage deed, bond, or debenture stock, or to any dividend on any other portion of the capital. By a subsequent Act (36 & 37 Vict., c. 132), the foregoing enactments of the earlier Act were repealed, the liability was extended to other baronies, and it was enacted that, if and whenever, during the period of thirty-five years after the opening of the railway, the net profits, deducting from the gross receipts the working expenses and the interest of any debt or demand created by any mortgage deed, bond, or debenture stock, should not amount to a dividend of 5 per cent. on the share capital, the amount required to make up such dividend should be payable ratably by the baronies. The mode of ascertaining the proportions in which the baronies were to pay was regulated by s. 11 of the later Act, in which the sums were designated as the "half-yearly sums necessary to pay the interest and dividends" on the share capital; and, under a subsequent section, regulating the mode of presenting for the levy of such sums, they were to be paid by the grand juries to the treasurer of the company, or in such other manner as the company should direct:—Held, on a petition for a receiver by a judgment creditor of the company, that the baronial guarantee fund was dedicated to the payment of the dividend on the share capital, and was not general assets of the company for payment of its debts; and, it being satisfactorily shown that the undertaking was worked at a loss, the application for a receiver was refused. Bouch v. Sevenoaks, Maidstone, & Tunbridge Railway Co. (4 L. R., Exch. D., 213) disapproved of and not followed. Exp. Finlayson, Re Waterford, Dungarvon, & Lismore Railway Co., 5 L. R., Ir., 584.

VII. ABANDONMENT.

Jurisdiction of Court.] 1. A warrant of abandonment of a railway was issued by the Board of Trade on condition that the money deposited as security for the completion of the railway or the securities in which the same was invested should be applied as part of the assets of the company:—Held, that the Court had jurisdiction to make an order for winding up the company without the consent of a party who had advanced the deposit on a security from the railway company. Re Waterford, Lismore, & Fermoy Railway Co., 4 Ir. R., Eq., 490; 19 W. R. 145.

It is not necessary, under the Railway Abandonment Act 1869, s. 5, to save the rights of a party so circumstanced. They may be asserted and allowed in the administration of the assets of the company under the winding-up order. Ib.

What Company.] 2. A company, by its special Act, was authorized to construct docks and a railway. The railway was only about half a mile long, and for the purpose of connecting the docks with the London and South Western Railway, and the special Act prescribed the fares for the railway. On a petition to wind up the company:—Held, that the company was not a railway company within the exception contained in the Companies Act 1862, s. 199. Re Exmouth Docks Co., 22 W. R. 104; 29 L. T., N. S., 573; 43 L. J., Ch., 110; 17 L. R., Eq., 181.

Who may petition.] 3. A creditor of a railway company whose works have been abandoned by warrant of the Board of Trade, under 13 & 14 Vict., c. 83, cannot petition for an order to wind up the company. Re North Kent Railway Extension Railway Co., 8 L. R., Eq., 356; 20 L. T., N. S., 867; 17 W. R. 789.

Proof of Claims.] 4. G., having entered into a provisional contract for the construction of a railway, expended considerable sums of money for the use of the company, in payment of the costs of promoting one of the special Acts of the company, of office rent, stationery, etc. No resolutions of the board of directors authorizing the payments appeared in the minute books, but the secretary and some of the directors were at the time aware that such expenses were being defrayed by G. The railway was afterwards abandoned, and an order made for the winding up of the company:—Held, that the sums paid by G. constituted a liability on the part of the company, and that a claim by his assignees for the amount should be allowed. Exp. Stevens, Re Dublin and Rathcoole Railway Co., 1 L. R., Ir., 98.

A claim for sums paid by G. to the secretary of the company, but not proved to have been applied for the company's benefit, was disallowed. Ib.

In order to obtain from the Board of Trade an extension of the time limited by the Act for completing the line, G. executed a bond to the Crown in 40,000*l*. The company subsequently obtained a further Act, allowing an additional extension of time for the completion of the railway, but containing a clause saving the liability of G. on foot of the bond. By the warrant of abandonment it was provided that the sum due on foot of the bond should be applied as assets of the company, and the bond was assigned by the Lords Commissioners of the Treasury to the official liquidator. G.'s claim against the company had been previously assigned to T. & Co. for valuable consideration:—Held, that the official liquidator could not set off against the claim of T. & Co. the amount due on foot of the bond. Ib.

Receiver.] 5. A railway company which has never commenced to acquire the lands, or construct the railways authorized by its Act, is not an "undertaking" within the meaning of s. 4 of the Railway Companies Act 1867, of which a receiver can be appointed under that section. Re Birmingham & Lichfield Junction Railway Co., 18 L. R., Ch. D., 155; 50 L. J., Ch., 594; 45 L. T. 164; 29 W. R. 908.

Semble, the powers of a receiver appointed under the above section do not extend to getting in unpaid calls. Ib.

Costs.] 6. A railway having been abandoned under the Railways Abandonment Acts, the costs of a petition by the depositor for the transfer out to him of the bulk of the deposit moneys were ordered to be paid out of the general assets of the company. Re Laugharne Railway Co., 12 L. R., Eq., 454; 19 W. R. 1108.

1. Claims in respect of expenses incurred by parliamentary agents in getting the bill of a projected railway company passed through Parliament, and for moneys advanced by the intending contractor for the same purpose, are debts which have been incurred on account of the promotion of the company; and the Court, under the discretion given by the Railways Abandonment Act 1869, s. 5, will not hold it reasonable, as between such creditors and the surety to the bond, that their debts should be paid out of the bond, which, by the warrant for the abandonment of the railway, has been directed to be applied as part of the assets of the company. Re Brampton & Longtown Railway Co., 10 L. R., Eq., 613; 39 L. J., Ch., 681; 18 W. R. 994; 23 L. T., N. S., 356.

2. A Board of Trade warrant of abandonment of a railway, under the Abandonment of Railways Act 1850, and the Railway Companies Act 1867, was made with a condition that moneys deposited in the Court of Chancery as security should be applied as part of the assets of the company:—Held, that the solicitor and parliamentary agent, not being promoters of the company, were entitled to be paid thereout their costs and charges for obtaining the Act. Re Kensington Station Act, 20 L. R., Eq., 197; 23 W. R. 463; 32 L. T., N. S., 183.

3. A solicitor was employed in the promotion of a railway and in obtaining the Act for its incorporation. He was then appointed solicitor of the company, and was employed in obtaining two other Acts by which the scheme was amended and fresh powers granted. The undertaking proved abortive, and the railway was never constructed. A warrant of the Board of Trade was obtained under the Railways Abandonment Act 1869 for the abandonment of the railway, which contained the usual clause that the bond which had been given for the completion of the railway should be assets of the company:—Held, that the costs of the solicitor incurred in getting up the company, and, after its incorporation, in obtaining the subsequent Acts, were costs incurred on account of the promotion of the company within s. 5 of the Railways Abandonment Act 1869, and ought not to be paid out of the bond. Re Barry Railway Co., 4 L. R., Ch. D., 315; 46 L. J., Ch., 206; 25 W. R. 201; 37 L. T., N. S., 125.

VIII. ARRANGEMENT ON INSOLVENCY.

1. Confirmation by Court, 6038.
2. Who bound by, 6039.
3. Execution, Leave to issue, 6039.

1. Confirmation by Court.

4. A scheme which would convert mortgages of a railway company into irredeemable debenture stock is within the scope of the Railway Companies Act 1867; and the Court has jurisdiction to confirm such a scheme, if assented to by the majority of the mortgagees required by the Act, and the Court is satisfied that it would be beneficial to the company. Re Irish North-Western Railway Co., 3 Ir. R., Eq., 190. Affirming 2 Ir. R., Eq., 425.

5. When a scheme under the Railway Companies Act 1867 provided for the borrowing of large sums of money, and that the entire authorized loan capital should be applied, first, in completing and stocking the line, and then to all lawful purposes of the company, and did not contain any special provisions for the payment of or arrangement with creditors, the Court refused to confirm it as a scheme of arrangement with creditors. Re Letterkenny Railway Co., 4 Ir. R., Eq., 538.

6. A scheme of arrangement under the Railway Companies Act 1867 provided that, upon the allotment of certain debenture stock to the creditors, all their debts and claims should be deemed to be satisfied and their securities given up, to which almost all the outside creditors gave their assent; and, as none of them opposed the petition to confirm the scheme, the Court made an order confirming it, upon the company giving their personal security to make no allotment of the debenture stock to any of the outside creditors who had not given their assent. Re West Cork Railway Co., 7 Ir. R., Eq., 96.

7. Confirmation by the Court of a scheme under the Railway Companies Act 1867, enabling a railway company to create and issue debenture stock to an amount in excess of its powers under its Acts of Parliament, and providing for payment of creditors in such stock, the preliminaries prescribed by the Act having been complied with, and nine-tenths in value of the creditors appearing and assenting to the scheme. Re Teign Valley Railway Co., 17 L. T., N. S., 201.

8. When, upon a petition for the confirmation of a scheme of arrangement between a railway company and its creditors, some of the outside creditors appeared and opposed the scheme, the Court, on its appearing that their opposition was reasonable, and based on a due regard to their own interests, dismissed the petition. Re Somerset & Dorset Railway Co., 21 L. T., N. S., 656; 18 W. R. 332.

9. The Court cannot sanction a scheme under the Railway Companies Act 1867, giving to the holders of debenture stock the right to vote like shareholders. Re Stafford & Uttoxeter Railway Co., 41 L. J., Ch., 777; 20 W. R. 921.

10. When a scheme of arrangement between a railway company and its creditors had been confirmed, inrolment of the confirmation order was restrained on the application of outside creditors who had, within thirty days from the date of the order, set down a motion for leave to file a petition for a rehearing. Re Devon & Somerset Railway Co., 6 L. R., Eq., 615.

11. A petition was presented for the confirmation of a scheme of arrangement between a railway company and its creditors, which had been assented to by all the preference and ordinary shareholders present at an extraordinary general meeting. The special Act of the company enacted that all preference shares should confer the like right of voting at meetings as ordinary shares:—Held, that the special Act did not qualify the enactments of the Railway Companies Act 1867, and that the assent of the preference shareholders must be given in writing. Re Cambrian Railway Co., 19 W. R. 871; 24 L. T., N. S., 417.

2. Who bound by.

Debenture Holders.] 1. After a scheme of arrangement by a railway company with its creditors has been assented to, in writing, by three-fourths in value of the debenture holders, although dissenting debenture holders are entitled to appear and oppose the scheme, the scheme is binding upon the minority, unless it can be shown that the vote of the majority was obtained by fraud. Re East & West Junction Railway Co., 8 L. R., Eq., 87; 38 L. J., Ch., 522; 21 L. T., N. S., 86.

2. A debenture holder, although he has obtained judgment and issued execution against a railway company before the filing of a scheme of arrangement under the Railway Companies Act 1867, still remains a debenture holder for the purposes, and is therefore bound by the scheme when assented to by three-fourths in value of the holders of the company's debentures, and after enrolment of the scheme will be restrained from taking any further steps to enforce his judgment. Potteries, Shrewsbury, & North Wales Railway Co. v. Minor, 40 L. J., Ch., 685; 6 L. R., Ch., 621; 19 W. R. 883; 25 L. T., N. S., 522.

3. When at a duly convened meeting of the debenture holders of a company in a ruined condition, a scheme for the reconstruction of the company was assented to by an overwhelming majority, the Court held the will of the majority to be binding on the minority. Re Tunis Railways Co., 22 W. R. 639; 30 L. T., N. S., 512. Affirmed 31 L. T., N. S., 264.

4. An outside creditor is not bound by a scheme of arrangement filed by a railway company under the Railway Companies Act 1867, and cannot derive any indirect benefit from it; his rights are entirely unaffected by it. Stevens v. Mid Hants Railway Co.; London Financial Association v. Stevens, 42 L. J., Ch., 694; 8 L. R., Ch., 1064; 21 W. R. 858; 29 L. T. 318.

Unpaid vendors of land sold to the company, and debenture holders of the company, do not, by accepting debenture stock under the provisions of a scheme, lose any priority which they previously had over an elegit creditor, who is not bound by the scheme. Ib.

Creditors.] 5. A scheme of arrangement is not binding upon outside creditors who have not assented thereto. Re Bristol & North Somerset Railway Co., 37 L. J., Ch., 851; 6 L. R., Eq., 448; 16 W. R. 1112.

Whenever confirmation of such a scheme prejudicially affecting the interests of outside creditors is sought, the Court, before confirming it, will require the written assent thereto of all the outside creditors. Ib.

6. A scheme of arrangement under the Railway Companies Act 1867 is not, by s. 18, made binding upon unpaid landowners or general creditors of the company, but only on persons who have assented thereto, or are members of classes which, under the previous sections of the Act, have become bound by the assent of the requisite majorities. Re Cambrian Railway Co., 3 L. R., Ch., 278; 37 L. J., Ch., 409; 16 W. R. 346; 18 L. T., N. S., 522.

The Court has, however, jurisdiction, under ss. 7, 9, to restrain proceedings by creditors or unpaid landowners during the maturing of the scheme. Ib.

The Court will not restrain proceedings by a creditor or unpaid landowner, unless the scheme makes reasonable provision for the payment of the claims of creditors and landowners. Ib.

A railway company constituted by the amalgamation of various other railway companies had filed a scheme for the future management and carrying on of the company. Leave was given by the Court to amend the original scheme so filed. S. C. 18 L. T., N. S., 530.

7. Notwithstanding s. 17 of the 30 & 31 Vict., c. 127, a scheme filed under that Act, but not confirmed within three months, will, until the application for confirmation has been heard, be considered as still pending so far as regards the protection by interim order against creditors afforded by s. 7. Robertson v Wrexham, Mold, & Connah's Quay Railway Co., 17 W. R. 137.

But that protection will not be afforded against a suit for specific performance before decree by an unpaid landowner, except upon the terms of the company submitting to a decree in the suit. Ib.

8. Parties who have recovered a judgment against a railway company, and converted it into a statutory mortgage under 13 & 14 Vict., c. 29, are not bound by a scheme of arrangement under the Railway Companies Act 1867, to which they have not assented. Stephens v. Cork & Kinsale Junction Railway Co., 6 Ir. R., Eq., 604.

3. Execution, Leave to issue.

9. The 7th and 9th sections of the Railway Companies Act 1867 apply only to the time between the filing of a scheme of arrangement and its enrolment, and after enrolment the Court has no jurisdiction without a bill being filed to restrain an action against the company, nor does a judgment creditor require the leave of the Court to issue execution. Re Potteries, Shrewsbury, & North Wales Railway Co., 39 L. J., Ch., 273; 22 L. T., N. S., 53; 5 L. R., Ch., 67; 18 W. R. 155. Reversing 18 W. R. 87; 21 L. T., N. S., 545.

Sections 7 and 9 are co-extensive, and after the enrolment of the scheme there is no right to come to the Court under s. 9 for leave to make process available against the property of the company. Ib.

The creditor in this case was a mortgagee of a railway company, who had obtained a judgment previously to the filing of a scheme to which three-fourths of the mortgagees have since assented. Ib.

10. After publication in the Gazette of notice of the filing of a scheme of arrangement by a railway company, creditors of the company will not be allowed, without first obtaining leave of the Court, to issue execution upon a scire facias against shareholders of the company; the amount of capital remaining to be paid, in respect of which the scire facias has been obtained, being property of the company. Re Devon & Somerset Railway Co., 6 L. R., Eq., 610; 37 L. J., Ch., 914; 18 L. T., N. S., 631; 17 W. R. 133.

1. When a railway company has filed a scheme under the Railway Companies Act 1867 (30 & 31 Vict., c. 127), which has been sanctioned by one branch of the Court, a motion for leave to issue execution must be made in that branch of the Court by which the scheme was sanctioned. Christ Church (Dean and Chapter) v. East & West Junction Railway Co., 17 W. R. 819.

2. The Cambrian Railway Company's Act 1868 restrains the commencement or continuance of actions and suits against the company by creditors except with leave of the Court. The Court will not in general give leave unless it is shown that the company has money applicable to the payment and refuses to pay. Re Parry, 18 W. R. 416; 22 L. T., N. S., 116.

3. Upon an application under the Companies Clauses Act, s. 36, for leave to issue execution against shareholders of a company which had been ordered to pay a sum of money and failed in doing so, the Court will give the shareholders an opportunity of questioning the validity of the order; but is not bound to do so by directing a scire facias to issue. Healey v. Chichester & Midhurst Railway Co., 9 L. R., Eq., 148; 39 L. J., Ch., 387; 21 L. T. 811; 18 W. R. 270.

IX. RAILWAY COMMISSIONERS, ARBITRATION BY.

4. Under an Act of Parliament, any owner of mines, etc., lying within a certain distance of a canal, was authorized to apply to the commissioners of the navigation, to have a railway made over the lands of other proprietors, intervening between them and the canal, for the purpose of communicating with it; and if it should appear to the major part of the commissioners, that such road was fitting or necessary, it was to be lawful for the proprietor of the mine, etc., to make it, subject to certain restrictions expressed in the Act; and it was provided, that if any person should think himself aggrieved by anything done in pursuance of the Act, he might within six calendar months appeal to the Quarter Sessions. Under this Act, the commissioners, by their award, authorized the defendant to make a railway over the lands of the plaintiff; the plaintiff having filed his bill to restrain the execution of the work, on the ground that the railway was not fitting and necessary, an injunction was granted. Dudley v. Horton, 4 L. J., Ch., 104.

Jurisdiction of Equity.] 5. A railway company, in accordance with the provisions of an Act of Parliament, altered the gauge of its line, "on the terms of its being paid an equitable portion of the expense thereof, such expense and proportions to be borne by the several companies whose interest would be advanced by such alteration"; and it was enacted that the plaintiffs should pay to the defendants such proportion of the expense as should be agreed upon between the parties; or, in case of their differing, as might be determined by the award of the railway commissioners. The several companies not being able to agree, the question was referred to the commissioners, and an inquiry was by them instituted, at which no person on behalf of the plaintiffs attended, and at which it appeared from the evidence that no notice was formally given them to attend, but at which the expenses of the alteration were divided and apportioned among the several companies. Notice of the award by the commissioners was sent to the plaintiffs, and their portion of the expenses demanded, but, not being paid, an action was commenced. The plaintiffs impugned the fairness of the award, inasmuch as the sum demanded was the proportion of the expense for seventy-one miles, instead of for four only. On a bill by the plaintiffs to set aside the award, and to restrain the action:—Held, that the authority of the commissioners to make the award having been conferred upon them by Act of Parliament, the Court had no jurisdiction by way of appeal to set it aside; and as the plaintiffs had subsequently had recourse to, and had memorialised the commissioners, the bill must be dismissed with costs. Newry & Enniskillen Railway Co. v. Ulster Railway Co., 2 Jur., N. S. 60; 4 W. R. 211. Affirmed 2 Jur., N. S., 936; 4 W. R. 781.

6. Two railway companies were empowered by a special Act to enter into a working agreement, but no provision was made respecting arbitration. The agreement made under this Act contained a clause providing that any difference between the companies should be determined by arbitration, in accordance with the provisions of the Railway Arbitration Act 1859. Differences having arisen, one of the companies called upon the railway commissioners to decide the differences under the 8th section of the Regulation of Railways Act 1873. The other company accordingly issued a writ for an injunction against the first company, which was amended by making the railway commissioners parties, and asking for a prohibition:—Held, that the railway commissioners had no jurisdiction to undertake the arbitration, and a prohibition was issued accordingly. Stokes Bay Railway & Pier Co. v. London & South Western Railway Co. (2 Nev. & Mac. 143) and Portpatrick Railway Co. v. Caledonian Railway Co. (3 Nev. & Mac. 189) disapproved. Great Western Railway Co. v. Waterford & Limerick Railway Co., 17 L. R., Ch. D., 493; 50 L. J., Ch., 513; 44 L. T. 723; 29 W. R. 826.

The clause in the 8th section of the Regulation of Railways Act 1873 which enables one party to apply for the arbitration of the railway commissioners, "where any difference between railway companies is, under the provisions of any general or special Act, required or authorized to be referred to arbitration," does not apply to all cases in which the agreement under which the difference has arisen has been made under the provisions of a general or special Act, but only to cases in which the specific difference has been required or authorized by a general or special Act to be referred to arbitration. Ib.

1. A right is not barred, by merely signing a receipt as a witness, upon payment by the executor to the adverse party, not amounting to a release or fraud. Holmes v. Custance, 12 Ves. 279.

2. When a receipt has been given under seal it discharges at law all cause of action, and can only be set aside by the equitable jurisdiction of a court of law; but a mere receipt in writing has no such effect; it amounts simply to an acknowledgment of money paid; it cannot be pleaded in answer to an action, and it may be impeached or explained by parol evidence. Lee v. Lancashire & Yorkshire Railway Co., 25 L. T., N. S., 77; 19 W. R. 729; 6 L. R., Ch., 527.

3. A document containing all the requisites to make it a valid contract, and purporting to be a receipt, though by reason of its being insufficiently stamped inadmissible as such, may be received as evidence of the contract. Evans v. Prothero, 1 De G. Macn. & G. 572; 21 L. J., N. S., Ch., 772. But see S. C. 2 Macn. & G. 319; 20 L. J., N. S., Ch., 448; 15 Jur. 113.

4. A. agreed that a legacy given to his wife should be set off against a sum of the same amount, which he owed to the testator on his promissory note, and he and his wife signed a receipt for the legacy, but it did not appear that the executors had delivered up the note to him. A. afterwards died, leaving his wife surviving:—Held, that she was entitled to be paid the legacy, no release having been given for it by her husband. Harrison v. Andrews, 13 Sim. 595; 13 L. J., N. S., Ch., 243.

5. Defendant bound in Chancery, to answer as to receipt of rent. Dive v. Lintoft, Cary 71.

6. N. A. made a will with certain trusts, relating to his real and personal estate, and appointed trustees to carry them into execution; one of the trusts was to pay 2,500*l.* as provision for younger children, and 5,000*l.* for R. A. B., an executor and trustee under the will. An Act of Parliament was obtained to carry some of the trusts into execution, and under it lands devised by N. A. were sold. W. L. was trustee under the Act:—Held, that R. A. B.'s receipt was no discharge of W. L.'s liability, as by the terms of the Act he was absolutely bound to pay the debts and discharge the children's portions, and it was not set up in the answer nor proved that R. A. B. had specifically received this money as trustee for his daughter. Lawrence v. Blake, 8 Cl. & F. 504.

7. The receipt granted by the collector of quit rent is evidence of the apportionment of rent. Bowles v. Waller, Hayes 439.

8. An agreement to become partners in a colliery which was to be demised upon royalties, and the royalties to be divided in certain proportions, is an interest in land within the Statute of Frauds, 21 Car. 2, c. 3, and must be in writing, signed by the parties. Caddick v. Skidmore, 3 Jur., N. S., 1185.

Receipts signed by the party sought to be charged, which partly disclosed the nature of the agreement:—Held, not sufficient to take the case out of the statute. Ib.

I. IN GENERAL, 6042.
II. SCIRE FACIAS, 6042.

I. IN GENERAL.

1. Recognisance by a guardian, in the matter of a minor, is not a debt to the Crown. Where a debt to the Crown is not of a public nature, Crown process should not issue. Exp. Ushor, 1 Ball & B. 199.

2. Recognisance of defendants, and two sureties for 2,000*l.*, discharged on payment of that sum, although, in the meantime, a larger sum appeared to be due. Baker v. Jefferies, 2 Cox 226.

3. Habeas corpus to Warden of Fleet to have defendant in court, to be charged with debt, on recognisance. Ward v. Crouch, Cary 71.

4. Where a plaintiff was ordered to give security by recognisance "in the sum of 827*l.*, being the sum stated in the defendant's answer to be due for rent up to and including the 1st of May last;" and a recognisance reciting the order, and purporting to be in pursuance of it, was entered into, but by mistake it was conditioned for such sum as should be decreed for mesne rates. The Court (for the purpose of enabling the defendant to proceed against the sureties) ordered, that the plaintiffs should within one month pay the said sum of 827*l.*, as and for the mesne rates of the lands in the pleadings mentioned. O'Leary v. Purcell, 3 Ir. Eq. R. 329; Fl. & K. 126.

5. Plaintiff, being in execution on statute, released on recognisance, no cause being shown. Rosse v. Lassels, Cary 50.

6. A. is principal in a recognisance of 5,000*l.*, and B. and C. sureties. A. afterwards jointures his wife before marriage in some lands, without notice either to the wife or her friends of this recognisance, and devises his real and personal estate to B., one of his sureties, and dies first. The personal estate of A., the principal, shall be applied towards this recognisance; then his land devised, the devisee being a volunteer; next the paraphernalia of the wife of A., the principal; and lastly, the two sureties shall contribute to make up the deficiency. Tynt v. Tynt, 2 P. W. 542; Mos. 192.

7. A recognisance not inrolled shall be looked upon as a bond, and paid as a debt by specialty. Bothomly v. Fairfax, 1 P. W. 334; 2 Vern. 750.

So a recognisance, not regularly taken, may be sued as an obligation. Ib.

8. Under the concluding part of the 13th section of the stat. 13 & 14 Vict., c. 51, recognisances entered into by a surety for a tenant of lands, which were the subject of a suit at the equity side of the Court of Exchequer, may, upon agreement between the Lord Chancellor and Lord Chancellor Baron, be delivered over to such persons as may be appointed by the Master of the Rolls; sed quære, whether recognisances so transferred become records of, and capable of being sued upon in, the Court of Chancery, unless perhaps by the Crown, under its special privilege to select its Court. Reg. v. Jones, 1 Ir. Ch. R. 524.

9. Upon the appointment of A. to the office of county treasurer, in 1831, he, together with four other persons, B., C., D., and E., entered into security by recognisance, whereby A. acknowledged himself indebted to the King in 7,000*l.* sterling; by the same instrument B. and C. acknowledged themselves to be jointly and severally indebted in 5,000*l.* sterling; and D. and E. in like manner in 2,000*l.* sterling. In the condition (which was that A. should duly account, pursuant to the 4 Geo. 4, c. 33) the instrument was described as "the foregoing recognisance." In 1837 A. resigned the office of treasurer, being a defaulter to the amount of 18,000*l.* and upwards, of which sum about 4,000*l.* was due to the Crown, and the residue to the county:—Held, that this was a recognisance securing a single sum of 7,000*l.* and no more:—Held, also, that 7,000*l.* British was the amount thereby secured, although the amount which the 4 Geo. 4, c. 33, required such treasurer to secure was 7,000*l.* Irish; and that upon payment of that sum by A., the principal, he was entitled to have the recognisance of himself and sureties vacated; but on payment of that sum by the sureties they were not entitled as against the Crown to the benefit of the recognisance acknowledged by A., the principal. Reg. v. O'Callaghan, 1 Ir. Eq. R. 439; Jon. & C. 154.

Sureties of a county treasurer paying the amount of his recognisance, are not by reason of such payment entitled to priority over the Crown, there being a debt due by such treasurer to the Crown ultra the amount of the recognisance. Ib.

10. A surety by recognisance having paid the debt, though after a levari issued against him, but never returned, is entitled to the benefit of the recognisance, and to stand as a creditor by matter of record against his co-surety for contribution. Salkeld v. Abbot, Hayes 576.

11. Vacating a recognisance as to one surety. Callaghan v. Callaghan, 8 Ir. Eq. R. 572.

12. Sureties in a recognisance contribute in proportion to the amounts for which they were respectively originally bound. Re Mac Douglas, 10 Ir. R., Eq., 269.

II. SCIRE FACIAS.

13. An action at law will lie upon a recognisance; but if it is entered into in pursuance of an order of this Court, the Court will not allow it to be sued otherwise than by a scire facias in this court. Grant v. Stone, 1 Vern. 313.

14. One was condemned in scire facias on a recognisance in chancery, the warden informing the Court that he was in the Fleet, pro certis causis: the Court cannot order him to be detained in execution thereof. Paine v. Puttenham, Dyer 306; pl. 62.

And moreover, the plaintiff never having prayed this sort of execution, is sufficient cause to invalidate the execution. Ib.

Chancery has not any authority to commit the body of a defendant condemned in scire facias upon a recognisance, to prison, for execution, because his body is not liable, but his goods, etc., by fi. fa. or elegit. Ib.

1. It is not the practice, on the petty bag side of the Court of Chancery, that the scire facias on a recognisance should set out the condition thereof; although it would be more correct to do so; and the Court refused to alter the practice. Regina v. Hurley, 2 Dr. & War. 433; 4 Ir. Eq. R. 637. S. C. nom. Regina v. Henley, 1 Con. & L. 473.

An averment of facts, showing the jurisdiction of the officer before whom the recognisance is taken, is necessary in a scire facias, although the statement be omitted in the recognisance itself, but the position in the scire facias of the averment is unimportant; and its being intermixed with the statement of the body of the recognisance, out of which it has been omitted, was held not to be a ground for a plea of nul tiel record, and liberty to plead to the merits was refused. Ib.

A scire facias on a recognisance conditioned for a tenant's paying his rent, in the usual form, stated that the conusors, describing them as of the county of Cork, came before A. B., "who then and there was a Master Extraordinary, in and for said county, and duly authorised in that behalf, and then and there acknowledged themselves to be bound," etc., concluding, "as by the said recognisance of record may appear," and did not set out the condition of the recognisance. The defendants pleaded nul tiel record:—Held, that the omission of the condition of the recognisance in the scire facias was a variance, but that, as the practice appeared to be uniformly to omit the condition, the Court would sustain that practice, and not allow the objection to prevail. Ib.

Held, also, that the introduction into the scire facias of the allegation, that A. B. was a Master Extraordinary for the county of Cork, was no variance, not being a statement of the record, but an independent averment upon which issue might be taken. Ib.

2. Recognisance by E. N. of Mallard Lodge, scire facias, against E. N. of Mallew Lodge. On nul tiel record pleaded:—Held, sufficient. Reg. v. Naghten, 9 Ir. Eq. R. 593.

3. Two pleas to a scire facias, on a recognisance, the second of which commenced with the averment by leave of the Court, etc., pursuant to the statute in that case, etc., though informal:—Held, sufficient on demurrer. Reg. v. Irwin, 9 Ir. Eq. R. 546.

To a scire facias, on a recognisance, averring that it was taken in the county of C., before A. B., a Master Extraordinary for the county of C., it was pleaded that A. B. was not a Master Extraordinary for the county of C.:—Held, a good plea. Ib.

4. The Court will permit the amendment of a scire facias, by stating the recognisance upon which the scire facias issued, to be a joint, and not a several one, after the defendant has pleaded thereto. Reg. v. Fennell, 1 Dr. & Wal. 511.

5. A scire facias on a recognisance set forth that on, etc. (at Ballinasloe, in the county of Galway), M. F. and two others of, etc., in the county of Galway, came before J. K. (who then and there was), one of the Masters, etc. (as by the said recognisance of record and inrolled, etc., may appear). In the record of the recognisance the words within the brackets were omitted, but at the foot of the recognisance was this note, signed by the Master:—"Taken and acknowledged before me at Ballinasloe, in the county of Galway aforesaid." Upon nul tiel record pleaded:—Held, that there was a variance. The note at foot is not part of the recognisance. A case depending at the petty bag side of the Court may be heard and determined out of term. Reg. v. Lynch, 2 J. & L. 103.

A scire facias on a recognisance stated that on the 28th April 1838, J. L., of L., in the county of G., came before J. R., "who then and there was one of the Masters Extraordinary of the High Court of Chancery in Ireland, in and for the said county of G., and duly authorised in that behalf, and acknowledged himself to be indebted to us in the sum of 230*l.*:—Held, upon demurrer, that it was not sufficiently averred in the scire facias that the recognisance was taken within the jurisdiction of the Master Extraordinary. S. C. 1 J. & L. 462; 7 Ir. Eq. R. 263.

The jurisdiction of the person taking the recognisance must be stated, and it must appear on the scire facias that the recognisance was taken within that jurisdiction. Ib.

6. To a scire facias on a recognisance by a tenant under the Court, and his sureties, one of the defendants pleaded performance of the condition by the tenant, by payment of the rent, and also a discharge under the Bankrupt Act. Replication, that the tenant did not pay the said rent, contrary to the form and effect of the condition:—Held, bad, as not assigning a particular breach. Reg. v. O'Donnell, 6 Ir. Eq. R. 639; 1 J. & L. 271.

But the Crown was allowed to amend, on the terms of not proceeding personally against the bankrupt, nor against his after-acquired property. Ib.

7. The Statute of Limitations is not pleadable to a scire facias on a receiver's recognisance. Reg. v. Bayly, 1 Dr. & War. 213; 4 Ir. Eq. R. 142.

A recognisance to the Crown is not within the operation of the 8 Geo. 1, c. 4. Ib.

The period from which the twenty years specified in that statute are to be reckoned, is the issuing of the writ, and not the day upon which it bears teste. Ib.

8. It is no objection to a replication in scire facias on a recognisance that it purports to be pleaded by the Queen and not by her attorney-general. Reg. v. Bowen, 13 Ir. Eq. R. 241.

9. Where subsequently to the stat. 13 & 14 Vict., c. 51, a scire facias at the petty bag side of the Court of Chancery, upon a recognisance entered into by a surety for a tenant of lands which were the subject of a suit at the equity side of the Court of Exchequer, after reciting the recognisance, proceeded thus:—"As to the said recognisance which was on, etc., in, etc., duly inrolled in Her Majesty's said Court of Exchequer, and now remaining as a record in our said Court of Chancery, by virtue of the statute in that case made and provided, might appear:" to which scire facias the defendant pleaded that the Court of Chancery ought not to have or take further cognisance of the action, because the recognisance was one, etc., duly inrolled in the Court of Exchequer, whereby that Court then and there acquired, and still retained and possessed, full jurisdiction and authority to award execution against him for the said sum of, etc., according to the tenor and effect of the recognisance, and which plea concluded with the following averment, viz.: "that there is not any such record of the said supposed recognisance now remaining in Her Majesty's said Court of Chancery, as in the said writ of scire facias is above alleged, and this the said defendant is ready to verify, wherefore he prays judgment whether this Court can or will take further cognisance of the action aforesaid." Upon a motion at the petty bag side to take this plea off the file as irregular, as not having been verified by affidavit, and as being false and frivolous, this Court refused to make any rule. Reg. v. Jones, 1 Ir. Ch. R. 524.

1. A rejoinder falsely traversing matter of inducement contained in a replication to a plea to a scire facias upon a receiver's recognisance, taken off the file with costs. Reg. v. Foot, 1 Ir. Ch. R. 9.

2. Where the sheriff returned nihil on two several writs of scire facias, issued on a recognisance, entered into by parties who resided abroad, and directed to the sheriff of the county where the estate of the party lay; rules to plead may be entered as on a return of scire feci. Regina v. Barry, 2 Ir. Eq. R. 189.

3. Upon a levari on a recognisance at the suit of a subject, the sheriff is entitled to levy 1*s.* only in the 1*l.* for the first 100*l.*, and 6*d.* for every other 100*l.* Creed v. Creed, Fl. & K. 396; 4 Ir. Eq. R. 299.

6. The relief, by delivering up a contract, requires a stronger case than to resist a specific performance. Savage v. Brookopp, 18 Ves. 335.

7. Specific performance is wholly discretionary in court, as is also the jurisdiction to set aside a contract. Mortlock v. Buller, 10 Ves. 294. Affirmed 2 Dow 510.

8. Deeds not delivered up upon petition in bankruptcy. Exp. Poole, 1 Ves. J. 160.

1. Persons claiming lands by will, or other voluntary disposition, and having the law on their side, are entitled, as against the heir at law, to the assistance of a court of equity for a discovery of the deeds and writings relating to the devised estate, and to have them delivered up as following the lands. Newcastle (Duke) v. Pelham (Lord), 3 Bro. P. C. 460.

2. Where a man executes a several bond, intending it to be joint, he may by bill have it delivered up. Underhill v. Horwood, 10 Ves. 225. Affirmed 14 Ves. 28.

This will also be done in bankruptcy. Id. 227.

4. Plaintiff being entitled, upon coming of age, to the produce of a West Indian estate, bills of lading of consignments previously made were decreed to be delivered up to him. Hovey v. Blakeman, 4 Ves. 609.

5. Action on bills of exchange: bill to have them delivered up, as being given on a gaming transaction; a demurrer was overruled. Newman v. Franco, 2 Anstr. 519.

6. Plaintiff prayed a discovery, injunction, and delivery of a bill of exchange; upon the answers and evidence, the right being clear, the Court refused an opportunity of trying it at law, and decreed an immediate delivery. Newman v. Milner, 2 Ves. J. 493.

7. Bill to have deeds, assigning stock, delivered up, as obtained by undue influence by a servant over her master, and an account. The evidence of direct influence considerably subsequent to the deeds. The defendant a married woman; her only separate property, stock; and not liable, therefore, without a lien. An issue being declined, bill was dismissed. Nantes v. Corrock, 9 Ves. 182.

8. Demurrer lies to bill for delivery up of will to be cancelled which has been pronounced bad by Ecclesiastical Court, and is therefore unavailable. Jones v. Frost, 3 Madd. 1.

9. Equitable jurisdiction to order a deed, forming a cloud upon a title to be delivered up, though void at law: accordingly, a demurrer to a bill to have a deed fraudulent and void, as in contemplation of bankruptcy, delivered up, was overruled. Hayward v. Dimsdale, 17 Ves. 111.

10. Under a bill to have a contract delivered up, on the ground of the defective title of the defendant, the vendor, and for compensation for the injury to the plaintiff by the failure of the contract, the decree was made for delivery up of the contract, without prejudice to an action, instead of an inquiry before the Master. Gwillim v. Stone, 14 Ves. 128.

11. The Court will not, on the motion of a creditor coming in under a decree, directing a sale of lands devised for payment of debts, set aside a lease obtained pendente lite, from the devisee under the will, with a leasing power. Moore v. M'Namara, 2 Ball & B. 186.

12. A bill for the delivery up of a void lease may not be demurrable, although it may appear from the statements in the bill that the lease is void on the face of it. Molesworth v. Howard, 2 Colly. 145.

13. Agreement decreed to be delivered up on the ground not of fraud but surprise, neither party understanding the effect of it, viz., a lease with covenant for perpetual renewal at a fixed rent of premises, held under a church lease renewable upon fines continually increasing. Willan v. Willan, 16 Ves. 72.

14. Court cannot, on motion, order delivery up of annuity deed, void for omission in memorial, but can only set aside judgment and warrant of attorney. Appleby v. Smith, 3 Anstr. 865. S. P. Jeffrey v. Athol (Duke), id. n.

15. Decree, on setting aside an annuity for want of a memorial registered, for an account of the consideration with interest and costs, and of all the annual payments, the balance on either side to be paid, the securities delivered up, and a re-conveyance. Holbrook v. Sharpy, 19 Ves. 131.

16. A. & Co. being indebted to D. & Co. in the sum of 4,000*l.*, deposited with them a bill of exchange to that amount, indorsed by L. for the accommodation of A. & Co. Afterwards A. & Co. having agreed to indemnify L., and having prevailed upon several persons to accept bills for their accommodation, deposited them with D. & Co. "as a collateral security for the payment" of the former bill. Further advances were made on the security of the bills. On the bankruptcy of A. & Co., D. & Co. sued the acceptors of one of the bills, who gave a cognovit, which, with the bill, was handed to L., who gave full value for it:—Held, that the deposited bills were to be the primary security for the payment of the 4,000*l.*, but L., being answerable for the residue which might remain unsatisfied by the bills, could not be compelled to give up the bill and cognovit of which he had possession. Jones v. Lane, 3 Y. & Coll. 281; 8 L. J., N. S., Exch. Eq., 41; 3 Jur. 265.

Where A. had possession of a bill of exchange accepted by B., which for reasons dehors the instrument he could not enforce against B. in an action:—Held, nevertheless, that B. had no equity to have the bill delivered up to be cancelled unless he could show that A. had wrongful possession of it. Ib.

17. Bill filed for delivery up of bills of exchange; action at law for recovery of them; verdict for defendant (the plaintiff in equity); plaintiff is still entitled to proceed for delivery up of them. Lisle v. Liddle, 3 Anstr. 649.

18. A promissory note, suspicious in itself under the circumstances, and the admitted object of it, being an improper one, even if the note were actually genuine, decreed, at the instance of the person alleged to have given it, to be deposited with the registrar of the Court in the first instance, with a declaration that the plaintiff was entitled to be relieved against it, without preventing the defendant from bringing an action on it within a reasonable time, and if delay in so doing, then to be delivered up. Winchester (Bishop) v. Fournier, 2 Ves. 445.

19. A. and his wife B., who had no separate estate, signed a promissory note for the payment of money due by A. to X. A. died insolvent, and X. shortly after his death got B. to sign a fresh promissory note without mentioning to her that she was not liable on the original note; and it being doubtful whether she believed herself liable, on bill filed to have the note delivered up to be cancelled:—Decreed accordingly, and held, that the case was too plain to be sent for trial at law. Coward v. Hughes, 1 Kay & J. 443.

1. It is not the course of the Court to set aside a deed at the instance of a defendant as such, though he is entitled to the benefit of his answer, and no decree can be made against it on the testimony of a single witness; but in such a case the defendant should file a cross-bill. Holderness v. Rankin, 6 Jur., N. S., 904.

2. Principles on which courts of equity proceed, in ordering the delivery up of instruments on which actions may be brought. Cooper v. Joel, 27 Beav. 313; 1 De G. F. & J. 240.

A written guarantee was given for moneys payable by instalments; though invalid, there was no invalidity on the face of it. In an action for the first instalment the plaintiff was non-prossed:—Held, that, although there was a legal defence, the instrument ought to be cancelled, on the ground that future actions were contemplated, and that the future defence might fail from the loss of evidence. Ib.

3. Where a bill is filed to set aside an indenture of settlement of real and personal estate, the Court will not exert its authority to set aside the indenture partially, or as to the real estate only. Turnley v. Hooper, 2 Jur., N. S., 1081.

4. Except in cases of fraud, the Court will not, at the suit of a purchaser, order an agreement to be delivered up to be cancelled. Onions v. Cohen, 5 N. R. 400.

A court of equity will not, in the absence of fraud, entertain a bill for the cancellation of an agreement in writing relating to land, although incapable of being performed except in a case in which the existence of the agreement, if suffered to remain in the hands of the defendant, would operate as a cloud on the title. S. C. 2 Hem. & M. 354; 11 Jur., N. S., 198; 34 L. J., Ch., 338; 12 L. T., N. S., 15.

5. A deed primâ facie valid at law will be acted on in equity until it has been set aside, the Court never giving a defendant active relief without a cross-bill. Jacobs v. Richards, 18 Beav. 300; 18 Jur. 527; 23 L. J., Ch., 557.

A deed, though overreached by the finding of an inquisition in lunacy, is not therefore necessarily primâ facie void. Ib.

6. The Court refused to decree a bond for which no money passed at the time of its execution, to be cancelled on the evidence of the petitioner alone against the affidavit in answer of the respondent, that the bond was the free and voluntary act of the petitioner and given for past services and advances of money. Wyse v. Lambert, 16 Ir. Ch. R. 378.

7. Circumstances under which a deed executed under a mistake will be set aside considered. Spicer v. Dawson, Spicer v. Spicer, Lamford v. Spicer, 5 W. R. 431.

8. A bill alleged that an agreement was entered into by parol between the plaintiff and the defendant, and that a part of it only was reduced to writing; and that the defendant having obtained the benefit of the written part of the agreement, repudiated the other part; and the bill prayed that the written agreement might be delivered up to be cancelled:—Held, that the bill was not demurrable. Jervis v. Berridge, 21 W. R. 395; 28 L. T., N. S., 481.

The bill contained no offer by the plaintiff to repay to the defendant a sum of money which they would be bound, if they succeeded at the hearing, to repay him:—Held, that this was not a good ground for demurrer. Ib.

9. The plaintiff, in 1833, gave a post obit security on his expectancy in a certain fund, payable on the death of his father, to W., in consideration of certain gaming debts. He subsequently won a large sum of W., by bets on horseracing, and both parties having submitted to the arbitration of the Jockey Club, in 1837, the steward decided that one debt should be set off against the other, and the security given up. W. refused to give up the security, and in 1842 assigned it to C. for valuable consideration, who gave notice to the trustees of the fund. The plaintiff having filed his bill to have the security delivered up to be cancelled:—Held, first, that after the lapse of time the deed must be considered to have been for good consideration. Secondly, that the submission to the arbitration of the Jockey Club amounted to an agreement, which could not be impeached under the Acts against gaming, if any part of the account between the parties was legal. Thirdly, that although the trust fund was directed to be laid out in land, it must be treated as a mere chose in action, and C. took it subject to all the equities of W. Hawker v. Wood, 1 W. R. 316.

10. Upon the dissolution of partnership and the settlement of all accounts between the partners, A. B. (the continuing partner) took some of the debts as good debts. One turned out to be bad, the securities for it having been fraudulently abstracted by a clerk:—Held, that A. B. could not sustain a bill to rectify or set aside the settlement of accounts. Laing v. Campbell, 36 Beav. 3.

2. Re-conveyance on.

11. Where a deed is declared void in equity and cancelled, a re-conveyance is not necessary, semble. Hoghton v. Hoghton, 15 Beav. 278; 17 Jur. 19; 21 L. J., Ch., 482.

12. As to the necessity of a re-conveyance on setting aside a deed in equity. Att.-Gen. v. Magdalen College (Oxford), 18 Beav. 223; 18 Jur. 363; 23 L. J., Ch., 844.

13. Deed set aside, upon the ground of ignorance and mistake as to its purport and effect, no fraud or undue influence in obtaining its execution being alleged, and the deed itself being inconsistent with the effect contended for by the grantee under it as against the plaintiff. The plaintiff intending to assist the defendant, his illegitimate son, in raising money upon mortgage, and to give security for him, had executed a deed which recited a contract for sale, and in consideration of 50*l.*, conveyed the equity of redemption in the property, which had been mortgaged, to the defendant. No consideration was ever paid; and the defendant, who insisted that the deed was a voluntary conveyance to himself from the plaintiff, had not questioned a subsequent sale of a portion of the property by the plaintiff. Deed set aside and re-conveyance ordered. Cox v. Bruton, 5 W. R. 544.

14. When a suit is instituted to set aside a voluntary settlement of real and personal estate, and the right to the relief asked is not contested, the Court will order a re-conveyance of the property the subject of the settlement, and direct payment of the costs out of the property so settled. Thompson v. Milligan, 18 L. T., N. S., 809.

II. CANCELLATION BY PARTIES TO INSTRUMENTS. PRESUMPTION FROM.

1. Deed of gift, found cancelled among papers of grantor after death (in absence of evidence of its being satisfied), will be enforced against grantor's representative on presumption that it was cancelled improperly. Sluyskon v. Hunter, 1 Meriv. 40.

2. Marriage settlement of personal property, in general terms, all moneys, bonds, bills, debts, notes, etc:—Held, there is no inference of fraud from cancelling a note, the only instrument of that description, during the treaty, on a fair, moral consideration, the marriage not taking place on representation of particulars, or amount of such personal property. De Manneville v. Crompton, 1 Ves. & B. 354.

Spoliation of Title Deeds and other Documents.] See TITLE DEEDS, II. AND III.

III. RECTIFICATION OF DOCUMENTS.

3. Upon a bill to set aside a deed in toto, the Court will not reform it. Hortopp v. Hortopp, 21 Beav. 259.

4. Covenant that if A. should at any time become entitled to any property exceeding in value the sum of ——, he would assign the same to trustees upon certain trusts declared in a deed carrying out a family arrangement. A. became entitled in reversion, subject to his mother's interest during widowhood, to property which had been bequeathed to his sister by their father's will. Upon bill filed by A. to have the covenant struck out, and for a declaration that he was absolutely entitled, the Lord Chancellor (affirming decision of Stuart, V.-Ch.) refused to strike out the covenant or to make the declaration. Fyfe v. Arbuthnot, 5 W. R. 793; 3 Jur., N. S., 651.

5. A contractor made a tender for the execution of certain works, upon the understanding that he should not be bound by the decision of the surveyor as to any addition to or deduction from the amount of his tender, and entered into an agreement with the clerk of the peace acting on behalf of the magistrates for performance of the contract. This agreement provided that in case of any difference the decision of the surveyor was to be final. The bill sent in by the contractor exceeded the amount allowed by the surveyor in his certificate by a large sum. The contractor filed his bill praying payment of the sum due to him, and a declaration that he was not bound by the surveyor's certificate, or, if he was not entitled to such relief, that the agreement might be rectified so as to enable him to recover at law without being concluded by the certificate:—Demurrer to the bill overruled, the Court holding that a person executing an agreement on a particular understanding was entitled to have it rectified in equity, if as executed by him it precluded him from proceeding at law. Simpson v. Metcalfe, 3 W. R. 88.

6. Upon parol evidence explaining a term used in an agreement for a lease in regard to which there was a latent ambiguity, the lease was rectified in accordance with what was thus shown to be the intention. Murray v. Parker, 19 Beav. 305.

7. Defect in a legal conveyance not supplied in favour of a natural child. Blake v. Blake, Beat. 575.

8. A court of equity relieves against a defective execution of a power, only when the defect consists in the want of some circumstances in the manner of execution; and it will reform a deed where the intention of the parties is mistaken by the drawer, but will not correct an error in an instrument occasioned by the ignorance of the parties in matter of law. Cockerell v. Cholmeley, 1 Russ. & M. 418.

I. GENERAL PRINCIPLES.

1. Every case upon the Registry Acts, both in England and Ireland, which has been brought before a court of equity, has been determined on this ground, that these Acts do not affect the great fundamental principles of equity; but that every purchaser claiming under a registry deed is left open to any equity which a prior purchaser or incumbrancer may have. Chandos v. Brownlow, 2 Ridgw. P. C. 428.

2. The want of registration of a conveyance invalidates the deed as to subsequent purchasers only, not as to assignees of the party conveying the property. Exp. Coles, Re Rucker, 1 Dea. & Ch. 100; 1 L. J., N. S., Bky., 18.

3. The object of Registry Acts is only to protect subsequent purchasers. They have no effect therefore to vitiate the conveyance for want of registration, as between party taking conveyance, and him who conveyed, or his assignees under commission of bankruptcy. Jones v. Gibbon, 9 Ves. 407.

4. Deeds neglected to be inrolled, subpœna to show cause why not. Siddenham v. Harrison, Cary 97.

5. If two deeds be executed, bearing different dates, that which is first registered, even with notice of the other deed, has priority both in law and equity, although it be posterior in date and execution. On points, in which the two deeds are inconsistent, the deed last registered is personally binding on the parties who execute; and the lands and property comprised in the deed first registered, are also bound, after satisfying the trusts of the first, by the contracts and trusts of the deed last registered. M'Neill v. Cahill, 2 Bligh. 228.

6. By the Bedford Level Act (15 Car. 2, c. 17) it was enacted, that all conveyances by indenture of any part of 95,000 acres allotted to the Earl of Bedford and his co-adventurers, entered with the registrar of the level, should have equal force to convey the freehold and inheritance as a bargain and sale, inrolled under the stat. Hen. 8; and it was also provided, "that no lease, grant, or conveyance of any part of the said land, except leases for seven years or under in possession, should be of force but from the time it should be entered with the registrar":—Held, in a suit for specific performance, that the condition of registration was required only for the purpose of entitling the party to the corporate privileges conferred by the Act, and that the absence of registration did not vitiate the title to the land. Willis v. Brown, 10 Sim. 127; 8 L. J., N. S., Ch., 321.

7. Where premises had been sold under a decree:—Held, that the lien of an incumbrancer was not transferred to the purchase money, so as to be out of the Registry Act, and he was, therefore, postponed to subsequent incumbrancers. Hennand v. More, 1 Eden 327.

II. WHAT INSTRUMENTS MUST BE REGISTERED.

8. By Irish stat. 6 Ann., all deeds executed after the 25th March 1708, and not registered, are declared void. A lease of lands was neglected to be registered, which the lessor taking advantage of, granted a new lease to another person, who brought an ejectment and recovered:—Held, that the original lessee was relievable in equity; for the statute being made to prevent frauds, shall never be used as a means to cover it. Forbes v. Deniston, 4 Bro. P. C. 189.

1. The 1 & 2 Will. 4, c. 56, s. 27, does not require certificate of the appointment of assignees to be registered, in order to protect them against subsequent purchasers of bankrupt's freehold property without notice, unless the property is in a register county. Anon., 1 Dea. & Ch. 349.

2. An assignment of a legacy charged upon land is an assignment of money only, and does not affect the land within the meaning of the Registry Acts. The registration of such an assignment therefore does not postpone a prior unregistered assignment of the same legacy. Malcolm v. Charlesworth, 1 Keen 63. S. C. nom. Wilkinson v. Charlesworth, 5 L. J., N. S., Ch., 172.

3. A recovery by A., tenant for life, and B., remainder in tail; afterwards, by deeds of lease and release, the uses declared to A. for life, remainder to B. for life, remainder to his first and other sons in tail male; the deeds not registered for several years afterwards; in the interval, judgments recovered against B.:—Held, that the non-registry of the deeds was immaterial, and that the persons who so recovered judgments against B., did not thereby acquire a lien or charge on the settled estate against the issue deriving under the settlement. Burke v. O'Malley, Beat. 96.

4. A mortgagee is prevented by the operation of the Registry Act, 6 Ann., c. 2, from tacking, so as to gain a priority against mesne registered incumbrances. And for the purpose of adjusting the priorities between deeds under this Act, judgments also obtain priorities, although not generally within the contemplation of the Act. Latouche v. Dunsany (Lord), 1 Sch. & Lef. 137.

5. The conveyance under the former English Insolvent Acts to the provisional assignee is within the General Registry Act, nor is the registration of it dispensed with by the registration of the conveyance by the provisional to the creditors' assignees. Battersby v. Roohfort, 8 Ir. Eq. R. 284; 2 J. & L. 431.

6. A memorandum, charging leasehold premises in Middlesex with money lent, is not required to be registered, under the 7 Ann., c. 20. Wright v. Stansfeld, 5 Jur., N. S., 5; 28 L. J., Ch., 183; 27 Beav. 8. See Moore v. Culverhouse, 6 Jur., N. S., 115; 29 L. J., Ch., 419; 27 Beav. 639.

7. A judgment registered under 1 & 2 Vict., c. 110, s. 19, will not be a charge on lands in Middlesex, when it has not been registered in the county, under 7 Ann., c. 20, s. 18. Exp. Alward, 1 Fonbl. N. R. 217.

8. A judgment is not such a charge upon land (except it be within the 1 & 2 Vict., c. 110) as to give it precedence over an unregistered mortgage. Cathrow v. Eade, 1 Sm. & G. 423.

9. The 1 & 2 Vict., c. 110, does not repeat the 7 Ann, c. 20, but the two are to be read together; and a judgment registered in the Common Pleas is no charge against lands in Middlesex until entered on the Middlesex register under the latter Act. Benham v. Keane, 3 De G. F. & J. 313; 31 L. J., Ch., 129; 8 Jur., N. S., 604; 10 W. R. 67; 5 L. T., N. S., 439. Affirming 1 John. & H. 685; 7 Jur., N. S., 1096; 9 W. R. 765; 5 L. T., N. S., 439.

10. Under the Irish Registration Act an equity in a grant which is registered, will prevail against the right even of a bonâ fide purchaser to whom the original grantor has subsequently sold part of the property comprised in the registered deed. Mill v. Hill, 3 H. L. C., 828.

If a man has a limited interest in a term and settles it to a certain use, and then gets a new and extended term substituted for it, he cannot, by so doing, avoid the previous settlement. Ib.

In 1830 a settlement of certain property held under renewable leases was made in favour of A. In 1831 A., being about to marry, made a settlement of this property for the uses of the marriage. The deed of 1830 was not registered. The settlement of 1831 was registered. In 1840 A., being in actual possession, sold to B., and B., who had no actual notice of the settlement of 1831, entered into possession, and made alterations in the premises. After the death of A., his son, who was entitled under the settlement of 1831, filed a bill against B. to set aside the sale, for an account, and for waste:—Held, that it was not necessary to register the deed of 1830, that the registered settlement of 1831 prevailed against the bonâ fide purchase of B., and that the Court below had properly declared him to stand possessed of the leases as a trustee for the parties beneficially interested under the settlement. But held also, that he was entitled to indemnity against the covenants in the leases which he was thus declared to hold as trustee; that an inquiry ought to be made as to the alleged improvements and as to alleged waste; and that he was entitled to be allowed the benefits of these improvements; and that, being a bonâ fide purchaser, without misconduct, he ought not to be charged with costs. Ib.

11. The East Riding Registration Act (6 Ann, c. 35) is imperative, and unless a will of lands in that Riding is registered within six months after the testator's death, or a memorial of the impediment which disables the devisee from doing so registered in the manner pointed out by s. 15, the will is void as against subsequent purchasers and mortgagees. Chadwick v. Turner, 34 Beav. 634; 11 Jur., N. S., 333; 34 L. J., Ch., 366; 13 W. R. 447; 12 L. T., N. S., 223. Affirmed 12 Jur., N. S., 239; 35 L. J., Ch., 349; 14 W. R. 491; 14 L. T., N. S., 86.

12. A registered conveyance of premises in Middlesex for valuable consideration, established against a prior devise not registered; the evidence of notice, which ought to amount to actual fraud, not being sufficient. Jolland v. Stainbridge, 3 Ves. 478.

13. A memorandum not under seal, accompanying a deposit by way of equitable mortgage of deeds relating to lands in Middlesex, requires registration under 7 Ann., c. 20. Neve v. Pennell, Hunt v. Neve, 33 L. J., Ch., 19; 11 W. R. 986; 9 L. T., N. S., 285; 2 Hem. & M. 170.

14. A. being entitled to the benefit of certain articles of agreement entered into by the owners of land situate in Ireland, to execute to him a mortgage thereof for 42,000*l.*, by a deed executed in 1840, reciting the articles, assigned that sum and all the securities for its payment to trustees upon certain trusts. By a deed executed in England in 1842, also reciting the articles, A. for valuable consideration assigned the same sum of 42,000*l.*, with all the securities for its payment, to M. by way of mortgage. The deed of 1842 was registered previously to that of 1840. The memorial of the deed of 1842 described the lands on which the 42,000*l.* was charged in the same manner as they were described in that deed itself, but neither the deed nor memorial mentioned the names of the baronies or parishes in which the lands were situated:—Held, that the deed of 1842 was properly the subject of registry. Gardiner v. Blesinton, 1 Ir. Ch. Rep. 79.

1. A memorandum of further charge in favour of the first mortgagee of lands in Yorkshire requires registration as much as the original mortgage, and in the absence of registration will be postponed to a second registered mortgage without notice of such further charge, nor will the first mortgagee be entitled to tack his further charge if the second mortgagee has given him notice of his charge. Oredland v. Potter, 43 L. J., Ch., 484; 18 L. R., Eq., 350; 22 W. R. 611; 30 L. T., N. S., 356. Affirmed 31 L. T., N. S., 522; 23 W. R. 36; 10 L. R., Ch., 8; 44 L. J., Ch., 169.

An owner of lands in Yorkshire mortgaged them to secure repayment of an advance of 1,100*l.* The mortgagee registered a memorial of his mortgage, not stating the amount of it, and afterwards he made a further advance, for which he received a memorandum of further charge upon the lands, which he did not register. The mortgagor subsequently mortgaged the lands to another person, to whom he gave no notice of the further charge to the first mortgagee, merely saying that the first mortgage was for 1,100*l.* The second mortgagee registered his mortgage and gave notice of it to the first mortgagee. The first mortgagee having refused to be redeemed except upon payment of the amount due upon both his mortgage and his further charge, the second mortgagee filed a bill for redemption:—Held, that the memorandum of further charge was a "conveyance" within the meaning of the Yorkshire Registry Act, 2 & 3 Ann., c. 4, and required registration; that not having been registered it was therefore void as against the second mortgagee; that the first mortgagee having received notice of the second mortgage was not entitled to tack his further charge as against the second mortgagee; and that the second mortgagee was entitled to redeem upon payment of the amount due upon the first mortgage only. Ib.

Held, also, that the second mortgagee was not bound, when he found the memorial of the first mortgage on the register, to inquire how much was due to the first mortgagee, and that the first mortgagee, having refused to be redeemed except upon payment of both his mortgage and his further charge, was not entitled to his costs of the suit. Ib.

III. FORM OF.

2. A. being entitled to the benefit of certain articles of agreement entered into by the owners of land situate in Ireland, to execute to him a mortgage thereof for 42,000*l.*, by a deed executed in 1840, reciting the articles, assigned that sum and all the securities for its payment to trustees upon certain trusts. By a deed executed in England in 1842, also reciting the articles, A. for valuable consideration assigned the same sum of 42,000*l.*, with all the securities for its payment, to M. by way of mortgage. The deed of 1842 was registered previously to that of 1840. The memorial of the deed of 1842 described the lands on which the 42,000*l.* was charged in the same manner as they were described in that deed itself, but neither the deed nor memorial mentioned the names of the baronies or parishes in which the lands were situated:—Held, that the deed of 1842 was properly the subject of registry:—Held, also, reversing the decision below, that notwithstanding the omission from the memorial of the names of the baronies and parishes, the deed of 1842 was properly registered, and therefore had gained priority over the deed of 1840. Gardiner v. Blesinton, 1 Ir. Ch. Rep. 79. Reversing as to the latter point, Id. 64.

3. Clerical mistakes do not vitiate inrolment under the Registry Act. Wyatt v. Barwell, 19 Ves. 435.

4. A memorial of registry, containing the substance of a covenant in a lease, though not expressly setting forth a proviso in it, is a good registration, the proviso being implied in it. M'Alpine v. Swift, 1 Ball & B. 285.

5. The third article of the ordinances for regulating the form and manner of registering deeds and other instruments in St. Lucia, made pursuant to the order in council of the 15th January 1829, orders, that the registry should set forth "the date and nature of the title, or original judgment, etc., by which the mortgage, lien, or charge was established, together with the date and nature of all subsequent instruments by which such lien, mortgage, or charge has passed into the hands of the present creditor, and become a charge of the actual debtor." The registration of a mortgage and assignment of part of an estate charged and apportioned by a previous act of liquidation, is not such a compliance with the terms of the ordinance as to give the party claiming under it a right to come in, pari passu, with the parties whose title is registered under the original act of liquidation. Inglis v. De Barnard, 3 Moo. P. C. 425.

6. The executor of a mortgage, a memorial of whose security was registered under the Middlesex Registry Act, conceiving that the memorial was invalid, affected to execute the mortgage deed by signing and sealing it himself in the presence of two witnesses whose names were endorsed as witnesses attesting his execution of it. Neither of the witnesses had attested the execution of the deed by any of the other parties. After this ceremony the executor memorialised the deed in due form:—Held, that the whole course of proceeding (which was said to be in accordance with the practice before the registrar) was nugatory for the purpose of the Registry Act. Essex v.

Baugh, 1 Y. & Coll. C. C. 620; 11 L. J., N. S., Ch., 374; 6 Jur. 1030.

1. A deed contained recitals which described two persons as concurring in settling property to which they were "respectively entitled." It afterwards contained a grant to trustees of a certain part of this property, as if made by one of these persons, when in fact that part belonged to the other. The memorial of the deed described both as the granting parties; this description was not one of the things required by the statute:—Held, not to vitiate the effect of the memorial under the Registration Act. Mill v. Hill, 3 H. L. Ca. 828.

IV. REGISTRATION OF SEVERAL INVESTMENTS ON THE SAME DAY.

2. According to the memorandum of registration endorsed on two mortgaged securities of different dates brought to the Middlesex registry, they were both registered on the same day and at the same hour; but one was numbered 764, the other 768:—Held, that the security numbered 764 must be regarded as having been registered first. Neve v. Pennell, Hunt v. Neve, 33 L. J., Ch., 19; 11 W. R. 986; 9 L. T., N. S., 285; 2 Hem. & M. 170.

3. Mortgage by demise for a term of years; the mortgagor does not deliver to the mortgagee the purchase deed conveying the freehold to the mortgagor, but keeps it back, and subsequently deposits it with another person as a security for a loan. The conveyance to the mortgagor and the mortgagee were executed within a day of each other, and were both registered on the same day. The deposit was not made for a considerable time afterwards; but no notice by the subsequent incumbrancer of the mortgage being proved, and being denied by his answer, it was held that he was entitled to the benefit of the deposit, as against the mortgagee, and was not bound to deliver up to him the conveyance. Wiseman v. Westland, 1 Y. & J. 117.

V. NOTICE BY REGISTRATION.

4. Registration in Middlesex of an equitable mortgage, is not presumptive notice of itself to a subsequent legal mortgagee, so as to take from him his legal advantage. Morecock v. Dickens, Ambl. 678. S. P. Beckford v. Bacchus, 2 Eq. Abr. 615; Ambl. 680.

5. A. mortgaged to B., which was registered, then A. borrowed from C. on a judgment also registered. B. lent farther sum without express notice of C.'s registry, etc.:—Held, B. was entitled to foreclosure, unless both debts paid. Wrightson v. Hudson, 2 Eq. Abr. 498.

6. After an assignment of a mortgage, payments to the mortgagee with notice must be allowed by the assignee; the registry of the premises being in Middlesex, is not notice for this purpose. Tender after the bill filed of the balance, deducting the payments to the mortgagee with costs, deprived the assignee of subsequent costs. Williams v. Sorrell, 4 Ves. 389.

7. The registry of deeds, etc., under the Registry Act, 6 Ann., c. 2, is not notice, but the 4th clause of that Act gives to all deeds, registered as thereby directed, efficacy in law and in equity, according to the priority of the time of registry. Bushell v. Bushell, 1 Sch. & Lef. 90.

8. The registry of a deed gives priority, but does not affect a party with notice. Pentland v. Stokes, 2 Ball & B. 75.

9. Registry is not notice within the meaning of the word, as applied by courts of equity. Underwood v. Courtown (Lord), 2 Sch. & Lef. 64.

10. The registry of a deed is not of itself notice as against a subsequent purchaser or incumbrancer. Wiseman v. Westland, 1 Y. & J. 117.

11. The register of a mortgage will not by itself affect a subsequent incumbrance without notice. Cator v. Cooley, 1 Cox 182.

12. Where incumbrancer on estate in G. searched the registry from a certain date only, it will not be presumed that he had notice of any of the contents prior to that date. Hodgson v. Dean, 2 Sim. & S. 221; 3 L. J., Ch., 95.

13. P., having a term of years in a house, made a mortgage thereof to M. by way of under-lease, retaining in himself a reversion of two days. He subsequently made an equitable mortgage by way of written memorandum to P. He again made a third mortgage to S., and assigned to S. the original term, including the reversion of two days. S. had no notice of the equitable notice to P., but had notice of M.'s incumbrance. P. registered in Middlesex, but S. did not search the register, and was therefore not affected by notice:—Held, by Malins V.-Ch., that the equities being equal, S. had a legal estate by virtue of the assignment to him of the original term, and the reversion of two days, which entitled him to priority over P. On appeal, the Lords Justices expressed themselves not prepared to affirm this view, and therefore desired a further question of fact to be argued; but the case was compromised before any judgment was given. Re Russell Road Purchase Moneys, 40 L. J., Ch., 673; 12 L. R., Eq., 78; 19 W. R. 520, 706; 23 L. T., N. S., 839.

VI. NOTICE OF UNREGISTERED INSTRUMENTS.

14. Purchaser within the Registry Act, bound by notice of a deed not registered. Purchasers bound by notice of a judgment, though not docketed. Davis v. Strathmore (Earl), 16 Ves. 419.

15. A registered conveyance of premises in Middlesex for valuable consideration, established against a prior devise, not registered, the evidence of notice, which ought to amount to actual fraud, not being sufficient. Jolland v. Stainbridge, 3 Ves. 478.

16. Notwithstanding the West Riding Register Act directs that no judgment shall affect lands, but only from the time when the judgment shall be registered, a purchaser, with notice of an unregistered judgment, will be bound by it. Gosling's case, 3 Sim. 301.

17. A registered deed, with notice of an unregistered one, shall not prevail against it. Blades v. Blades, 1 Ep. Abr. 358.

18. The intent of the Register Act was to secure subsequent purchasers against prior secret conveyances. If a subsequent purchaser had notice of a prior conveyance, then that was not a secret conveyance by which he could be prejudiced; the enacting clause gives a subsequent purchaser the legal estate, but it does not say he is not left open to any equity which a prior purchaser or incumbrancer may have. Le Neve v. Le Neve, 3 Atk. 651.

1. To affect a registered deed by notice of a prior unregistered deed (the policy of which has been much doubted), actual notice must be clearly proved, amounting to fraud. Wyatt v. Barwell, 19 Ves. 435.

2. A person having notice of a prior unregistered deed, cannot avail himself of the registry of a subsequent deed, to defeat the priority of the other, for it would be a fraud to take a conveyance to defeat a prior deed of which there was notice. Eyre v. Dolphin, 2 Ball & B. 302.

3. Notice of an unregistered mortgage held to affect subsequent mortgagees, who had registered. Sheldon v. Cox, 2 Eden 224.

4. The intention of the Registry Act is, that the registered instrument is not to be postponed unless the notice of a prior incumbrance is very distinct. Nixon v. Hamilton, 1 Ir. Eq. R. 46; 2 Dr. & Wal. 364.

Notice of a prior unregistered deed of annuity to the solicitor of a mortgagee, whose mortgage is registered, is notice to mortgagee so as to preclude him from relying upon the provisions of the Registry Acts as against th e prior unregistered annuitant. Ib.

W. B. having, as land and law agent of F. H., negotiated and been party to a deed of separation and maintenance between F. H. and his wife M. H. in the year 1821, and having by fraud prevented the registry of that deed of maintenance, was four years afterwards employed throughout the negotiation of a loan of money which was advanced on a registered mortgage of the estates comprised in the deed of maintenance as solicitor both of F. H. and X. Y., the person advancing the money. In a contest for priority between the unregistered deed of maintenance and the registered mortgage:—Held, that inasmuch as the knowledge acquired in the transaction of the deed of maintenance was clearly brought home to W. B., and its continuance so clearly proved as to make it fraudulent on his part to conceal it when acting in the mortgage transaction, such fraud on the part of W. B. the agent was visitable on X. Y. his principal:—Held, also, that X. Y. should be treated as a person who through his agent had actual notice in the deed of maintenance, and that consequently X. Y.'s registered deed should be postponed to M. H.'s unregistered deed. Ib.

5. In the year 1805 A., who was a solicitor, executed to M. a mortgage of certain property to which he was entitled in right of his wife. In the following year, 1806, A. executed a second mortgage of the same property to N., in the transacting of which loan N. employed A. as her solicitor and agent. The mortgage of 1806 was duly registered, but the earlier mortgage of 1805 was not:—Held, that N. was affected by notice of the mortgage of 1805, in consequence of her having employed A. as her solicitor, and, therefore, was not entitled to rely on the priority derived from the registry of the mortgage of the year 1806. Majoribanks v. Hovenden, 1 Dr. 11; 6 Ir. Eq. R. 238.

6. A conveyance of, or charge on, lands within the Bedford Level is valid as against persons affected with notice, though not registered as required by the Bedford Level Act. Willis v. Brown, 10 Sim. 127; 8 L. J., N. S., Ch., 321.

7. Bill by judgment creditor upon an estate in Middlesex to be let in upon it, preferably to the defendant, a mortgagee of the same estate, on a suggestion that he had notice of the judgment before the mortgage was executed. The judgment was entered up before the mortgage was executed, but was registered after the registry of the mortgage. There being only a defendant's confession of notice proved in direct contradiction to his answer, and contrary to a positive Act of Parliament made to prevent perjury, Lord Hardwicke decreed, that so far as bill seeks to postpone defendant's mortgage, it should be dismissed with costs. Hine v. Dodd, 2 Atk. 275.

The Register Act is notice to everybody, and the meaning of it was to prevent parol proofs of notice. Ib.

Clear notice is a proper ground of relief; but suspicion of notice, though a strong one, will not justify the Court in breaking in upon an Act of Parliament. Ib.

It is only in cases of fraud the Court have broken in upon the Act, though one incumbrance was registered before another. Ib.

8. A subsequent incumbrancer, who at the time of taking his security has no notice of the prior incumbrance, may, by properly memorialising his security, though after notice, obtain priority over the prior incumbrancer, if the memorial of the security of the latter be defective. Essex v. Baugh, 1 Y. & Coll. C. C. 620; 11 L. J., N. S., Ch., 374; 6 Jur. 1030.

9. A conveyance of lands in Middlesex, by settlement upon a marriage of the settlor, registered under the stat. Ann. 7, c. 20, is effectual against a prior unregistered conveyance, notwithstanding the party claiming under the settlement had notice of the unregistered conveyance after the marriage, but before the registry of his settlement. Elsey v. Lutyens, 8 Hare 159. See also Wilson v. Bennett, 20 L. J., N. S., Ch., 279; 15 Jur. 912.

10. Actual notice that lands are in the tenancy of a third person, is not such notice of that person's title thereto, as will avoid the effect of the Registry Act. Popham v. Baldwin, 2 Jones 320. See Wallace v. Donegal, 1 Dr. & Wal. 462.

11. A landowner, by deed in February 1872, charged his land with two life annuities. He subsequently made several mortgages of the property by deeds, some of which recited the annuity deed. The annuity deed had not been registered as required by 18 & 19 Vict., c. 15, s. 12:—Held, by the Master of the Rolls, that the annuity deed, not being registered, was void as against all the subsequent incumbrancers, whether they had notice of it or not. But held, by the Court of Appeal, that as the 18 & 19 Vict., c. 15, s. 12, was in similar terms to the clauses in the Registry Acts, which had been decided not to make an unregistered conveyance void as against a subsequent purchaser who had notice of it, the legislature must be taken to have used the words in the later Act in the sense given to them by those decisions, and that the annuities therefore were valid as against all the subsequent incumbrancers who took with notice of them, and against the trustee in bankruptcy of the grantor. Greaves v. Tofield, 14 L. R., Ch. D., 563; 50 L. J., Ch., 118; 43 L. T., 100; 28 W. R. 840.

1. A party taking an equitable mortgage with notice of prior equitable mortgage, cannot, by assignment to another without notice, give him a better title. Ford v. White, 16 Beav. 120.

Property in Middlesex was mortgaged to A., and afterwards to B., and subsequently to C., with notice of B.'s incumbrance. C. registered before B. and afterwards assigned to D., who had no notice of B.'s mortgage:—Held, that the interests being equitable, D. had no priority over B. Ib.

2. An equitable mortgagee by deposit of title deeds, unaccompanied by any memorandum in writing, takes priority over a purchaser for value claiming under a subsequent registered deed without notice of such deposit. Re Burke's Estate, 9 L. R., Ir., 24.

3. Constructive notice of a prior unregistered incumbrance affecting lands in Middlesex is as effectual as actual notice. Wormald v. Maitland, 35 L. J., Ch., 69; 13 W. R. 832; 12 L. T., N. S., 535; 6 N. R. 218.

A registered marriage settlement of leaseholds in Middlesex was postponed to an equitable mortgage of the same property by deposit prior in date, but registered subsequently to the settlement, the trustees of the settlement being held to have had constructive notice of the equitable mortgage in consequence of not having inquired for the title deeds when the abstract was delivered to them. Ib.

The equitable mortgagee held entitled to tack to his security advances made subsequently to the date and registration of the settlement of which he had no notice at the time of such advances. Ib.

4. A solicitor induced a client to advance money for A., on mortgage of lands in Middlesex, and soon afterwards induced a second client to advance money on mortgage of the same lands without informing him of the existence of the first mortgage. The solicitor afterwards left the country, and the holder of the second mortgage registered it before the first mortgage was registered:—Held, that the holder of the second mortgage must be taken to have had, through the solicitor, notice of the first mortgage, and could not by the prior registration obtain priority. Rolland v. Hart, 6 L. R., Ch., 678; 40 L. J., Ch., 701; 25 L. T., N. S., 191; 19 W. R. 962.

5. A purchaser or mortgagee is not bound to make any inquiries with a view to the discovery of unregistered instruments, though he may be bound by actual knowledge of such instruments. The policy of the Registration Acts is to free a purchaser from the imputation of constructive notice. In the absence of actual notice, therefore, to the principal or his agent, and of fraud, a later registered deed will have priority over a prior unregistered charge, notwithstanding that the purchaser knew that the title deeds were not in the possession of the vendor, but were in the hands of certain other persons, and abstained from inquiry. Lee v. Clutton, 45 L. J., Ch. D., 43; 33 L. T., N. S., 717; 24 W. R. 106. Affirmed 35 L. T., N. S., 84; 24 W. R. 942; 46 L. J., Ch., 48.

A firm of solicitors took an equitable charge, by a memorandum and deposit of title deeds, from their client, A., upon premises in Middlesex, which they omitted in the register. A. subsequently sold the premises to the defendant, who duly registered the conveyance. The solicitors filed a bill claiming priority for their charge, alleging that the defendant, when he took his conveyance, knew that the deeds were in their hands, and made no inquiry:—Held, that the facts alleged amounted only to constructive notice, and that in order that an unregistered charge should have priority over a subsequent registered conveyance, it must be shown that the purchaser or his agent had actual notice of the prior change, or if it is sufficient to allege anything other than actual notice, the allegation must amount to a clear charge of fraud, and not of omission to inquire only. Ib.

6. The plaintiff had lent money to a solicitor on the security of the deposit of title deeds of land in Middlesex, with a letter charging the land, the legal estate in which was outstanding. The solicitor afterwards, by way of security for money due to a client, made a mortgage of the land to the client, which mortgage was registered:—Held, that the client must be presumed to have had notice of the plaintiff's charge, which therefore, though unregistered, retained priority. Bradley v. Riches, 9 L. R., Ch. D., 189; 47 L. J., Ch., 811; 38 L. T., N. S., 810; 26 W. R. 910.

7. The priority as against lands in Middlesex of a judgment registered in the Middlesex registry over a judgment, which, though earlier in date, is later in order of registration on the Middlesex registry, is not lost by reason of the judgment creditor having notice of such earlier judgment at the time when his judgment is entered up. Benham v. Keane, 3 De G. F. & J. 318.

Section 13 of the 1 & 2 Vict., c. 110, giving to a judgment creditor the same remedies in equity as if the debtor had power to charge the hereditaments, and had, by writing, agreed to charge the same with the judgment debt and interest, does not make the judgment creditor a purchaser, and a subsequent judgment creditor will not be affected by notice thereof, unless it is duly registered. S. C. 31 L. J., Ch., 129; 8 Jur., N. S., 604; 10 W. R. 67; 5 L. T., N. S., 439. Affirming 1 John. & H. 685; 7 Jur., N. S., 1096; 9 W. R. 765; 5 L. T., N. S., 439.

The 1 & 2 Vict., c. 110, does not repeal the 7 Ann., c. 20, but the two are to be read together; and a judgment registered in the Common Pleas is no charge against land in Middlesex, until entered on the Middlesex register under the latter Act. Ib.

Therefore, where a judgment creditor, having notice of a prior judgment registered in the Common Pleas, but not in Middlesex, registered his judgment in Middlesex before the earlier judgment was so registered:—Held, entitled to priority. Ib.

Secus, as to a mortgagee having such a notice. Ib.

A judgment is a charge binding lands in Middlesex only from the time of its registration in the local registry. Ib.

1. A decree in equity for the payment by the defendant to the plaintiff of a sum of money on or before a certain day:—Held, in reference to the provisions of the Act 1 & 2 Vict., c. 110, not to confer any priority as against a deed executed by the defendant, conveying his freehold estate in a register county to trustees for the benefit of his creditors, or as against a vesting order, made in the defendant's insolvency, the deed having been executed, and the vesting order having been made previously to the registration of the decree. Lee v. Green, 6 De G. M. & G. 155; 2 Jur., N. S., 170; 25 L. J., Ch., 269.

A decree for payment of money gives no right as against the land before registration. Ib.

Held, also, that the non-registration of the deed and of the vesting order until after the registration of the decree was immaterial, it being proved that the plaintiff had notice of the deed and of the vesting order when he registered the decree. Ib.

2. It is inconsistent with the policy of the Irish Registration Act to impose on a mortgagee or purchaser the duty of inquiry with a view to the discovery of previous unregistered interests, but quite consistent with it, if he knows of the existence of those interests, to estop him from contending that, as to him, they are void merely because they are unregistered, semble. Agra Bank v. Barry, 7 L. R., H. L., 135.

VII. PRIORITY BY REGISTRATION.

3. An unregistered deed retains its priority over a subsequent judgment, where there is no memorial of registry of any other deed comprising the lands, the subject of the unregistered deed. Crymble v. Adair, Beat. 122.

It is clear from the Registry Act (6 Ann., c. 31, s. 4) that the priority given to the registered deed depends not only on the time of the registry of the memorial, but is confined to such lands only as are comprised in the memorial. Ib.

If there be no memorial of a deed registered, the Registry Act does not apply, and the unregistered deed will have the same validity and effect as before passing the Act. Id. 123.

A deed, by the common law, has effect from the date of its execution; but the Registry Act provides that it shall have priority only from the date of its registration. Ib.

4. The order of registration of judgments in the county register determines the priorities of the judgments; registration in the Common Pleas operates only to complete the charge. A. registered a judgment in the county register; B. afterwards registered a judgment both in the county and in the Common Pleas; A. then registered in the Common Pleas:—Held, that A.'s judgment had priority. Neve v. Flood, 10 Jur., N. S., 607; 12 W. R. 897; 10 L. T., N. S., 520; 33 Beav. 666; 34 L. J., Ch., 89.

5. Where there is an unregistered deed, and a subsequent registered deed, with judgments intervening between them, the Registry Act gives priority to the latter deed over the former; and it carries on the judgments prior to it, so as to take precedence of the unregistered instrument also. Sparrow v. Cooper, 1 Jones 72.

Semble, if a person claiming under a registered deed does not insist on his priority over the unregistered deed, the latter will take precedence of the judgments. Id. 75.

6. The registry of deeds, etc., under the Registry Act, 6 Ann., c. 2, is not notice, but the 4th clause of that Act gives to all deeds registered, as thereby directed, efficacy in law and in equity, according to the priority of the time of registry. Bushell v. Bushell, 1 Sch. & Lef. 90.

7. If two deeds be executed, bearing different dates, that which is first registered, even with notice of the other deed, has priority both in law and equity, although it be posterior in date and execution. On points, in which the two deeds are inconsistent, the deed last registered is personally binding on the parties who execute; and the lands and property comprised in the deed first registered, are also bound, after satisfying the trusts of the first, by the contracts and trusts of the deed last registered. M'Neill v. Cahill, 2 Bligh 228.

8. Where premises had been sold under a decree:—Held, that the lien of an incumbrancer was not transferred to the purchase money, so as to be out of the Registry Act; and he was therefore postponed to subsequent incumbrancers. Hennand v. Moore, 1 Eden 327.

9. H. K. by an unregistered deed granted a rent charge to his daughter. By the daughter's marriage settlement, executed on the following day, to which H. K. was a party, and which recited the grant, the rent charge was conveyed by the daughter to trustees. The latter deed was registered. H. K. afterwards mortgaged the land out of which the rent charge issued, by a deed which was also registered:—Held, that the rent charge, though granted by an unregistered deed, had priority over the mortgage by reason of the registration of the settlement. Hunter v. Kennedy, 1 Ir. Ch. Rep. 148. Affirmed Id. 225.

10. Deed of appointment of lands in a register county, pursuant to a power in a former deed, which was not registered, postponed to a mortgage made subsequent to it, and registered before it. Scrafton v. Quincey, 2 Ves. 413.

11. B., being possessed of a term in lands for so many years as he should live, with remainder for the residue of the term to E., his daughter, upon the marriage of E. with W., the term was assigned by B. and E. to trustees in trust for B. during his life, and upon his death to permit the husband to receive the rents, etc., during his life, and then for the wife and children in the usual course of marriage settlement. This deed of assignment was not registered. W. being in possession under the trusts of the settlement, after the death of B., demised the lands to K., for three hundred and forty-five years, at a rent of 145*l.*, and the indenture of lease was duly registered, and the interest under this demise was afterwards transferred from K. to T. by a deed of assignment, which was not proved to have been registered. Upon special verdict, stating these facts, it was held, that the lease made by W. to K. being registered, was under the effect of the Irish Registry Act, 6 Ann., c. 2, valid against and preferable to the unregistered marriage settlement, and that the interest of T., under the assignment from K., although unregistered, was also valid, and preferable to the settlement. Warburton v. Loveland, 6 Bli. N. S. 1.

1. Registry of articles of agreement to convey lands will give them priority over subsequent conveyances. Thompson v. Simpson, 1 Dr. & War. 459.

2. A subsequent incumbrancer, who at the time of taking his security has no notice of the prior incumbrance, may by properly memorialising his security, though after notice, obtain priority over the prior incumbrancer, if the memorial of the security of the latter be defective. Essex v. Baugh, 1 Y. & Coll. C. C. 620; 11 L. J., N. S., Ch., 374; 6 Jur. 1030.

3. A. being entitled to lands in Ireland was discharged in England as an insolvent debtor, under the 1 Geo. 4, c. 119. The assignment of all his estate and effects to the provisional assignee was filed in the Insolvent Court, but was not registered. The sub-assignment to the general assignees was registered. Afterwards A. by deed, duly registered, conveyed his Irish estates in mortgage to B., who had no notice of the insolvency. The title of the mortgagee is to be preferred to that of the assignees of the insolvent. Battersby v. Rochfort, 2 J. & L. 431; 8 Ir. Eq. R. 284.

4. A testatrix, having lands in the East Riding, died in 1854. Her will was discovered in 1861, which devised these lands, but before any registration of it, or of any impediment, had been made, the heir mortgaged the property:—Held, that the mortgagee had priority over the devisee. Chadwick v. Turner, 34 Beav. 634; 11 Jur., N. S., 333; 34 L. J., Ch., 356; 13 W. R. 447; 12 L. T., N. S., 223; 5 N. R. 395. Affirmed 12 Jur., N. S., 239; 35 L. J., Ch., 349; 14 W. R. 491; 14 L. T., N. S., 86.

To defeat the title of a registered purchaser from the heir-at-law, there must be clear and distinct notice amounting to fraud. Ib.

5. The policy of the Registration Acts is to free a purchaser from the imputation of constructive notice. In the absence of actual notice, therefore, to the principal or his agent, and of fraud, a later registered deed will have priority over a prior unregistered charge, notwithstanding that the purchaser knew that the title deeds were not in the possession of the vendor, but were in the hands of certain other persons, and abstained from inquiry. Lee v. Clutton, 45 L. J., Ch., 43; 33 L. T. 717; 24 W. R. 106. Affirmed 46 L. J., Ch., 48; 35 L. T. 84; 24 W. R. 942.

A firm of solicitors took an equitable charge, by a memorandum and deposit of title deeds, from their client, A., upon premises in Middlesex, which they omitted to register. A. subsequently sold the premises to the defendant, who duly registered the conveyance. The solicitors filed a bill claiming priority for their charge, alleging that the defendant, when he took his conveyance, knew that the deeds were in their hands, and made no inquiry:—Held, that the facts alleged amounted only to constructive notice, and that in order that an unregistered charge should have priority over a subsequent registered conveyance, it must be shown that the purchaser or his agent had actual notice of the prior charge. Ib.

6. A. and B. were equal partners in certain mills and concerns, of which A. was the lessee. In November 1810 they took in C. as a partner for 8,500*l.* In January 1811 B. proposed to A. and C. to sell them his share for 8,500*l.*, and to let his name continue in the firm for five years, and pay the interest at 8 per cent. on his money remaining in their hands; this was accepted, and thenceforward A. had two-thirds, and C. one-third of the profits. In July 1812 A. conveyed to C. the legal estate in one-third of the mills and concerns, by a deed which was never registered. In August 1812 C., by his marriage settlement, conveyed his one-third to A. and D. as trustees for himself for life, with remainder for plaintiff as tenants in common; this deed was registered in 1814. In 1819 B. withdrew his name from the firm, and furnished A. and C. with an account current, showing a balance due to him of about 24,000*l.* This was made up of the 8,500*l.*, and interest at 8 per cent., and of advances made to the firm since 1814 on the credit of B. A mortgage of the mills was then executed by A. and C. to B., to secure this 24,000. It was soon after registered. C. died in 1820, and A. in 1823. In 1826 B. procured, from the representatives of A., an assignment of the equity of redemption, and entered into possession of the mills. The bill charged that, before the execution of the mortgage, B. was informed by A. and C. of the previous settlement. It prayed for an account and partition, and allotment of one-third. The only evidence of notice was by E., who swore that he had apprised B. of the settlement:—Held, that the registry of the mortgage of 1819 did not give it precedence of the settlement of 1812, although this latter deed was founded on the unregistered deed of July 1812; that the settlement, having been registered before the mortgage, thereby prevailed over it, even though no actual notice had been given to the defendant; and that the defendant had so claim as a creditor against the plaintiff's one-third of the partnership assets. Steuart v. Ferguson, Hayes 452.

7. An agreement to mortgage a Middlesex property does not come within the 7 Ann., c. 20, and therefore where an owner of property in Middlesex had first mortgaged to A., and then agreed to mortgage to B., and had subsequently mortgaged to C., and C. had registered, and B. had not:—Held, that C. had not obtained priority over B. Wright v. Stanfield, 27 Beav. 8; 5 Jur., N. S., 5; 28 L. J., Ch., 183.

8. A second mortgagee, who registers his mortgage in Middlesex, under 7 Ann., c. 20, is entitled to priority over a memorandum of further charge of prior date given by the mortgagor to the first mortgagee, who omitted to register the same in Middlesex. Moore v. Culverhouse, 6 Jur., N. S., 115; 29 L. J., Ch., 419; 27 Beav. 639.

A house in Middlesex was mortgaged to R., who subsequently took a memorandum of further charge. The house was then mortgaged to M. without notice of R's further charge, and he registered his mortgage in Middlesex under 7 Ann., c. 20:—Held, that M. had obtained priority over R.'s subsequent charge, which was not registered. Ib.

1. A. executed a legal mortgage of property in Yorkshire to B. for 700*l.*; at the same time he borrowed 100*l.* from C., and signed a memorandum agreeing to give C. a second mortgage on the property to secure that amount. A. subsequently executed another mortgage of the property for 500*l.* to D. The first and the third mortgages were registered at Wakefield, but not the second:—Held, that the third mortgage had priority over the second. Re Wight or Wright, 16 L. R., Eq., 41; 21 W. R. 667; 28 L. T., N. S., 491; 43 L. J., Ch., 66.

2. A memorandum of further charge in favour of the first mortgagee of lands in Yorkshire requires registration as much as the original mortgage, and in the absence of registration will be postponed to a second registered mortgage without notice of such further charge, nor will the first mortgagee be entitled to tack his further charge if the second mortgagee has given him notice of his charge. Credland v. Potter, 18 L. R., Eq., 350; 43 L. J., Ch., 484; 30 L. T. 356; 22 W. R. 611. Affirmed 10 L. R., Ch., 8; 44 L. J., Ch., 169; 31 L. T. 522; 23 W. R. 366.

3. An owner of lands in Yorkshire mortgaged them to secure repayment of an advance of 1,100*l.* The mortgagee registered a memorial of his mortgage, not stating the amount of it, and afterwards he made a further advance, for which he received a memorandum of further charge upon the lands, which he did not register. The mortgagor subsequently mortgaged the lands to another person, to whom he gave no notice of the further charge to the first mortgagee, merely saying that the first mortgage was for 1,000*l.* The second mortgagee registered his mortgage and gave notice of it to the first mortgagee. The first mortgagee having refused to be redeemed except upon payment of the amount due upon both his mortgage and his further charge, the second mortgagee filed a bill for redemption:—Held, that the memorandum of further charge was a "conveyance" within the meaning of the Yorkshire Registry Act (2 & 3 Ann., c. 4), and required registration; that not having been registered it was therefore void as against the second mortgagee; that the first mortgagee, having received notice of the second mortgage, was not entitled to tack his further charge as against the second mortgagee; and that the second mortgagee was entitled to redeem upon payment of the amount due upon the first mortgage only. Ib.

Held, also, that the second mortgagee was not bound, when he found the memorial of the first mortgage on the register, to inquire how much was due to the first mortgagee, and that the first mortgagee, having refused to be redeemed except upon payment of both his mortgage and his further charge, was not entitled to his costs of the suit. Ib.

4. A son who was heir-at-law to his father, who was one of the executors and trustees of his father's will, though he had not proved the will, and whose Christian names and description were identical with those of his father, after his father's death, executed mortgages of freehold and leasehold property of the father and applied the mortgage money to his own purposes. He handed over the title deeds to the mortgagees. The transaction took place without the knowledge of his mother and sister, who were co-trustees and co-executrixes with him, and who had proved the will. The will had not been registered in the Middlesex registry, though the property was situate in that county. The mortgage deeds were registered. They purported to be executed by the absolute owner of the property, and the solicitor who acted for both parties believed the son to be the absolute owner. The son told him nothing about the father's will. The solicitor searched the Middlesex registry. The son took a beneficial interest under the trusts of the father's will. After the son's death the fraud was discovered, and the mother and sister, as trustees of the father's will, brought an action against the mortgagees, claiming a declaration that the mortgages were void against them, and delivery up of the title deeds. The other beneficiaries under the will were made defendants:—Held, that the son in executing the mortgage deeds was personating his father; that the deeds were forgeries and passed nothing to the mortgagees, except the son's beneficial interest under the father's will; and that the mortgagees could obtain no title by virtue of the Middlesex Registry Act. Re Cooper, Cooper v. Vesey, 20 L. R., Ch. D., 611; 51 L. J., Ch., 862; 47 L. T. 89; 30 W. R. 648. Affirming 51 L. J., Ch., 149; 45 L. T. 532; 30 W. R. 148.

Semble, the son could have been convicted of forgery by reason of his executing the mortgage deeds. Ib.

VIII. RIGHTS OF PURCHASER FOR VALUE WITHOUT NOTICE.

5. A plea of purchase for valuable consideration without notice, cannot avail against a prior duly registered deed, and whether a legal or equitable title be conveyed, the deed will have priority from its registration. Eyre v. Dolphin, 2 Ball & B. 300.

6. A purchase of the legal estate for valuable consideration, without notice, is not a defence to the suit for specific performance of a contract relating to the lands contained in a prior duly registered instrument. Drew v. Norbury (Earl), 3 J. & L. 267; 9 Ir. Eq. R. 171, 524.

7. Plaintiff claiming lands under a deed registered in 1805, filed his bill against defendant in possession under a deed executed and registered subsequently, praying an issue at law or an ejectment, and removal of temporary bars; and in the event of succeeding, an account of rents and profits. Defendant pleaded a purchase for valuable consideration without notice, in 1830 (as in Walwyn v. Lee, 9 Ves. 24), and also demurred to the account:—Held (disallowing the plea), that the prior registration gave priority both in law and equity, even as against a purchaser for valuable consideration without notice. Semble, a person cannot protect himself by his plea where, by due diligence, he could have discovered the real state of the title, and that neglecting to search the registry is a failure of due diligence. Hamilton v. Lyster, 7 Ir. Eq. R. 560.

1. Renewable leaseholds were settled by a registered deed on B. for life, with remainders over. B. being in possession apparently as absolute owner, new leases were obtained under circumstances which against them would have made them grafts on the old interests, and at the same time the lands were sold by him to a purchaser for value without notice:—Held, that the equitable claim of a remainderman under the settlement was, under the Registry Act, preserved against the purchaser. Hill v. Mill, 12 Ir. Eq. R. 107.

2. The mortgagee while in possession made a lease; the mortgage was registered. The lessee set up a title as a purchaser without notice, and also relied on there being no acknowledgment to bind him:—Held, first, that the registration gave priority to the mortgagor's equitable title, which rendered notice immaterial; and secondly that the acknowledgment by the mortgagee alone was sufficient against his lessee. Ball v. Riversdale (Lord), Beat. 550.

3. A. mortgaged to B., which was registered; then A. borrowed from C. on judgment, also registered. B. lent further sum without express notice of C.'s judgment:—Held, that B. was entitled to foreclose unless both debts were paid. Wrightson v. Hudson, 2 Eq. Abr. 498. S. P. Bedford v. Backhouse, id. 615.

4. An equitable mortgagee by deposit of title deeds, unaccompanied by any memorandum in writing, takes priority over a purchaser for value claiming under a subsequent registered deed, without notice of such deposit. Re Burke's Estate, 9 L. R., Ir., 24.

5. Under the Irish Registration Act an equity in a grant which is registered, will prevail against the right even of a bonâ fide purchaser to whom the original grantor has subsequently sold part of the property comprised in the registered deed. Mill v. Hill, 3 H. L. Ca. 828.

If a man has a limited interest in a term, and settles it to a certain use, and then gets a new and extended term substituted for it, he cannot, by so doing, avoid the previous settlement. Ib.

In 1830, a settlement of certain property held under renewable leases was made in favour of A. In 1831 A., being about to marry, made a settlement of this property for the uses of the marriage. The deed of 1830 was not registered. The settlement of 1831 was registered. In 1840 A., being in actual possession, sold to B., and B., who had no actual notice of the settlement of 1831, entered into possession, and made alterations in the premises. After the death of A., his son, who was entitled under the settlement of 1831, filed a bill against B. to set aside the sale, for an account, and for waste:—Held, that it was not necessary to register the deed of 1830, that the registered settlement of 1831 prevailed against the bonâ fide purchase of B., and that the Court below had properly declared him to stand possessed of the leases as a trustee for the parties beneficially interested under that settlement. But held also, that he was entitled to indemnity against the covenants in the leases which he was thus declared to hold as trustee; that an inquiry ought to be made as to alleged improvements and as to alleged waste; that he was entitled to be allowed the benefit of those improvements; and that being a bonâ fide purchaser, without misconduct, he ought not to be charged with costs. Ib.

IX. OTHER CASES.

6. A vendor of land situate in a register county, part of whose purchase money remains unpaid, is under no obligation to obtain for the unpaid amount any written security which can be registered, but is entitled to rely simply on his equitable lien, which he can enforce against sub-purchasers who have notice of it, actual or constructive; and such a vendor will not, by registering the conveyance to his purchaser, if he retains the deed in his possession lose his lien as against sub-purchasers from the original purchaser. Kettlewell v. Watson, 21 L. R., Ch. D., 685; 51 L. J., Ch., 281; 46 L. T. 83; 30 W. R. 402.

Land belonging to the trustees of a charity situate in the suburbs of Leeds, in the West Riding of Yorkshire, was sold by the trustees, with the sanction of the charity commissioners, to some estate agents who occupied a good position in Leeds. They bought the land with the intention of reselling it in small lots for building purposes. A receipt for the whole purchase money, signed by the vendors, was indorsed on the conveyance, but only part of it was in fact paid. The vendors retained the deed in their possession, but, at the request of the purchasers, the vendors' solicitors registered a memorandum of it in the West Riding registry. The vendors took no written security for their unpaid purchase money, but relied only on their equitable lien. The purchasers sold the land again in lots, some of which were very small. None of the sub-purchasers had actual notice of the lien of the original vendors:—Held, that the original vendors were entitled to enforce their lien against such of the sub-purchasers as had constructive notice of it. Ib.

7. The plaintiff is not bound to notice assignment of prior incumbrances, although the assignments are registered, and may proceed as if there had been no assignment by the original incumbrancer, unless the inheritor will point out the proper parties. Webb v. Blessington (Lord), 1 Moll. 74.

8. On a case stated to obtain the opinion of the Court of King's Bench, touching the construction of the Registry Act, 6 Ann, c. 2:—Held, that a deed of marriage settlement, limiting lands, was a valid deed in respect to the estates therein limited against the judgment debts of the settlor, confessed by him subsequent to the deed, notwithstanding the non-registry of the deed previous to the confession of the judgments. Browne v. Blake, 1 Moll. 620.

A. being seised in fee by articles previous to marriage, agreed within six months to convey in such manner that he should take an estate for life, remainder to his first, etc., sons in tail male, reversion in fee in himself; the marriage took effect, but the settlement was never executed. A. afterwards confessed judgments, which were entered before the registration of the articles. On his death, B., who was the only issue male, took the legal fee, and being tenant in tail in equity, reversion in fee, levied a fine, and declared the uses previous to marriage, to provide a jointure, and for the issue of the marriage subject to a life estate in himself. The conusee of the judgments revived them by scire facias against B., who had no defence at law, and B. afterwards made payments on account, and promised to pay the balance. Second, That although a fine without more would, under the circumstances, discharge the limitation, and bring the reversion in fee, on which the judgments were a lien, into possession, yet coupled with a declaration of uses, those uses were immediately substituted for the former, and the reversion in fee did not come into possession. Ib.

1. An annuitant by deed unregistered (plaintiff in fifth cause), filed a bill for arrears, making subsequent incumbrancers by deeds of annuity and mortgage, duly registered (plaintiff in second and third causes), and a creditor by judgment intermediate between the unregistered and registered deeds (plaintiff in the first cause) parties defendant. The subsequent annuitant and mortgagee answered, insisting on their priority to the plaintiff, by reason of the registration of their deeds; and the decree to account declared that their priority was admitted by the plaintiff. The judgment creditor, to whom a large sum was due, did not seek relief in this cause, and allowed the bill to be taken pro confesso against him. Before any demands were proved or report made, the plaintiff obtained assignments of the registered annuity and mortgage; and the Master reported that he did not find anything due upon them, the same having been assigned after decree to the plaintiff, who declined to prove any demand under them, being willing that they should remain charged upon the unsold lands. There was accordingly a final decree for the sum due on the unregistered annuity, without regard to the registered incumbrances. Another creditor (plaintiff in fourth cause) by judgment, also intervening between the registered and unregistered deeds, who was not a party in the above suit, filed his bill, and in his cause had a report of the sum due to him. The fund in court was realised in this latter cause, but was afterwards transferred to the credit of all the causes, and its amount was considerably less than the sum due upon the unregistered annuity. The judgment creditors now insisted that their judgments were entitled in priority to the unregistered prior deed by reason of the conflict and admitted priority of the registered deeds subsequent to the judgments:—Held, that the judgment creditor, who was party to the fifth cause, but allowed the bill to be taken pro confesso against him, and did not prove his demand in that cause, was bound by the final decree, and could not be heard to insist on his priority:—Held, also, that by conflict of unregistered and registered deeds, judgments intermediate do not obtain absolute priority to the unregistered deed, until it is absolutely postponed to the registered deed. Murtagh v. Tisdall, 3 Ir. Eq. R. 85; Fl. & K. 29.

Semble, where the decree to account declared that the plaintiff, who was entitled under an unregistered deed of the 10th July 1808, admitted the priority of A. and B., who were entitled under registered deeds of the year 1827, and then directed an account of incumbrances prior to the deed of the 10th July 1808, judgment debts prior to the registered deeds of 1827 might be proved under the decree; and, semble, A. and B. having assigned to the plaintiff after the decree to account, and no demand being proved, nor anything found due upon the registered deeds, the unregistered deed recovered its original priority to the intermediate judgments, at least as to all creditors not parties. Ib.

2. A judgment creditor, whose judgment was registered pursuant both to the Registry Act for the West Riding of Yorkshire, 5 & 6 Ann., c. 18, and the 1 & 2 Vict., c. 110, filed a bill to redeem a prior mortgagee of lands in the West Riding, and to foreclose the mortgagor. The mortgagor had confessed other judgments, and the conusees had registered them pursuant to the 1 & 2 Vict., c. 110, but not under the West Riding Act:—Held, that those conusees were not necessary parties to the suit. Johnson v. Holdsworth, 1 Sim., N. S., 106; 20 L. J., N. S., Ch., 63; 15 Jur. 31.

1. In General.

1. There is no authority to say a release must be signed, as well as sealed and delivered, to make it effectual. Taunton v. Peplor, 6 Madd. 166.

2. Demurrer to a bill by a surety, stating that two partners, having agreed to execute a release to the principal, in consideration of an assignment of his effects, one alone executed the release, overruled; whether a release so executed binds all the partners, quære. Hawkshaw v. Parkins, 2 Swan. 539.

3. A charge on lands created by deed cannot be discharged but by deed, or at least by some formal act of release. Cupit v. Jackson, 13 Price 721; M'Clel. 495.

4. A trustee paying the trust money in strict accordance with the terms of the trust, is not entitled to a release by deed; secus, if he is called upon to depart from the strictly expressed trusts. King v. Mullins, 1 Drew. 308.

Where a trust was created by parol for A. for life, and to provide for her funeral expenses, remainder to her two children and the tenant for life, and remaindermen called for payment:—Held, that the trustee might lawfully insist on a release under seal. Ib.

5. An aunt and niece lived together, the former being devisee, residuary legatee, and executrix under her husband's will, and the latter being a legatee of 2,000*l.* under the same will. An agreement was entered into between them, that the niece should release her legacy, on the aunt making a will devising to the niece part of the lands devised by the original testator. A release and will were accordingly executed, and the will remained unrevoked till the niece's death; after that event, the aunt married again:—Held, that the release must be treated as binding on the niece's representative. Penny v. Watts, 2 De G. & Sm. 501; 12 Jur. 993.

6. Owner of charge not to be presumed to have released it by permitting it to run largely into arrear, nor without proof to be suspected of so doing to prejudice those in remainder. Aston v. Aston, 1 Ves. 264.

7. An executory agreement in a cause of action, and cannot be pleaded in bar to another cause of action. Wood v. Rowe, 2 Bli. 596.

Such an agreement is totally different from a release under the seal; but considered as in the nature of a release, it could only be applied to such part of the relief sought by the bill as relates to the questions at issue between the plaintiff and the party who proposes to have the benefit of the agreement by way of plea. It could not be pleaded in bar to the whole relief; for the cause must, at all events, proceed as to the relief sought against the other parties. Ib.

A plea of an executory agreement, containing no averments that all the parties to the agreement are ready to perform it, is not only insufficient for want of proper averments, but could not be made a good plea by any amendment; because it is not a proper subject of plea, but a mere right of action, and cannot be a bar to another suit instituted by the party against whom the right of action is claimed, especially where a long time has elapsed between the date of the agreement and the pleading of it. Ib.

8. S. L., to whom, by settlement (executed in 1800), an annuity of 200*l.*, by way of jointure, was secured in the event of surviving her husband, continued, for many years after his death in 1809, to receive payment from her step-son, H. A. L., the inheritor of the estate upon which the annuity was charged. In 1830, the annuity being then two years in arrear, S. L. wrote a letter to her step-son, wherein she stated that to serve him she would feel happy in thenceforth giving up the 200*l.* annuity, which he had paid her since her husband's death, and would also make him a present of the 400*l.*, the arrears then due. In 1834 H. A. L. died. By his will he charged his real estates with the payment of an annuity of 200*l.* to his step-mother. By a codicil, he substituted a reduced annuity of 100*l.* for the annuity of 200*l.* granted by his will, accompanied by a declaration, that it was upon condition that S. L. should not seek to raise the annuity of 200*l.* secured by the settlement of 1800. S. L. died in 1837, having previously made her will, and thereby appointed the plaintiff her residuary legatee and sole executor. It appeared that S. L. had never demanded either the annuity secured by the settlement, or that granted by the will, after the date of her letter in 1830. The plaintiff having filed a bill to raise the arrears of the annuity secured by the settlement, the Court dismissed it, so far as it claimed relief in respect of the arrears which accrued in the lifetime of H. A. L., but directed an account of what was due from his death to the death of S. L. Langley v. Langley, 2 Ir. Eq. R. 313.

1. The assignee of a lease executes a bond to indemnify the original lessees against the covenants contained in the original lease; he afterwards quits the country; the house is left untenanted, and the original lessees are obliged to pay the rent reserved; the assignee having subsequently returned to England, makes a compromise with them for the sum then due, in respect of his non-performance of the covenants, and shortly afterwards goes abroad; they demise the house to a person who continues in the possession till the end of the term:—Held, that this mode of dealing with the premises does not give the assignee any title in equity to relief against the legal effect of his bond. Anderson v. Bailey, 1 Russ. 313.

2. R. G. having died intestate, possessed of considerable personal property, and entitled, after the death of his wife, to the principal of certain bank stock, standing in the name of a trustee; his brother, by letter, expressed his intention of relinquishing his share of the intestate's estate to the said widow, executed to the trustee (transferring to the widow) a release of the bank stock, and directed the preparation of a release of the general personal estate, the execution of which was prevented by his death, but his wish to execute it continued to his last hour; the release of the stock is effectual in favour of the intestate's widow; but the intention to relinquish the share of the general personal estate not being perfected, amounts not to a gift, and she, as administratrix, must account to the representatives of the brother, but without interest. Hooper v. Goodwin, 1 Swan. 485; 1 Wils. 212.

3. Notwithstanding declaration of the testator to his executor, that he never meant to call for payment of a promissory note, it was held part of the assets which were insufficient for the legacies, a charge on the real estate failing for want of a proper attestation of the will. Byrn v. Godfrey, 4 Ves. 6.

4. "I return A. his bond," in a will, is not a release, but a legacy, and having lapsed, the bond remains in force against a surviving co-obligor. Maitland v. Adair, 3 Ves. 231.

5. Testator gave his brother and nephew legacies, and appointed them executors, but did not dispose of the residue; they were indebted to him in unequal sums: this is no release of the debts, and they are trustees for the next of kin as to the residue. Carey v. Goodinge, 3 Bro. C. C. 110.

6. Circumstances under which a proposed codicil in the testator's handwriting, but not admitted to probate, was held not to operate (according to its stated effect) in discharge of the debt due from the legatee to the testator. Observations upon Eden v. Smyth (5 Ves. 341). Chester v. Urwick (2), 23 Beav. 404.

7. C., who acted as the confidential adviser of a testator, was the obligor in a bond to the testator for 2,000*l.*, conditioned to be void on the payment of that sum within six months after demand. The executors demanded payment of C., which he resisted on the ground, first, that he never received more than 1,500*l.*; and, secondly, that what passed at an interview between himself and the testator amounted to a release of all obligation in respect of the instrument. The Court being of opinion that the evidence of what passed at the interview amounted to no more at the utmost than an intention to deliver up the bond as an act of bounty, which intention was never fulfilled:—Held, that much more was necessary to establish the release of a debt, and payment of the debt was decreed. Woodward v. Humpage, Re Inspich, 5 L. T., N. S., 382.

8. If a mortgage is found cancelled in the possession of the mortgagee, it is as much a release as cancelling a bond; but there must be some deed to revest the estate in the mortgagor. Harrison v. Owen, 1 Atk. 520.

9. Destruction by father of security given by sons for money advanced:—Held, under the circumstances, an advancement and release of debt. Gilbert v. Wetherell, 2 Sim. & S. 254; 3 L. J., Ch., 138.

10. During a treaty for a marriage, which afterwards took place, a bond creditor of the intended husband, who was an intimate friend of his family, and was aware of the proposed marriage, repeatedly declared it to be her determination never to enforce payment of the bond debt, and made these declarations under circumstances which were calculated to lead, and which did lead, to the communication of them to the friends of the intended wife. Held, by the Lord Justice Knight-Bruce, agreeing with the Master of the Rolls, that the declarations above mentioned afforded possibly sufficient ground for the interposition of a court of equity to restrain proceedings at law upon the bond, and there being, in addition, the testimony of one witness to a positive promise to the above effect, in consideration of another promise on the part of the witness, which he performed:—Held, that although this promise was denied by the answer, yet that the answer being in many respects inaccurate, showed that the defendant's memory could not be depended on, so that the testimony of the witness ought to prevail, and that the case was a proper one for a perpetual injunction, a decree for which was accordingly affirmed, dissentiente Lord Cranworth, who held, that the declarations being of intention merely, and not of fact, were not such representations as to bind the creditor, on the ground of fraud or otherwise, and that an actual contract could not, in opposition to the answer, be considered proved, by the evidence of one witness. Money v. Jordan, 2 De G. M. & G. 318; 21 L. J., Ch., 893. S. C. nom. Jorden v. Money, 5 H. L. Ca. 185; 23 L. J., Ch., 865.

Held, that forbearance to make a new settlement upon an intended marriage, would be a sufficient consideration to support the release of a debt due to a person who was a cestui que trust under an existing settlement, which appeared to be voluntary, although it might be doubtful whether that settlement was voluntary, or could have been defeated by a subsequent settlement. Ib.

1. A. being indebted to B., C., and D., three sisters, who were his near relations, partly on his own account, and partly as executor of his father, executed to them a bond for 500*l.* At the time of the giving of the bond, A. objected to give it, and agreed to do so only on a verbal representation, that it was not intended to be enforced unless B., C., and D. should come to want, an event which did not happen. The bond remained in the hands of the three till the death of B., and after her death in the hands of the survivors, and after the death of C. in the hands of D., whose property (by mutual arrangements) it was at the time of her death. On the bond was found the following indorsement: "This bond is never to appear against A. Witness, C., D." It was not made clear that C.'s name was written by herself; it was said that D. had written it. It was, however, proved, that if D. had written it, she did so with the authority of C.:—Held, that without saying whether the indorsement amounted to a release, which was a legal question, there was an equity under the circumstances against enforcing the bond; that if put in suit, the action would be restrained; and that there was nothing due on the bond to the estate of D. Major v. Major, 1 Drew. 165.

2. A debtor conveyed his life interest in certain property in trust for creditors, parties to the deed; and the creditors, in consideration thereof, granted to the debtor licence to reside and attend to his affairs in any place he might think proper, without suit or molestation, in his person or his goods, chattels, and effects, by any such creditors; and that, in case of any suit or molestation by any of such creditors, contrary to the true intent and meaning of such licence, the debtor should be wholly released and acquitted of the debt, and the deed might be pleaded in bar:—Held, that this amounted only to a licence by the creditor to the debtor to live unmolested, and did not operate as a release of the debt or a discharge of the debtor's estate; and that neither a suit by creditors against the trustees and the debtor to enforce the trusts of the deed, nor an administration suit by the creditor against the estate of the debtor after his decease, for payment of so much of the debt as the trust property was insufficient to pay, was barred by the trust deed or amounted to an acquittance of the debt. Held, also, that the existence of the trust deed, and the covenants and licence therein contained, prevented the operation of the Statute of Limitations during the life of the debtor in respect of the debts, for the payment of which the trust was created. O'Brien v. Osborne, 10 Hare 92; 16 Jur. 960.

3. By a mortgage deed the debtor covenanted to pay principal and interest, and a surety covenanted to pay the interest in default. The debtor afterwards, by deed, assigned his property to a trustee on trust to sell and divide the proceeds amongst his creditors, the creditors releasing the debtor from the debts due to them respectively; but there was a proviso in the deed that nothing therein should affect any right or remedy which any creditor might have against any other person in respect of any debt due by the debtor:—Held, that this deed only amounted to a covenant not to sue the debtor, and that the surety was not released, but that the surety could pay off the principal to the creditor and recover the amount from the debtor. Green v. Wynn, 4 L. R., Ch., 204; 38 L. J., Ch., 220; 20 L. T., N. S., 131; 17 W. R. 385.

4. C., being indebted to his mother, and being under an obligation to execute a security to her, refused to do so. The mother then promised to bequeath the debt to her son if he would execute the security. This was done, but the mother died without having bequeathed the debt:—Held, that the promise to bequeath could not be enforced in equity, and that the debt formed part of the mother's estate. Luxmore v. Clifton, 17 L. T., N. S., 460; 16 W. R. 265.

5. A testator wrote in his account book, opposite an entry of two debts owing to him by his brother, one being due upon mortgage and the other upon a promissory note, the words, "Not to be enforced;" but he received interest upon both debts for several years after the date of the entry, and up to the time of his death. The document which contained the words referred to was not propounded as testamentary:—Held, that this memorandum of the testator did not amount to a discharge of either of the debts. Peace v. Hains, 11 Hare 151; 17 Jur. 1091.

Semble, the cases in which the Court has held a debtor liberated from his obligation to pay a debt which once existed, and from which he has not been discharged by any testamentary instrument, are, first, where the act or declaration relied on creates an immediate discharge, which the debtor might plead as a release, or by way of accord and satisfaction at law, or which he might enforce in equity as against the creditor; second, where the discharge, though not immediate and absolute, but conditional, becomes perfect by the condition having in the event been performed; third, where the creditor intended to discharge the obligation at his death, and communicated that intention to those who would, under this disposition, take or represent his interest upon his death, and relied upon their fulfilment of his intention; and fourth (in strictness belonging to another class of cases), where the transaction supposed to create the debt or obligation is rather in the nature of an advancement by one in loco parentis, or is part of a family arrangement. Ib.

6. By a deed of even date with a lease, the lessor covenanted that the lessee should retain part of each year's rent until satisfaction of a debt due from the lessor to the lessee:—Held, that though the covenant might be pleaded at law as a release pro tanto of the rent, this was only to avoid circuity of action, and the covenant was not for all purposes a release. Ledger v. Stanton, 2 John. & H. 687; 9 W. R. 848; 4 L. T., N. S., 795.

Therefore, the lessee having specially bequeathed the premises subject to the rent:—Held, as between the executors and the specific legatees, that the specific legatees took subject to the whole rent, and that the benefit of the covenant for reduction of rent went to the executors. Ib.

1. Where a father-in-law, to whom his son-in-law owed money upon a mortgage of the house in which his son-in-law lived, wrote to the latter, dissuading him from selling the house to pay off the debt, and saying, "Have you paid me a penny since you had the money? . . . You can live there, just as you do, without paying us any rent; it is not wished that you should give it up":—Held, on a bill for redemption, by the son-in-law after his father-in-law's death, that he was only liable for the interest which accrued after the father-in-law's death. Yeomans v. Williams, 1 L. R., Eq., 184; 35 L. J., Ch., 283; 35 Beav. 130.

2. B. borrowed 1,100*l.* from his step-mother, who lived in his house, paying 212*l.* 10*s.* a quarter for board; and it was agreed that the debt should be paid off by a deduction of 100*l.* from each quarter's payment. Deductions of this amount were made for two quarters, but on the third quarter-day the creditor refused to make any further deduction, and paid the full amount of 212*l.* 10*s.*, and continued down to the time of her death (which took place more than four years afterwards) to pay to B. the like quarterly sum. B. was appointed sole executor of his step-mother, and proved the will:—Held, that the debt was gone: first, because the appointment of B. as executor released the debt at law, and any claim in equity was rebutted by evidence of a continuing intention on the part of the testatrix to give; and, secondly, because the intention of the testatrix to give B. the 900*l.* was completed by nine quarterly payments of 212*l.* 10*s.* each. Strong v. Bird, 18 L. R., Eq., 315; 43 L. J., Ch., 814; 30 L. T., N. S., 745.

2. Consideration.

3. In a deed executed, upon a separation between a husband and wife, by them and the trustees of their marriage settlements, the wife charged her separate property, comprised in the settlements, with the payment of an annuity to the husband, and the husband released his marital rights, in respect of any future property acquired by the wife. The release of the husband is a good consideration for the grant of the annuity by the wife, and the Court will enforce the payment of the annuity. Logan v. Birkett, 1 Myl. & K. 220; 2 L. J., N. S., Ch., 52.

4. As to consideration for a release, see the case of Noel v. Rochfort, 5 Bli. N. S. 667.

5. Where a testator to whom a party was indebted, in one sum on a note, and another on a bond, in his will bequeathed to a son part of the entire debt, and afterwards by codicil revoked the bequest, and by endorsement on the bond declared that he thereby acquitted the obligor of the sum, and stated that in consequence he had revoked by codicil of the same date the bequest to the same amount:—Held, that being a volunteer, and the release without consideration, he was not entitled to come into equity for relief. Tufnell v. Constable, 8 Sim. 69.

6. Mere voluntary declarations, indicating the intention of a creditor to forgive or release a debt, if they are not evidence of a release at law do not constitute a release in equity; unless, therefore, there be a consideration or some other equitable means of distinction, equity, in such a case, follows the law. Cross v. Sprigg, 6 Hare 552; 18 L. J., N. S., Ch., 204; 13 Jur. 785.

7. A., being entitled, under a deed of 1784, to a charge affecting the estate of B., in 1814 executed a release in order to enable B. to sell the estate for the payment of creditors claiming under a trust deed of 1809; a decree to account and report the priority of incumbrances having been made:—Held, that the charge of A. retained its priority under the deed of 1784, except as to purchasers who had bought upon the faith of the release; it appearing from depositions in aid of the account, that no consideration was paid upon the execution of the release, and that the charge had not been satisfied, although the release had not been set aside or impeached in any suit instituted for that purpose:—Held, also, that the acceptance by A. of a bond with warrant, though accompanied by a release, could not under the circumstances be considered as a substituted security. Hatchell v. Cremorne, Ll. & G. temp. Plunk. 236.

8. In a defence founded upon an allegation that the plaintiff has released or assigned his rights for a pecuniary consideration paid to him, it is incumbent on the defendant to prove that the consideration was in fact paid. Vandaleur v. Blagrave, 6 Beav. 578.

9. A. being indebted to B., entered into an agreement, not under seal, for the repayment of the money, B. to hold a policy on A.'s life as security. B. died, and her executors reckoned the debt among her assets, and paid probate and legacy duty upon it. Communications took place between the debtor and the executors on the one hand, and the executors and residuary legatees on the other hand, as to not enforcing the debt upon payment by the debtor of the probate and legacy duty thereon. The debtor did in fact pay such duties, and the executors withdrew their claim on the policy, but neither was the agreement surrendered to A. nor cancelled, nor was any release of his debt executed:—Held, that the communications amounted to an agreement to release the debt, and that the payment of the duties was a sufficient consideration. Taylor v. Manners, 1 L. R., Ch., 48; 35 L. J., Ch., 128; 11 Jur., N. S., 986; 14 W. R. 154; 13 L. T., N. S., 388.

3. Fraud and Ignorance of Rights.

10. A release shall be avoided where there is suppressio veri, or suggestio falsi. Jarvis v. Duke, 1 Vern. 19.

11. Release set aside by reason of the misapprehension of the party. Gee v. Spencer, 1 Vern. 32.

12. Devisee under a will defectively executed, represents the will duly executed, and, for a small sum, gains a release from the heir; release set aside. Broderick v. Broderick, 1 P. W. 239.

13. Bill to be relieved against a release as gained by fraud, it appeared that there had been another release given, and though it was said that was got in the same manner, yet not being taken notice of in the bill, nor relief prayed against it, bill was dismissed. Gray v. Bull, 1 Vern. 86.

1. A freeman of London, taking advantage of his son's necessities, in consideration of a bond for securing the son an annuity of 50*l*., prevailed on him to release his share of orphanage; the father also prevailed on another of his sons to give him a release of his share of orphanage, in consideration of an annuity of the same nature; but there were not the same proofs of his being forced into the release, and the father had at times advanced him 300*l*. or 400*l*. :—Held, the plaintiff being turned out of doors, left destitute, and void of maintenance, a release extorted could not be supported; the other son was equally entitled to be relieved. Heron v. Heron, 2 Atk. 160.

If a father, merely for the sake of maintenance, and not for advancement in marriage or trade, oblige his son to release his right to the orphanage part, such release is absolutely void. Ib.

2. A release, ex vi termini, imports a knowledge in the releasor of what he releases; and therefore, where executors (who had taken the opinion of counsel, which they had not communicated), obtained a release of the orphanage share from the husband of a freeman's daughter, they were decreed to account that the parties might elect; the length of time and alleged loss of vouchers being no sufficient bar to such account. Salkeld v. Vernon, 1 Eden 64.

3. Where a release of a legal demand has been improperly obtained, a court of equity will set it aside, but will not decree payment of the legal demand. Pascoe v. Pascoe, 2 Cox 109.

4. Releases set aside as fraudulent; and that, too, though there was no express prayer that they might be set aside. Williams v. Smith, 7 L. J., Ch., 129.

5. A release from the younger brother to the elder, of certain premises which had been devised to him by his father, executed in consequence of a threat to file a bill, set aside in favour of creditors. Peat v. Powell, Ambl. 387. 1 Eden 479.

6. On suspicious circumstances in the answer, a general account was decreed against a steward, notwithstanding a receipt in full, which was allowed only as proof of a particular payment, not of a general release or discharge upon an account stated; though under circumstances it might have that effect, as upon proof that the principal never would give any vouchers, and an account kept by the steward. Middleditch v. Sharland, 5 Ves. 87.

7. A., immediately on his coming of age, released to his mother all claims on his father's estate, and after an acquiescence of five years, sought to set the release aside; though such a release must always create suspicion, yet the Court will not set it aside till the Master had taken the account, as no particular imposition was charged. Steadman v. Pulling, 8 Atk. 423.

8. A release of the equity of redemption was set aside at the instance of the mortgagee, he having been induced to accept of it, and in consideration thereof to covenant for the payment of a perpetual annuity to the mortgagor, and to give the mortgagor a perpetual right of redemption, by means of misrepresentations by the mortgagor and his solicitor (who was also the solicitor of the mortgagee) as to the title of the mortgagor, the value of the premises, and the nature of the contract he was entering into. Roddy v. Williams, 3 J. & L. 1.

9. Where a person represents to another that he is of age, and executes to him a release upon which the latter acts:—Held, that he could not afterwards impeach the validity of the release on the ground of his minority, and that it was immaterial whether he was aware or not of the incorrectness of the representation. Wright v. Snowe, 2 De G. & Sm. 321.

10. Bill, charging fraud in obtaining a release; plea, the release, supported by an answer denying the fraud; the benefit of the plea was saved to the hearing. Lloyd v. Smith, 1 Anstr. 258.

11. No reason to set aside a release because the party releasing had a right; seous, if ignorant of his right, or if the same was concealed from him. Cann v. Cann, 1 P. W. 727.

12. A., immediately on his coming of age, released to his mother all claims on his father's estate, and after an acquiescence of five years, sought to set the release aside; though such a release must always create suspicion, yet the Court would not set it aside till the Master had taken the account, as no particular imposition was charged. Steadman v. Pulling, 3 Atk. 423.

13. A party who, upon a compromise, had executed a general release, claimed relief on the ground of a large item, in which he was interested, having by mistake been omitted in the account:—Held, that he was entitled to relief, but that to obtain it the release must be wholly set aside. A. B., the representative of a deceased partner, having filed his bill against C. D. the surviving partner for an account, A. B., in consideration of 500*l*., released C. D. from all claims, and the bill was dismissed. By mutual error a debt of 2,000*l*., owing to the partnership, but which was not then known to exist, was omitted in the consideration by both parties. C. D. afterwards received it:—Held, that A. B., notwithstanding the release, was entitled to his share of the debt, but that to obtain it the whole account must be reopened. Pritt v. Clay, 6 Beav. 503.

14. Release of an annuity given by an illiterate person without professional assistance and for inadequate consideration set aside after several years, the price being held inadequate as to the defendant, by whose covenant the annuity was secured, although, considering the nature of the security, it might not have been so from a stranger. Garvey v. M'Minn. 9 Ir. Eq. R. 526.

15. A nephew, who was the heir-at-law and sole next of kin of the testator, having taken the opinion of counsel as to the widow's rights under the husband's will, and being advised that she took the residue absolutely, contracted to sell to her a house which had descended to him as heir; and part of the agreement was, that he should release all demands against her as executrix, or against her deceased husband's personal estate; a general release, executed in pursuance of this agreement, was held to be valid, and to invest the stock in the executrix absolutely, though it made no specific mention of the stock. Collier v. Squire, 3 Russ. 467; 5 L. J., Ch., 186.

1. A plea of release, if the consideration be impeached, must contain averments supported fully by an answer covering the grounds upon which the consideration is impugned, and cannot extend to a discovery of the consideration. Parker v. Alcock, 1 Y. & J. 432.

2. General release from a sister to a brother, not binding as to particular rights under the marriage settlement or articles of the parent, the sister being ignorant of them, and the brother having covenanted that he was seised in fee contrary to the fact; the sister held entitled to her claims under the settlement or articles, and also the consideration recited and expressed in the deed of release, the brother being debtor to her in such amount on the face of it. Ramsden v. Hylton, 2 Ves. 305.

A general release with a particular consideration recited, will be construed according to the particular recital. Ib.

3. Where a release had been executed and the parties have, for a long space of time, acquiesced in it, the mere proof of errors will not, in the absence of fraud, induce the Court either to set it aside or to give leave to surcharge and falsify; but the nature and amount of the errors alleged and proved may have a very considerable effect in the consideration of the question whether the release was fairly obtained. Millar v. Craig, 6 Beav. 433.

4. A release which had been executed by a person ignorant of his rights, and where it was proved that he had no intention of releasing such rights, set aside. Phelps v. Amcott, 21 L. T., N. S., 167.

5. Where plaintiffs in an action against a railway company for compensation for injuries, filed a bill against the company for a declaration that a release given by them to the company for such injuries was a receipt only for 15*l.*, and that the company who had pleaded such release in the action might be restrained from relying on it as a release of the causes of action on the ground that the release was obtained by fraud on the part of the company's agents. Upon demurrer:—Held, that the fraud alleged was not such as a court of law could necessarily deal with, and that the plaintiffs were not precluded from coming to the Court of Chancery by reason of their having commenced the action, they not having attempted an equitable replication; and the Court overruled the demurrer. Stewart v. Great Western Railway Co., 2 Dr. & Sm. 438. Affirmed 13 L. T., N. S., 79.

6. S. being indebted to B., and other persons, agreed with B. for a further advance on a mortgage of various estates in Ireland. By the deed S. covenanted that the lands of K., which formed part of the security, were free from incumbrances, and for further assurance. No title was furnished by S., nor search in the registry made by B. Before the entire advance was paid over to S. it was discovered that the lands of K. were subject to a mortgage to E. B. thereupon applied to S., who told him that E. would release the lands on his (S.'s) request, on which assurance B. paid over the residue of the loan to S. S. subsequently, by fraud, procured a release from E., of which release B. was made aware, but was ignorant of the fraud. The fraud was discovered after some months had elapsed:—Held, that B. was a purchaser for value of the release, as having been procured by S. in pursuance of the covenants in the mortgage deed, and that being ignorant of S.'s fraud he was entitled to retain the advantage which the release had given him. Re Burmester, 11 Ir. Ch. R. 1.

7. In 1841, 4,500*l.* was advanced by a testatrix to her son B., but no security or acknowledgment was executed by B. No interest was directly paid, but an allowance covenanted to be paid to B. by the testatrix was set off against the interest, which, at 4 per cent., came to the same amount. In 1843 the testatrix made a codicil, containing a declaration that the 4,500*l.* was due and owing from B., and that his appointment as executor was not to have the effect of cancelling the debt. In 1854 a further codicil was made, revoking the appointment of B. as executor, but confirming the will and codicils in all other respects. In 1855 the testatrix wrote to B. as follows: "You must know when I gave you the money I never could intend it as a loan, but as an absolute gift; and I hope you will live many years to enjoy it":—Held, that this letter being written under a misapprehension of the nature of the original transaction, and being inconsistent with the previous conduct of the parties, did not discharge the debt thereby created. Knapp v. Burnaby, 8 W. R. 305.

8. Bequest to A. for life of annuity of 100*l.*, "by interest arising out of money to be vested for that purpose by the executors" in public funds or other good security, and after his death "the capital stocks so purchased" to A.'s children. By a codicil the testator said, "What I mean in my will by securing money in the public funds, is to purchase a capital stock in the consols by my executors":—Held, that the executors might either purchase in the consols or in other good security, but having done neither in the life of A., his children were entitled to 3,333*l.* 6*s.* 8*d.* consols, and not to 2,000*l.* cash. A. died 1843, and his children, on receiving 2,000*l.*, executed a release, which, after reciting that, according to the trust, 2,000*l.* had been set apart to answer the annuity, they released the representative of the testator from all claims and demands. In 1854 the children instituted a suit to recover the amount of consols which would be required to produce 100*l.*:—Held, that having regard to the situation in life of the plaintiff, the inaccuracy of the recitals, and the absence of professional assistance, they were not barred by lapse of time. Aspland v. Watte, 20 Beav. 474.

9. Where there are three incumbrancers, the first having the legal estate, and the third incumbrancer joins with the mortgagor in creating a further mortgage, in consideration of a portion of the money advanced being paid to him, the second incumbrancer is not entitled in equity to any portion of the money so received. Eyre v. Burmester, 10 Jur., N. S., 687; 33 L. J., Ch., 652; 12 W. R. 993; 10 L. T., N. S., 673; 4 De G. J. & S. 435. And see 10 H. L. Ca. 90; 6 L. T., N. S., 838.

S. mortgaged to E. lands in Ireland, in which the legal estate was outstanding in a prior incumbrancer. He afterwards mortgaged the estate to a banking company of which he was chairman of directors, and subsequently by substituting forged securities prevailed on E. to release his security on the estate. S. afterwards, and before the fraud was discovered, obtained the concurrence of the banking company in a mortgage of the estate to B. for 36,000*l.*, of which 1,000*l.* was retained and 35,000*l.* paid to the company in part discharge of the money due to them. B. caused the property to be sold in the Incumbered Estates Court, and received the balance of the purchase money after paying off the first mortgage, and applied the same to the discharge of his own debt. E. thereupon filed a bill against the banking company to set aside the release, and claiming by way of substitution for the security which he had released out of the 35,000*l.* received by them, a sum equal to the purchase money of the estate, less the amount of the first mortgage:—Held, that the plaintiff was not entitled to any relief. Ib.

1. Before accounts which have been settled, and in respect of which a release has been executed, can be reopened, a case must be shown for setting aside the release, nor is the existence of usurious items in the account of which both parties were cognisant sufficient ground for setting it aside. Very strong evidence is required for setting aside, on the ground of undue influence, a transaction between two persons actively engaged in business and competent to carry it on. Fowler v. Wyatt, 24 Beav. 232.

2. In an action by the plaintiff against the defendant for alleged breaches of covenants contained in their deed of partnership, and for fraud alleged to have been committed by the defendant in obtaining a deed of dissolution thereof; it appeared that as regards the breaches the plaintiff had, by the deed of dissolution, in consideration of the defendant having given up the whole of the partnership assets to the plaintiff, released the defendant from all matters and things whatever touching or concerning the joint trade, without prejudice nevertheless to the covenants and agreements in the deed of dissolution contained:—Held, that as the release could not be separated from the rest of the deed of dissolution, and as the plaintiff had not disaffirmed, and was not in a condition to disaffirm or rescind the contract, of which the release formed part, the same was binding upon him. Urquhart v. Macpherson, 3 L. R., App. Cas., 831.

2. Joint Debtors, 6066.
3. Other Claims and Rights, 6066.

1. General Principles.

3. General release restrained to what was under consideration. Cole v. Gibson, 1 Ves. 507.

4. A general release, with a particular consideration recited, will be construed according to the particular recital. Ramsden v. Hylton, 2 Ves. 305.

5. A release, though unlimited in its terms:—Held, from the recitals and context, to operate only as to a particular sum mentioned in the recitals. Lindo v. Lindo, 1 Beav. 496; 8 L. J., N. S., Ch., 284.

6. A release, general in its terms, limited so as not to include a particular debt unknown to exist at the time of its execution and not intended to be released. Moore v. Weston, 25 L. T. 542.

7. Principles of the Court in giving effect to the intention of the parties to a general release, with reference to the restrictive clauses which it contains, or to the purposes for which it is made. Squire v. Ford, 9 Hare 55; 20 L. J., N. S., Ch., 308; 15 Jur. 619.

8. General words in a release are limited to those matters which were specially in the contemplation of the parties when the release was given. London & South Western Railway Co. v. Blackmore, 4 L. R., H. L., 610; 29 L. J., Ch., 713; 23 L. T. 504.

9. When a receipt has been given under seal it discharges at law all cause of action, and can only be set aside by the equitable jurisdiction of a court of law; but a mere receipt in writing has no such effect; it amounts simply to an acknowledgment of money paid; it cannot be pleaded in answer to an action, and it may be impeached or explained by parol evidence. Lee v. Lancashire & Yorkshire Railway Co., 6 L. R., Ch., 527; 25 L. T. 77; 19 W. R. 729.

10. Acceptance of the release of a right or compromise of dispute is in no case an acknowledgment that a right existed. Underwood v. Courtown (Lord), 2 Sch. & Lef. 68.

Purchasing quiet of an adverse claimant no admission to him of right. Ib.

11. Plaintiff, having released the principal in a fraud, cannot go on against the other parties, though they would have been secondarily liable. Thompson v. Harrison, 2 Bro. C. C. 164.

12. Claims, though not barred by prescription, may be extinguished by a release, or the remedy destroyed by conduct operating as a release. Motz v. Moreau, 13 Moo. P. C. 377.

13. In an action by the plaintiff against the defendant for alleged breaches of covenants contained in their deed of partnership, and for fraud alleged to have been committed by the defendant in obtaining a deed of dissolution thereof; it appeared that as regards the breaches the plaintiff had, by the deed of dissolution, in consideration of the defendant having given up the whole of the partnership assets to the plaintiff, released the defendant from all matters and things whatever touching or concerning the joint trade, without prejudice nevertheless to the covenants and agreements in the deed of dissolution contained:—Held, that as the release could not be separated from the rest of the deed of dissolution, and as the plaintiff had not disaffirmed, and was not in a condition to disaffirm or rescind the contract of which the release formed part, the same was binding upon him. Urquhart v. Macpherson, 3 L. R., App. Cas., 831.

14. Where a release in terms extends to sums of money which the releasee has openly, but without justification, taken from the releasor, the latter cannot file a bill in equity to compel the releasee the pay these sums, though at the time the release was given, the releasor was, in fact, ignorant of the fraud committed by the releasee. The remedy of the releasor in such a case is to have the release set aside in toto; and if, in consequence of dealings subsequent to the release, that cannot be done, the releasor can have no relief in equity. Skilbeck v. Hilton, 2 L. R., Eq., 587.

1. Effect of a general release by a party entitled to a charge on real estate secured by a term of years to the trustees of the term, the term itself not being assigned or merged. Clifford v. Clifford, 9 Hare 675.

2. Release expressing that administrator had received "all" the property, Court will not suppose he has received anything since so as to direct an account. Taunton v. Pepler, 6 Madd. 166.

3. F. B., in consideration of natural love and affection for his sisters, by indenture released a particular freehold estate to B., his heirs and assigns; and assigned a particular leasehold estate, and all other the property in Great Britain or Ireland, whether real or personal, which he might be entitled to at the time of executing the indenture to B., his executors, administrators, and assigns, upon trust, that B., etc., should stand possessed thereof upon trust to pay the rent, interest, dividends, or annual produce arising therefrom, or the moneys arising from the sale thereof, equally between his three sisters. F. B. was, at the date of this indenture and of his death, seised of a share in a freehold house situate in K. street, not mentioned in the lease or release:—Held, that the release could not operate as a covenant to stand seised of the house in K. street, there being therein no mention of that house, and the general words being, from the frame of the deed, applicable only to leasehold or other personal estate. Doungworth v. Blair, 1 Keen 795; 6 L. J., N. S., Ch., 263; 1 Jur. 620.

2. Joint Debtors.

4. Proof under bankruptcy of one joint debtor after receiving composition from the other, expunged; release to one being a release to both. Exp. Slater, 6 Ves. 146.

5. A release to one obligor is a release to both, in equity as well as at law. Bower v. Swadlin, 1 Atk. 294.

Where there is an assignment of bond in trust for others, precedent to a release, though without consideration, it will be a material question whether the obligee could release, or if it could operate to the release, as he is a trustee in the assignment. Every man is supposed to be cognisant of a deed to which he is himself a party. Ib.

6. A testator bequeathed all debts and sums of money which should at the time of his death be due to him by B., unto B., his executors, administrators, and assigns, for his and their own use and benefit, and he directed his trustees to deliver up to B., his executors, administrators, or assigns, all securities which he should at the time of his death hold for such debts and sums of money, and also, when required by B., his executors, administrators, or assigns, to execute to him or them a release from all such debts and sums of money. At the date of the will and of the testator's death, B. owed the testator a debt of 50*l.*, and he and his partner owed the testator 2,600*l.*, which the latter had lent to the firm, and for which B. and his partner had given the testator their joint and several promissory notes. B. and his partner having filed a liquidation petition, the executors claimed to prove in the liquidation for the 2,600*l.*:—Held, that as there was a separate debt due from B. to which the release could apply, it could not be extended to the partnership debt, and that the executors' proof must be admitted. Exp. Kirk, Re Bennett and Glave, 36 L. T., N. S., 431; 5 L. R., Ch. D., 800; 46 L. J., Bky., 101; 25 W. R. 598.

7. A partner sued in equity for a money demand, alleged by his bill that his co-partner had released the debt, which was still due to the partnership:—Held, that the release created such a difficulty in suing at law for the debt, that the bill was not demurrable for want of equity. Pieroy v. Fynney, 40 L. J., Ch., 404; 12 L. R., Eq., 69; 19 W. R. 710.

8. A bank proved in the liquidation of A. for a debt of 5,600*l.*, which they claimed for him, and afterwards sued for the same debt S., who had given them a guarantee of 1,000*l.* on behalf of A., and whom they alleged to have been a partner with A. S. denied the partnership, and ultimately a compromise was entered into between him and the bank, by which the bank was to receive 2,800*l.* in satisfaction of their claim against him and against another person who had given another guarantee on behalf of A. The guarantee of S. was given up to him, with a receipt indorsed upon it by the bank, expressed to be for 1,000*l.*, "in payment and discharge of the within guarantee, and also of all claims against him in reference to or in connection with" A.'s firm:—Held, that assuming S. to have been a partner with A., this receipt did not operate as a release of S., and consequently that the bank was entitled to maintain their proof. Exp. Good, Re Armitage, 46 L. J., Bky., 65; 5 L. R., Ch. D., 46; 25 W. R. 422; 36 L. T., N. S., 338.

The rule that a release of one joint debtor operates to release the other is founded upon the fact that the second would, if he was sued by the creditor, have a right to enforce contribution from the first. The rule, therefore, does not apply to a release of a merely ostensible partner, between whom and the person with whom he has held himself out to be a partner, no such right of contribution exists. S. C. 5 L. R., Ch. D., 46; 46 L. J., Bky., 65; 25 W. R. 83; 35 L. T., N. S., 554.

3. Other Claims and Rights.

9. A. possibility cannot be assigned, but it may be released. Thomas v. Freeman, 2 Vern. 563.

10. It is now well known that a possibility may be both assigned and released. Jewson v. Moulson, 2 Atk. 417.

11. A., and B. his surety, executed a joint and several bond to C., conditioned to be void on payment of 5,000*l.* by A.; C. proved 5,000*l.* as a specialty debt under the decree in a suit instituted by A.'s creditors after his death.

Afterwards B. paid the 5,000*l.*, and thereupon C. executed him to a general release of all claims and demands in respect of the bond, and by the same deed covenanted to stand possessed of all moneys to be received under the proof and of all the securities for the 5,000*l.* in trust for B., and to use his utmost endeavours to obtain payment of that sum for B.'s benefit:—Held, that the legal effect of the release was not controlled by the covenant, and that the Master, when he made his report, in pursuance of the decree, was justified in disallowing the 5,000*l.* as a specialty debt, and in allowing it merely as a simple contract debt to B. Warwick v. Richardson, 14 Sim. 281.

1. Mortgagees with notice of a specific charge for payment of debts upon devised estates were held, notwithstanding releases of the executors to the devisees (such devisees being themselves two of the executors, and the releases not showing that the charge had been raised and paid), to be bound to see to the application of the mortgage money. Braithwaite v. Britain, 1 Keen 206.

2. In general a release to the principal debtor is in equity a release to the surety, but if the surety has previously to the release given by the creditor paid part of the debt, and given a security for the remainder, the general rule will not apply, but the creditor, notwithstanding the release, will, in the absence of evidence to the contrary, retain his right against the surety. Hall v. Hutchons, 3 Myl. & K. 426; 3 L. J., N. S., Ch., 45.

3. Voluntary release by a party to his adversary not to defeat the clerk in court of his lien for costs; if the suit had ended in a bonâ fide compromise for a reasonable consideration paid, it would have been otherwise. Anon., 2 Ves. 25.

4. The bankrupt, previously to his marriage, entered into a bond, that in case his wife should survive him, and should within two months after his death, at the costs and charges of his heirs or devisees, release her dower, his heirs or executors should, within three months after his death, pay to her 2,000*l.* The wife survived the bankrupt, but did not within two months after his death release her dower, although she was always ready and willing to do so:—Held, that the bond was not provable, either under the first or the last part of the fifty-sixth section of the Bankrupt Act, inasmuch as the contingency had not happened, and no value could be set upon it. Exp. Davies, 1 Dea. 115.

5. The wife of a partnership creditor of an intestate, being one of the intestate's next of kin, duly executed a proxy of renunciation of the administration of the intestate's effects. A few days afterwards the creditor executed a deed-poll, by which, after reciting the insolvency of the intestate's estate, and that a composition deed had been executed by the creditors, in which they had agreed that A. should have administration of the intestate's effects, and reciting that A. had executed to the creditor a bond which the latter had agreed to accept in satisfaction of the debt, it was declared that the same when paid should be accepted by him, the creditor, in full payment and satisfaction of all and every sum and sums of money due, or owing by or from, the said intestate to him the said creditor on account of the partnership or any other account whatsoever, and of all claims and demands whatsoever of him the said creditor on the estate and effects of the said intestate:—Held, that this amounted to a release by the creditor of the wife's distributive share in the residue of intestate's personal estate, although such residue was not mentioned or referred to in the deed-poll. Skaffington v. Whitehurst, 3 Y. & Coll. 1; 7 L. J., N. S., Eq., 65.

6. A., being entitled under a deed of 1784 to a charge affecting the estate of B., in 1814 executed a release in order to enable B. to sell the estate for the payment of creditors claiming under a trust deed of 1809, a decree to account and report the priority of incumbrances having been made:—Held, that the charge of A. retained its priority under the deed of 1784, except as to purchasers who had bought upon the faith of the release; it appearing from depositions, in aid of the account, that no consideration was paid upon the execution of the release, and that the charge had not been satisfied, although the release had not been set aside or impeached in any suit instituted for that purpose:—Held, also, that the acceptance by A. of a bond with warrant, though accompanied by a release, could not, under the circumstances, be considered as a substituted security. Hatchell v. Cremorne, Ll. & G. temp. Plunk. 236.

7. Whether a release by will of all debts, accounts, and demands will transfer the property of goods which defendant then had in his hands belonging to plaintiff's testator, quære. Fish v. Jesson, 2 Vern. 114.

8. The decision of the Common Pleas in Handcock v. Handcock (10 Ir. Law Rep.) on the effect of a release of part of the debtor's lands from a judgment in discharging his other lands, doubted. Handcock v. Handcock, 11 Ir. Eq. R. 472.

9. A settlement was made of the choses in action of a female infant, on her marriage, in trust for her husband for life; and after his decease, in trust for her for life; and after the death of the survivor, and in default of children, in trust for such persons as she should by will appoint, with ultimate trust for her next of kin. The marriage, of which there was no issue, was dissolved by Act of Parliament, and the husband executed a release of his rights in her property under the settlement:—Held, that the property of the wife was not bound by the settlement, and that she was at liberty to resettle it on her second marriage. Hastings v. Orde, 11 Sim. 205.

10. If two joint tenants are plaintiffs, and one releases, the cause is not thereby abated. Bulstrod v. Letchmere, 2 Freem. 6.

11. Although an executor does actually release, yet he must be a party to the suit. Smithby v. Hinton, 1 Vern. 31.

12. An intestate at his death was indebted to D. M. in 1,687*l.*; disputes, however, arose between the administrator and next of kin as to the legality of the debt, and an agreement was come to between them and the brother of the intestate, whereby, reciting that all the property had been got in, and, excluding the disputed debt, amounted to 533*l.*; that doubts having arisen as to the validity of that debt, and that being desirous of maintaining the good fame and character of the deceased, the three parties had agreed to waive all questions as to the validity of the debt, and raise a fund to make good the deficiency; that the next of his kin had agreed to "relinquish all claim to any residue or surplus;" that the intestate's brother should furnish 384*l.* towards payment of the debt; and the administrator should make good all the residue; it was witnessed that the next of kin released to the administrator all his right, etc., to the personal estate of the intestate, as his next of kin or otherwise, the brother covenanted to pay his part, and the administrator covenanted to pay the residue out of his own money, and also to pay all other debts, etc., of the intestate. The debt was paid, and other funds afterwards fell into the intestate's estate:—Held, that the administrator was not, under the release, entitled thereto. Lindo v. Lindo, 1 Beav. 496; 8 L. J., N. S., Ch., 284.

1. Creditors having brought a joint action against the bankrupt and A. and B., and having procured bankrupt to plead bankruptcy, undertaking to release and discharge him, and having entered a nolle prosequi as to him, and obtained judgment by default against A., and verdict and judgment against B.; quære, whether the right against bankrupt's estate is not merged and gone in toto. Exp. Bauerman, Re Lomax, Mont. & Ch. 569; 3 Dea. 476.

2. R., on entering into partnership with a firm, procured in 1801 from N. & Co., bankers, on the security of four bonds and a warrant of attorney, a credit for 10,000*l.* to bring into the firm, which was afterwards exhausted in meeting bills drawn by his partners. The firm became insolvent in 1804, owing N. & Co. upwards of 120,000*l.* in respect of transactions, some of which were prior to R.'s joining it. In N. & Co.'s accounts the 10,000*l.* was charged against the firm. A composition was entered into for 42,000*l.*, whereof 10,000*l.* was to be paid by R., who gave a mortgage on his estate to secure the same. The remaining 32,000*l.* was otherwise secured, and thereupon N. & Co. executed a release to the firm, releasing them, and every or any of them, from all claims or demands by N. & Co.:—Held, that the mortgage was not a substitution for the bonds, and that the release did not, in equity, extended to the balance due on the bonds. Noel v. Rochfort, 4 Cl. & F. 158; 10 Bli. N. S. 483.

3. Quasi entail of an estate for lives barred by release. Moody v. Walters, 16 Ves. 313.

4. A bond from the owner of an estate charged to incumbrancer, who signed a receipt for the amount, is not a substitution for the charge, but merely an additional security, and the estate is not thereby released. It is not incumbent on the creditor to prove that it was not the intention of the parties to this transaction that the bond should be a substitution of the charge, but it lies on the owner of the estate to make out that the estate is discharged. Saunders v. Leslie, 2 Ball. & B. 509.

5. Plea of general release containing the words "decree and orders of the Court of Chancery," is good bar to any demand set up under a decree of that court made prior to the date of the release; and if the defendant, by his answer, denies all charges of fraud, etc., in obtaining the release, such answer is sufficient to corroborate the plea. Walter v. Glanville, 5 Bro. P. C. 555.

6. A. devises 100*l.* to B.; and by will released to B. all debts and demands, and afterwards A. lends B. 100*l.*; whether this 100*l.* is released by the will, quære. Bentham v. Alston, 2 Vern. 136.

7. A charge on lands created by deed cannot be discharged but by deed, or at least by some formal act of release. Cupit v. Jackson, 13 Price 721; M'Clel. 495.

8. A sum of 600*l.*, to which a married woman was entitled for her separate use, was paid to her husband, who, by his will, gave her 2,800*l.*, and directed his executor to pay all his debts, and to take all the residue of his property. The husband died, and his widow received the legacy of 2,800*l.*, and executed a general release to the executor as to all matters under the will. The widow filed her bill for payment of the 600*l.*:—Held, that the 600*l.* existed as a debt, and that the legacy of 2,800*l.* was not intended to be in satisfaction of it, and that the plaintiff was entitled to payment, notwithstanding the execution of the release. Rowe v. Rowe, 2 De G. & Sm. 294; 17 L. J., N. S., Ch., 357; 12 Jur. 909.

9. W. H. being seised of an estate in tail in Whiteacre, certain judgments were obtained against him in 1824. Upon his marriage subsequently in that year, Whiteacre was settled upon him for life, with remainders over for the benefit of the issue of the marriage, and a recovery was suffered to the uses of the settlement. In 1825 W. H., by purchase, acquired Blackacre in fee. In 1826 several other judgments were obtained against him. In 1829 the plaintiff agreed to lend W. H. 2,000*l.* upon mortgage of his fee in Blackacre, and of his life estate in Whiteacre, provided that the judgment creditors of 1824 would release Blackacre from their judgments, to which they assented; and then, 1829, executed a deed-poll, which recited that W. H., being desirous to have Blackacre clear of incumbrances, had requested the judgment creditors of 1824 to release it from the incumbrances thereupon by the judgments, and that they, being satisfied that the residue of W. H.'s lands were a sufficient security for their judgments, agreed thereto, and by the operative part they released, exonerated, and for ever discharged Blackacre from their respective judgments, and from all writs of execution and executions, and every other writ then sued out, or thereafter to be sued out, against Blackacre by virtue of their respective judgments or otherwise in relation thereto, and they agreed for their respective judgments only to indemnify W. H. for all costs, damages, and expenses which should at any time be incurred by reason of Blackacre being attached in execution under those judgments: afterwards W. H. executed the proposed mortgage to the plaintiffs:—Held, that, both at law and equity, the operation and effect of the deed-poll of 1829 was to exonerate Whiteacre as well as Blackacre from the rights and remedies of the judgment creditors of 1824. Handcock v. Handcock, 1 Ir. Ch. R. 444.

1. The release by husband and wife of a sum of money secured by bond to A., and payable to the wife after A.'s death:—Held, not binding on the wife on her surviving both A. and her husband. Rogers v. Acaster, 14 Beav. 445.

When a feme covert is entitled to a reversionary interest in a chose in action, the release of the husband is as inoperative as his assignment to bind his wife's right by survivorship. Ib.

2. A creditor brought an action against the executor and devisee of his debtor, and recovered judgment for 146*l.*, and then assigned it for value to a brother-in-law of the executor. The executor and devisee absconded, but was found out by his brother-in-law, who, in May 1842, gave him notice of the assignment of the judgment to himself; but, in fact, he had in the previous April assigned the judgment, by way of mortgage, to the plaintiffs, who received the original assignment of the judgment debt, but gave no notice of the assignment to them to the executor, who was entirely ignorant of it. In order to pay the amount and to manage his affairs, the executor authorised his brother-in-law to receive the rents of the testator's property devised to him, which he did until 1848, when, after angry altercation, accounts were settled between them, 10*l.* was paid to the executor, and mutual releases, reciting and including the judgment, were given. On this settlement, the assignment to the brother-in-law was not asked for or referred to. The brother-in-law kept down the interest on the mortgage security he had given till 1849, when he became bankrupt. Shortly afterwards, the plaintiffs gave notice to the executor of the assignment to them, and at their instance the judgment creditor revived the judgment at law by sci. fa. Upon a suit by the plaintiffs against the executor and devisee and the other devisees of the original debtor, as creditors, seeking the administration of the estate:—Held, that the judgment was equitably released by the mutual releases in 1848, as regarded any interest which the plaintiffs could have in it against the executor and the estate of the original debtor; and the bill was dismissed with costs. Stooks v. Dobson, 5 De G. & Sm. 760; 17 Jur. 233. Affirmed 17 Jur. 539; 22 L. J., Ch., 884.

3. A. died insolvent; his widow, M., took out letters of administration. A deed of release was entered into between some of his creditors, who were described as simple contract creditors, of the one part, and M., as administratrix, of the other part, reciting that after payment of the specialty debts of A., there remained 373*l.* applicable to the payment of the simple contract debts, and that M. had proposed to divide that sum ratably among the persons parties thereto, in full discharge of their debts; the parties to the release, in consideration of the composition therein mentioned, paid to them on the amount of their debts, released the estate of the insolvent, and also his administratrix and her estate, from all claims and demands whatsoever which they had or might have against the insolvent. The debts were inserted in a schedule in a column, and W. signed the deed opposite to 86*l.* due to him for services as curate, and received the composition upon that amount. W. succeeded A. as rector, and had a claim of 200*l.* against his estate for dilapidations to the parsonage house. M., by her will, charged her real and personal estates with the payment of her husband's debts. In a suit for the administration of her estate:—Held, that, taking the deed and the will together, the execution of the release by W. operated as a discharge of all claims against A.'s estate, including the claim for dilapidations. Burgess v. Bissett, 2 Jur., N. S., 1221; 23 Beav. 278; 26 L. J., Ch., 697.

4. The parties beneficially entitled under the will of a creditor, wrote to the executor, authorising him to release and discharge a debtor from all debts and securities owing and given by him, and added, that as the debtor virtually succeeded to the money, he should pay his proportion of the probate and legacy duty. The debtor did pay the proportion of probate and legacy duty payable in respect of the debt:—Held, that the transaction amounted to a release of the entire debt. Taylor v. Manners, 11 Jur., N. S., 986.

5. Jurisdiction in equity to restrain execution upon a judgment against a defendant at law, on the ground of a subsequent release by the plaintiff at law of his claims under the judgment for a valuable consideration, paid by the defendant at law, notwithstanding that a rule obtained by the defendant at law to set aside the judgment on the ground of such subsequent release, had been discharged, and a writ of audita querela on the same ground had been set aside by the court of law. Williams v. Roberts, 8 Hare 315.

6. The rule that an executor who pays a legacy is personally liable to pay the amount of the legacy to any creditor of the testator whose claim is unsatisfied, whether he has notice or not of the claim, applies to a case in which the creditor has given the testator what purports to be a release of his claim, and the executor bonâ fide believes the release to be valid, and the creditor does not question its validity till some years after the executor has paid the legacy, and fails in the first instance, but succeeds in setting aside the release on appeal. Jefferys v. Jefferys, 19 W. R. 464; 24 L. T., N. S., 177.

7. A deed, reciting that all the testator's assets, save a small sum retained to meet contingencies and some doubtful debts, had been received by the executrix and applied in payment of debts, and that there remained only a sum sufficient to pay the legatees, in consideration of the sums paid on account of these legacies, released the executrix from all claims which they then had, or thereafter might have, against her as executrix, or against the residuary estate:—Held, that the deed did not operate to release the right of the legatees to be paid out of further assets which afterwards came, unexpectedly, to the hands of the executrix. Lawe v. Lawe, 8 Ir. R., Eq., 327.

8. W. H. was entitled for life to the interest of certain residuary estate, to the principal of which the wife of A. J. was entitled absolutely. W. H. being largely indebted to A. J., executed an indenture, assigning to A. J. all his, W. H.'s, interest in the said residuary estate. It was subsequently discovered that the residuary estate consisted partly of a fund, the existence of which was unknown to either of the parties at the time of the execution of the indenture. W. H. thereupon filed a bill which, not complaining that the indenture had been executed by fraud, sought to exclude from its operation the additional fund by treating the indenture merely as a security for the amount then due from W. H. The Lord Chancellor, however, dismissed the bill, holding that the words of the indenture were sufficient to pass the interest of W. H. in the fund in question, and that no case was made on the pleadings for reforming the instrument. Howkins v. Jackson, 2 Macn. & G. 372; 2 H. & Tw. 301; 19 L. J., N. S., Ch., 451.

1. In consideration of certain payments by an executrix, persons interested in the estate gave a release of all claims on the estate to the executrix. It was afterwards discovered that property in which the testator was entitled to a share had during his life been sold at an undervalue. The executrix instituted and succeeded in a suit to set the sale aside, and recovered a large sum of money as part of the testator's estate:—Held, that this money was not included in the release, and that the persons who gave the release were entitled to share in the money so recovered as part of his estate. Howkins v. Jackson (2 Macn. & G. 372) distinguished. Turner v. Turner, Hall v. Turner, 14 L. R., Ch. D., 829; 42 L. T. 495; 28 W. R. 859.

III. POWER TO MAKE.

2. If the wife insist upon her equity against the assignees in bankruptcy of her husband, it attaches for the benefit of her children, and she cannot afterwards release it in favour of her husband. Barker v. Lea, 6 Madd. 330.

3. A solicitor has a lien upon costs, ordered to be paid to his client upon a petition in bankruptcy, although there be no fund in court; nor can the client release the benefit of the order to the prejudice of the solicitor. Exp. Bryant, 2 Rose 237.

4. Appointment by will (professedly in execution of a power in a marriage settlement) to A. for life, or until he should incumber, and upon his death or incumbering to the wife of A. for life for her separate use, and after her death to A.'s children, and if A. should die without wife or children to B., who was A.'s brother. A. and B. took other benefits under the will. The appointment to the wife and children of A. being an excessive execution of the power:—Held, that A. was bound to elect, but that B. might release to A. all his interest under the appointment. Kater v. Roget, 4 Y. & Coll. 18.

IV. PRESUMPTION OF.

5. Length of possession, as a ground for presuming a release, depends on the nature of the possession, whether adverse or not. Fenwick v. Reid, 1 Meriv. 114.

6. Courts of equity will presume a release within the same limits of time within which juries will be directed to presume it, whether any statute of limitation is applicable to the case or not. Baldwin v. Peach, 1 Y. & Coll. 453.

1. The term "rent" used in a decree under stat. 37 Hen. 8, c. 12, relating to tithes in London, means rent actually and bonâ fide received without fraud or covin; and not the annual value of the premises let. Fines to whatever amount, paid on the renewal of leases of dwelling houses, are not to be considered as increase of rent, or to be taken into calculation in estimating the amount of the tithes due, provided the rent reserved is equal to that which the houses have been at any time before let. St. Paul's (Minor Canons) v. Crickett, 5 Price 14.

2. A rent is a tenement; and therefore cannot pass by will without three witnesses, if not of freehold; the word "tenement" being in the Statute of Frauds. Habergham v. Vincent, 2 Ves. J. 231; 4 Bro. C. C. 353.

3. A bill lies to recover an ancient rent, the origin of which is unknown, and the lands charged not accurately ascertainable, especially where the parties liable to pay it, have by selling parts of the lands charged, and charging others by way of indemnity to the purchaser, and long acting on that arrangement, rendered the owner's right more uncertain. Dublin (Archbishop) v. Trimleston (Lord), 12 Ir. Eq. R. 251.

4. Where an answer suggested that the plaintiff had for a certain time occupied a house of which he was tenant in common with several others, and that by virtue of such occupation, rent became due from him to those parties, and the bill was thereupon amended by charging that the plaintiff's occupation was not exclusive, and no further answer was put in:—Held, that the suggestion did not warrant an inquiry whether the plaintiff had been in occupation of the premises during any and what time, and if so, whether he ought to be charged with any, and what sum, in respect of such occupation. M'Mahon v. Burchell, 2 Ph. 127; 1 Coop. C. C. 457. Varying 3 Hare 97.

5. Part of a rent may be granted, not a new rent reserved or granted out of the whole. Stafford v. Buckley, 2 Ves. 177.

6. A rent, the amount of which may fluctuate according to the happening of certain events, is not an uncertain rent. Exp. Voisey, Re Knight, 21 L. R., Ch. D., 442; 52 L. J., Ch., 121; 47 L. T. 362; 31 W. R. 19. Affirming S. C. sub. nom. Exp. Isherwood, 46 L. T. 539.

7. An annual rent of merely nominal amount, e.g., 3*s.*, is not "a rent having no money value" within s. 65, sub-s. 1, of the Conveyancing Act 1881, even though it may have in practice not been regularly paid, those words meaning, rather, a rent which, when received, has no money value. Re Smith & Stott's Contract, 48 L. T. 512; 31 W. R. 411.

I. GENERAL INCIDENTS.

8. Quære, as to rent-charge being subject of compensation; though when small, Court has allowed them to be such. Esdaile v. Stephenson, 1 Sim. & S. 122.

Rent-charge not incident of tenure. Ib.

9. Rent-charge in fee, granted out of gavelkind land, shall descend in gavelkind. Edwin v. Thomas, 1 Vern. 489.

10. As to a fine of land, not barring a rent-charge issuing out of the lands. Whitfield v. Fausset, 1 Ves. 387.

11. Whether an annuity or rent-charge out of the profits of the New River Company, is to bear the full assessment to the land-tax, or is to have the benefit according to the proportion of a reduction, in consequence of an assessment upon the profits of the company at an undervalue, quære. The bill by the annuitant was dismissed, the Court refusing to raise an equity as to the profit arising from disobedience to the Act. Adair v. New River Co., 11 Ves. 429.

12. A testator devised his freehold estates to trustees in trust, to permit his wife to receive the rents for her life, and after decease upon trust to permit his nephew, his heirs and assigns, to hold and enjoy the said estates, and receive the rents and profits subject to the payment of 20*l.* yearly and every year for ever, to his niece, her executors, administrators, and assigns; and the testator made chargeable his said freehold estates with the payment of the said sum. The annuitant died, and her devisees contracted to sell the rent-charge, which was stated to have been given to the testator's niece, her heirs, executors, administrators, and assigns:—Held, that the rent-charge might be legally distrained for, and that the thing contracted to be sold was within the words of the contract, and a decree was made for specific performance. Ramsay v. Thorngate, 16 Sim. 575; 18 L. J., Ch., 238.

II. CREATION.

13. Part of a rent may be granted, not a new rent reserved or granted out of the whole. Stafford v. Buckley, 2 Ves. 177.

14. A rent out of copyhold aliened by surrender and admittance for a valuable consideration, good in equity. Spindlar v. Wilford, 5 Vern. 16.

15. By deed of 1769 A. granted a perpetual yearly rent-charge of 134*l.*, payable out of certain lands held by him for three lives, perpetually renewable. That deed was lost, but it appeared from a memorial thereof that A. had granted to B. and C., for the uses mentioned in the deed, a yearly rent-charge of 134*l.* for ever, issuing out of the said lands. The rent-charge was paid by the owners of the lands, from 1769 down to 1860, when a petition was presented to the Landed Estates Court for a sale of the rent-charge:—Held, that the memorial, coupled with evidence of the payment of the rent-charge down to 1860, was sufficient evidence of a perpetual subsisting rent-charge, so as to enable the Court to sell. Re Harding, 11 Ir. R., Ch., 23.

1. By the settlement made upon the marriage of R. with S., P. gave, granted, and confirmed unto S. and her assigns, in case she survived P. and R., a yearly rent-charge to be charged and chargeable upon certain manors of or to which P. or any other person or persons in trust for him was seised or entitled for an estate of inheritance at law or in equity, to hold the said rent-charge, but subject and without prejudice as to such of the said hereditaments as were charged with a mortgage for a certain term made to D. P. also, for himself, his heirs and assigns, covenanted, granted, and agreed with S., her executors, administrators, and assigns, that in case the rent-charge should remain unpaid for certain periods, she should have powers of distress and entry. A term of one hundred years was also created for better securing this rent-charge. By his will, P. gave his real estates, subject to D.'s mortgage and the rent-charge, to S., and the term for securing the same to trustees for a term of five hundred years, upon trust to pay his debts and apply the money so raised in exoneration of his personal estate. S. survived both R. and P., but no part of the rent-charge had ever been received by her. A decree had subsequently to the death of R. and P. been made in a suit, the effect of which was to cut down the interest of P. in the estates charged with the rent-charge to a life interest, and withdraw them from the operation of the settlement. Upon a claim by S. as a creditor for the arrears of her annuity in the administration of P.'s estate:—Held, that the words used in the creation of the rent-charge did not amount to a covenant either at law or in equity, so that the claim by S. for the arrears of her rent-charge could not be allowed. Monypenny v. Monypenny, 6 W. R. 382; 4 Kay & J. 174; 27 L. J., Ch., 369.

2. Upon the admission of the heir-at-law that the will of the testator, which was lost, was duly executed and attested; and that thereby certain lands were devised to him, subject to a perpetual rent-charge; and upon evidence of the contents of the will by two witnesses who heard it read, but could not state that it was executed and attested as by law required, further than that the person reading it read out the names of the testator and of certain persons, as if they had executed and attested it; and upon proof of the payment of the rent-charge for thirty-five years up to the year before the filing of the bill, the Court declared that the lands were well charged with the annuity, and that the heir-at-law, and the persons deriving title with notice under a settlement of the lands executed by him on the marriage of his son, and duly registered, and also the judgment creditor of the heir-at-law, were bound to give effect to the devise of the rent-charge. Wise v. Wise, 2 J. & L. 603.

3. A testator seised of P. and other lands, directed all his just debts, funeral expenses, and legacies to be paid by his executors, and devised all his real and freehold estates, save a part devised to his wife, upon trust that his wife and her assigns should, after his decease, receive a rent-charge, with power of distress, and three of his daughters should receive rent-charges, with like remedy by distress and entry as provided with respect to the rent-charge to his wife. The testator then bequeathed pecuniary legacies to his children, and left all the residue and remainder of his real, freehold, and personal estates, subject to his debts and the aforesaid legacies and annuities, to the trustees:—Held, that the rent-charges to the daughters were specifically charged on the same lands as the rent-charge to the wife, and had priority over the legacies which were charged by the residuary clause only. Weir v. Chamley, 1 Ir. Ch. R. 295.

III. CESSER.

4. Under a suspension of a rent-charge by act of the parties, the rent ceases pro tempore. Cook v. Fountain, 3 Swan. 596.

5. A rent-charge of 20*l.* granted in consideration of 240*l.* redeemable on repayment of the consideration to the grantee's heirs, within a year after notice of the death of his wife, ceases on repayment of the sum stipulated to his executors, the conveyance being considered as a security for money. Stokes v. Verrier, 3 Swan. 634.

6. By a deed of 1709 the lands of S., together with twelve other denominations, were conveyed to J. B., subject to a rent of 126*l.*, which was to cease upon payment of 1,800*l.* In the will of J. B., dated 1717, and in family settlements executed in 1756 and 1778, no notice was taken of the existence of this rent. In 1841 the lands of S. were sold under a decree in the foreclosure suit. In the rental and abstract the lands were described as fee-simple, and in a declaration made by the defendant, under 4 & 5 Will. 4, c. 62, he stated, that no part of the rent had ever been paid by him or any of his ancestors out of the lands of S. There was no evidence to show that the rent had not been paid out of the other denominations:—Held, that there were not sufficient grounds to presume that the rent was either released or extinguished, and that it was a valid objection to the title. Warren v. Bateman, Fl. & K. 448.

7. Where, by the conveyance to a purchaser in fee of freehold property, certain outstanding rent-charges were conveyed to a trustee in trust for the purchaser, his heirs and assigns, the fee being conveyed to the purchaser to uses to bar dower, and afterwards the purchaser specifically devised the property, but without mention of the rent-charges:—Held, that the property was devised free from the rent-charges, and the trustee was ordered to convey them so that they be legally extinguished in the inheritance. Vallance v. Vallance, 2 N. R. 229.

8. It is no objection to a title that two fee-farm rents, created by letters patent by James I., are not shown to have been extinguished, it being proved that no claim had been made by the Crown for the rents, from the year 1706, and no proof of any previous claim. Simpson v. Gutteridge, 1 Madd. 609.

Where adult female, before marriage, agrees to accept, in lieu of dower, a rent-charge, she is bound to see that the grantor has title to lands charged therewith; and therefore, a purchaser of other lands belonging to grantor, which might otherwise have been liable, in case of failure of such security, is not entitled to see, from title-deeds, that grantor has title to such charged lands. Ib.

IV. REMEDIES IN RESPECT OF.

1. Purchaser of one of several parcels, into which land had been divided, shall not be subject to the rent-charge on the whole; other purchasers must contribute; grantor restrained by order. Anon., Cary 2. S. P. Dolman v. Vavasor, id. 92.

2. In like case, where one tenant files a bill against grantee, he must make all who should contribute; parties defendant to show cause why they should not contribute. Anon., Cary 23.

3. Devisee of a rent-charge out of lands, with power of distress, dies; his executrix brings a bill for the arrears: decreed, that she may enter, and hold and enjoy till paid the arrears. Foster v. Foster, 2 Vern. 386; Pre. Ch. 122.

4. The Court will entertain a suit to raise the arrears of a rent-charge, although the plaintiff may appear by his bill to have full legal remedies. Ahearne v. O'Callaghan, Hay. & J. 339.

5. The augmentation of vicarage by yearly payments of corn and money out of rectory, is a charge on rectory impropriate, into whose hand soever it shall come. Where vicar brings bill for arrears of certain annual payments issuing out of impropriate rectory, he shall recover against the impropriator, though a considerable time has elapsed between the commencement of arrears and impropriator's possession: but purchaser, with notice of such claim, pending such suit, shall only account for arrears after his possession. Cooke v. Smee, 2 Bro. P. C. 184.

6. Arrears of annuity chargeable by deed (a marriage settlement) on land, or a rent-charge:—Held, to be recoverable by bill in equity, filed by personal representatives of grantee against son of grantor, the devisee of estate, although powers of entry and distress, and a right to permanency of rents, etc., in satisfaction of annuity when in arrear, were expressly given and reserved to grantee by the deed; and although the right to those remedies may have devolved on the representative, or he might have other remedies by statute or otherwise. Cupit v. Jackson, 13 Price 721; M'Clel. 495.

7. A bill in equity does not lie to recover a rent-charge, for which there is a legal remedy, merely because of the difficulty of proceeding at law; the rule being that a party must abide by the legal remedy his deed provides for him unless that is defeated by fraud, or rendered insufficient by some contingency. Cupit v. Jackson (13 Price 721) and other cases on this subject observed on. Where an annuity deed contained a covenant to pay a rent-charge, and for a further assurance of it, and the grantor becoming insolvent, questions arose as to the applicability of rents received by his assignees to discharge arrears, and a judgment and execution was had for some past gales on which questions of satisfaction were raised, and the assignees submitted to the appointment of a receiver in a suit founded on the deed, who brought a fund into court:—Held, that these circumstances gave jurisdiction to entertain the suit. Roberts v. Hughes, Beat. 417.

8. Bill in equity lies for payment of an entire rent out of a manor where there are no demesne lands on which to distrain. But it seems that the lands must be indisputably of greater value than the rent. Leeds (Duke) v. Powell, 1 Ves. 171.

9. A bill in equity does not lie to recover the arrears of a rent-charge, unless it be proved that there are circumstances which render the legal remedies useless or very difficult. Brady v. Fitzgerald, 12 Ir. Eq. R. 273. Reversing 11 Ir. Eq. R. 55. S. P. Pennefather v. Stephens, id. 61.

The several authorities respecting bills for annuities and rent-charges reviewed and observed on. Ib.

10. Order made for payment of a rent-charge to sequestrators by a party out of whose estate the same was issuing, and which was payable to the person whose estate was sequestered. Wilson v. Metcalfe, 1 Beav. 270; 8 L. J., N. S., Ch., 331; 3 Jur. 601.

11. A testator devised his freehold estates to trustees, in trust, to permit his wife to receive the rents for her life, and after her decease, upon trust, to permit his nephew, his heirs, and assigns, to hold and enjoy the said estates, and receive the rents and profits, subject to the payment of 20*l.* yearly, and every year for ever, to his niece, her executors, administrators, and assigns, and the testator made chargeable his said freehold estates with the payment of the said sum. The annuitant died, and her devisees contracted to sell the rent-charge, which was stated to have been given to the testator's niece, her heirs, executors, administrators, and assigns:—Held, that the rent-charge might be legally distrained for, and that the thing contracted to be sold was within the words of the contract; and a decree was made for specific performance. Ramsay v. Thorngate, 16 Sim. 574; 18 L. J., N. S., Ch., 238.

12. Where the deeds by which a rent-charge was granted were lost, and the rent had been paid twelve years, equity decreed the arrears and future payment to be secured. Collet v. Jaques, 1 Ch. Ca. 120.

Receiver.] 13. If a purchaser of the legal estate in lands, subject to an equitable rent-charge, refused to pay the rent-charge, a receiver will be appointed. Pritchard v. Fleetwood, 1 Meriv. 54.

Interest.] 14. It is a general rule, that where a party is prevented by Court from proceeding to establish his right at law, it is the duty of the Court to see no injury arise to him in consequence of its interference; therefore, where an annuitant was restrained by injunction from proceeding at law to recover the arrears of rent-charge, interest was allowed. O'Donel

v. Browne, 1 Ball. & B. 262. S. P. 6 Ves. 93. See also 2 Y. & J. 73; 1 Vern. 74.

Sale of Lands Charged.] 1. A sale of lands decreed to raise arrears of a rent-charge granted with powers of distress and entry, there being nothing to distrain on, and there being twenty other concurrent rent-charges with like remedies. White v. James, 26 Beav. 191; 4 Jur., N. S., 1214.

Suit by a grantee of a rent-charge, on behalf of himself and twenty others, to raise the arrears by sale, sanctioned. Ib.

2. When land near Manchester was subject to a chief rent, which, owing to the land being unproductive, had not been paid for more than twenty years, the Court, in a suit for that purpose by the persons entitled to the chief rent, ordered the sale of the land for the payment of all the arrears of the rent. Horton v. Hall, 22 W. R. 391; 17 L. R., Eq., 437.

3. The grantee of a rent-charge secured by a term for years and a judgment, is not entitled to have the lands sold discharged of a lease made before suit, and after the grant of the rent-charge, where it did not appear that the lands, if sold subject to the lease, would not produce sufficient to satisfy his demand, even though not enough to satisfy the incumbrances subsequent to his demand. Stamer v. Nisbitt, 3 J. & L. 447; 9 Ir. Eq. R. 96.

4. The plaintiff was entitled to a rent-charge created by a deed of 1778, which contained a power on non-payment to enter upon the premises charged, and receive the rents until satisfaction of all arrears of the rent-charge, "together with all such costs, charges, and expenses as should be laid out and expended by him, or occasioned by reason of the non-payment thereof." In 1844, the rent-charge being in arrear, and the property so dilapidated as to be unproductive, the plaintiff entered into possession, and expended money in repairs:—Held (affirming 20 Beav. 639; 1 Jur., N. S., 949; 25 L. J., Ch., 62; 3 W. R. 636; 3 Eq. Rep. 988), that he had no lien on the land for the moneys so expended, whether the defendant, the owner of a subsequent rent-charge, had notice of such repairs and had acquiesced in the making thereof or not, and that the remedy of the plaintiff, if any, was at law, and depended on the construction of the deed of 1778. Hooper v. Cooke, 2 Jur., N. S., 527; 25 L. J., Ch., 467.

Parties.] 5. Upon a bill for equitable relief as to a rent-charge, all the persons whose estates are liable must be parties. The rule dispensed with under circumstances, making it impracticable, or highly inconvenient. Att.-Gen. v. Jackson, 11 Ves. 369.

6. A rent-charge for a certain period of time, in arrear, charged by an order made by the Inclosure Commissioners upon the inheritance of glebe lands of a rectory, under the provisions of the General Land Drainage and Improvement Company's Act of 1849 (12 & 13 Vict., c. xci.), was, under the provisions of the same Act, ordered to be raised by a sale of the glebe lands. In an action by the owners of a rent-charge, in arrear, charged on glebe lands, for a declaration that they were entitled under the order made by the Inclosure Commissioners to a charge on the lands for the sums due and to become due of the rent-charge, and asking for a sale of the lands, the ecclesiastical commissioners were made defendants:—Held, on demurrer, that they were not necessary parties. Scottish Widows' Fund v. Craig, 20 L. R., Ch. D., 208; 51 L. J., Ch., 363; 30 W. R. 463.

Lapse of Time and Statute of Limitations.] See LIMITATIONS, STATUTE OF, IX. XIII.

V. OTHER MATTERS.

7. A woman entitled to a rent-charge marries, and at the husband's death there are arrears due; they shall go to the wife surviving, notwithstanding she had a settlement, there being no express or implied intention that the husband should be a purchaser of all her fortune. Salwey v. Salwey, Ambl. 692.

8. S. had a rent-charge granted to him and his assigns for three lives. S. and his wife mortgaged it to A., his executors, administrators, and assigns. Habendum to him, his heirs, and assigns, during the three lives, upon trust that A., his executors, administrators, and assigns should enjoy 100*l.* per annum out of it, till the mortgage was satisfied. A. made an unattested will, and appointed plaintiff his executor, who brought his bill against the heir of A. for this 100*l.* per annum. Decreed, that the heir of S. should take this rent-charge, but for the benefit of the executor, agreeably to the trust in the mortgage deed. Kendal v. Micfeild, Barn. Ch. Rep. 46.

9. A. is tenant in tail, subject to a rent-charge to B., for life; A. dies, the rent-charge being in arrear; the issue in tail not liable, by the stat. of 32 Hen. 8, c. 38, to the arrears incurred in the life of his ancestor. Fairfax (Lord) v. Derby (Lady), 5 Co. 118. a.; 2 Vern. 612.

10. Eton College was entitled to 34*s.* per annum, under a royal grant, issuing out of certain lands, but the college did not know the particular lands. Decreed, the executors of the terre-tenant should be answerable for the arrears. Eton College v. Beauchamp, 1 Ch. Ca. 121.

11. A., on his marriage, settled a rent-charge on his wife for her jointure, and afterwards devises to the wife part of the land charged with the rent-charge: bill is, that the rent-charge might be apportioned. Bill dismissed. Knight v. Calthorpe, 1 Vern. 347.

I. BILL IN EQUITY. IN WHAT CASES, 6075.
II. ACCOUNT. WHEN DIRECTED, 6075.
III. ACCOUNT. FOR WHAT PERIOD, 6076.
IV. OTHER CASES, 6078.

I. BILL IN EQUITY. IN WHAT CASES.

1. A bill may be exhibited for mesne profits after a decree giving the possession. Coventry v. Hall, 2 Ch. Rep. 259.

2. Equity will not decree an account of mesne profits, unless in case of trust, or an infant, where no entry is made by the person entitled to the mesne profits. Hutton v. Simpson, 2 Vern. 724.

3. The rule in equity is the same as at law; as trespass will not lie for mesne profits till possession is recovered, so neither can a bill for an account thereof be brought till then. Norton v. Frecker, 1 Atk. 525.

4. Special election to proceed at law in an ejectment for the land, and in equity for an account of profits. Anon., 1 Vern. 105.

5. An action for mesne profits lies where one tenant in common recovers against another in ejectment by default. Goodtitle v. Tombs, 3 Wils. 168.

6. No action for mesne profits lies against an executor. Pulteney v. Warren, 6 Ves. 80.

Mere death of occupier will not sustain a bill for account of mesne profits under the head of accident. Id. 6 Ves. 88.

Bill for account of mesne profits does not lie by heir as such merely, unless there is some impediment at law. Id. 89.

Dowress may bring bill for account of mesne profits. So also will it lie in the case of mines. Also in case of tithes. Ib.

7. A lessor suffers the lessee to hold the lands after the lease is determined; equity will not compel the tenant to account for the mesne profits, unless the lessor was hindered from entering by fraud, or some extraordinary accident. Bolton v. Deane, Pre. Ch. 516.

8. If a suit for possession be properly cognisable in equity, there may be an account of rents and profits; but if the plaintiff has a legal right to the possession, he has no right to proceed by bill for an account of rents and profits. Barnewall v. Barnewall, 3 Ridgw. P. C. 66.

9. A., by an unattested will, devises lands to B.; B. receives the rents, and by a will, also unattested, gives the lands, together with a legacy, to the heir at law of A. The heir may receive the legacy, and also call for an account of the rents received by B. Gardiner v. Fell, 1 Jac. & Walk. 22; 2 Wils. 32.

10. A., after the death of his wife, continued, by mistake, in the receipt of the rents of real estate to which she was entitled for life. Demurrer to a bill by the persons entitled to the property after the death of the wife against the personal representative of A., for an account of rents and profits received by him since the death of his wife, and if such representative did not admit assets, for an account, and for delivery up of title deeds, overruled. Caton v. Coles, 1 L. R., Eq., 581; 12 Jur., N. S., 205; 35 L. J., Ch., 836; 14 L. T., N. S., 51.

Such a bill is not within the rule laid down in Whitchurch v. Golding (2 P. W. 541) requiring an affidavit to be annexed to the bill. Ib.

11. A person out of possession alleging a perfectly good legal title cannot file any bill against a person in possession for an account of rents and profits without first establishing his title at law. A bill so filed is demurrable. An infant cannot maintain a bill for an account of rents and profits received during his infancy against a person who has been in possession of his estate, and who claims by an adverse title either legal or equitable, unless, previously to the entry of such person, the infant was in possession by himself or his guardian, or unless the infant first establishes his legal title by an ejectment; and a demurrer to a bill for this purpose, stating a legal title in the infant, and an adverse equitable claim by the defendant, was allowed. Crowther v. Crowther, 5 W. R. 238.

II. ACCOUNT. WHEN DIRECTED.

12. Under bill to put term out of way, account of past rents is given in some cases. Exp. Wilson, 2 Ves. & B. 252; 1 Rose 444.

13. In a case of a mere equitable title, where the legal estate is in trustees to attend the inheritance, the plaintiff is barred at law; and if he cannot make out such a case as will entitle him to an account of the rents and profits, praying general relief will not entitle him to it. Dormer v. Fortescue, 3 Atk. 131.

14. Though Court decreed specific performance of agreement to let plaintiff into trade (see contrà, 9 Ves. 357), account of mesne profits refused. Anon., 9 Ves. 630.

15. Though shares in waterworks are a legal estate and corporeal inheritance, yet no one proprietor can receive the profits himself; and as there is no other way of getting at it proper to come into equity for mesne profits. Townsend v. Ash, 3 Atk. 337.

1. Bill for an account under covenant upon sale of goodwill not to carry on the trade. Scott v. Mackintosh, 1 Ves. & B. 503.

2. Whether a mortgagee could, in an action for mesne profits after judgment in ejectment against the mortgagor in possession of the mortgaged premises, recover the value of the crops severed, and sold subsequent to the day of the demise, laid in the declaration, but before the delivery of possession by the sheriff, quære. Exp. Temple, 1 G. & J. 216.

3. Where an agent had permitted his principal to expend money on an estate, which the agent afterwards claimed as his own, and to which his real representative established a legal title by ejectment, the Court granted an injunction to restrain an action brought by the agent's representative for some profits. Where an action for trespass for mesne profits is brought against a party who has a cross claim against the plaintiff at law for money expended on the land, the Court will grant an injunction to restrain the proceedings at law, there being no right of set-off in such an action. Cawdor (Lord) v. Lewis, 1 Y. & Coll. 427.

4. In a suit instituted by the remainderman against the trustee for the restitution of the trust fund, which had been improperly invested, to which suit the tenant for life was a party defendant:—Held, that the latter could not have an account against the trustee of the arrears of interest, although he had asked such relief by his answer, the point not being raised by the bill, and there being no admission of the claim in the answer of the trustees. Goodwin v. Clewley, 2 Beav. 30; 3 Jur. 552.

5. Though an account of real estate can only be had at the suit of a creditor in a bill on behalf of all creditors, still, if in a suit not so entitled, it becomes expedient to take such an account, the Court will, at the hearing, direct the bill to be taken as a bill on behalf of creditors. There is no objection to a bill for an account of the estates of two testators who are joint debtors. Woods v. Sowerby, 14 W. R. 9.

6. An account of rent and mesne rates decreed under circumstances of complexity of title, occasioned by the acts of the tenant, and in order to avoid a multiplicity of suits, the bill also seeking the delivery of a deed to be cancelled. Nixon v. Robinson, 2 J. & L. 4; 7 Ir. Eq. R. 520.

III. ACCOUNT. FOR WHAT PERIOD.

7. A person is entitled to mesne profits but from the time of his entry. Tilly v. Bridges, 2 Vern. 519.

8. Where one in possession of lands belonging to an infant, if the infant, when he comes of age, makes out his title, he shall recover the profits in equity from the first accruing of his title, and not from the filing of his bill only. Bennet v. Whitehead, 2 P. W. 645.

So defendant shall account for the profits from the time the plaintiff's title accrued, and not from the filing the bill only, if the defendant has concealed the deeds and writings making out plaintiff's title. Ib.

9. If a possessory bill filed for recovery of estate wrongfully detained pray an account of the intermediate rents and profits, the general rule is, to decree the same from the time of filing the bill. Edwards v. Morgan, 13 Pri. 782; 1 M'Clel. 541. Affirmed 1 Bli. N. S. 401.

In case of mere adverse possession the Court does not decree account of rents and profits beyond the time of filing the bill. Ib. S. P. Pulteney v. Warren, 6 Ves. 93.

10. Where a widow claims dower merely upon a legal title, but cannot ascertain the lands, equity will assist her to find them out; and if her title to it is established, will give her the profits from the time her title accrued. If a dowress comes into equity to have a term removed which is established, equity will decree her an account of the rents and profits from the time her title accrued; secus, if the term had been out of the way, and she had no need to come into equity. Dormer v. Fortescue, 3 Atk. 130.

11. Under particular circumstances of fraud, imposition, and delay, a court of equity will decree an account of rents and profits of an estate, after an adverse possession of fifty years. Stackpoole v. Davoren, 1 Bro. P. C. 9.

12. The rule of the Court of Chancery in a suit to recover land in the nature of equitable ejectment, is not that the Court never gives an account of rents beyond the filing of the bill, but it is a rule of discretion, and where the circumstances justified the delay, the Court gave an account of rents antecedent to the filing of the bill. Wright v. Chard, 4 Drew. 673. S. C. on appeal 1 De G. F. & J. 567; 6 Jur., N. S., 476; 29 L. J., Ch., 415.

Where the circumstances are special, such as where the person entitled was a lunatic, and his committee in possession did not apply the rents for the lunatic's benefit, and on his death his personal representative filed a bill to obtain them, the Court will not apply the rule. S. C. 5 Jur., N. S., 1334; 1 L. T., N. S., 138.

A., a lunatic, under a will of difficult construction, became entitled to real estate; but the trustee to the separate use of V., a married woman, entered into possession, being aware of A.'s claim. After the death of A., W., who then claimed, commenced proceedings, and established his right against V. W. took out administration to A., and soon after the right of A. and W. had been established, which was nearly six years after the death of A., commenced proceedings against V., and the trustee to her separate use, to recover rents received by the trustee and paid to V., during the life of A.:—Held, that W. was not precluded by the lapse of time, under the circumstances; and that V., and her trustee, having been aware of A.'s claim, must account for the rents, without reference to the time when the bill was filed. Ib.

Held, also, that the trustee was liable to account for the rents he had received and handed over to the married woman. Ib.

Held, also, that the separate estate of the married woman was not liable for the rents she had so received. Ib.

Held, that the committee of the lunatic was liable to account for moneys received by him, and paid to another person, under the belief that the moneys delivered did not belong to the lunatic, although the committee had obtained his quietus. Ib.

An account of the produce of timber cannot be obtained under a charge of occupation rent or rents received. Ib.

1. Account of rents and profits confined to six years, by analogy to the action for mesne profits. Reade v. Reade, 5 Ves. 744.

2. In a doubtful case, an account of rents and profits directed only from the time of the filing of the bill. Forder v. Wade, 4 Bro. C. C. 521.

3. J. having a devise in common with P., whom he survived, took possession of two houses, and enjoyed them: he was decreed to account as far back as the death of P. Prince v. Heylin, 1 Atk. 493.

4. The Court only removes fraudulent conveyances out of the way, but will not decree profits back against the original debtor and owner of the estate, received pendente lite, in favour of judgment creditors, from the filing of the bill. Higgins v. York Buildings Co., 2 Atk. 107.

5. The general rule appears to be, that when a party has slept for a long time on his rights, an account of rents and profits, etc., if he be entitled to one, will be directed only from the filing of the bill. Mulhallen v. Marum, 3 Dr. & War. 336. Thornhill v. Glover, Id. 195.

6. The plaintiff filed his bill to set aside an instrument for fraud, and to obtain possession of certain lands which had been devised to him. Before the determination of the suit, the original defendant died. The suit having been revived against his devisee and personal representative, the Court decreed the plaintiff entitled to mesne rents from the time of the accruer of the plaintiff's title with costs. Blackwood v. Gregg, Hay. & J. 310.

7. The widow of a testator, with the acquiescence of his heir, was let into possession of certain freehold houses, under an erroneous supposition that they passed by the will along with other property, in which a life interest was devised to her; and before the error was discovered or her right disputed, she died. On a bill filed by the heir against her personal representative, praying the delivery of the title deeds, and an account:—Held, that the suit was maintainable for the rents received during her continuance in possession; that as the defence of the Statute of Limitations was not raised upon the pleadings, the account should be taken from the time when the plaintiff's title first accrued; and that the plaintiff was not at liberty to set off the amount of such rents against payments made by the widow in her character of executrix, those payments being, by virtue of a special trust, a primary charge upon the estates, of which, subject to the widow's life interest, the plaintiff was devisee. Monypenny v. Bristow, 2 Russ. & M. 117; 1 L. J., N. S., Ch., 88.

8. C. being in possession of property under a settlement for the residue of a term of ninety-nine years, determinable with the life of the settlor, who died in 1830, continued by mistake in possession till her own death in 1835. D., who became entitled on the death of the settlor under a deed of gift from him, discovered the mistake in 1839, by consulting that deed, which had been in his possession the whole time, and then sued the executors of C. for the rents received by her after 1830:—Held, that inasmuch as D. had been guilty of laches in not finding out the mistake earlier by the means which were in his power, he was entitled to an account only for the period allowed by analogy to the Statute of Limitations, which in this case was six years before the filing of the bill, and an additional period during which he was abroad. Denys v. Shuckburgh, 4 Y. & Coll. 42; 5 Jur. 21.

9. Where the heir of the lessor was lunatic, and through the laches of the receivers no rent was paid for a period of nearly thirty years, and the committee having in a court of law recovered the premises in ejectment for non-payment of rent according to the covenants:—Held, that in the absence of any proof of fraud and collusion with the former receivers, or surrender, the mere laches was not a bar to the action for the recovery of arrears of rent, and the House refused to interfere, and affirmed the judgment below. Lopdell v. Creagh, 1 Bli. N. S. 255.

10. A. by will in 1807 appointed the manor of W. to uses, under which B. became entitled in 1831, and devised his residuary real estate, consisting of leaseholds under a 900 years term, upon trust for sale. In 1814 C. purchased from the trustees of the will one lot of six acres, two acres of which had belonged to the manor of W. in 1793, and were freehold, the remaining four being leasehold. C. at the time of his purchase had full notice of the limitations in favour of B. B. attained twenty-one in 1849:—Held, that B. was entitled to the two acres freehold, parcel of the manor of W., and to an account of the rents thereof since his title accrued, notwithstanding that the confusion of the freehold, improperly sold by the trustees, with the leasehold, had arisen from the person under whom B. derived his title. Hicks v. Hastings, 3 Kay & J. 701.

11. Account of rents directed at the suit of the issue in tail for six years previously to the filing of the bill. Gibbons v. Snape, 1 De G. J. & S. 621.

12. A. by will, dated in 1836, gave freehold and leasehold estates, and the residue of his personal estate to his son B., and appointed his wife C. his sole executrix. The son died intestate in 1838, leaving his two sisters D. and E. and his niece F. his co-heiresses at law, and them and his mother his sole next of kin. The mother took out letters of administration to her son, and by her will, appointed her daughter D. sole executrix and universal legatee, and died in 1841. In December 1858 D. took out letters of administration de bonis non to her brother B.'s estate; and in the same month F. his niece and her husband filed a bill to recover her share of the real and personal estates of B., and for the administration of the same:—Held, that the plaintiffs were entitled only to an account of the rents of the real estate, for a period of six years before the suit; but that the 3 & 4 Will. 4, c. 27 was no bar to an account of the personal estate, and of the rents of the leasehold estate received by C. the mother and administratrix, or by D. her executrix, from the time of the death of the intestate B., notwithstanding the 102nd section. Obee v. Bishop, 29 L. J., Ch., 148; 6 Jur., N. S., 132.

13. Account of back rent given only from the filing of the special case on the ground of laches. Schroder v. Schroder, 3 W. R. 55;

18 Jur. 987; 3 Eq. Rep. 79; 1 Kay 578; 2 W. R. 621; 2 Eq. Rep. 875.

1. The rule that where an account in equity is directed against a person in receipt of rents without any title to them, the account will be taken only from the time the proceedings were commenced, does not apply where there has been no laches on the part of the person really entitled. Hickman v. Upsall, 46 L. J., Ch., 245; 4 L. R., Ch. D., 144; 25 W. R. 175; 35 L. T., N. S., 919.

Trusts.] 2. If an estate is devised in trust to pay debts, the heir must account for rents and profits from the time of filing bill. Chambers v. Harvest, Mos. 124. Vide Montagu v. Ford, 2 Ch. Ca. 225; 1 Vern. 282.

3. Where on a bill to call a trustee to account, he by answer submits readily to it, though found in debt, shall pay the interest for the balance only from the time of the account liquidated, and no costs. Secus, if he controverts the account; then, if found in arrear, he shall pay interest and costs. Parrot v. Treby, Pre. Ch. 254.

4. Account of rents and profits confined to filing of the bill under special circumstances; as laches by the cestui que trust in not asserting his right. Pettiward v. Prescott, 7 Ves. 541.

5. Account of rents and profits of estate held of trustees (the Statute of Limitations being insisted on) ordered from six years before filing of bill. Pearce v. Newlyn, 3 Madd. 186. S. P. Hercy v. Ballard, 4 Bro. C. C. 486.

6. The grant of the office of registry of the Court of Chancery for lives in trust for the Duke of St. Albans, his heirs and assigns, descends to the heirs general; and does not follow the title; and being assignable, the claim of the mortgagee was established, but not to the bygone profits. (See 3 Ves. 25.) The duke being trustee, but having obtained possession without title as heir, the Court, though the plaintiff was an infant, inclined not to carry the account further back than the time of filing the bill, if the profits had not been paid into court at an earlier date in the suit instituted by the mortgagee. Drummond v. St. Albans (Duke), 5 Ves. 433.

7. The manor of W. was, by settlement, vested in trustees, upon such trusts as E. B., a married woman, should by will appoint. Before any will was made, a piece of copyhold land was, under an Inclosure Act, allotted to the trustees of the settlement as lords of the manor, and in compensation of their interest in the soil of the manor. Under the same Act, two copyhold allotments were made to two other persons in respect of copyhold interests. The trustees of the settlement, in exercise of a power vested in them for that purpose, bought the two last-mentioned allotments, and held them upon the same trusts as the manor. Afterwards, in 1807, E. B. made her will, devising the manor, with its appurtenances, to the father of the plaintiff for life, with remainder to his first son in tail, with remainder to his second son the plaintiff, and devising the residue of her property to trustees on trust to sell. E. B. died in 1813, and the copyhold allotment made to the trustees of the settlement, and the two allotments purchased by them, were then treated by the trustees of the will as part of the residue, and in 1814 were sold to a person from whom the defendant subsequently purchased. The plaintiff, while an infant, became entitled, in 1831, by the deaths of his father and elder brother, to the manor under the devise. He attained twenty-one in 1849, and soon afterwards filed a bill, claiming the three allotments as part of the manor:—Held, that, as to each allotment, there had been, under the circumstances, an extinguishment of the copyhold in the manor, and that they all passed to the plaintiff under the devise of the manor, there being nothing on the face of the will to show that the testatrix intended to use the word in any other than its ordinary legal meaning:—Held, also, that the plaintiff was entitled to an account of rents and profits from the time his title accrued in 1831. Hicks v. Sallitt, 3 De G. M. & G. 782; 18 Jur. 915; 22 L. J., Ch., 571.

The rule is that, in the absence of special circumstances, a party found to be wrongfully in possession of property is to account for rents and profits during the whole period of time that his wrongful possession has continued. The authorities on this point referred to and observed upon, and the decision in Drummond v. St. Albans (Duke), 5 Ves. 433, held not to be law. Ib.

IV. OTHER CASES.

8. The account of rents given against a purchaser for value, who, after being in possession, is evicted by a party having a better title, ought not to extend to such rents as, without his default or neglect, might have been received if no special case of fraud is made against him. The decree for such an account ought to contain a direction for just allowances. Howell v. Howell, 2 Myl. & C. 478; 1 Jur. 492.

9. In taking an account of rents with which a defendant is charged by the decree, any allowance for lasting improvements can only be co-extensive with the period of accounting. Att.-Gen. v. Craven (Earl), 21 Beav. 392.

10. In the year 1827 letters of preference of escheated property in the island of Jamaica were granted under the Great Seal of the island; by the terms of which it was provided that the grantee should, within twelve months from the date thereof, or such further time as the governor of the island should limit and appoint, take the necessary steps to prosecute the rights of the Crown to the escheated property, otherwise the preference thereby given was to be void. The grantee entered into possession and received the rents and profits, but took no further steps to prosecute the escheat to final judgment for the Crown. Upon an information filed in 1835, by the attorney-general of Jamaica, praying that the grantee might be declared accountable to the Crown in respect of the rents and profits received by him since he had been in possession:—Held, by the Court of Chancery of Jamaica, and affirmed on appeal by the Judicial Committee, that the grantee was bound to prosecute the escheat to final judgment for the Crown within a proper time; and that he was liable to account to the Crown within a proper time; and that he was liable to account to the Crown for the rents and profits received by him from the time of entering into possession. Mason v. Jamaica (Att.-Gen.), 4 Moo. P. C. 228.

1. A., B., and C., being successive tenants in tail of property held under an inalienable parliamentary title, and B. having, after the death of A., entered into possession of the estates, and, together with them, of certain leaseholds formerly in the possession of A., his executors brought an ejectment against B. to recover possession of the leaseholds as part of his estate. B. having died before trial of the action, another action was brought against C., the successor in title. C., who was also executor of B., compromised the action on terms of giving judgment and buying the leaseholds at a certain price, with a further stipulation that 4,000*l.* should be allowed as a debt from B.'s estate in respect of rents received by B. Before the compromise, a creditors' suit was instituted and a decree made for the administration of B.'s estate, which was insolvent. On a summons by A.'s executors to prove against B.'s estate for the amount of the rents actually received by him: —Held, that the judgment in the action against C. was not evidence of wrongful possession by B., which could serve as a foundation for the claim, and that the admission by the executor as to mesne profits in the compromise was inoperative, being made after the decree. Talbot v. Shrewsbury (Earl), 14 L. R., Eq., 503; 20 W. R. 854.

I. Income and Property Tax.

1. A testator, by his will, in 1854, directed his trustees to pay to his widow during her life the annual sum of 500*l.*, "free from legacy duty and other deductions":—Held, that the annuity was subject to income tax under the 16 & 17 Vict., c. 34, to be paid out of the annuity itself. Sadler v. Rickards, 4 Kay & J. 302.

2. By an ante-nuptial settlement executed before the passing of the Property Tax Act, lands were appointed to the use that the intended wife might, after the intended husband's death, receive a jointure rent-charge in lieu of dower out of any lands to which the husband was or might become entitled, without any deduction in respect of any tax then already or thereafter to be imposed on the jointure or on the jointress in respect thereof:—Held, first, that the jointress was not as a purchaser for value or otherwise exempt from property tax. Floyer v. Bankes, 3 De G. J. & S. 306; 2 N. R. 7.

Held, secondly, that she was entitled to have the tax raised and paid out of the land in addition to or exoneration of the jointure. Ib.

3. A testator gave to his wife an annuity or clear yearly rent-charge, clear of all taxes and deductions:—Held, that the annuity was subject to property tax. Wall v. Wall, 15 Sim. 513; 11 Jur. 403; 16 L. J., Ch., 305.

4. 5. A tenant of minerals, though he may be under a constant vanishing expense in sinking new pits as the old ones become exhausted, is not entitled, in computing the profits for assessment of income tax, to deduct from the gross profits a sum estimated as representing the amount of capital expended in making bores and sinking pits, which have been exhausted by the year's working. I. PROPERTY LIABLE AND EXEMPTIONS.

7. An owner of a quit-rent shall pay taxes only in proportion to what the land pays; but where the matter has been examined by the Commissioners of the Land Tax, the Court will not re-examine it. Brockman v. Honeywood, 1 P. W. 328.

8. The 38 Geo. 3, c. 60, s. 37, applies to leaseholds renewable by custom. Neame v. Moorsom, 15 W. R. 51; 36 L. J., Ch., 274; 3 L. R., Eq., 91; 12 Jur., N. S., 913.

9. Taxing Acts must be construed strictly. And where therefore land which, in 4 Will. & M., being employed for charitable purposes, as the sight of an almshouse or hospital, was on that account declared by a statute then passed (4 Will. & M., c. 1) to be exempt from the land tax at that time imposed—and the like words of exemption were used in 38 Geo. 3, c. 5, the fact that other land had since been applied to the same charitable purposes, and the original land had been, by order of the Court of Chancery, directed to be held by the trustees of the charity to their own use, freed from its charitable trusts, did not, without more, render it liable, even in the hands of a tenant, to the taxation from which it had been previously exempt. Cox v. Rabbits, 3 L. R., App. Cas., 473; 47 L. J., Q. B., 385; 38 L. T., N. S., 430; 26 W. R. 483. Affirming 3 L. R., Q. B., 307; 25 W. R. 594; 46 L. J., Q. B., 498; 36 L. T. 455.

10. Upon an exchange of lands under 6 & 7 Will. 4, c. 115 (which contains a clause assimilating the tenure and quality of lands exchanged and allotted to that of the lands in respect of which the allotment or exchange is made), the statute does not transfer a liability to land tax from one property exchanged to the other. Cooch v. Walden, 46 L. J., Ch., 639.

1. In General.

1. A man who redeems his land tax, must be presumed to do so, to exonerate his estate from a periodical and troublesome outgoing, and not to transmit as money to his personal representatives. Weld v. Tew, Beat. 275.

2. A., being under a settlement tenant for life in remainder, after prior estates for life in tail with remainder to his own first and other sons in tail, with an ultimate remainder in fee, which afterwards became vested in the first tenant for life, redeemed the land tax upon the settled estate during the life of the first tenant for life, and took an assignment to himself under the Land Tax Act. The prior tenant for life afterwards died without issue, having devised to A. the ultimate fee; and A. being in a dying state and having no issue, made his will and devised the fee of the settled estate, without declaring any intention with respect to the land tax redeemed. The land at his death continues to be part of his personal estate. Trevor v. Trevor, 2 Myl. & K. 675.

3. The Court will not declare the land tax on an estate to have been redeemed merely for the benefit of a trustee for sale, and to supply an alleged defect of title, although such redemption has in fact taken place. Exp. Sparkes, M'Clel. 518.

4. A person having a partial interest, redeemed the land tax on three several tenements, by one contract and at one price:—Held, that the three charges were not consolidated so as to give him one aggregate charge on all tenements, but he acquired three separate charges on the three several tenements. Cox v. Coventon, 31 Beav. 378; 8 Jur. 1142; 7 L. T., N. S., 78.

5. A person who had entered into an agreement for the purchase of land, which was formerly part of the glebe of a rectory, and had been before sold for the redemption of the land tax, is not bound to complete his purchase, where it appears that upon the prior sale for the redemption of the land tax, the rector was himself the actual purchaser in the name of his curate. Grover v. Hugell, 3 Russ. 428.

6. A., tenant for life, with remainder to his children, redeems the land tax on the estate, with his own money, introducing into the contract for the redemption his own name, and that of another person, as trustees. A. afterwards became bankrupt; on bill by his assignees against a purchaser of his life estate, and of the land tax so redeemed, a specific performance decreed, as being within the stat. 1 Jac. 1, c. 15, s. 5. Emly v. Guy, 3 Meriv. 702.

7. On petition by a tenant for life, the Court ordered that a sum of money, which the deputy remembrancer had received for lands taken for the public service, might be applied in part of a sum previously paid by the petitioner to redeem the land tax, he not having taken advantage of the clause in the Redemption Act which enabled him to sell part of the lands, although the next in the remainder was a minor. Re Shephard, Wightw. 131.

8. A. agreed with B. to grant him the lease of a house (to be built), when it was complete, finished, and fit for habitation. B. being constantly on the premises during the building, took possession, and then made various objections on the ground that the house was not complete, finished, and fit for habitation. A. claimed 3*l.* per annum additional rent, on the ground that the Crown, since the contract, had redeemed the land tax which A. was liable to pay:—Held, that s. 120 of 42 Geo. 3, c. 116, did not apply. Faulkner v. Llewellin, 11 W. R. 1055; 9 L. T., N. S., 251. Affirmed 12 W. R. 193; 9 L. T., N. S., 557.

9. Land tax having been redeemed, was bequeathed by will to a married woman. Afterwards the husband, having registered his marriage in the land tax office in the manner required by 38 Geo. 3, c. 60, s. 78, mortgaged the land tax in the form of assignment which is prescribed by the Act; he (by a deed of even date) covenanting to pay the mortgage debt, and reserving the equity of redemption to himself alone. The wife survived:—Held, that the husband of a proprietor of land tax, upon registering the marriage under the Act, acquires an absolute power of disposition over it. Pigott v. Pigott, 4 L. R., Eq., 549; 16 L. T., N. S., 766; 37 L. J., Ch., 116.

Held, also, that as the husband had disposed of the land tax only to the extent of the mortgage debt, the right of the surviving wife to the property, subject to payment of the debt, was not alienated. Ib.

Surplus Stock.] 10. Surplus stock, arising from sales under the Acts for the redemption of the land tax, will be ordered to be transferred to the party who, if it were laid out in the purchase of lands, would be entitled to have the lands conveyed to him in fee. Re Fortesque, 3 Russ. 128.

11. Surplus stock purchased under 42 Geo. 3, c. 116, s. 100, for the redemption of the land tax, cannot be applied to permanent improvement of the lands in respect of which the land tax was redeemed. Re Nether Stowey Vicarage, 22 W. R. 180; 17 L. R., Eq., 156; 29 L. T., N. S., 604.

2. Merger.

12. The owner of a leasehold interest redeemed the land tax under 38 Geo. 3, c. 60, by the transfer of stock to the commissioners; he exercised no option as to keeping the charge on foot:—Held, that there was no merger of the charge, but that he was owner of a specific charge on the premises. Neam v. Moorson, 36 L. J., Ch., 274; 3 L. R., Eq., 91; 12 Jur., N. S., 913; 15 W. R. 51.

In 1798 C. redeemed the land tax upon lands held by him on renewable leases for years determinable upon lives. He bequeathed the lands to M. D. and J. D. equally, and his residuary personal estate to the same persons. M. D. died, and T. D., her father, took out administration to her. Subsequently, by an indenture of settlement, reciting an intention to assign the lands, but making no mention of the redeemed land tax, T. D. and J. D. assigned the lands and all the estate to trustees. T. D. never received any portion of the rent-charge substituted for the redeemed land tax. He bequeathed all his residuary personal estate to J. D. The lessors refused to renew:—Held, that the charge was not comprised in the settlement, and not merged in the land, but belonged to the personal representative of C., and that the mode of dealing with the property afforded no sufficient indication of a contrary intention. S. C. 12 Jur., N. S., 913.

Held, also, that the land tax did not revive on the expiration of the lease. Ib.

1. Guardians of an infant tenant in tail redeemed the land tax on the entailed estate. The tenant in tail died, having bequeathed the land tax to the next tenant in tail. The latter tenant in tail suffered a recovery, and settled the estate, but always dealt with the redeemed land tax as a subsisting charge. The settlement contained in its operative part the usual general words "all the estate, etc.":—Held, that the land tax was not merged by its redemption, by the recovery, by the operation of the settlement, or otherwise, but passed by a bequest of it in the settlor's will. Blundell v. Stanley, 3 De G. & Sm. 433; 18 L. J., N. S., Ch., 300; 13 Jur. 998.

2. The guardians of an infant tenant in tail of lands, redeemed the land tax under statute 38 Geo. 3, c. 60, without declaring an option under ss. 17 and 37, to be considered on the footing of third persons purchasing the tax. Subsequently the lands became vested in fee in Sir W. S., who conveyed them to trustees and their heirs, upon trusts for sale for his benefit. The trustees, by his direction, purchased and took a conveyance of the land tax or rent-charge in lieu of land tax chargeable "upon the lands," upon the like trusts:—Held, that the land tax, quâ tax, was extinguished upon its redemption by the guardians; that the rent-charge which remained in lieu of land tax was not a statutory tax, capable of being enforced by the remedies provided by the Act, but a charge effected by the operation of equity, and that such charge merged upon being conveyed to the trustees. Bulkeley v. Hope, 1 Kay & J. 482; 1 Jur., N. S., 864; 24 L. J., Ch., 356; 3 W. R. 360.

Semble, had Sir W. been merely tenant for life of the lands, the legal merger would have had no effect upon his equitable interest. Ib.

3. Lunatics and Infants. Property of.

3. Notwithstanding the provisions contained in the Land Tax Redemption Act (42 Geo. 3, c. 116), it is the duty of the committee of a lunatic to obtain the sanction of the Lord Chancellor before proceeding to a sale of any part of the lunatic's estate, for the purpose of raising moneys wherewith to redeem the land tax. Re Wade, 1 H. & Tw. 202.

4. Land tax on a lunatic's estates redeemed by order out of the produce of decaying timber, ordered to be cut for payment of debts, under the Master's report, that it was for his benefit: no equity for a charge in favour of the next of kin. Exp. Phillips, 19 Ves. 118.

5. In the application of the personal estate of an infant tenant in tail to redeem the land tax, by persons not having authority within the Act, the Court will determine by analogy to the option to be reserved by guardians, etc., under the Act for the personal representative of the infant to charge the estate in possession of the remainderman. Ware v. Polhill, 11 Ves. 257.

6. The guardian of an infant tenant in tail redeemed the land tax on the estate, but made no declaration, in pursuance of the 38 Geo. 3, c. 60, so as to make the land tax a charge on the inheritance. In a suit by the guardian who was also administrator of the infant tenant in tail, it was declared that the land tax was an annuity or rent charge in favour of the infant's personal estate, and the Court directed proper deeds to be executed by the then tenant for life and tenant in tail, charging the estate with the amount of land tax as an annuity. This was done by deeds not affecting the estate in remainder after the estate tail. On the death of the survivor of the tenant for life and tenant in tail, the personal representative of the infant claimed the benefit of the decree against the inheritance:—Held, that the declaration effectually charged the inheritance, and (the legal charges executed by the tenant for life and tenant in tail having failed) the tenant in remainder after the determination of these estates was directed legally to charge the estate with the annuity. Ware v. Polhill, 5 De G. & Sm. 455.

7. Persons acting as guardians of an infant tenant in tail redeemed the land tax out of his personal property; and in a suit against the tenant in tail in remainder, the Court charged the real estates with an annuity equal in amount to the land tax for the benefit of the infant's personal estate, and directed the tenant in tail to give a legal security on the estates. No recovery was ever suffered, and a subsequent tenant in tail sold the estate free of land tax to a purchaser for value. No express notice of the annuity was given to the purchaser, but the abstract of title disclosed the fact that the land tax was redeemed by the guardians of an infant tenant in tail, and that he died before attaining 21:—Held, that this was sufficient constructive notice of the annuity; and the annuity declared to be a subsisting charge on the land. Held, also, that negligence on the part of the annuitant was no answer to his claim. Ware v. Egmont, 2 W. R. 126; 23 L. J., Ch., 499; 18 Jur. 371; 4 De G. M. & G. 460; 1 Jur., N. S., 97; 24 L. J., Ch., 361.

8. Testamentary guardian of infant sold part of the estates for redemption of land tax. Vendee paid purchase money to agent of vendor, who was also agent for vendee, and conveyance was executed; but agent did not pay money into bank as required by 38 Geo. 3, c. 60. Purchaser entered and continued in possession for many years paying land tax. Nearly twenty years after, attaining his age, heir-at-law brought ejectment against purchaser; bill by purchaser to restrain which and obtain confirmation of contract, was dismissed without costs. Hicks v. Morant, 3 Y. & J. 286; Affirmed 2 Dow & Cl. 414; 5 Bli. N. S. 643.

4. Mines and Minerals.

9. The 39 Geo. 3, c. 21 only applies to sales subsequent to the Act. Wilson v. Grey, 36 L. J., Ch., 62.

A contract for the sale of lands, with their appurtenances, belonging to a rector, was entered into under 38 Geo. 3, c. 60, and

1. In General.

1. A man who redeems his land tax, must be presumed to do so, to exonerate his estate from a periodical and troublesome outgoing, and not to transmit as money to his personal representatives. Weld v. Tew, Beat. 275.

2. A., being under a settlement tenant for life in remainder, after prior estates for life in tail with remainder to his own first and other sons in tail, with an ultimate remainder in fee, which afterwards became vested in the first tenant for life, redeemed the land tax upon the settled estate during the life of the first tenant for life, and took an assignment to himself under the Land Tax Act. The prior tenant for life afterwards died without issue, having devised to A. the ultimate fee; and A. being in a dying state and having no issue, made his will and devised the fee of the settled estate, without declaring any intention with respect to the land tax redeemed. The land at his death continues to be part of his personal estate. Trevor v. Trevor, 2 Myl. & K. 675.

3. The Court will not declare the land tax on an estate to have been redeemed merely for the benefit of a trustee for sale, and to supply an alleged defect of title, although such redemption has in fact taken place. Exp. Sparkes, M'Clel. 518.

4. A person having a partial interest, redeemed the land tax on three several tenements, by one contract and at one price:—Held, that the three charges were not consolidated so as to give him one aggregate charge on all tenements, but he acquired three separate charges on the three several tenements. Cox v. Coventon, 31 Beav. 378; 8 Jur. 1142; 7 L. T., N. S., 78.

5. A person who had entered into an agreement for the purchase of land, which was formerly part of the glebe of a rectory, and had been before sold for the redemption of the land tax, is not bound to complete his purchase, where it appears that upon the prior sale for the redemption of the land tax, the rector was himself the actual purchaser in the name of his curate. Grover v. Hugell, 3 Russ. 428.

6. A., tenant for life, with remainder to his children, redeems the land tax on the estate, with his own money, introducing into the contract for the redemption his own name, and that of another person, as trustees. A. afterwards became bankrupt; on bill by his assignees against a purchaser of his life estate, and of the land tax so redeemed, a specific performance decreed, as being within the stat. 1 Jac. 1, c. 15, s. 5. Emly v. Guy, 3 Meriv. 702.

7. On petition by a tenant for life, the Court ordered that a sum of money, which the deputy remembrancer had received for lands taken for the public service, might be applied in part of a sum previously paid by the petitioner to redeem the land tax, he not having taken advantage of the clause in the Redemption Act which enabled him to sell part of the lands, although the next in the remainder was a minor. Re Shephard, Wightw. 131.

8. A. agreed with B. to grant him the lease of a house (to be built), when it was complete, finished, and fit for habitation. B. being constantly on the premises during the building, took possession, and then made various objections on the ground that the house was not complete, finished, and fit for habitation. A. claimed 3*l.* per annum additional rent, on the ground that the Crown, since the contract, had redeemed the land tax which A. was liable to pay:—Held, that s. 120 of 42 Geo. 3, c. 116, did not apply. Faulkner v. Llewellin, 11 W. R. 1055; 9 L. T., N. S., 251. Affirmed 12 W. R. 193; 9 L. T., N. S., 557.

9. Land tax having been redeemed, was bequeathed by will to a married woman. Afterwards the husband, having registered his marriage in the land tax office in the manner required by 38 Geo. 3, c. 60, s. 78, mortgaged the land tax in the form of assignment which is prescribed by the Act; he (by a deed of even date) covenanting to pay the mortgage debt, and reserving the equity of redemption to himself alone. The wife survived:—Held, that the husband of a proprietor of land tax, upon registering the marriage under the Act, acquires an absolute power of disposition over it. Pigott v. Pigott, 4 L. R., Eq., 549; 16 L. T., N. S., 766; 37 L. J., Ch., 116.

Held, also, that as the husband had disposed of the land tax only to the extent of the mortgage debt, the right of the surviving wife to the property, subject to payment of the debt, was not alienated. Ib.

Surplus Stock.] 10. Surplus stock, arising from sales under the Acts for the redemption of the land tax, will be ordered to be transferred to the party who, if it were laid out in the purchase of lands, would be entitled to have the lands conveyed to him in fee. Re Fortesque, 3 Russ. 128.

11. Surplus stock purchased under 42 Geo. 3, c. 116, s. 100, for the redemption of the land tax, cannot be applied to permanent improvement of the lands in respect of which the land tax was redeemed. Re Nether Stowey Vicarage, 22 W. R. 180; 17 L. R., Eq., 156; 29 L. T., N. S., 604.

2. Merger.

12. The owner of a leasehold interest redeemed the land tax under 38 Geo. 3, c. 60, by the transfer of stock to the commissioners; he exercised no option as to keeping the charge on foot:—Held, that there was no merger of the charge, but that he was owner of a specific charge on the premises. Neam v. Moorson, 36 L. J., Ch., 274; 3 L. R., Eq., 91; 12 Jur., N. S., 913; 15 W. R. 51.

In 1798 C. redeemed the land tax upon lands held by him on renewable leases for years determinable upon lives. He bequeathed the lands to M. D. and J. D. equally, and his residuary personal estate to the same persons. M. D. died, and T. D., her father, took out administration to her. Subsequently, by an indenture of settlement, reciting an intention to assign the lands, but making no mention of the redeemed land tax, T. D. and J. D. assigned the lands and all the estate to trustees. T. D. never received any portion of the rent-charge substituted for the redeemed land tax. He bequeathed all his residuary personal estate to J. D. The lessors refused to renew:—Held, that the charge was not comprised in the settlement, and not merged in the land, but belonged to the personal representative of C., and that the mode of dealing with the property afforded no sufficient indication of a contrary intention. S. C. 12 Jur., N. S., 913.

Held, also, that the land tax did not revive on the expiration of the lease. Ib.

1. Guardians of an infant tenant in tail redeemed the land tax on the entailed estate. The tenant in tail died, having bequeathed the land tax to the next tenant in tail. The latter tenant in tail suffered a recovery, and settled the estate, but always dealt with the redeemed land tax as a subsisting charge. The settlement contained in its operative part the usual general words "all the estate, etc.":—Held, that the land tax was not merged by its redemption, by the recovery, by the operation of the settlement, or otherwise, but passed by a bequest of it in the settlor's will. Blundell v. Stanley, 3 De G. & Sm. 433; 18 L. J., N. S., Ch., 300; 13 Jur. 998.

2. The guardians of an infant tenant in tail of lands, redeemed the land tax under statute 38 Geo. 3, c. 60, without declaring an option under ss. 17 and 37, to be considered on the footing of third persons purchasing the tax. Subsequently the lands became vested in fee in Sir W. S., who conveyed them to trustees and their heirs, upon trusts for sale for his benefit. The trustees, by his direction, purchased and took a conveyance of the land tax or rent-charge in lieu of land tax chargeable "upon the lands," upon the like trusts:—Held, that the land tax, quâ tax, was extinguished upon its redemption by the guardians; that the rent-charge which remained in lieu of land tax was not a statutory tax, capable of being enforced by the remedies provided by the Act, but a charge effected by the operation of equity, and that such charge merged upon being conveyed to the trustees. Bulkeley v. Hope, 1 Kay & J. 482; 1 Jur., N. S., 864; 24 L. J., Ch., 356; 3 W. R. 360.

Semble, had Sir W. been merely tenant for life of the lands, the legal merger would have had no effect upon his equitable interest. Ib.

3. Lunatics and Infants. Property of.

3. Notwithstanding the provisions contained in the Land Tax Redemption Act (42 Geo. 3, c. 116), it is the duty of the committee of a lunatic to obtain the sanction of the Lord Chancellor before proceeding to a sale of any part of the lunatic's estate, for the purpose of raising moneys wherewith to redeem the land tax. Re Wade, 1 H. & Tw. 202.

4. Land tax on a lunatic's estates redeemed by order out of the produce of decaying timber, ordered to be cut for payment of debts, under the Master's report, that it was for his benefit: no equity for a charge in favour of the next of kin. Exp. Phillips, 19 Ves. 118.

5. In the application of the personal estate of an infant tenant in tail to redeem the land tax, by persons not having authority within the Act, the Court will determine by analogy to the option to be reserved by guardians, etc., under the Act for the personal representative of the infant to charge the estate in possession of the remainderman. Ware v. Polhill, 11 Ves. 257.

6. The guardian of an infant tenant in tail redeemed the land tax on the estate, but made no declaration, in pursuance of the 38 Geo. 3, c. 60, so as to make the land tax a charge on the inheritance. In a suit by the guardian who was also administrator of the infant tenant in tail, it was declared that the land tax was an annuity or rent charge in favour of the infant's personal estate, and the Court directed proper deeds to be executed by the then tenant for life and tenant in tail, charging the estate with the amount of land tax as an annuity. This was done by deeds not affecting the estate in remainder after the estate tail. On the death of the survivor of the tenant for life and tenant in tail, the personal representative of the infant claimed the benefit of the decree against the inheritance:—Held, that the declaration effectually charged the inheritance, and (the legal charges executed by the tenant for life and tenant in tail having failed) the tenant in remainder after the determination of these estates was directed legally to charge the estate with the annuity. Ware v. Polhill, 5 De G. & Sm. 455.

7. Persons acting as guardians of an infant tenant in tail redeemed the land tax out of his personal property; and in a suit against the tenant in tail in remainder, the Court charged the real estates with an annuity equal in amount to the land tax for the benefit of the infant's personal estate, and directed the tenant in tail to give a legal security on the estates. No recovery was ever suffered, and a subsequent tenant in tail sold the estate free of land tax to a purchaser for value. No express notice of the annuity was given to the purchaser, but the abstract of title disclosed the fact that the land tax was redeemed by the guardians of an infant tenant in tail, and that he died before attaining 21:—Held, that this was sufficient constructive notice of the annuity; and the annuity declared to be a subsisting charge on the land. Held, also, that negligence on the part of the annuitant was no answer to his claim. Ware v. Egmont, 2 W. R. 126; 23 L. J., Ch., 499; 18 Jur. 371; 4 De G. M. & G. 460; 1 Jur., N. S., 97; 24 L. J., Ch., 361.

8. Testamentary guardian of infant sold part of the estates for redemption of land tax. Vendee paid purchase money to agent of vendor, who was also agent for vendee, and conveyance was executed; but agent did not pay money into bank as required by 38 Geo. 3, c. 60. Purchaser entered and continued in possession for many years paying land tax. Nearly twenty years after, attaining his age, heir-at-law brought ejectment against purchaser; bill by purchaser to restrain which and obtain confirmation of contract, was dismissed without costs. Hicks v. Morant, 3 Y. & J. 286; Affirmed 2 Dow & Cl. 414; 5 Bli. N. S. 643.

4. Mines and Minerals.

9. The 39 Geo. 3, c. 21 only applies to sales subsequent to the Act. Wilson v. Grey, 36 L. J., Ch., 62.

A contract for the sale of lands, with their appurtenances, belonging to a rector, was entered into under 38 Geo. 3, c. 60, and 39 Geo. 3, c. 6, which enabled ecclesiastical corporations to sell lands for the redemption of land tax. Before the payment of the purchase money into the Bank of England, as directed by the Acts, and the execution of the conveyance, the 39 Geo. 3, c. 21 was passed, which enacted that all minerals under lands belonging to any ecclesiastical corporation which should be sold, should be absolutely excepted and reserved; and that the provisions of that Act should, in the execution of the former Acts, be applied as if they had been specially enacted in those Acts:—Held, that the minerals passed to the purchaser. S. C. 3 L. R., Eq., 117.

1. The 39 Geo. 3, c. 21, s. 12 in effect provides that upon sales of lands by ecclesiastical corporations for redemption of land tax, the minerals shall not pass by the conveyance of the lands, but shall be always absolutely excepted or reserved to such ecclesiastical corporations. A conveyance of prebendal land, executed under this statute in 1799, contained a general exception of minerals, but purported to except out of such exception the clay under twenty perches of the land:—Held, that the exception out of the exception was not rendered effectual by 57 Geo. 3, c. 100, s. 25, for that Act was intended to remedy defects in the mode of conveyance, and not in the subject matter conveyed, and that the property in the clay under the twenty perches did not pass by the deed of 1799. Whidborne v. Ecclesiastical Commissioners for England, 47 L. J., Ch., 129; 7 L. R., Ch. D., 375; 37 L. T., N. S., 346.

Held, also, that, on the evidence, the grantees of the surface were entitled to support as against the grantees of the clay. Ib.

5. Construction of Statutes.

2. As to construction of the Land Tax Redemption and Sale Act. See Williams v. Steward, 3 Meriv. 472.

3. The Confirming Statutes, 54 Geo. 3, c. 173, and 57 Geo. 3, c. 100, have removed any objection to a sale and conveyance under the Land Tax Redemption Acts, arising from the property so sold not having been originally saleable, or not having been property sold, within the meaning and according to the directions of the Acts. Beaden v. King, 9 Hare 499; 22 L. J., N. S., Ch., 111.

The restriction expressed or implied in the words of s. 25 of the confirming stat. 57 Geo. 3, c. 100, "the titles derived under such sales," construed to mean that the Acts were not to operate upon titles anterior to the sales under those Acts, and not to limit the confirmation to the titles of such purchasers only. Ib.

Under the statutes for the redemption of the land tax, the Lords Commissioners are placed in the position of vendors, and, therefore, if the trustees of a charity should purchase the property of the charity under those Acts, they would not be purchasing from themselves, but from the Lords Commissioners. Ib.

The Confirming Statutes, 54 Geo. 3, c. 173, and 57 Geo. 3, c. 100, remove any objection which might have been raised on the ground of the party selling, under the Acts, being both vendor and purchaser. Ib.

An objection to the validity of a sale under the Land Tax Redemption Acts, upon the ground that the lands were not properly saleable, and, apart from any question of fraud, were not properly sold under the Acts, is a legal objection; and there being no impediment to the trial of that question at law, a bill in equity on such a ground cannot be supported. Ib.

If it were shown that a purchase under the Land Tax Redemption Acts had been effected by fraud, the Court would rectify it notwithstanding the confirming statutes, for a purchase so effected would not acquire validity from those statutes. Ib.

4. The bill by the annuitant was dismissed, the Court refusing to raise an equity as to the profit arising from disobedience to the Act. Adair v. New River Co., 11 Ves. 429.

5. Where an annuity is given to a relation for life, and has been paid for any length of time, without a deduction for land tax, it will be presumed to have been so paid by mutual consent, and the payer is not entitled to be relieved. Nichols v. Leeson, 3 Atk. 573.

6. Land tax shall not be apportioned as between tenant for life and remainderman, the statute of 11 Geo. 2, c. 19, s. 15, having no application to this case. Sutton v. Chaplin, 10 Ves. 66.

7. Where a man had a power to make a jointure without any deduction for any charges imposed, or to be imposed, parliamentary or otherwise, it does not mean only such as are fixed and certain, but the land tax, though fluctuating, is clearly within that power. But a bishop, covenanting to pay all charges, ordinary or extraordinary, does not subject himself to the land tax, because he cannot bind his successors; otherwise in the case of a common person, who can bind his heirs. Blandford v. Marlborough, 2 Atk. 542.

Landlord and Tenant.] 8. 9. A. agreed with B. to grant him the lease of a house (to be built), when it was complete, finished, and fit for habitation. B. being constantly on the premises during the building, took possession, and then made various objections on the ground that the house was not complete, finished, and fit for habitation. A. claimed 3*l.* per annum additional rent, on the ground that the Crown, since the contract, had redeemed the land tax which A. was liable to pay:—Held, that s. 120 of 42 Geo. 3, c. 116, did not apply. Faulkner v. Llewellin, 11 W. R. 1055; 9 L. T., N. S., 251. Affirmed 12 W. R. 193; 9 L. T., N. S., 557.

I. ON WHAT INSTRUMENTS.

1. An instrument, vesting property in trustees for the benefit of the grantor for his life, and after his decease for the benefit of other persons, with a power of revocation, is not testamentary, and consequently not liable to the payment of legacy duty. Tompson v. Browne, 3 Myl. & K. 32; 5 L. J., N. S., Ch., 64.

2. A., by deed, gave his leasehold and personal property to trustees, for the use of himself for life, and of several persons at his death. A. reserved a power of revocation, but never parted with the deed, or with any of the property. By his will he confirmed this disposition in most respects:—Held, that the two instruments shall be construed together as testamentary instruments, and that the property passing under them will pass as legacies, and be subject to the legacy duty. Att.-Gen. v. Jones, 3 Price 368.

3. Where three sisters, in Scotland, executed an instrument by which they assigned all their present and future property to and in favour of each other, and the heirs and the assigns of the survivor of them:—Held, that, on the death of one of them, legacy duty was not payable upon the property so assigned, the instrument not being testamentary, but a gift inter vivos. Brown v. Advocate-General, 1 Macq. H. L. Ca. 79.

4. A., being possessed of some pure personalty, but of considerable property in mortgages, executed some years before his death an indenture, by which, declaring a wish to found certain charities, he covenanted to pay, or that if he did not pay during his lifetime, his executors should, within twelve months after his death, subject to his debts and legacies, pay to certain persons therein named 60,000*l*., to be invested in their names on the trusts thereby declared; the trusts were charitable trusts. This deed was never enrolled in Chancery. On the same day he made a will, giving certain legacies, and appointing executors, most of whom were the persons named in the deed. These papers were never communicated by him to anybody. Just before his death he caused the papers to be produced from the drawers, and handed them to the persons attending upon his death-bed. They were tied up with a memorandum, which declared that they had been prepared in that form, under advice, to save the legacy duties, and in order that if probate duty was paid, in the first instance, it might be got back again in consequence of the covenant creating a debt to be paid out of the assets:—Held, that the indenture was a deed, and not a testamentary paper. Jeffries v. Alexander, 8 H. L. Ca. 594. See Patch v. Shore, 11 W. R. 142.

1. In General.

5. A testator devised real estates to the use of trustees for a term of 500 years, to commence from his decease, and subject thereto and the trusts thereof to A. and B., their heirs and assigns, during the life of C., an infant, to preserve contingent remainders, and after the decease of C., to the use of the first and other sons of C. in tail, with remainder over. The testator declared, that the trustees of the term should, until C. attained twenty-one or was married, in aid of another fund provided by the will for the same purpose, apply so much of the rents and profits not exceeding in the whole in any one year, including other payments thereby directed, 2,000*l*., as they in their discretion should think fit, in maintaining and educating C., and should invest and accumulate the residue of the rents and profits for the absolute benefit of C., in case she attained twenty-one or was married; but if she should die under twenty-one and unmarried, the accumulated fund was to go over for the benefit of the parties to whom the real estates were in the same event limited:—Held, that legacy duty was not payable upon such portion of the rents and profits as had been applied for the maintenance of C. in each year, during her minority, until the time of her marriage. Shirley v. Ferrers (Earl), 1 Ph. 167; 6 Jur. 1047; 12 L. J., N. S., Ch., 111.

6. A. made a mortgage in fee to secure a sum lent to him by the trustees of his marriage settlement. On his death, his daughter became entitled to the equity of redemption of the mortgaged estate as his heir, and under his marriage settlement to the mortgage money. The trustees then conveyed the estate to her, subject expressly to the equity of redemption, and did not release her father's covenant for repayment of the money. Afterwards, she granted an annuity to M., and, as a security for it, conveyed the estate and assigned the money to a trustee for him. By her will she devised the estate, but did not dispose of her personal estate:—Held, that the money was subject to probate and legacy duty. Swabey v. Swabey, 15 Sim. 502.

7. A testator, by his will, bequeathed a sum of 30,000*l*. to his three children, and directed his personal estate to be applied, in the first instance, in payment of that sum; he then devised certain real estates to trustees, upon trust, to invest the rents and profits from time

39 Geo. 3, c. 6, which enabled ecclesiastical corporations to sell lands for the redemption of land tax. Before the payment of the purchase money into the Bank of England, as directed by the Acts, and the execution of the conveyance, the 39 Geo. 3, c. 21 was passed, which enacted that all minerals under lands belonging to any ecclesiastical corporation which should be sold, should be absolutely excepted and reserved; and that the provisions of that Act should, in the execution of the former Acts, be applied as if they had been specially enacted in those Acts:—Held, that the minerals passed to the purchaser. S. C. 3 L. R., Eq., 117.

1. The 39 Geo. 3, c. 21, s. 12 in effect provides that upon sales of lands by ecclesiastical corporations for redemption of land tax, the minerals shall not pass by the conveyance of the lands, but shall be always absolutely excepted or reserved to such ecclesiastical corporations. A conveyance of prebendal land, executed under this statute in 1799, contained a general exception of minerals, but purported to except out of such exception the clay under twenty perches of the land:—Held, that the exception out of the exception was not rendered effectual by 57 Geo. 3, c. 100, s. 25, for that Act was intended to remedy defects in the mode of conveyance, and not in the subject matter conveyed, and that the property in the clay under the twenty perches did not pass by the deed of 1799. Whidborne v. Ecclesiastical Commissioners for England, 47 L. J., Ch., 129; 7 L. R., Ch. D., 375; 37 L. T., N. S., 346.

Held, also, that, on the evidence, the grantees of the surface were entitled to support as against the grantees of the clay. Ib.

1. In General.

5. A testator devised real estates to the use of trustees for a term of 500 years, to commence from his decease, and subject thereto and the trusts thereof to A. and B., their heirs and assigns, during the life of C., an infant, to preserve contingent remainders, and after the decease of C., to the use of the first and other sons of C. in tail, with remainder over. J., N. S., Ch., 111.

6. A. made a mortgage in fee to secure a sum lent to him by the trustees of his marriage settlement. On his death, his daughter became entitled to the equity of redemption of the mortgaged estate as his heir, and under his marriage settlement to the mortgage money. The trustees then conveyed the estate to her, subject expressly to the equity of redemption, and did not release her father's covenant for repayment of the money. Afterwards, she granted an annuity to M., and, as a security for it, conveyed the estate and assigned the money to a trustee for him. By her will she devised the estate, but did not dispose of her personal estate:—Held, that the money was subject to probate and legacy duty. Swabey v. Swabey, 15 Sim. 502.

7. A testator, by his will, bequeathed a sum of 30,000*l*. to his three children, and directed his personal estate to be applied, in the first instance, in payment of that sum; he then devised certain real estates to trustees, upon trust, to invest the rents and profits from time to time in government stock, until a fund should be realised, which, with the produce of his personal estate, would be sufficient to pay the legacies. A bill having been filed to carry the trusts of the will into execution, a receiver was appointed over the real estate, by whom a large fund was brought into court, which was reported to be applicable to the payment of the legacies:—Held, that, under the true construction of the statutes 54 Geo. 3, c. 92, and 56 Geo. 3, c. 56, the legacies, though paid out of this fund, were liable to legacy duty. Cleland v. Ker, Dr. 227; 6 Ir. Eq. R. 35; id. 288.

1. Under the Acts of 1795 and 1805, no legacy duty is payable on the value of personal estate given up by one legatee to another under the doctrine of election; but where the testator devises his own real estate to A., and bequeaths A.'s personal estate to B., the legacy duty is payable on the value of the personal estate so charged on the testator's real estate. Laurie v. Clutton, 15 Beav. 131; 16 Jur. 825; 21 L. J., Ch., 226.

A testator having large sums of stock invested in the joint names of himself and his wife made his will, by which he gave several specific legacies to his wife, to whom he also devised certain real estates. He also made several devises and bequests of real and personal estate to trustees upon trust for his wife for life, and after her decease for the benefit of other persons: he also gave a legacy of 10,000*l.* to his daughter for life, with remainder to her children; and he appointed his wife sole executrix. Upon the decease of the testator his personal estate was found wholly insufficient to pay several specialty debts, and the legacies given by his will, and, under a deed executed by his wife reciting these facts, she transferred 36,000*l.* and 10,500*l.* stock, part of the funds which had been invested in the joint names of herself and her husband, to the trustees of his will, for the purpose of being applied to satisfy the debts, among others the legacy of 10,000*l.* The Commissioners of Stamps and Taxes claimed legacy duty in respect of this payment: but upon a petition by the executors of the testator and his wife, who had since died, to obtain the opinion of the Court:—Held, that no claim for legacy duty had arisen, under the 36 Geo. 3, c. 52, or the 45 Geo. 3, c. 28, and that none was payable. Ib.

2. By a marriage settlement after trusts for the husband and wife for life and trusts for the children (which failed by reason of there being no issue), personal property was settled in trust for the persons who would, at the death of the wife, have been entitled to her personal estate under the Statute of Distributions, in case she had died unmarried and intestate. The wife died in 1831, and her mother became entitled under the trust as her next of kin. She died in 1832, having left the property by will to executors in trust for certain legatees. In 1868 the husband died, and the bequests fell into possession:—Held, that the Crown was entitled to legacy duty only. Att.-Gen. v. Littledale, 24 L. T., N. S., 921; 5 L. R., H. L., 290; 40 L. J., Exch., 241; 20 W. R. 473. Affirming 5 L. R., Exch., 275; 39 L. J., Exch., 207; 23 L. T. 192; 18 W. R. 1036.

3. A testator bequeathed annuities to certain persons all subject to the same rate of duty, and directed his trustees to continue at interest sums which should be amply sufficient to pay out of the income such of the annuities as should be existing, and to divide the residue of the principal moneys between the surviving annuitants and their respective children, including the children of the deceased annuitants, and to divide among the children of the first-named annuitants, on the death of one or more of the others, such parts of the principal moneys as would not be required for payment of the subsisting annuities until all the principal money provided by the sale of the residuary estate should be paid and divided among such children to whom he bequeathed the same. In other parts of the will the testator spoke of the annuities and residuary estate distinctly:—Held, that the legacy duties were payable on the annuities as annuities within s. 8 of the 36 Geo. 3, c. 52, by four equal payments, of which the first instalment was to be made at the end of the first year of the annuity, and not at once on the whole residuary estate as bequeathed in succession to persons chargeable with the same rate of duty under s. 12. Crow v. Robinson, 4 De G. F. & J. 337; 31 L. J., Ch., 516; 10 W. R. 306; 6 L. T., N. S., 372.

2. Property Appointed.

4. J. R., by will, directed his real estates to be sold and converted into personalty; and after giving certain legacies, he thereby vested the residue in trustees for the use of his daughter I. A. P., for life, with power to her to appoint the same by will, but expressly excluding from the benefit certain persons named or indicated in his will; and directed that the appointment, so far as such appointment should be incomplete, the residue should be held by the trustees of the next of kin of D. R. This power was exercised by I. A. P., by her will, partly in favour of other persons:—Held, affirming the decree of the Master of the Rolls, first, that she must be considered to have had, notwithstanding the special exclusion in her father's will, an absolute power of appointment within the meaning of the 36 Geo. 3, c. 52; and that, consequently, legacy duty was payable by her appointees, upon the bequests made by her, as being, under the 7th section, made by her out of personal estate which she had the power of disposing of. Secondly, that this property, though subject to her power of disposal, was not so strictly her own property, as to render it, under the 18th section, liable to probate duty under her will, as property which she died possessed of or entitled to. Drake v. Att.-Gen., 10 Cl. & F. 257. Affirming S. C. nom. Platt v. Routh, 3 Beav. 257; 10 L. J., N. S., Ch., 131. And see S. C. at law, 6 M. & W. 756; 10 L. J., N. S., Exch., 105.

5. A testator gave to his sons certain real estates, with power to appoint to any woman they might respectively marry, a jointure in bar of dower:—Held, that an appointment under this power was a gift within the 45 Geo. 3, c. 28, and liable to legacy duty. Sweeting v. Sweeting, 1 Drew. 331; 17 Jur. 123; 22 L. J., Ch., 441.

Held, that the duty was at 10*l.* per cent. S. C. 1 W. R. 122.

3. Property Converted.

1. Where testamentary papers were construed as amounting not merely to a power of sale for the purposes of the trust, but to a direction to sell in case the testator should die without leaving any heir of his body living at the time of his death:—Held, therefore, that though in fact the real estate was not sold, the positive direction to sell rendered it liable to legacy duty. Williamson v. Advocate General, 10 Cl. & F. 1; 13 Sim. 153.

2. A devise of real property to trustees to be sold, and the produce to be deemed part of the residue of the testator's estate, or go in aid (if necessary) of his residue, in discharge of money legacies (given by will or codicil), was held liable to the legacy duty imposed by the 41 Geo. 3, c. 149, though the residuary legatee took the property in statu quo, and the trustees did not convert it into money by sale; for in equity the subject of such a bequest would go, after the legatee's death, to his personal representatives. Att.-Gen. v. Holford, 1 Price 426.

3. The legacy duty Acts are to be construed strictly, and in favour of the subject. Hobson v. Neale, 17 Beav. 178.

A will empowered the trustees, with the consent of A., to sell the real estate, and invest a sufficient sum to answer two annuities. The rents being deficient to pay the annuities, the Court ordered a sale out of the produce, and 20,000*l.* consols were purchased to provide for the annuities. Legacy duty being claimed on the corpus of the consols:—Held, that the validity of this claim depended on whether the sale had taken place under the general jurisdiction of this Court, or under the power in the will; and the Court having held the former, determined that no legacy duty was payable. Ib.

4. A., by will, gave his lands unto trustees, for the benefit of his children on their attaining twenty-one, and authorised his trustees to sell such of his lands as they might see fit, and to invest the moneys in any way which might appear unto them best, and to pay such sums as they might think right for the maintenance and education of the children. In an administration suit the estates were directed to be sold:—Held, that legacy duty was payable on the proceeds, and that succession duty was payable on the dower to which the widow was entitled out of a portion of the estate. Harding v. Harding, 7 Jur., N. S., 906.

Where a testator directs a sale of real estate, or it takes place under a power, legacy duty is payable; but where property is sold under the direction of the Court, legacy duty is not payable. Ib.

5. Where trustees for sale under a will, who had entered into a contract with a purchaser, and paid legacy duty on the amount of the purchase money, afterwards vested the estate in the person to whom (subject to the trust) the land was devised, whereby he became the proper party to convey. Semble, that succession duty, and not legacy duty, ought to have been paid. Howe (Earl) v. Lichfield (Earl), 2 L. R., Ch., 155; 36 L. J., Ch., 313; 15 W. R. 323. Reversing on this point 35 Beav. 370; 1 L. R., Eq., 641; 14 W. R. 468.

6. Prior to the Succession Duty Act, 16 & 17 Vict., c. 51, legacy duty was not chargeable upon real estate, except where its conversion into personalty took place under some imperative trust or direction to that effect. Hence, where the conversion was a thing done at discretion, for the convenience and benefit of the parties, the claim of the Crown did not arise. In such cases the words "to pay" did not necessarily denote conversion. They might be taken for "to transfer." Advocate-General v. Smith, 1 Macq. H. L. Ca. 760.

The case of Re Evans (2 C. M. & R. 206), held by Lord St. Leonards not to have been overruled either by Att.-Gen. v. Simcox (1 Exch. 749) or by Att.-Gen. v. Mangles (5 M. & W. 120). Ib.

4. Debts Forgiven or Paid.

7. A., who had been a bankrupt in 1822, by his will, dated in 1851, directed his just debts to be paid, in which he included the unpaid-in-full debts proved in the bankruptcy, and directed his executors to pay to the official assignee, in trust to pay all the creditors under the bankruptcy, so much money as would make the dividend on the estate equal to 20*s.* in the pound:—Held, that legacy duty was payable on the amount. Turner v. Martin, 3 Jur., N. S., 397; 26 L. J., Ch., 216; 7 De G. M. & G. 429.

8. A specific fund was bequeathed for payment of debts. A claim being made in respect of a debt barred by the statute, the administrator offered 1,150*l.* as the price to be paid for a release of all claims. Legacy duty was claimed on this account:—Held, that it must be borne by the administrator, and not by the creditor. Greville v. Greville, 27 Beav. 596.

5. Charitable Legacies.

9. Testator gave his residuary estate (which amounted to 13,000*l.*) to his executors, to be by them appropriated to the education of the poor in Ireland, principally those in or about Limerick:—Held, that legacy duty was payable on the residue. Att.-Gen. v. Fitzgerald, 13 Sim. 83; 7 Jur. 569.

10. A legacy of 50*l.* a year to be laid out in bread for the poor of a parish, is liable to the legacy duty; although the poor were so numerous that no one received more than the value of 2*s.* per annum. Re Franklin's Charity, 3 Sim. 147; 3 Y. & J. 544.

11. Bequest to trustees of 2,000*l.* consols, to divide the income yearly between twelve poor persons, but no person to be eligible two years in succession:—Held, liable to legacy duty. Re Pearce, 24 Beav. 491.

12. A charitable legacy is liable to pay duty, notwithstanding a direction that the fund is to be distributed among the individual objects in sums of less than 20*l.* Harris v. Howe (Earl), 7 Jur., N. S., 383; 30 L. J., Ch., 612; 9 W. R. 404.

Bequest for poor persons, but no person to receive more than 5*l.*:—Held, that legacy duty was payable on the whole fund. S. C. 29 Beav. 261.

13. By 56 Geo. 3, c. 56, Sched., Part 3, and

5 & 6 Vict., c. 82, s. 38, legacies given for charitable purposes are exempt from duty, but such exemption does not extend to legacies absolute on the face of the will, but bound by a secret trust for charitable purposes. Cullen v. Att.-Gen. (Ireland), 1 L. R., H. L., 190; 12 Jur., N. S., 531; 14 W. R. 869; 14 L. T., N. S., 644.

1. Bequest by a parish priest in Ireland of "all my property and money to the poor." The assets were all in Ireland, and the will was proved there:—Held, liable to legacy duty. To bring a legacy, for a purpose merely charitable, within the exemption from legacy duty in the 5 & 6 Vict., s. 38, c. 82, it must appear by the will itself that the charitable purpose is to be restricted to Ireland. Kenny v. Att.-Gen., 11 L. R., Ir., 253.

Duty. How Paid.] See LEGACY.

6. Foreign Property or Domicil.

2. Personal property having no situs of its own follows the domicil of its owner. The law of the domicil of a testator or intestate decides whether his personal property is liable to legacy duty. A British-born subject died domiciled in a British colony; at the time of his death he was possessed of personal property locally situated in Scotland; probate of his will was taken out in Scotland for the purpose of there administering his property; and out of the fund thus obtained by the executor legacies were paid to legatees residing in Scotland:—Held, that legacy duty was not payable in respect of these legacies. Thompson v. Advocate-General, 12 Cl. & F. 1; 13 Sim. 153; 9 Jur. 217.

3. A British subject went to settle in France in 1762, and afterwards purchased an estate and became naturalised there. In 1791 he left France and came to England, in consequence of the French revolution, and shortly afterwards his property was confiscated by the revolutionary Government. In January 1802 he made a will in London, by which he left his property partly to a charity in Ireland and partly to individuals resident in England, and appointed one of those individuals his executors. In April 1802 emigrants were permitted to return to France, and soon afterwards he returned to that country. In 1804 he made a will in Paris, in which he stated that he was born at Waterford, and had come to France to obtain restitution of his estate; and after referring to his former will (which he had mislaid in London), he recapitulated very nearly its contents, and concluded by expressly confirming it. He died in Paris in 1806; and his two testamentary papers were proved both in France and in England. Under the treaty of peace between England and France in 1815, a large sum of French stock was set apart by the then French Government, for the purpose of compensating British subjects whose property had been confiscated by the revolutionary Government, and part of that sum was awarded by commissioners, appointed by the British Government, to the testator's executors for the loss of his property in France. The commissioners, under the powers of an Act of Parliament, sold the stock so awarded, and paid the proceeds into the Court of Chancery:—Held, that the testator was domiciled in France at his death, and that the fund in court was not subject to legacy duty. Commissioners of Charitable Donations v. Devereux, 13 Sim. 14; 11 L. J., N. S., Ch., 362; 6 Jur. 616.

4. The proceeds of land in England devised by a British subject domiciled in France, on trust to sell and pay the proceeds to his daughters born of a French mother before marriage, but afterwards legitimated according to French law, are liable to legacy duty at 1*l.* per cent. only. Skottowe v. Young, 11 L. R., Eq., 474; 40 L. J., Ch., 366; 24 L. T., N. S., 220; 19 W. R. 583.

A person of English birth, but domiciled in France, gave, by his will, shares in the proceeds of converted real estate in England to his two daughters, who were not born in wedlock, but had been legitimated according to the law of France:—Held, that the status of the daughters in England must be their status according to the law of France, i.e., that of legitimate children and not of "strangers in blood," and that legacy duty of the rate of 1*l.* per cent. was payable upon the shares taken by them under their father's will. Ib.

5. A testator gave a rent-charge, to issue out of lands in England, to A. for life, and directed that after her death it should be continued, and equally divided between B., C., and D., during their lives and the life of the longest liver. B. died domiciled abroad, leaving an English will, by which she disposed of her personal estate. On the death of A., who was survived by C. and B., the Crown claimed from B.'s executors legacy duty in respect of B.'s third share of the rent-charge:—Held, that such duty was payable, for that the interest in the rent-charge which passed to B.'s executors was, by the Wills Act, "an estate pur autre vie, applicable by law in the same manner as personal estate," and therefore fell within 36 Geo. 3, c. 52, s. 20, and that it was not exempt from duty by reason of B.'s foreign domicil, inasmuch as, although it was by law applicable in the same manner as personal estate, it was not by any of the statutes made personal estate, but was realty not following the person. Chatfield v. Berchtoldt, 7 L. R., Ch., 192; 41 L. J., Ch., 255; 26 L. T. 267; 20 W. R. 401. Reversing 12 L. R., Eq., 464; 25 L. T., N. S., 121; 20 W. R. 53.

6. When personal property is bequeathed by a person not domiciled in this country, it is not, in the first instance, liable to legacy or succession duty on being paid to the legatee. But where the executor directed to collect foreign property and invest it here, has discharged the duty imposed on him, and has placed the fund, in the way required, in this country, any subsequent devolution of it becomes liable to duty, though the party on whom it may devolve may (like the testator) be domiciled abroad. Att.-Gen. v. Campbell, 5 L. R., H. L., 524; 41 L. J., Ch., 611.

7. Upon a claim, on the part of the Crown, for payment of legacy duty, treating the testator as domiciled in England, it appeared that the testator (whose name was English, but whose place of birth was unknown) had held a commission in the English army, but had sold out in 1810, and retired to France, where he resided until his death in 1820, placing an illegitimate son at a French school. His will, made at Paris in 1818, was in the English form. He left property in the French funds, and none in England:—Held, that the presumption was against an English domicil, and that in the absence of proof by the Crown of English domicil, legacy duty was not payable. United States (President) v. Drummond, 10 Jur., N. S., 533; 33 L. J., Ch., 501; 12 W. R. 701; 10 L. T., N. S., 321; 33 Beav. 449; 4 N. R. 7.

1. An English testator by will gave a fund to trustees to pay the income to his daughter for life, and after her death to hold the fund in trust for such persons as the daughter should by will appoint. The daughter for some time previously to and up to her death was domiciled in Jersey. She disposed of the fund by will, giving legacies to two persons, and the residue to her husband:—Held, that the legacies were not liable to legacy duty, but were liable to succession duty. Re Wallop, 10 Jur., N. S., 328; 33 L. J., Ch., 351; 12 W. R. 587; 1 De G. J. & S. 656; 3 N. R. 679.

The legacies, by reason of the domicil in Jersey, were not liable to legacy duty; but, notwithstanding the fact of such domicil, were liable to succession duty. Semble. Ib.

2. Notwithstanding the constitution of the Supreme Court of China and Japan, and the jurisdiction conferred on that Court over British subjects having a fixed place of residence in China, a British subject cannot acquire by residence in China a new domicil so as to exempt his personal estate on death from the operation of the Legacy Duty Acts. Re Tootal's Trusts, 23 L. R., Ch. D., 532; 52 L. J., Ch., 654; 48 L. T. 816; 31 W. R. 653.

British subjects resident in Chinese territory cannot acquire in China a domicil similar to that existing in India, and commonly known as Anglo-Indian. Ib.

India.] 3. A testator resident in India, and having all his property there, bequeathed his residuary personal estate to his brother J. H., and his sister H. L., in equal shares, but in case his sister should die before him, then to her children. The executor, who was also resident in India, having proved the will there, remitted the residue to his agent in England, with a letter, in which he desired the agent to appropriate the fund according to the annexed extract of the will, by which it would be perceived that half went to J. H., and half to H. L. or her children. H. L. had died in the lifetime of the testator, leaving nine infant children. A suit having been instituted by the children against the agent, and also against the executor and J. H., who were both out of the jurisdiction, for the purpose of having a moiety of the fund secured:—Held, that no legacy duty was payable upon such moiety. Logan v. Fairlie, 1 Myl. & C. 59. Reversing 2 Sim. & S. 284; 3 L. J., Ch., 152.

Where a testator dies in India leaving personal estate there only, and his executors reside and prove his will there, no duty is payable on a legacy remitted to a legatee in England. S. C. 2 Sim. & S. 291; 3 L. J., Ch., 152.

4. A testator, resident in India, bequeaths to an infant a sum of money to be invested in the company's securities, of which the interest is to be applied to her maintenance, and the principal to be settled upon herself for life, with remainder to her children. He is lost on his voyage to England, leaving all his property in India. Executors resident in that country prove his will at Calcutta, invest the legacy in the company's securities, and for several years remit the interest to their correspondents in London for the benefit of the legatee, who had come to England. A part of that interest is brought into court in a suit established by her for the appointment of a guardian, and for the allowance of maintenance, and an order is made for the payment to her guardian out of the fund so created of 200*l.* a year as maintenance:—Held, that there was a specific appropriation in India of the legacy, and that the payment of 200*l.* a year was not liable to the legacy duty. Hay v. Fairlie, 1 Russ. 117.

5. A man possessed of personal estate, situate partly in England, but principally in the East, where he was employed in the service of the East India Company, made his will in the East Indies and died there. After specifically bequeathing his property in England to his wife, his will gave considerable pecuniary legacies to his infant children, and to various other persons, some of whom were native inhabitants of India. One of the executors lived in Calcutta, and proved the will there, and having collected the Indian assets, and thereout paid the testator's Indian debts and funeral expenses, he remitted the surplus to England to the other executors, by whom probate of the will in respect of property in England had been already obtained in this country. In a suit instituted in this court by the testator's children, against the executors, for the administration of the estate, the fund so remitted was transferred into court, and having proved insufficient to pay the pecuniary legacies in full, it was ultimately ordered to be apportioned among the different legatees, in proportion to their respective legacies:—Held, that the legacy duty was not payable, in respect of any of the sums so appropriated to the respective legatees. Arnold v. Arnold, 2 Myl. & C. 256; 6 L. J., N. S., Ch., 218; 1 Jur. 265.

The personal assets, situate in India, of a testator who resides, and makes his will, and dies in India, are not subject to legacy duty, although such assets are afterwards remitted to this country, by an executor who has proved the will in India, to executors who have proved the will in England, and are administered under a decree of the Court of Chancery here. Ib.

6. A testator born in Scotland, but having for many years resided in India, died there, leaving real and personal property situated in India, but no assets in England. By his will and testamentary papers, all executed in India, he left the whole of his property, in equal divisions, to his four natural children or the survivors of them and their heirs, subject to some small legacies and annuities. His executors, who were in India before and at the time of his death, having obtained an Indian probate, paid the debts and bequests, and got in the testator's estate and converted the principal part thereof into money, which they sent to their bankers in England, and afterwards invested in the funds in their own names. A suit was afterwards instituted in the Court of Chancery in England, to ascertain the claims of the residuary legatees under the will; whereupon the stock was transferred into the name of the accountant-general of the Court of Chancery, and that Court made a decree declaring the shares of the several claimants. In that suit a claim was made on behalf of the Crown for the legacy duty on the residuary fund:—Held, that legacy duty was not payable on the legacies, annuities, or shares of the residue bequeathed. Att.-Gen. v. Forbes, 2 Cl. & F. 48. S. C. nom. Att.-Gen. v. Jackson, 8 Bli. N. S. 15; 3 Tyrw. 982. Affirming Jackson v. Forbes, 2 Tyrw. 354; 2 Cromp. & J. 382; 1 L. J., N. S., Exch., 159.

1. Legacies bequeathed by a British subject in the East Indies, out of his personal estate, to persons in England, are liable to the duty, if the executor proves the will in England, and pays the legacies here, notwithstanding the testator realised and possessed his property in India, resided and made his will there, and although the executors were in India at the time of their appointment, and the will was originally proved there. Att.-Gen. v. Cockerell, 1 Price 165.

2. A testator, who was an English-born subject and an officer in the royal navy on half-pay, in 1829 obtained leave of absence for the purpose of going to India, and went to Calcutta, where he established a lucrative business. In 1830 he married, and subsequently had three children, born in Calcutta. He continued to receive his half-pay and to obtain renewals of his leave of absence until 1839. In that year he made his will, and died at Calcutta, without having at any time returned to England:—Held, that at the time of his death the testator's domicil was Indian, and therefore that no legacy duty was payable on his personal property. Cockrell v. Cockrell, 2 Jur., N. S., 727; 25 L. J., Ch., 730; 4 W. R. 730.

3. A testator had an Irish domicil of origin. In 1790 he went to India, and entered into partnership in business there. In 1800 the partnership was dissolved. In 1802 he came to England, and took an assignment of a leasehold house in London, and purchased the furniture in the house. In 1811 he sold the house and furniture, and went to reside at Clifton. In 1812 he went to Madeira for his health, and in 1814 he there made his will. In 1815 he went to Lisbon by advice, and died there:—Held, that the domicil of the testator at the time of his death was English, and that the Crown was entitled to legacy duty on the bequests in his will. Att.-Gen. v. Fitzgerald, 25 L. J., Ch., 743; 3 Drew 610; 4 W. R. 797.

4. A testator had a Scotch domicil of origin. In 1807 he sailed from England for the East Indies; the vessel was wrecked, and he was taken prisoner and confined at Verdun till 1814. In that year he was released. In 1815 he went to India, and set up in business. In 1835 he made his will at Calcutta, describing himself as of that place, and appointing two persons resident at Calcutta his executors. In 1836 he sailed from India in a vessel bound for an English port, and died in itinere:—Held, that the domicil at the time of his death was Indian, and therefore no legacy duty was payable upon his personal property. Lyall v. Paton, 25 L. J., Ch., 746; 4 W. R. 798.

5. A Scotchman went to India, entered into business, and resided there for eighteen years. He then returned to England for the benefit of his health, leaving all his property in India. He spent eleven months in England, and six months in Scotland, having no fixed abode; after which time he went back to India, made his will, describing himself as T. C., coffee planter, Mysore, and died in India a few months after:—Held, that he had abandoned his domicil of origin, had acquired an Anglo-Indian domicil, which he retained at his death, and consequently that his property was not liable to legacy duty. Allardice v. Onslow, 10 Jur., N. S., 352; 33 L. J., Ch., 434; 12 W. R. 397; 9 L. T., N. S., 674.

Semble, the circumstance that a foreign fixed residence is adopted merely with the view to the acquisition of a fortune, and with an ulterior intention of returning home, is not sufficient to prevent the place of residence from becoming that of domicil. Ib.

6. Legacy duty is payable upon the share of a deceased partner, a domiciled Englishman, in the proceeds of freehold property in Bombay used for the purposes of the partnership, and forming a partnership asset. Forbes v. Steven, Mackenzie v. Forbes, 10 L. R., Eq., 178; 39 L. J., Ch., 485; 18 W. R. 686; 22 L. T., N. S., 703.

7. Notwithstanding the constitution of the Supreme Court of China and Japan, and the jurisdiction conferred on that Court by the Order in Council of China and Japan 1865, over British subjects having a "fixed place of residence in China," a native of this country cannot acquire by residence in the empire of China an Anglo-Chinese domicil analogous to that known as Anglo-Indian, and the estate of a British subject whose fixed place of residence is in the empire of China is, on death, within the operation of the Legacy Duty Acts. Re Tootal's Trusts, 23 L. R., Ch. D., 532; 52 L. J., Ch., 664; 48 L. T. 816; 31 W. R. 653.

Colonies.] 8. A British-born subject died domiciled in a British colony. At the time of his death he was possessed of personal property, locally situated in Scotland. Probate of his will was taken out in Scotland, for the purpose of administering his property, and out of the fund thus obtained by the executors legacies were paid to legatees residing in Scotland:—Held, that legacy duty was not payable in respect of these legacies. Thompson v. Advocate-General, 12 Cl. & F. 1; 13 Sim. 153; 9 Jur. 217.

9. A testator whose assets consisted partly of personal estate in the colony of Victoria, where duty is payable on the property of all deceased persons, died domiciled in England, and by his will gave many pecuniary legacies, and divided the residue among some of the pecuniary legatees:—Held, that the duties attaching in Victoria, and all expenses of realisation, were payable out of the general estate before distribution, and that the pecuniary legatees were entitled to their legacies, free of all colonial duties and expenses except the English legacy duty. Peter v. Stirling, 10 L. R., Ch. D., 279; 27 W. R. 469.

7. Other Property.

1. The profits arising from the tolls of a lighthouse are real estate, and not subject either to probate or legacy duty. Att.-Gen. v. Jones, 1 Macn. & G. 574; 1 H. & Tw. 493; 19 L. J., N. S., Ch., 266; 14 Jur. 379.

2. A lady, who was entitled to one-third share of an annuity charged on land in England for the lives of herself and her two sisters, and the longest liver of the three, died domiciled in Hungary, having by her will given all her personal estate to trustees upon trust:—Held, that the annuity was an estate "pur autre vie, applicable by law in the same manner as personal estate" within the Legacy Duty Act, 36 Geo. 3, c. 52, s. 20, but that, though applicable by law in the same manner as personal estate, it continued to be, by the common law of England, real estate, and therefore was not exempted from the payment of legacy duty by the fact of the testatrix having had a foreign domicil. Chatfield v. Berchtoldt, 26 L. T., N. S., 267; 7 L. R., Ch., 192; 41 L. J., Ch., 255; 20 W. R. 401.

III. SCALE AND AMOUNT.

3. The legacy duty is to be paid upon the aggregate amount of the residue of the testator's property, at the time of the executor's delivering into the Stamp Office the note of what he intends to retain as residuary legatee. Att.-Gen. v. Cavendish, Wightw. 82.

4. When a legacy is not paid at the time appointed by the testator, legacy duty is payable not merely on the capital sum bequeathed, but on the aggregate amount of capital and interest which is ultimately received by the legatee. Thomas v. Montgomery, 3 Russ. 502.

5. J. R., after directing his real estates to be sold and converted into personalty, bequeathed the general residue of his personal estate to his daughter J. A. P., and J. R., J. S., and J. G., his executrix and executors, upon trust to permit his daughter to receive the rents and dividends during her life, and after her decease, for such person or persons (other than and except J. W. and his relations, M. H. and his relations, and the relations of the late husband of the testator's daughter, and every of them) in such parts, shares, and proportions, and in such manner and form, as J. A. P., whether sole or covert, should by will appoint; and in default of appointment, in trust for the next of kin of D. R. And the testator declared, that, in case his daughter should intermarry with J.W., or any of his relations, or should reside with or receive visits from him or them, the bequests in her power should utterly cease. After the testator's death, J. A. P. married G. E. P., and the interest and dividends of the testator's residuary estate were regularly paid to her until her death. Previously to her death she made a will, and, in exercise of the power under her father's will, she gave 10,000*l.* consols to the descendants of the before-named D. R.; and gave all the rest of her father's property to various persons, strangers in blood to both her father and herself. D. R. was the son of a brother of J. R., the testator:—Held, first, that, on the death of J. A. P., a duty of 1 per cent. became payable in respect of the bequest, in the will of J. R., of the residue of his estate and effects to J. A. P., after allowing any duty already paid in respect thereof. Platt v. Routh, 6 M. & W. 756; 3 Beav. 257.

Held, secondly, that legacy duty was payable in respect of the bequests contained in the will of J. A. P., at the same rate at which it would have been payable if they had been mere legacies given by her payable out of her own personal estate. Ib.

6. A testator gave to his executors all the residue of his property, to be by them appropriated to the education of the children of the poor in Ireland, principally those in or about the city of Limerick, or as they, his executors, should in their better judgment deem meet, to give the bequest the most extensive efficacy. Pursuant to the Master's report approving of a scheme for the charity, part of the residue of the testator's estate, which was very considerable, was directed to be applied in establishing a school, and the interest of the residue to be applied towards the expenses of keeping up the school:—Held, that legacy duty at 10*l.* per cent. was payable in the first instance upon the gross amount of the residue, and not merely upon individual shares in the event of particular children deriving a benefit equivalent to 20*l.* Att.-Gen. v. Fitzgerald, 7 Jur. 569.

IV. CERTIFICATE AND PROOF OF PAYMENT.

7. On a petition for payment of a fund out of court, the certificate from the Inland Revenue Department of payment of legacy duty ought to be produced. Where that certificate was refused on other grounds, although duty had been paid, and an affidavit to that effect was produced, the Court ordered such affidavit to be served on the solicitor for the Inland Revenue, together with notice to show cause within seven days why the fund should not be paid out, and in default, that it should be so paid. Re Marsham, Re Playford, 9 L. T., N. S., 533; 12 W. R. 45.

8. A certificate from the Inland Revenue Office, that the duty is paid in respect of the land contracted to be sold, discharges a purchaser, and no particular form of certificate can be required by a purchaser. Howe (Earl) v. Lichfield (Earl), 1 L. R., Eq., 641; 14 W. R. 468; 35 Beav. 370. Affirming on this point 2 L. R., Ch., 155; 36 L. J., Ch., 313; 15 W. R. 323.

9. A copy of an entry in the stamp office books of the payment of the duty on a legacy is evidence of the payment of the duty (36 Geo. 3, c. 52, s. 27). Harrison v. Borwell, 10 Sim. 380.

V. OTHER MATTERS.

10. The Legacy Duty Acts are to be construed strictly, and in favour of the subject. Hobson v. Neale, 17 Beav. 178.

11. Husband and wife being entitled in succession, under the will of the wife's aunt, to life interests in the dividends of stock standing in court, the wife being the first annuitant, the husband granted an annuity to E. charged upon the life interests of his wife and himself. The legacy duty on the wife's annuity was duly paid: and upon the death of the wife E. procured an order in the suit for payment to him of all the dividends of the fund towards payment of his annuity and arrears, undertaking to pay the surplus to the husband. On the death of the husband, who died insolvent, it was ascertained that no part of the legacy duty on his annuity had been paid. Under the circumstances, the Court, considering that the omission of the Court in making the order for payment of the dividends without providing for the payment of the legacy duty, under the 36 Geo. 3, c. 52, s. 25, had been caused by the conduct of E.'s solicitor, ordered E. to pay the amount of the duty, and the costs of the application. Bryan v. Mansion, 3 Jur., N. S., 473; 26 L. J., Ch., 510.

Held, construing this statute liberally, that this annuity was a legacy within the meaning of the 25th section, and that the receipt of the annuity, without deducting the legacy duty, made E. a debtor to the Crown. Ib.

1. Where the Crown succeeds in imposing the legacy duty, it is entitled to costs out of the property; but where it fails, there should be no costs. Lyall v. Paton, 25 L. J., Ch., 746.

2. A testator left annuities and legacies, the duty on some of which was charged on the residue. The executor paid the legacy duty on the annuities, and paid the legacies, but not the duty on them, and afterwards became bankrupt. The residue of the estate would be insufficient after payment of the costs of an administration suit, and of the payment of the duty unpaid, to provide for the annuities:—Held, that the Crown had no claim on the estate. Wright v. Barnewall, 19 L. J., N. S., Ch., 38; 13 Jur. 1041.

3. Pending a suit for the administration of assets, and before the accounts had been taken, the attorney-general presented a petition for payment out of the assets of a sum which, under false representations, had been returned to the administrators as over-paid in respect of probate duty, and for the legacy duty payable by the administrator on his share of the residue. The administrator had wasted the assets, and the widow, who was entitled to one-third, had not been paid:—Held, that the application was premature, and the petition was dismissed. Hicks v. Keat, 3 Beav. 141.

In an administration suit the Court provides for the payment of the legacy duty before payment to the legatees. Ib.

Payment and Appropriation of Legacy.] 4. A legacy was given by one (who died in 1771) to an executor, in trust to pay the interest thereof to testator's natural child for life, and on his death to pay over the principal to his children; the interest was regularly paid to the legatee for life until his death in 1812 (his children having died long before that time, and previously disposed of their interest in the bequest). This was held, within the 48 Geo. 3, c. 149, s. 3, as being a legacy given by will of a person dying before the 5th April 1805, and not paid, retained, satisfied, or discharged, till after the 10th October 1808, and consequently liable (as to the interest taken by the representatives of the children) to the duty of 8*l.* per cent. imposed by that statute on such legacies, when given for the benefit of strangers in blood to the testator; and that, notwithstanding the principal had, in 1794, been invested in the funds by the executors, in their own names, to answer the purposes of the will. Att-Gen. v. Manners (Lady), 1 Price 411.

5. By will 3,000*l.* given to trustees, upon trust to invest, and to pay the interest to A. for life, and after her death to transfer the principal to B. Under a decree this legacy is paid by the trustees into court, and invested in stock in the name of the accountant-general, previous to the imposition of the duty on legacies, by 20 Geo. 3, c. 28, B. being then an infant, and therefore incapable of discharging the trustees. This is a sufficient appropriation of the legacy within the words of the Act 48 Geo. 3, c. 149, "paid, retained, satisfied, or discharged," before the 10th October 1808, and therefore, upon a question arising at the time of the principal becoming payable, it was determined that no legacy duty was chargeable in respect of it. Hill v. Atkinson, 2 Meriv. 45.

6. Legacies not paid under a charge upon real estate in aid of the personal without production of the stamp under the Legacy Act, 36 Geo. 3, c. 52, s. 7, until it is ascertained that there is no personal estate applicable. Holme v. Stanley, 8 Ves. 1.

7. A testator bequeathed a sum of money to A. for life, and after her decease to her children, as she should appoint, and in default of appointment, equally among all her children, who if sons should attain twenty-one, or if daughters should attain that age or be married; and if she should have no such children, then according to her appointment, and, in default of appointment, over. Upon the death of the testator, a suit was instituted for the purpose of having this legacy secured; under the decree made in that suit in the year 1798, the executors paid the amount into court, and prior to November 1802, the whole of it was invested in stock in the name of the accountant-general and placed to the separate account of A., who continued to receive the dividends during her life:—Held, that this was a sufficient payment of the legacy within the 55 Geo. 3, c. 184, and therefore, that upon A.'s death, in the year 1834, the parties interested in the remainder, who were children of A., were entitled to receive their several shares of the fund, without producing receipts for the legacy duty. Coombe v. Twist, 1 Myl. & C. 69.

IV. Probate and Inventory Duty.

I. On what Property or Interests, 6093.
II. Payment, 6094.
III. Return of, 6095

I. ON WHAT PROPERTY OR INTERESTS.

1. In General, 6093.
2. Property Appointed, 6093.
3. Property Converted, 6094.
4. Foreign Property or Domicil, 6094.

1. In General.

1. Testatrix, as heir, was entitled to the equity of redemption, and also entitled, under her settlement, to the mortgage money. She devised the estate, but did not dispose of her personal estate:—Held, that the money was subject to probate duty. Swabey v. Swabey, 15 Sim. 502.

2. All money received by an executor by virtue of probate is subject to probate duty. Att.-Gen. v. Brunning, 8 H. L. Ca. 243; 6 Jur., N. S., 1083; 8 W. R. 362; 30 L. J., Exch., 379.

A sum recoverable by an execution for damages in negligently causing his testator's death, is not a subject of probate duty. Ib.

3. Shares in a banking company purchased by executors with the assets of their testator in the name of a party who was entitled to the dividends for life, are included in the probate stamp, and do not require to be covered by the stamp upon the letters of administration granted to the estate and effects of the party in whose name the purchase was made. Hennell v. Strong, 25 L. J., Ch., 407.

If the bankers refuse to transfer the shares after an affidavit made by the executor of the testator in conformity with the 48 Geo. 3, c. 149, they do so at the peril of costs. Ib.

4. The tolls of a lighthouse are not subject to probate duty. Att.-Gen. v. Jones, 1 Macn. & G. 574; 1 H. & Tw. 493; 19 L. J., N. S., Ch., 266; 14 Jur. 379.

5. The stamp duty upon letters of administration is to be calculated not only on the principal money which constituted the property of the intestate at the time of his death, but also upon accumulations of interest between the death and the grant of the letters of administration. Att.-Gen. v. Partington, 3 H. & C. 193; 10 Jur., N. S., 825; 33 L. J., Exch., 281; 13 W. R. 54; 10 L. T., N. S., 751. Affirmed 4 L. R., H. L., 100; 38 L. J., Exch., 205; 21 L. T., N. S., 370.

By the law of England, if a married woman becomes entitled to the property of a deceased relative situated in England, and her husband takes no step to reduce her rights into possession, and she dies, and her husband does not take out administration to her and he dies, the child of these married persons must take out two administrations, one to his father, the other to his mother, on each of which, as on a distinct devolution of property, duty is payable to the Crown. Ib.

If this child is domiciled in a foreign state, where his parents were also domiciled, and empowers a person in England to take out administration for him, the same course must, under the same circumstances, be pursued, even though the property, when obtained, is to be distributed in the foreign state, where the law might not require this double authority of administration. Ib.

Where such property, no next of kin appearing, had been taken possession of by the solicitor to the Treasury, who had paid off all the debts of the intestate, and then paid over the balance to the Crown, and, after some years, the claim of the next of kin was established, and the solicitor of the Treasury ordered to pay over the principal amount, with interest, to the next of kin, the interest as well as the principal is chargeable with duty; the rule being that whatever is recoverable by virtue of the letters of administration is so chargeable, and the interest was so recoverable, being, in fact, part of the estate for which administration was granted. Ib.

6. A testator having died in the colony of Victoria whilst Act No. 388 was in force, and probate to his will having been applied for and granted before Act No. 523 was passed, but after the time fixed for its coming into operation retrospectively: — Held, that the duty payable on the testator's estate under the former Act having been directed by s. 10 to be deemed a debt of the testator to Her Majesty, accrued due eo instanti, on his death, at the rate prescribed by that Act, although the amount of such duty might have to be subsequently ascertained. Bell v. Master in Equity of Supreme Court (Victoria), 2 L. R., App. Cas., 560; 36 L. T., N. S., 936.

Probate duty in England is a stamp duty payable upon the value of the property the subject of the probate at the time it is granted. The duty payable under Act No. 388 is more in the nature of a succession duty, payable, whether probate is sought or not, on the value of the estate at the time of the testator's death. Ib.

7. Administration duty must be paid on the whole personal estate belonging to an intestate, including contingent interests. Lord v. Colvin, 3 L. R., Eq., 737; 36 L. J., Ch., 354; 15 W. R. 485; 16 L. T., N. S., 53.

Where such duty was not paid on a contingent interest, which afterwards fell into possession:—Held, that administration duty must be paid on the present value of the absolute interest, and not on the value of the contingent interest at the date of administration only; although if duty had been paid on the value of the contingency, the Crown would not have been entitled to any further duty by reason of the contingency having subsequently fallen into possession. Ib.

8. When the whole beneficial interest in a testator's estate was under his will vested in his widow and children, with a limitation in favour of his grandchildren, the defeasible character of each child's interest only affecting the shares of the children or grandchildren inter se, with a gift over on the happening of a contingency, probate must be delivered on payment of duty at the rate of 5 per cent., notwithstanding that additional duty is payable on the gift over taking effect. Armytage v. Wilkinson, 3 L. R., App. Cas., 355; 47 L. J., P. C., 31; 26 W. R. 559; 38 L. T., N. S., 185.

2. Property Appointed.

9. Where a testator, having a general power of appointment over a fund, exercises it by will, probate duty must be paid in respect of the fund. Palmer v. Whitmore, 5 Sim. 178.

1. A married woman, having a testamentary power to appoint a fund, exercised it in favour of her husband, and appointed him her executor:—Held, that if the husband claimed the fund as his wife's executor, he must pay probate duty on the fund. Nail v. Punter, 5 Sim. 563.

2. A testator gave to A. a power to dispose by her will of 5,000*l.*, part of his estate, on which probate was paid. A. exercised the power by her will:—Held, that probate duty was not again payable in respect of the 5,000*l.* Vandiest v. Fynmore, 6 Sim. 570.

3. A testator gave his residuary estate in trust for his daughter for life, remainder to such persons, other than A., B., and C., and their relations, as she should by will appoint; and if she married or received visits from A., or any of his relations, the power was to be forfeited. The daughter afterwards appointed the property by her will:—Held, first, that the property, as bequeathed by the father, was liable to legacy duty, under s. 18 of the 36 Geo. 3, c. 52, though that section applies in terms only to the case of a "general and absolute power;" secondly, that as bequeathed by the daughter, it was subject to the legacy duty as "property which she had power to dispose of;" thirdly, that no probate duty was payable in respect of it upon the daughter's will, under s. 2 of the 55 Geo. 3, c. 184. Platt v. Routh, 3 Beav. 257; 10 L. J., N. S., Ch., 101. Affirmed S. C. nom. Drake v. Att.-Gen., 10 Cl. & F. 257. And see S. C. at law 6 M. & W. 756; 10 L. J., N. S., Exch., 105.

4. When the provisions in a marriage settlement constitute a debt, inventory duty is not chargeable under 5 & 6 Vict., c. 79, s. 23. Lord Advocate v. Hagart, 2 L. R., H. L. (Sc.), 217.

In a marriage settlement the husband became bound to make a provision for his children, the contract giving him a power of appointment, in the exercise of which power he appointed to one of his sons 10,000*l.*, which was duly paid to him. The executors claimed a return of duty in respect of this sum, on the ground that it constituted a debt of the deceased:—Held, that their contention was right, and that they were entitled to a return of 150*l.* Ib.

3. Property Converted.

5. As to the right of the Crown to probate duty on realty of a deceased party impressed in equity with the character of personalty. Matson v. Swift, 8 Beav. 368; 14 L. J., N. S., Ch., 354; 9 Jur. 521.

J. S. conveyed fee simple estates upon trust by sale, etc., to pay certain debts, and the residue to himself, his executors, administrators, and assigns, without any equity thereon in favour of his heirs or real representatives, notwithstanding the estate might remain unconverted at the time of his death. The estate was sold after his death:—Held, that no part of the produce was liable to probate duty. Operation of a probate in evidencing the will, and authenticating the title of the executor to property not comprised within the grant of administration. Ib.

6. The share of a deceased partner in freehold and copyhold property of the partnership:—Held, not to be personal estate for the purpose of probate duty on his share. Custance v. Bradshaw, 4 Hare 315; 14 L. J., N. S., Ch., 358; 9 Jur. 486.

7. The shares of partners in realty forming part of the partnership property must be regarded as personal estate in the absence of any agreement between the partners to the contrary; and probate duty is payable on a deceased partner's share in such realty irrespective of the question whether or not there is in the event any actual conversion into personalty. Custance v. Bradshaw (4 Hare 315) discussed. Att.-Gen. v. Hubbuck, 10 Q. B. D. 488; 52 L. J., Q. B., 464; 48 L. T. 608. Affirmed 53 L. J., Q. B., 146; 13 L. R., Q. B. D., 275; 50 L. T. 374.

8. All moneys recoverable by an executor by virtue of a probate, in whatever form recovered, whether through the agency of a court of equity, or of a court of law, are part of the estate and effects of the testator, and are liable to probate duty. Att.-Gen. v. Brunning, 8 H. L. Ca. 243; 6 Jur., N. S., 1083; 30 L. J., Exch., 379; 8 W. R. 762.

Probate duty is payable in respect of the purchase money of real estate on a contract for its purchase, made before, but completed after, the death of the testator. Ib.

4. Foreign Property or Domicil.

9. Where a testator dies in this country possessed of personal property here and also in foreign funds, and the executor takes out probate here and pays probate duty on the amount of the property in this country, he is not chargeable with the duty in respect of the property in the foreign funds, although he afterwards obtain such property and administer it. Att.-Gen. v. Hope, 2 Cl. & F. 84; 8 Bli. N. S. 44.

10. Probate duty is payable only on property actually within the jurisdiction of the ecclesiastical courts at the time of the probate being taken out. Accordingly, where a testator held securities of the Indian Government, which he had agreed, before his death, to exchange for East India stock; but such conversion did not actually take place till after probate had been granted:—Held, that the duty was not payable. Pearse v. Pearse, 9 Sim. 430.

11. The executor of a testator domiciled in Scotland having obtained confirmation of the will in Scotland on payment of the duty assessed according to the scale adopted in Scotland, is entitled to have the confirmation sealed in England, so as to have the effect of probate under 21 & 22 Vict., c. 56, s. 12, without any further payment of duty, although, according to the mode of assessing the duty in England, a higher amount would be payable. Re Booth, 1 Giff. 46; 5 Jur., N. S., 619; 28 L. J., Ch., 800.

II. PAYMENT.

1. Fund Liable for, 6095.
2. Non-payment. Effect, 6095.

1. Fund Liable for.

1. A wife who had a power of appointment over a fund invested in Government stock, by her will gave legacies of specified sums of the fund:—Held, that the legacies were specific, and carried interest from her death. Davies v. Fowler, 16 L. R., Eq., 308; 29 L. T., N. S., 285; 43 L. J., Ch., 90.

The legacies so given did not exhaust the fund, and there was a residuary gift of the fund after payment of the testatrix's debts, funeral and testamentary expenses:—Held, that though the disposition of the residue of the fund was also specific, the words of the will threw the payment of the whole of the probate duty upon the residue. Ib.

2. An heir-at-law, though liable for debts, held not liable to pay probate duty, either directly or indirectly, which, in case of a deficiency of the impure personalty, after payment of debts and costs, was ordered to be borne by the specific bequest to a hospital. Shepheard v. Beetham, 46 L. J., Ch., 763; 6 L. R., Ch. D., 597; 36 L. T. 909; 25 W. R. 764.

2. Non-Payment. Effect.

3. Letters of administration, under which a plaintiff makes title, must be stamped ad valorem. Harper v. Ravenhill, Taml. 145.

4. Legacies not paid under a charge upon real estate, in aid of the personal, without production of the stamp, under the Legacy Act, 36 Geo. 3, c. 52, s. 7, until it is ascertained that there is no personal estate applicable. Holme v. Stanley, 8 Ves. 1.

5. Although, where no objection has been taken, the Court will make an order for payment at the hearing, on a proper administration being then produced; yet, if the objection be taken, the Court will not grant even a stop order to a party claiming as administrator, except upon an administration stamped according to the full value of the claim. Christian v. Devereux, 12 Sim. 264.

6. Semble, a party suing as executor or administrator cannot sustain proceedings to recover a larger sum than that upon which the probate duty is calculated. Jones v. Howells, 2 Hare 342; 12 L. J., N. S., Ch., 365.

7. A plaintiff sued to recover a large unliquidated sum due to her testatrix, but the stamp on the probate did not cover the amount claimed:—Held, that the plaintiff could not obtain a decree even for accounts and inquiries until the probate had been properly stamped. The cause stood over, and the commissioners stamped the probate and gave credit for the duty. Howard v. Prince, 10 Beav. 312.

III. Return Of.

8. Pending a suit for the administration of assets, and before the accounts had been taken, the attorney-general presented a petition for payment out of the assets of a sum which, under false representations, had been returned to the administrator, as overpaid in respect of probate duty, and for the legacy duty payable by the administrator on his share of the residue. The administrator had wasted the assets, and the widow, who was entitled to one-third, had not been paid:—Held, that the application was premature; and the petition was dismissed. Hicks v. Keat, 3 Beav. 141.

Quære, whether the money thus repaid formed a primary charge on the fund. Ib.

In an administration suit the Court provides for the payment of the legacy duty, before payment to the legatee. Ib.

VIII. Fund set Apart for, 6102.
IX. Vendor and Purchaser, 6102.
X. Other Matters, 6102.

I. Operation of Act.

9. The 4th section of the 16 & 17 Vict., c. 51, does not restrict the operation of the duty as regards appointments to cases where the powers are created by wills taking effect, or by settlements made after the commencement of the Act. Re Lovelace, 4 De G. & J. 340; 5 Jur., N. S., 694; 28 L. J., Ch., 489. Reversing 5 Jur., N. S., 428.

A., being tenant for life of a fund, with a general power of appointment over the same by deed or will, executed such power in favour of certain persons by will, dated in 1852. In 1853 the 16 & 17 Vict., c. 51, came into operation. In 1856 A. died:—Held (5 Jur., N. S., 428), that succession duty was payable by the appointees of A. Ib.

10. The property of a remainderman whose estate vested upon his birth, before the 16 & 17 Vict., c. 51, came into operation, but did not fall into possession until the death of the tenant for life, which took place after the Act came into operation, but before it received the royal assent, is liable to succession duty. Wilcox v. Smith, 4 Drew. 40; 3 Jur., N. S., 604; 26 L. J., Ch., 596; 5 W. R. 667.

Devise in 1826 to his son A. for life, remainder to his son's first and other sons in tail. A. died in 1827, leaving his son the tenant for life. The tenant for life died on the 18th July 1853, leaving B., his eldest son, surviving, who was born before the 19th May 1853. The 18 & 19 Vict., c. 51, was passed on the 4th August 1853, but came into operation on the 19th May:—Held, that B. was within the Act, and succession duty attached. Ib.

II. On what Property or Interests.

11. A tontine is a contract for value, and therefore within the exceptions of s. 17 of the 16 & 17 Vict., c. 51. Oldfield v. Preston, 8 Jur., N. S., 107; 31 L. J., Ch., 256; 10 W. R. 257; 5 L T., N. S., 650; 3 De G. F. & J. 398.

An interest accruing immediately under a tontine does not create the relation of predecessor and successor, so as to make succession duty payable in respect of the accrued interest. Ib.

Where a father subscribed to a tontine in the names of three of his children, two of whom died before the time appointed for the commencement of the Act, but the third survived it:—Held, in the absence of evidence to the contrary, that such surviving child took, not by succession, but in its own right, by way of advancement, and that no duty was payable in respect thereof. Ib.

1. A., by will, gave his lands unto trustees, for the benefit of his children on their attaining twenty-one, and authorised his trustees to sell such of his lands as they might see fit, and to invest the moneys in any way which might appear unto them best, and to pay such sums as they might think right for the maintenance and education of the children. In an administration suit the estates were directed to be sold:—Held, that succession duty was payable on the dower to which the widow was entitled out of a portion of the estate. Harding v. Harding, 7 Jur., N. S., 906.

2. By a marriage settlement made in 1822, B. and A. (father and son), in pursuance of a joint power of appointment in them vested, limited two rent-charges to the wife of C., if she survived her husband (which event happened); and it was provided that the rent-charges should be in lieu of dower, thirds, and freebench, and should be payable without any deduction or abatement whatsoever on account or in respect of any taxes, charges, impositions, or assessments already imposed or charged, or to be thereafter imposed or charged, upon the hereditaments or upon the jointure; and for the purpose of better securing the same, certain hereditaments were demised for a term of years, upon trust, in case the rent-charge should fall into arrear, to raise and pay the same, with all costs, charges, and expenses which should be sustained by reason of the non-payment thereof, or otherwise in relation thereto. The husband died in 1856:—Held, that succession duty was payable by the jointress in respect of the rent-charge. Floyer v. Bankes, 9 Jur., N. S., 1255; 33 L. J., Ch., 1; 12 W. R. 28; 9 L. T., N. S., 353; 3 De G. J. & S. 306; 3 N. R. 16. Reversing 2 N. R. 217.

Marriage, or a release of dower, is not a valuable consideration "for money or money's worth" within the intent and meaning of s. 17 of the 16 & 17 Vict., c. 51. Ib.

Held, also, that the jointress was entitled to have her rent-charge free of the duty, and that the same was, therefore, a charge upon the estate. Ib.

3. A subscriber to the Customs Annuity and Benevolent Fund, established by 56 Geo. 3, c. 73, constituting a fund in the nature of an insurance fund, out of which a sum becomes payable on the death of a subscriber, according to rules made under the authority of the Act, under which one-third goes to the widow of the subscriber, and the remainder to his children, relatives, or appointees, other than relatives, nominated with the consent of the directors, appointed part of the fund to which he would be entitled on his death to the trustees of a life insurance society by way of mortgage. The subscriber's family disputed the validity of the appointment, but it having been decided to be valid, succession duty was claimed by the Crown at the rate of 10 per cent.:—Held, that the part of the fund which was payable to the life insurance office was not liable to succession duty. Re Maclean, 31 L. T., N. S., 632; 44 L. J., Ch., 145; 23 W. R. 206; 19 L. R., Eq., 274.

4. By a private Act a fund was directed to be raised for the conditional benefit and relief of widows, children, and other relatives of the officers and others employed in the department of customs in England; and that rules and regulations should be made for the formation of such fund, and directors and other officers appointed who were to have the management of the same. The code of rules in force at the time of the execution of the following instrument was dated the 28th July 1836. The rules provided, that the admission by the directors of a nominee of a subscriber should take place during the lifetime of such subscriber; and that the subscriber should have power to direct, by any instrument in writing, to be deposited with the directors, or by his will, that the whole capital money insured or forthcoming at his death should be paid, in any manner he might think proper, for the benefit of his widow, children, or relatives, or of his nominee who should have been duly admitted. P. was in July 1826 admitted as a subscriber to the fund for 1,200*l.* In March 1840 a letter was sent from the fund office to P., in which his attention was drawn to the rules of 1836, and acquainting him that if he gave directions by will as to the manner in which the sum insured was to be appropriated at his death, he must make specific mention of his insurance in the Customs Fund; that "relatives," used in the rules, included only relations by blood, and not sons-in-law or daughters-in-law; and if he had disposed of his insurance to a son-in-law, or to any other party who was not a relation by blood, the directors must at his instance, during his lifetime, admit him his nominee, to entitle him to receive the sum set apart for his benefit. In October 1845 P., in pursuance of the rules, signed an instrument, in which he directed that the capital money forthcoming at his death should be invested in the purchase of 3*l.* per cent. stock, and the interest applied for the benefit of his wife during her life, if she should survive him, and at her death the stock should be divided between his two daughters B. and C., in equal proportions; and in the event of either of them marrying and leaving issue, then her or their shares to her or their children respectively; and in case both his daughters should die without issue, then over to his son. P. directed, that if he survived his wife, the whole sum forthcoming should be paid to his daughters B. and C. or their children, or to his son. This instrument was in October 1845 deposited by P. with the directors of the fund, and he died in December 1855. In May 1852 P. by will bequeathed all his estate and effects unto his daughters B. and C., and appointed them executrixes, but he made no specific mention of the fund. The wife of P. died in 1847, and the son died intestate and unmarried in 1851. B. and C. applied to the directors for payment to them of the fund, but were informed that G., who in November 1826 intermarried with L., another daughter of P., had given notice to the directors not to pay it to them. G. alleged, that by an indenture of the 13th August 1832 (after reciting that on his marriage no settlement was made, but that upon the treaty for such marriage it was agreed that upon the decease of P., G., and L. his wife, should take a share, equal with J. P.'s other daughters who should be living at his decease, of and in all his property), P. covenanted with G. and L. his wife, that they, or such of them as should be living at his decease, should immediately after his decease take a share equal to his other daughters of all the property which he might be seised or possessed of, or in any manner entitled unto or interested in, at the time of his death; and that he would forthwith make his last will, whereby he would give, devise, and bequeath all his property in such manner as to effectuate the intentions thereinbefore expressed, and would not revoke or alter such will. L., the wife of G., died in 1852. The capital money was, under the 10 & 11 Vict., c. 96, paid by the directors of the fund into court. On petition presented by B. and C.:—Held, that under the instrument of nomination B. and C. were, in the events which had happened, entitled to take the fund absolutely. Quære, whether succession duty was payable on the interest taken under the instrument of nomination. Re Powell's Trust, 2 Jur., N. S., 799.

III. FOREIGN PROPERTY OR DOMICIL.

1. The 16 & 17 Vict., c. 51 applies to a succession under a British settlement to British property vested in British trustees, and falling under the jurisdiction of a British Court, although the persons entitled are aliens domiciled abroad. Re Lovelace, 4 De G. & J. 340; 5 Jur., N. S., 694; 28 L. J., Ch., 489.

Personal property appointed under a general power, and not coming within the 4th section, ought not to be treated as the property of the donee, so as to be, in the case of the donee being domiciled abroad, exempt from succession duty. Ib.

2. In 1845 a testator, domiciled in the Mauritius, left stock in the funds to his widow for life with remainders over. In 1852 all parties joined in a deed appointing persons trustees in the room of the executors, the trusts of the deed being the same as those of the will. The tenant for life died in 1863:—Held, that succession duty was payable. Re Smith, 12 W. R. 933; 10 L. T., N. S., 598.

3. The operation of the 16 & 17 Vict., c. 51 is confined to successions to which persons become entitled by the laws of this country. Wallace v. Att.-Gen., Jeves v. Shadwell, 11 Jur., N. S., 937; 14 W. R. 116; 13 L. T., N. S., 480; 1 L. R., Ch., 1; 35 L. J., Ch., 124.

Therefore, where a testator domiciled abroad died, leaving pure personalty situate in England:—Held, that no succession duty was payable in respect thereof. Ib.

4. A married woman, domiciled abroad, having exercised by her will a general absolute power of oppointment, given to her by the will of her father, over property situate in England:—Held, per Turner, L. J., that legacy duty was not, but that succession duty was payable by the appointees; Knight Bruce, L. J., expressing no further opinion than that one duty or the other (it being immaterial which) was payable. Re Wallop, 10 Jur., N. S., 328; 33 L. J., Ch., 351; 12 W. R. 587; 10 L. T., N. S., 174; 1 De G. J. & S. 656; 5 N. R. 679.

The 16 & 17 Vict., c. 51, applies to persons wherever domiciled, and the rule mobilia sequuntur personam cannot, as under the Legacy Duty Acts, be made the ground of an exemption from duty. Semble. Ib.

5. A testator who was domiciled in Belgium, but for the last ten years of his life resided and carried on business in England, by his will (made and proved in England), gave to his brother all his interest in their partnership business, provided he should within a certain time pay his co-executor 12,000*l.*; and he directed 12,000*l.* to be invested in consols and held in trust for A. for life, with remainder for his nephews and nieces, most of whom were Belgians:—Held, that upon the death of A. succession duty was payable on the amount. Re Badart, 10 L. R., Eq., 288; 39 L. J., Ch., 645; 18 W. R. 885; 24 L. T., N. S., 13.

6. By a marriage settlement executed in England, the husband assigned to trustees (all domiciled and resident in England) an English policy of assurance, effected on his own life for 2,000*l.*, payable at the expiration of six months after his death, and the sum of 1,047*l.* 3*s.* 8*d.* consols, and covenanted to pay to the trustees within three years 1,000*l.*; and it was declared that the policy moneys and the 1,000*l.* should be held upon trusts for investment and payment of the income to the wife for life, and then to the husband for life, and then for division among the children of the marriage. The husband died within three years, having been at the time of his marriage, and thenceforth, up to the time of his death, domiciled in New South Wales. The wife survived only three months, and left one child, who was also domiciled abroad. At the time of the wife's death, neither the policy moneys nor the 1,000*l.* covenanted to be paid to the trustees of the settlement had been paid to them:—Held, that succession duty was payable by the child on the funds to which he became entitled under the settlement. Lyall v. Lyall, 15 L. R., Eq., 1; 42 L. J., Ch., 195; 21 W. R. 34; 27 L. T., N. S., 530.

By his will, the husband appointed trustees and executors in New South Wales to collect his residuary estate (which was all locally situate in that country), and transmit it to trustees and executors in England, who were to invest the funds so transmitted in Government funds or real securities, and pay the income to his wife for her life, and after her death to divide it among the children. At the time of the wife's death, no part of the residuary estate had reached the hands of the English trustees, but large remittances were afterwards made to them:—Held, that no succession duty was payable by the child on the funds to which he became entitled under the will. Ib.

When a person, whether an alien or a British subject, succeeds to property under a British settlement, vested in British trustees, he is liable to pay succession duty, whether the settlement is made by an alien or by a British subject, and whether the settlement is made by deed or by will, and wherever the property is locally situate. Ib.

1. The word "property," in s. 2 of the Succession Duty Act 1853, includes foreign movable property—as, for instance, funds or shares of a foreign government or trading corporation—comprised in a British settlement, vested in trustees subject to British jurisdiction, and recoverable by action in a British Court. Re Cigala, 7 L. R., Ch. D., 351; 47 L. J., Ch., 166; 38 L. T., N. S., 439.

The mere fact of a person beneficially entitled under a settlement being a foreigner is not sufficient to exempt him from payment of succession duty. Ib.

By an English settlement executed in England on the marriage, in 1838, of an English lady with a domiciled Italian, the lady assigned property belonging to her, consisting of French rentes, shares in the Bank of France, and English Government securities, to four trustees, of whom one was an Italian, and the other three were English, upon trusts, after the death of the survivor of the husband and wife, for the children of the marriage. The settlement contained provisions usually inserted in English settlements, including a power for the trustees to reinvest in British or French securities. From the date of the marriage until their deaths the husband and wife resided in Italy. The Italian trustee having died, an English trustee was appointed in his place. The husband survived the wife and died in 1877, leaving two children, the only issue of the marriage, the several trust funds being then in the names of four English trustees. Both the children being domiciled Italians, the question arose whether, under the Succession Duty Act 1853, duty was payable on their succession to their father in respect of the French rentes and bank shares:—Held, that succession duty was payable, inasmuch as the settlement was a British settlement, the trustees or persons having the legal ownership were subject to British jurisdiction, and the forum for deciding any claim by the children in respect of the trust funds was a British Court. Ib.

IV. VALUATION OF PROPERTY.

2. The value of property for the purposes of the succession duty is to be ascertained at the time when the interest of the successor accrues. If the property has then no saleable value, nor any actual or potential annual value, it is not capable of being assessed. Neither possible increase nor diminution in the value of the property after the succession accrued is dealt with by the Act. Att.-Gen. v. Sefton (Earl), 11 H. L. Ca. 257; 12 L. T., N. S., 242; 5 N. R. 436. Affirming 2 H. & C. 362; 9 Jur., N. S., 1296; 32 L. J., Exch., 230; 8 L. T., N. S., 794.

S. succeeded to land in the neighbourhood of a large town, which land was not at that time capable of being let or sold, though soon afterwards it acquired a high value as building land:—Held, that the value of the succession was to be calculated as at the devolution of the succession, and not as to the prospective or future condition of the land. Ib.

Semble, if the land at the time of succession is incapable, in its existing state, of yielding any annual income, yet, if it is saleable, then such property has an annual value within the meaning of the Succession Duty Act, namely, a value equal to 3*l.* per cent. on the saleable value at the time of succession. Ib.

V. SUCCESSION, WHAT IS, AND SCALE OF CHARGE.

3. In consideration of C., tenant for life (without issue male), joining with G., tenant in tail, in executing a disentailing deed, and of his paying to G. an immediate annuity of 2,250*l.*, secured upon the life estate of C., G. joined with C. in appointing the estates comprised in the disentailing deed to trustees for a term of 3,000 years upon trust to raise 25,000*l.*, and subject thereto, to the use of G. in fee. The trusts of the 25,000*l.* were declared to be, to stand possessed of 5,000*l.*, part, as C. should appoint; and as to the 20,000*l.*, residue upon the trusts declared by a deed executed by C. and G. in favour of the daughters of C., their husbands and issue. It was also declared that the 25,000*l.* was to be payable only in the event of G. coming into possession of the estates:—Held, that with respect to the 20,000*l.*, C. was the "predecessor" of his daughters within the 16 & 17 Vict., c. 51, s. 2, and therefore a succession duty of 1*l.* per cent. was payable; and that as to the 5,000*l.*, no succession duty was payable, it forming part of C.'s general estate. Re Jenkinson, 3 Jur., N. S., 279; 26 L. J., Ch., 241; 24 Beav. 64; 5 W. R. 301.

4. In 1810 B., being tenant for life, and W. his son, being tenant in tail in remainder expectant on B.'s death of settled estates, joined in suffering a recovery, and barring the entail and re-settling the property to such uses as father and son should jointly appoint, in default of appointment to the use of the father for life, remainder to such uses as the son, if surviving the father, should appoint, remainder to the old uses. In 1821 both exercised their joint power, and limited the estates to B. for life, with remainder to W., the son, for life, and to his sons in tail male, with remainder to G., another son of B., for life, and to his sons in tail male, with remainders over; and power was given to successive tenants for life in possession to charge portions for younger children. B. died in 1834, and was succeeded by W., who died without issue in 1855, when G., his next brother, succeeded as tenant for life in possession:—Held, that G. derived the whole of his succession from his brother W. as predecessor, and was liable in succession duty at 3 per cent. Att.-Gen. v. Floyer, Att.-Gen. v. Smythe, 9 H. L. Ca. 477, 498; 9 Jur., N. S., 1; 31 L. J., Exch., 404; 10 W. R. 762; 7 L. T., N. S., 47.

In 1855 E., the eldest son of G., with the consent of his father as protector, disentailed the estates, and conveyed them to such uses as both should appoint, and in default to the old uses. Next day they exercised this joint power, and limited the estates for a term of 500 years to trustees, and, subject thereto, to G. for life, with remainders over. The trusts of the term were to pay to E. 4,000*l.* a year and power was given to G. to charge portions to the younger children. G. died in 1856, and E. succeeded:—Held, that E. derived under a disposition made by himself, and under s. 12 of the 16 & 17 Vict., c. 51, being at the time of such disposition expectantly entitled to succeed his uncle W. as predecessor, was chargeable with 3 per cent. duty. Ib.

In 1855 G., under the power in the settlement of 1855, charged the estates with portions to his younger children:—Held, that the younger children derived their interest either from their uncle W., or their brother E., as predecessor, and in either case were chargeable with 3 per cent. duty. Ib.

1. A tenant in tail in remainder cannot vary the amount of his liability to succession duty by barring the entail, and re-settling the estate in his own favour. The person from whom he derives the estate is his predecessor. Braybrooke (Lord) v. Att.-Gen., 9 H. L. Ca. 150; 31 L. J., Exch., 177; 7 Jur., N. S., 741; 9 W. R. 601; 4 L. T., N. S., 218.

Devise in 1796 of freehold estates to A. for life, remainder to his eldest son B. for life, remainder to the first and other sons of B. in tail male. In 1841, A. being tenant for life in possession, A. and B. executed a disentailing deed, to which two other persons were parties as trustees, and granted to the trustees, to hold, subject to the life estate of A., to such uses as A. and B. should appoint; and in default, if B. should survive, to such uses as he should appoint, and in default to B. for life, and to his first and other sons in tail male. In 1850, by another deed which recited the former, and by which A. brought new estates into settlement, and discharged all the estates from a charge of 10,000*l.*, and B. gave up advantages to which he was entitled, an annuity to B. during the life of A. was charged upon all the premises, and subject thereto they were appointed to A. for life, remainder to B. for life, remainder to the use of his first and other sons in tail male:—Held, that these deeds must be taken as having been executed on the same day, that they constituted, within s. 12 of 16 & 17 Vict., c. 51, a disposition made by B. in favour of himself, and made out of the estates to which he was entitled under the will of 1796; that consequently his succession must be treated as happening under that will; and he was liable thereupon to the amount of duty charged in respect of his succession to the testator, on a disposition made under it by himself. Ib.

The nature of the consideration upon which the disposition was made did not affect the question. Ib.

The annuity, according to the terms of its creation, ceased on the death of A., at which time B. entered into possession of the estates. Ib.

Held, also, that he was entitled, under s. 38, to an allowance as on account of property of which he had been "deprived" within the meaning of that section. Ib.

The Act is not to be construed according to the technicalities of the law of England or Scotland, but according to the popular use of the language employed. Ib.

The protector of a settlement giving his consent to a disposition of property cannot be treated as a creator of such disposition. Ib.

Held, also, that as A. gave up a charge of 10,000*l.* on the property by the deed of 1850, B. must be charged only 1 per cent. on that extent of the succession. Ib.

2. S., by deed of entail in Scotland, gave an estate to her eldest son, A., and to the heirs of his body, whom failing, she gave the same to her grandson, C., and the heirs of his body, with remainders over. A. died without issue:—Held, that S. was the "predecessor," within the meaning of 16 & 17 Vict., c. 51, and therefore that the duty payable by the grandson was 1*l.* per cent. Saltoun (Lord) v. Advocate-Gen. for Scotland, 3 Macq. H. L. Ca. 659; 6 Jur., N. S., 713; 8 W. R. 565.

Semble, where the succession is by provision, the settlor is the predecessor; but where by devolution, the last possessor is the predecessor. Hence C. took by provision. He must be considered in the situation of a remainderman in tail, according to English law, taking per formam doni, to whom the donor, and not the last person who held under the first estate tail, would be considered the "predecessor." Ib.

Semble, where there is an entail giving an estate tail to one, with remainder to another, the donee or remainderman who takes by purchase is the "successor," and the entailer the "predecessor;" and with respect to the heirs of the body, the donee in tail is the "ancestor," and the heir of the body is the "successor." Ib.

3. By a marriage settlement, 10,000*l.*, the property of the husband, was settled upon trust for the husband and wife successively for life; and after the death of the survivor, upon trust for the children of the marriage; and in default of such children then to be divided between the children of the intended wife by her former marriage, as she should appoint; and in default of appointment, equally. The wife survived, and died without issue by the second marriage, and without having exercised the power of appointment:—Held, that the second husband was the predecessor, and that the children by the former marriage were accordingly chargeable with a duty of 10*l.* per cent. as strangers in blood. Re Ramsay, 7 Jur., N. S., 1,225; 30 L. J., Ch., 849; 30 Beav. 75; 9 W. R. 910; 5 L. T., N. S., 166.

Where a settlement contains a power of appointment in some one other than the settlor, and the exercise of the power transfers the property from the settlor to some one else, the donee of such a power is the predecessor of the appointee. Ib.

4. Appointees taking upon the death of the appointor are successors to him. Re Chapman, 11 Jur., N. S., 708; 13 L. T., N. S., 144.

Therefore, appointees liable to legacy duty, and as such exempt from succession duty, becoming entitled in possession to property chargeable also with a duty in respect of the succession of the appointor to the donor of the power, are successors, and liable to one duty only at the highest rate. Ib.

5. Where an interest in personal property has been transmitted before it has ripened into enjoyment, it matters not whether the person originally entitled died before or after the commencement of the Succession Duty Act, only one duty is payable on any succession to such property, whether such duty be legacy or succession duty. If the duty is succession duty and the interest has passed through more than one successor, then under s. 14 the duty payable shall be the highest that would have been paid by any of such successors. If the duty be legacy duty, then, under s. 18, no succession duty of any kind is payable. Att.-Gen. v. Littledale, 5 L. R., H. L., 290; 40 L. J., Exch., 241; 20 W. R. 473; 24 L. T. 921. Affirming 5 L. R., Exch., 275; 39 L. J., Exch., 207; 23 L. T. 192; 18 W. R. 1036.

The successor from whom duty is payable is the person who, on the happening of the death, eventually becomes beneficially entitled in possession; that which was conferred upon any previous successor was only an expectant interest, not a succession. The interest of an executor, not being beneficial, is not a succession within s. 2, or within s. 15; for s. 15 imposes no new duty, only a duty in substitution for that imposed by s. 2. Ib.

1. The trustees of a settlement made in 1829 upon a marriage, stood possessed of the settled property (subject to the husband's life interest, and to a general power of appointment in the wife which was never executed) in trust for the next of kin of the wife. She died in August 1831, and D. was her sole next of kin. D. died in 1832, having bequeathed her property to executors in trust for the benefit of nephews and nieces. The owner of the life estate died in 1868. Upon his death, the trustees having paid under protest succession duty at the rate of 1 per cent., and a claim having been made by the Crown for payment of 3 per cent. legacy duty in addition:—Held, that the trustees were liable for legacy but not for succession duty, the latter part of s. 18 of the Succession Duty Act, 16 & 17 Vict., c. 51, relieving them as liable for legacy duty from payment of succession duty under that Act. Ib.

The true successor in the sense of the individual liable to pay the duty is the person entitled upon the expiration by death or otherwise of the particular intervening estate. Ib.

2. C. was domiciled in Portugal, but on a visit to this country made his will in the English form, and appointed executors, some of whom resided in England. He desired his executors to collect his property, which was in Portugal, to convert it into cash, pay certain legacies, and invest the residue in the English 3 per cents., to appropriate what they should think necessary to pay a life annuity of 50*l.* to his sister, on the termination of which the appropriated fund was to revert to and form part of his residuary estate, and be divided (like the rest) among his three children. The executors exactly performed the directions of the trust; when the sister died, the part appropriated to satisfy her annuity became divisible among the children:—Held, that this constituted a succession within s. 2 of the Succession Duty Act, and was liable to the payment of succession duty. Att.-Gen. v. Campbell, 5 L. R., H. L., 524; 41 L. J., Ch., 611.

3. When a testator domiciled abroad directs a part of his residuary personal estate which is to be invested in English securities in the names of English trustees, to be set apart to answer a life annuity, and on its determination to fall into the residue, the increase of benefit accruing on the death of the annuitant to the residuary legatees is not a succession within the operation of s. 5. Callanane v. Campbell, 40 L. J., Ch., 195; 11 L. R., Eq., 378; 24 L. T., N. S., 175; 19 W. R. 406.

4. A testator died in 1850, having devised his real estates to trustees to accumulate the rents for twenty-one years, and then to convey and assure the estates and accumulations to the person or persons who should then answer the description of his "heir or co-heiresses at law." He died a bachelor, leaving an heir-at-law who died in 1865. Four co-heiresses of the testator succeeded to the property in 1871:—Held, that succession duty was payable. Ring v. Jarman, 14 L. R., Eq., 357; 41 L. J., Ch., 535; 20 W. R. 744; 26 L. T., N. S., 690.

5. A person succeeding on the death of an uncle to an estate, either in England or in Scotland, under an entail created by a direct ancestor, becomes beneficially entitled to the property by devolution by law within s. 2 of the Succession Duty Act, and has not derived the interest from the original settlor, and he is, therefore, liable to pay succession duty at the rate of 3 per cent. Zetland (Earl) v. Lord Advocate, 26 W. R. 725; 38 L. T., N. S., 297; 3 L. R., App. Cas. (Sc.), 505.

6. Where a power is created, to be exercised over an estate, the donor of the power, the person out of whose estate a benefit or "succession" is to be derived, is, within s. 2 of the Succession Duties Act, the "predecessor" of the person taking such benefit or "succession." Charlton v. Att.-Gen., 4 L. R., App. Cas., 427; 27 W. R. 921; 40 L. T. 760; 49 L. J., Exch., 86. Affirming 2 L. R., Exch. D., 398; 46 L. J., Exch., 750; 37 L. T. 211; 26 W. R. 154. Reversing 1 L. R., Exch. D., 204; 45 L. J., Ch., 354; 34 L. T. 503; 24 W. R. 788.

St. J., tenant for life in possession, and W., tenant in tail in remainder of certain estates, barred the entail and settled the estates to such uses as they should jointly appoint. On the following day they appointed the estates to such uses as they should jointly appoint, and in default of appointment to St. J. for life, remainder to W. for life, remainder to the first and other sons of W. in tail male, remainder to such uses as St. J. and T. should jointly appoint, and in default of appointment to T. for life, remainder to the first and other sons of T. in tail male, with remainders over. W. died in 1864, a bachelor, without having exercised his power of appointment. In 1866 St. J. and T. appointed the estates, subject to the life estate of St. J., in the events which happened, to the use that A., the widow of St. J., should receive an annuity, and subject thereto, and to an annuity given in certain events which had not happened to the wife of T., to the use of D. during so much of a certain period as she should live. St. J. died in 1873, and the uses limited in favour of A. and D. thereupon took effect:—Held, that the case fell within s. 2, and was not within s. 4 of the Succession Duty Act. Ib.

The case is not to be treated as an alienation within the 15th section of the statute. Ib.

And, held, following Braybrooke (Lord) v. Att.-Gen. (9 H. L. Ca. 150; 31 L. J., Exch., 177), Att.-Gen. v. Floyer (9 H. L. Ca. 477; 31

L. J., Exch., 404), and Att.-Gen. v. Smythe (9 H. L. Ca. 497; 31 L. J., Exch., 404), that duty was payable upon the interests of A. and D. as successions derived from W. as predecessor. Ib.

1. A tenant for life and the reversioner in fee under a will mortgaged their respective interests, with the usual powers of sale, to the same persons. This power of sale was exercised, and the transferee of the mortgages became absolutely entitled, and devised the estates on trust for sale. Succession duty was paid on the succession to the vendor, the transferee of the mortgages. On a sale exception was taken by the purchaser to the title, on the ground that succession duty was payable also on the succession to the original testator:—Held, that the duty was not so payable. Re Cooper and Allen, 35 L. T., N. S., 890; 25 W. R. 301; 46 L. J., Ch., 133; 4 L. R., Ch. D., 802.

"By alienation or by any title not conferring a new succession," in s. 15 of the Succession Duty Act 1853, means either by alienation or by any title other than alienation, in both cases not conferring a new succession. Ib.

Settlement after the Succession Duty Act: A. tenant for life; D. remainder in fee. A. and B. convey their estates for money to C. in fee. C. dies, having devised to D. in fee. D. pays duty on his succession from C., and then sells. On A.'s death no more succession duty will be payable than has already been paid by D. Ib.

2. A conveyance or an assignment by way of bonâ fide sale does not create a succession within the meaning of the Succession Duty Act, 16 & 17 Vict., c. 51. Fryer v. Morland, 3 L. R., Ch. D., 675; 45 L. J., Ch., 817; 25 W. R. 21; 35 L. T., N. S., 458.

Where the purchaser of a reversionary life interest in settled property had contracted to sell it to the tenant for life in possession, in consideration of a sum of money paid down and a further sum payable on the death of the tenant for life, secured by a charge on the reversion:—Held, that there was no succession created within the meaning of s. 2, and that no duty would be payable on the death of the tenant for life in respect of the charge. Ib.

3. Lands charged with payment of a jointure were settled, and a power of sale, with the consent of the tenant for life for the time being, was thereby given to the trustees. A portion of the property was sold with the consent of the tenant for life and the jointress:—Held, that the land sold would not be subject to succession duty on the determination of the jointure, and that the purchaser must complete without indemnity against it. Dugdale v. Meadows, 9 L. R., Eq., 212; 39 L. J., Ch., 181; 18 W. R. 310. Affirmed 6 L. R., Ch., 501; 24 L. T. 113; 40 L. J., Ch., 140.

The proviso in the Succession Duty Act, s. 42, applies to a case where the power of sale relates to the successor's estate only, and does not overreach the antecedent estate, upon the determination of which succession duty will become payable. Ib.

4. A. died intestate and without having been married. He was entitled to an interest in reversion expectant on his father's death, in a settled fund. The father, to whom letters of administration of A.'s estate were granted, paid 3 per cent. administration duty under s. 27 of the Customs and Inland Revenue Act 1881, upon the estimated value of A.'s estate, including the above reversionary interest:—Held, that the father was exempted by s. 41 of the same Act from paying duty at 1*l.* per cent. in respect of A.'s succession, to his father, under s. 10 of the Succession Duty Act 1853. Re Haygarth's Trusts, 22 L. R., Ch. D., 545; 52 L. J., Ch., 416; 48 L. T. 24; 31 W. R. 316.

VI. ALLOWANCES.

5. In 1796, a testator devised freehold estates to his cousin N., for life, with remainder to R. N., eldest son of N., for life, with remainder to the first and other sons of R. N. in tail male. In 1841, R. N. (being tenant for life in possession), and his son (being tenant in tail in remainder), executed a disentailing deed, whereby they limited the estates, subject and without prejudice to the life estate of R. N., to such uses as he and his son should appoint, and in default of such appointment, to such uses as his son, in case he survived him, should appoint, and in default to him for life, with remainder to his first and other sons in tail male. In 1850, R. N. and his son executed a joint appointment, whereby they limited the estate to such uses as R. N. and his son should appoint, and in default thereof (subject to a rent-charge to the son of 1,200*l.* a year), to the use of R. N. for life, with remainder to the son for life, with remainder to his first and other sons in tail male. R. N. died in 1858:—Held, that his son was entitled to an allowance in respect of the 1,200*l.* a year, which ceased on the death of R. N. Braybrooke (Lord) v. Att.-Gen., 9 H. L. Ca. 150; 31 L. J., Exch., 177; 7 Jur., N. S., 741; 9 W. R. 601; 4 L. T., N. S., 218.

6. If a tenant for life, and his son, the first tenant in tail under a will or a previous settlement, re-settles the estate, and by such re-settlement an annuity, charged upon the estate, is given to the son during his father's life, and the father dies and the son succeeds to the estate on which the annuity is charged, there must be, in calculating the succession duty under the Succession Duties Act, s. 38, an allowance made to the son in respect of the amount of the annuity. Commissioners of Inland Revenue v. Harrison, 7 L. R., H. L., 1; 43 L. J., Exch., 138; 22 W. R. 559; 30 L. T. 274. Affirming 26 L. T. 73.

7. Whether the re-settlement was made before or after the Succession Duties Act came into operation makes no difference. Ib.

VII. INSTALMENTS.

8. The power of a tenant in tail in possession to enlarge his estate so that he shall become competent to dispose by will of a continuing interest in the entailed property is incident to the estate which such tenant takes under the instrument creating the entail; and if he exercises the power, he must be treated for the purpose of succession duty as if he had succeeded to such enlarged estate; and any instalments of succession duty that may be unpaid at his decease will become a continuing charge on the property in the hands of his successor or other owner for the time being.

VIII. FUND SET APART FOR.

1. A fund set apart by the testator for the payment of the legacy and succession duty, "in consequence of his death," is liable to pay the duty upon every succession which occurs upon his death, and not merely upon those successions which are created by his will. Powlett (Lord) v. Hood, 12 Jur., N. S., 85; 14 W. R. 298; 13 L. T., N. S., 783.

A tenant for life directed his executors to pay, out of a particular fund, his pecuniary legacies and annuities, "and the legacy and succession duty payable for the same or in consequence of his death":—Held, that the succession duty payable by the next remainderman, under a prior settlement and in respect of family estates not devised, was charged on the fund. S. C. 35 Beav. 234.

2. B., being entitled to 3,500*l.*, surrenders his interest to his son, who would be entitled to it at his death under a trust deed; and on petition presented by father and son, under the 16 & 17 Vict., c. 51, ss. 15 and 53, that the Court should provide 1*l.* per cent. to answer succession duty:—Held, that inasmuch as the sum was stock, and not money, 1*l.* 10*s.* per cent. must be set apart, with a personal undertaking of the son to pay the money. Bailey v. Tindal, 2 W. R. 129; 18 Jur. 668; 2 Eq. Rep. 538.

IX. VENDOR AND PURCHASER.

3. An executor and devisee in trust sold a leasehold interest, and also the reversion in fee, subject to an intermediate life interest, to a purchaser:—Held, that the vendor must pay the succession duty on the leasehold interest; but the purchaser must pay the duty on the reversion. Cooper v. Trenby, 8 W. R. 299; 28 Beav. 194.

4. A person devised real estate to trustees by sale or mortgage, to raise a certain sum of money, and subject thereto for his son. The trustees sold the estate by auction in lots, and L. became the purchaser of two of the lots. Pending the investigation of the title, the required sum was received out of the purchase money of the other lots. The commissioners of inland revenue having charged and received legacy duty in respect of the purchase money of the lots sold to L.:—Held, that the lots were protected by the Succession Duty Act, 16 & 17 Vict., c. 51, s. 18, from any charge for succession duty. Howe (Earl) v. Lichfield (Earl), 36 L. J., Ch., 313; 2 L. R., Ch., 155; 16 L. T., N. S., 436; 15 W. R. 323.

Where a certificate has been obtained from the Inland Revenue Office, that all duty in respect of land sold has been properly paid, the purchaser is not entitled to any more exact or formal one, saying whether succession or legacy duty is the proper duty. S. C. 1 L. R., Eq., 641; 14 W. R. 468; 14 L. T., N. S., 122.

5. Estates subject to a jointure rent-charge were settled subject to a power of sale, with trusts for re-investment of the purchase money in lands to be settled to the like uses, and were sold under the power of sale:—Held, that the charge of succession duty that would become payable on the extinction of the jointure, was shifted by s. 42 of the Succession Duty Act from the lands sold to the purchase money, and the lands on which it might be re-invested, and therefore the purchaser was not entitled to require it to be paid for. Dugdale v. Meadows, 6 L. R., Ch., 501; 40 L. J., Ch., 140; 24 L. T. 113. Affirming 9 L. R., Eq., 212; 39 L. J., Ch., 181; 18 W. R. 310.

6. The effect of a sale by the Court under the powers conferred by the Settled Estates Act 1877, of any settled estates, is, by the operation of the 22nd section of that Act, to revoke the uses of the settlement; and by the operation of the 42nd section of the Succession Duty Act 1853, the duty is shifted from the land sold to the purchase money or its investments, and the land in the hands of a purchaser is freed from the succession duty. Re Warner's Settled Estates, Warner to Steel, 17 L. R., Ch. D., 711; 50 L. J., Ch., 542; 45 L. T. 37; 29 W. R. 726.

X. OTHER MATTERS.

7. Where an application is made for payment out of the Court of Chancery of a sum of money on which duty will afterwards become payable for succession duty, the Court will recommend the petitioner to commute the duty. Bailey v. Tindall, 18 Jur. 668.

8. A testator bequeathed a legacy to C. "for her absolute use and benefit, except as hereinafter limited," and directed the same, with other legacies to females, to be invested, and the interest to be for the legatees' separate use; and in case any of the legatees should become bankrupt, or assign the interest bequeathed to her, the same was to fall into his residuary estate, "except in respect of C., whose legacy is to go to her children, according to her appointment, and in default to them absolutely." By C.'s marriage settlement her husband had covenanted to settle all after-acquired property of his wife. C. died without having become bankrupt or assigned her interest in the legacy, and having, by will, appointed the same to her children equally. The commissioners of inland revenue thereupon insisted that C.'s share did not go to her children directly under the will, but that her husband must take out administration to her estate, in order to obtain possession of it. By consent the question was raised upon a petition for the opinion of the Court under 22 & 23 Vict., c. 35, s. 30:—Held, that by consent the question, although between the Crown and a subject, might be decided on this petition; and that under the will the legacy upon C.'s death went directly to her children. Re Ware, 41 L. J., Ch., 121; 25 L. T., N. S., 737; 20 W. R. 142.

9. Costs of trustees of rendering the necessary accounts for the purpose of paying the succession duty in respect of a life estate, are payable by the tenant for life. Cowley (Earl) v. Wellesley, 35 Beav. 642.

10. When a person absolutely entitled to a reversionary interest in personalty settled it on the usual trusts of a marriage settlement, and, on the reversion falling in, paid the whole of the succession duty, which had become payable thereon, out of his own moneys:—Held, that, having regard to s. 32 of the Succession

Duty Act, 16 & 17 Vict., c. 51, he was entitled to be recouped out of the corpus of the settled fund. Cuddon v. Cuddon, 4 L. R., Ch. D., 583; 46 L. J., Ch., 257; 25 W. R. 341.

1. Real and personal estate was given by will to A. and B. to permit X. to receive the income during his life, remainder to the use of an infant. On the death of X. leaving his widow and the infant otherwise unprovided for, the Court made an order for the payment of the whole income of the property for her maintenance, to the widow, by A. and B. Shortly afterwards the circumstances of the widow improved, but A. and B., till the death of B., in 1851, and after that event A. alone, still paid the gross income (without ever paying succession duty) to the widow during the minority of the child. The child attained twenty-one in 1873, married, and sought to charge A. and the estate of B. with, first, excess of payments for maintenance, having regard to the widow's altered circumstances; second, dilapidations; third, amount paid for succession duty, with interest:—Held, first, that the order was a protection during the joint lives of A. and B., but that the trust so created did not survive, and that an inquiry must therefore be directed whether A. properly paid the whole income from 1861. Brown v. Smith, 46 L. J., Ch., 866.

Held, secondly, that they were under no liability for dilapidations; third, that they were liable for succession duty, but not for the interest. Ib.

The widow, in 1863, married J. W., who died in 1872. On the 7th May 1874 she married R. W. Y. sought to charge J. W.'s estate, Y.'s separate estate, if any, and R. W. in the same way:—Held, first, that J. W.'s liability in respect as well of his wife's receipt of income, from 1861 to 1863, as of her accountability for succession duty, terminated with the coverture. Ib.

Held, secondly, that R. W. was similarly protected by s. 12 of the Married Women's Property Act 1870. Ib.

Held, thirdly, that J. W.'s estate was liable for the receipts of income from 1863 to 1872. Ib.

I. RIGHTS OF CROWN, 6103.
II. NAVIGABLE, OBSTRUCTION OF, 6104.
III. NAVIGABLE, RIPARIAN RIGHTS IN, 6104.
IV. TOWING PATH, 6105.
V. OVERFLOW, DAMAGE BY, 6105.

I. RIGHTS OF CROWN.

3. There is no authority to show that the Crown is of common right entitled to land covered by water, where the water is not running water forming a river, but still water forming a lake. Bristow v. Cormican, 3 L. R., App. Cas., 641.

4. The bed of all navigable rivers where the tide flows and reflows, and of all estuaries or arms of the sea, is vested in the Crown, but subject to the right of navigation which belongs by law to the subjects of the realm, and of which the right to anchor forms a part; and every grant made by the Crown of the bed or soil of an estuary or a navigable river must be subject to such public right of navigation. Gann v. Free Fishers of Whitstable Co., 11 H. L. Ca. 192; 35 L. J., C. P., 29; 13 W. R. 589; 12 L. T., N. S., 150.

The ownership of the soil of navigable rivers and estuaries which is vested in the Crown, is, and always has been. No grant of the bed of a river or estuary could, even before Magna Charta, have been made by the Crown, except subject to the public right of navigation. A claim to levy toll, by virtue of the ownership of the soil of an estuary, from ships casting anchor on such soil, where no special consideration is offered in return for such toll, is bad, and cannot be supported by any length of enjoyment. S. C. 5 N. R. 432.

II. NAVIGABLE, OBSTRUCTION OF.

1. A wharf-owner drove piles into the bed of a river, extending the wharf so as to occupy three feet out of a breadth of about sixty feet available for navigation:—Held, that this was such an obstruction as would be restrained at the suit of a corporation empowered by Act of Parliament to remove obstructions. Att.-Gen. v. Terry, 9 L. R., Ch., 423; 22 W. R. 395; 30 L. T., N. S., 215. Affirming 22 W. R. 200; 29 L. T., N. S., 716.

An owner of land at the side of a public navigable river has no right to erect on the bed of the river, for the benefit of his own trade, any structure, whether any actual obstruction to the navigation of the river will or will not be thereby occasioned; and any benefit to his own trade is too remote to be held for the advantage of the public generally, and so to justify the erection. Ib.

2. A navigable river is a public highway, navigable by all Her Majesty's subjects in a reasonable manner and for a reasonable purpose. A riparian owner has a right to moor a vessel of ordinary size alongside his wharf for the purpose of loading or unloading, at reasonable times and for a reasonable time. Original Hartlepool Collieries Co. v. Gibb, 5 L. R., Ch. D., 713; 46 L. J., Ch., 311; 36 L. T., N. S., 433.

The Court will restrain by injunction the owner of adjoining premises from interfering with the access of such vessel, even though the vessel may overlap his own premises; though such vessel would not be allowed to interfere with the proper right of access to the neighbouring premises if used as a wharf, nor to the free entrance to or exit from such premises, if used as a dock, by other vessels. Ib.

The plaintiffs were owners of a wharf 125 feet long, on a navigable river, and of a collier boat 176 feet long which stopped there at intervals of time for the purpose of unloading, and while there necessarily projected over part of the defendant's wharf, close to the entrance of a dock where he carried on the business of repairing ships, the wharf itself not being used. The defendant moored a raft of timber used in his business in front of his own wharf so as to interfere with the access of the collier to her berth:—Held, that the raft was an obstruction to the navigation; and that the collier had a right to come at reasonable times to, and remain a reasonable time alongside of, the wharf of the plaintiffs, although she projected over the defendant's wharf while doing so. Ib.

3. Where a public body is, under an Act of Parliament, entrusted with powers and duties for a public purpose, the Court will give credit to them as being the best judges of what they want for that purpose. Att.-Gen. v. Great Eastern Railway Co., 6 L. R., Ch., 572; 19 W. R. 788.

A railway company was restrained from taking a large quantity of water for the use of its station from a river under the control of conservators, credit being given to the evidence on their part that taking such water would impede the navigation, against the evidence on the part of the company that taking such water would produce no appreciable effect. Ib.

4. Under the Thames Conservancy Act 1857, the conservators of the Thames were empowered to erect piers at any convenient place, of such form and construction as they should deem advantageous to the public, and causing the least obstruction to the navigation. The plans were to be first approved by the Admiralty:—Held, that a court of equity had no jurisdiction to interfere by injunction at the suit of the attorney-general, on the ground of the alleged inconvenience of proposed piers; or, at most, that it could only interfere where it was shown that the piers would be entirely useless. Att.-Gen. v. Conservators of River Thames, 1 Hem. & M. 1; 8 Jur., N. S., 1203; 11 W. R. 163.

The statute directed that, whenever the conservators should remove or obstruct the free use and enjoyment of any public stairs or landing-places marked by the Waterman's Company, they should erect equally convenient stairs or landing-places in substitution for them:—Held, that the substitution of new stairs or landing-places was not a condition precedent to the removal or disturbance, and that where the conservators had prepared plans for piers which would interfere with such old stairs without showing any adequate provision in substitution for them, a court of equity would not assume that the duty would be neglected, and would not interfere at the suit of the attorney-general to restrain the works until proper substitutes should be provided for the old stairs. Ib.

III. NAVIGABLE, RIPARIAN RIGHTS IN.

5. The rights of a riparian proprietor against adjoining or opposite riparian proprietors are not greater in respect of a tidal than in respect of a non-tidal river. Att.-Gen. v. Lonsdale (Earl), 38 L. J., Ch., 335; 7 L. R., Eq., 377; 17 W. R. 219; 20 L. T., N. S., 64.

The plaintiff and defendant were opposite riparian proprietors on the banks of a navigable tidal river:—Held, that the defendant could not, for the protection of his own soil or otherwise, construct a jetty projecting into the bed of the river, whereby the tidal water was thrown with greater violence upon the plaintiff's shore, and the public navigation of the river was or might be impeded; and that a suit by information and bill in equity to restrain the erection of such a jetty was properly instituted. Ib.

Held, also, that the fact of the river traffic having been almost entirely superseded by local causes did not affect the right of the public to have the navigation conserved. Ib.

1. The owner of land abutting on a tidal navigable river has, jure naturæ, a right of access to and from the stream wholly distinct from the right of navigation which he enjoys in common with the rest of the public. Lyon v. Fishmongers' Co., 25 W. R. 165; 46 L. J., Ch., 68; 1 L. R., App. Cas., 662; 35 L. T., N. S., 569. Reversing 10 L. R., Ch., 679; 14 L. J., Ch., 747; 24 W. R. 1.

There is no distinction between the position of a riparian owner of land abutting on a tidal and that of an owner of land abutting on a non-tidal stream, as far as regards right of access from the stream to his own land, and vice versâ. Ib.

Such right of access is a private right distinct from the right of navigating the stream, which is common to the riparian owner and the rest of the public, and it is not to be interfered with by a licence to embank, under s. 53 of the Thames Conservancy Act 1857 (20 & 21 Vict., c. 147), but is protected by s. 179 of that Act. Ib.

The right of a riparian owner to the use of the stream does not depend on the ownership of the soil of the stream. Ib.

2. A riparian proprietor may have a private right of access to a navigable river distinct from his right as a member of the general public. Att.-Gen. v. Conservators of the River Thames, 1 N. R. 121; 1 Hem. & M. 1; 8 Jur., N. S., 1203; 11 W. R. 163.

3. Alluvial lands which are gradually gained from the river, belong, by way of accretion, to the lands of the adjoining proprietor. Mussumat Imam Bandi v. Hurgovind Ghose, 4 Moo. Ind. App. 403.

An order giving possession of lands made by Foujdarry (police magistrate's) Court, upon a charge of a breach of the peace coming before the magistrate, is not a determination respecting the rights to such lands. Ib.

Lands having been submerged by a change of the course of the river Ganges, after several years, reappeared. Upon a disputed question of right to such lands by two adjoining proprietors, each claiming the lands to be part of his mouza, the Sudder Court held the plaintiff's claim to be barred, first, by the Bengal regulations of limitation from lapse of time; and, secondly, that the lands were alluvial, and attached to the mouza of the defendant. Such decree, upon appeal, reversed, the Judicial Committee holding, first, that the question of limitation not having been put in issue by the pleadings, could not be allowed to operate upon the case; and, secondly, that the Court had mistaken the question in supposing it one of alluvion, the point at issue being one of boundary only, and that the plaintiff had made out his title to possession. Ib.

IV. TOWING PATH.

4. Provisions in different Acts of Parliament appointed conservators of a river navigation and gave them full powers to do what was necessary for carrying the object of the Acts into effect, including powers to purchase land and levy tolls. The conservators executed the powers of the Acts so far as related to the improvement of the river navigation, and the making of towing paths—and they levied tolls. There was no evidence that they had actually purchased any of the land that lay along the course of the navigation, and had been used to form the towing paths:—Held, that, as the Acts might be carried into effect without purchasing, the burden of proof lay on the conservators to show that they had purchased; and since they had failed to show it, though they were entitled to an injunction to prevent any owner of adjoining land from so using the towing paths as to obstruct in any way their free use for the purposes of the navigation, they were not entitled to be treated as owners of the soil of the towing-paths. Lee Navigation Conservators v. Button, 6 L. R., App. Cas., 685; 51 L. J., Ch., 17; 45 L. T. 385; 30 W. R, 233. Affirming 12 L. R., Ch. D., 383.

A right of way along the bank, of the nature of a towing path, is not a necessary incident to an inland navigation. Ib.

V. OVERFLOW, DAMAGE BY.

5. A dock company, which was empowered by Act of Parliament to make and maintain a dock and works according to the levels defined on the deposited sections, constructed its dock communicating with the Thames by an artificial channel, the height of the retaining bank of which and of the dock was shown on the sections to be 4 feet above Trinity high-water mark. The natural level of the land surrounding the dock was some 8 feet below Trinity high-water mark, and the river was kept from overflowing it by means of a river wall 4 feet 2 inches above Trinity high-water mark. The company allowed part of its retaining bank to be some inches below the height of 4 feet above Trinity high-water mark. An extraordinarily high tide took place, the water rising to 4 feet 5 inches above high-water mark, and the water in the dock overflowed the bank and damaged the property of an adjoining landowner. In an action for damages by the latter:—Held, that the company was liable to damages, because it had broken its statutory obligation to maintain its retaining bank at the height of 4 feet above high-water mark; that, independently of the Act, the company was bound, as a riparian proprietor, to keep the bank up to the level of the rest of the river wall, and was liable to damages for negligence in not doing so; and that, although the extraordinarily high tide was an act of God, that fact did not free the company from its liability, though, if it could show that some of the damage which actually happened was exclusively attributable to a cause beyond its control, it would be entitled to a proper deduction in that respect. Nitro-Phosphate and Odam's Chemical Manure Co. v. London and St. Katharine's Docks Co., 39 L. T., N. S., 433; 9 L. R., Ch. D., 503; 27 W. R. 267.

6. Commissioners of sewers are entitled to restrain a railway company by injunction until the hearing, from interfering with a natural deposit of beach, forming a protection to the country from the inundations of a tidal navigable river, within the survey of the commissioners; and this notwithstanding a purchase by the company from the lord of the manor, under parliamentary powers, of the spot in question. Crossman v. Bristol & South Wales Union Railway Co., 11 W. R. 981; 1 Hem. & M. 351.

Semble, that "banks and walls, etc.," by tidal and navigable rivers, as well as by the sea coasts, are included in 3 & 4 Will. 4, c. 22. Ib.

I. DISABILITIES, 6106.
II. CONFORMITY, 6108.

I. DISABILITIES.

1. The Court granted a receiver, on a bill filed to raise the arrears of an annuity granted to a lady who afterwards became a nun, the law as to civil death ceasing at the Reformation, and not being revived by the 10 Geo. 4, c. 7. Evans v. Cassidy, 11 Ir. Eq. R. 243.

2. Whether a creditor who is a papist is entitled to be paid his debts out of money arising by sale of the real estate, under the appointment in the will, quære. Foone v. Pinkard, Ambl. 320. Foone v. Blount, id. 767.

3. Where trusts are made to papists they are void, and the legal estate will be void likewise, by 11 & 12 Will. 3. Adlington v. Cann, 3 Atk. 155.

Devisee from a papist by reason of the penal law, which would attach upon him from the incapacity in the devisor to devise, is not compelled to discover whether devisor was a papist. Smith v. Read, 1 Atk. 526.

4. Plea to bill, to discover whether A. was not a papist upon conveying to defendant, allowed. Harrison v. Southcote, 1 Atk. 528.

5. A papist may be tenant by the curtesy. Withrington v. Banks, Sel. Ch. Ca. 30. And see 3 P. W. 49. n.

6. Devise of land to trustees, in trust, if the elder son of A. turn protestant, then to such eldest son:—Held, a good devise to a papist, but not to a protestant. Carteret v. Carteret, 2 P. W. 132.

7. By 11 & 12 Will. 3, c. 4, s. 4, a papist was not only disabled from purchasing lands himself, but also from taking either by devise or settlement; but that statute is now repealed, in these respects, by 18 Geo. 3, c. 60. Papists (case of), 2 P. W. 3.

8. A papist cannot take a freehold or leasehold estate by will, because taking by will is taking by purchase, and by the express words of the statute 11 & 12 Will. 3, c. 4, a papist is disabled to take by purchase; also terms for years are expressly mentioned in the statute. (Davers v. Dewes, 3 P. W. 46.) For this reason it has been held that a papist cannot extend land on a judgment, for that would give him an interest in the land, and it is the same where the judgment is given in trust for the papist. Lowther v. Fletcher, 3 P. W. 46. n.

9. By 11 & 12 Will. 3, c. 4 a papist under eighteen is disabled from taking only till conformity; but if more than six months above eighteen, he is disabled for ever. Vane v. Fletcher, 1 P. W. 353.

10. T., a papist, seised in fee of lands purchased before the stat. 2 Ann, c. 6, by articles on the marriage of his son in 1708, covenanted to settle not only those lands, but others acquired since the statute, in strict settlement:—Held, that these articles had no operation; neither on the lands purchased before the statute, because such a disposition was made void by that statute; nor on the lands purchased afterwards, because, by the statute, T. was disqualified from holding an estate sufficient to support the covenants. Moore v. Butler, 2 Sch. & Lef. 249.

Articles executed in 1714, and a settlement in pursuance thereof, in 1720, made between T., and J., his eldest son (both being papists), settling lands acquired since 1708, and resettling the former lands on J. for life, remainder to his then first and other sons for life, remainder to their issue in strict settlement:—Held, also inoperative, except as to making a provision for younger children, and not sufficient to put the son of J. to an election:—Held, therefore, that, under a Protestant Discovery Act, decree obtained in 1751, in trust for, and assigned to, J. the younger (the son of J., the settlor), J. the younger was not a trustee for the persons claiming under that settlement, but that the effect of that decree was to subject the premises comprised therein to the mortgage of J. the younger. Ib.

11. A conviction of recusancy cannot be given in evidence against a third person, under 11 & 12 Will. & M., c. 4 (an Act against papists), but the facts must be proved. Hanbury v. Bateman, 2 Atk. 65.

12. A papist by marriage articles, previous to the disabling statute, 11 & 12 Will. 3, covenants to lay out 12,000*l.* on the purchase of land. The money is never laid out, and therefore shall still be considered as money, and go to the personal representative instead of even a protestant heir. Bowes v. Shrewsbury, 5 Bro. P. C. 148.

13. Papist tenant in tail, in the year 1766, confessed judgments to a trustee, in trust, for the use of a settlement made on the marriage of his nephew, and afterwards, in 1770, suffered a recovery:—Held, that the judgments were not a fraud on the then existing disabling statutes, that the recovery (not having any operation to defeat the provisions of those statutes) was valid, and that the issue of the marriage claiming under the settlement had a right to raise the amount of the judgments out of the lands in the hands of a purchaser with notice. O'Fallon v. Dillon, 2 Sch. & Lef. 13.

1. A decree obtained by a protestant discoverer under the popery laws was capable of being a trust for the papist, who had been antecedently seised, and the only effect was to make the former estate again discoverable. Such a decree, under the circumstances of this case, was held to be a trust, and a judgment confessed by the papist attached upon the lands by the force of the statute 17 & 18 Geo. 3, c. 49. Inquiry directed whether the papist against whom the decree was obtained had an estate in fee, without sending the question to law. A moiety only can be sold for payment of a judgment debt. O'Gorman v. Comyn, 2 Sch. & Lef. 137.

2. A papist, by articles on his marriage, in 1764, agreed "to convey to trustees in strict settlement, in case he should at any time thereafter during his life be qualified by law so to do." In 1778 he became qualified, by the statute of 17 & 18 Geo. 3, to carry these articles into execution:—Held, that the lands were not specifically bound by these articles until 1778; and therefore judgments subsequent to 1764, but before 1778, were prior liens; for to hold that the articles of 1764 bound the lands specifically, would defeat the intent of the parties, by giving a title to protestant discoverer:—Held, also, that judgment creditors were not bound by the articles of 1764, but that they were bound from the passing of the statute 17 & 18 Geo. 3, c. 49. Kennedy v. Daly, 1 Sch. & Lef. 355.

3. A papist seised in fee previously to her marriage with plaintiff, a papist, in consideration thereof, and of his covenanting to make up her dower 800*l.* per annum, and provide for younger children, covenanted for her and her heirs to pay 8,000*l.* as her marriage portion, to be applied in procuring assignments of charges on his estate, in trust for the heir male of the marriage; but if no issue male, then for the daughters; if no issue, for plaintiff; 4,000*l.* was paid; the marriage took effect, and the wife died without issue; whereupon her lands came to her sisters, as her heirs-at-law, against whom plaintiff filed his bill for the residue of the 8,000*l.* Lifford, C., held he was entitled to recover in respect of the lands come to the heirs, for they are real assets, and there is nothing in the popery laws (2 Ann, c. 6, and 8 Ann, c. 3) which prevents a papist from binding his heirs to a papist for a fair debt, or a fair and valuable consideration, or at all alters the law with respect to lands descending being real assets in the hands of the heir. Aylmer v. Bellew, Vern. & Scriv. 15.

4. A Roman Catholic, entitled to real estate, did not take the oath necessary under the statute to qualify him to hold it, and was not in enjoyment of the lands, nor were proceedings taken to enforce his title until after the passing of the Roman Catholic Relief Act (10 Geo. 4, c. 7):—Held, that s. 23 of that Act removed his former disability. O'Connell v. O'Callaghan, 7 Ir. Eq. R. 596.

5. By an Act of Parliament made in Ireland, 2 Ann, to prevent the growth of popery, no person professing that religion can be the guardian of an infant; but such guardianship, where the person entitled to it is a papist, shall be disposed of by the Court of Chancery in that kingdom to some near relation of the infant, being a protestant, and one to whom the infant's estate cannot descend; but if there shall be no such protestant relation, then to some other proper person, who will use his utmost care to educate the infant in the protestant religion until the age of twenty-one. Preston v. Ferrard (Lord), 4 Bro. P. C. 298.

6. A lease granted by a papist at the full improved yearly value, but to commence at the next succeeding quarter-day, is not such a future or reversionary lease as papists are prohibited from taking. Power v. Windis, 5 Bro. P. C. 472.

7. Papists are not prohibited from devising lands to protestant trustee to be sold bonâ fide for payment of debts, etc. Cusack v. Gilbert, 5 Bro. P. C. 465.

8. Where bill is filed by protestant discoverer to have the benefit of a lease granted to a papist, on the ground of the rent reserved being of less than two-thirds of yearly value; the fact ought to be tried by jury, upon trial of proper issue. Kealey v. Dawes, 5 Bro. P. C. 460.

9. A papist having a power of revocation under a settlement made prior to the Irish Popery Acts executes that power after the Acts passed:—Held, that the revocation was good. French v. Caddell, 3 Bro. P. C. 266.

10. R. seised in fee of lands, demised the same in 1696 to T., a papist, for lives; T. died in 1727, when W., his eldest son, also a papist, became seised as special occupant; in 1741 he conveyed all his interest to M., in consideration of 500*l.* M. died in 1750, leaving C., respondent's wife, and his heir-at-law, and F., who obtained administration. W. died in 1751, leaving an infant daughter A., and B. his widow, who entered and received the rents. Appellants intermarried in 1770, during the minority of A., who became of age in 1772; and in 1778 appellants filed their bill, charging that W. was almost an idiot, and was imposed upon by K., for whom M. was only a trustee; that no consideration was paid; that the consideration pretended was made up of false accounts by K., who, being an attorney, had alarmed W. by telling him that his interest was discoverable under the popery laws, and that therefore he must convey to some protestant to protect it, though K. knew that the original demise in 1696 was prior to the Popery Acts; that in 1741 K. filed a bill in the name of D., as a protestant discoverer against W., praying to be decreed the benefits of the demise in 1696, and of the renewals, on an allegation that X., the father of W., had by his will in 1727 devised his interest to papists; that K. proceeded in the cause, prepared the answers of all the defendants, and in 1742 the Court decreed in favour of D. the protestant, which decree was drawn up by K., who caused it to be inserted; that depositions were read at the hearing, though by the registrar's minutes it appeared that none were taken in the cause; that in 1742, D. assigned the decree to M. in trust for K., who purchased the inheritance of the lands. Appellants, after adducing many evidences of fraud and inadequacy of consideration, prayed that the decree in 1742 might be set aside for fraud, and a renewal of the original lease of 1696. Respondents, by their answer, insisted on the fairness of the transaction, which they explained, and insisted on the Statute of Limitations as to matters of account, and on length of time since the original purchase. Whereupon the Court dismissed the bill, and their decree of dismissal was on appeal affirmed by the Lords. Mulcahy v. Kennedy, 1 Ridgw. P. C. 331.

1. The protestant next of kin are only entitled to the profits in case of descents, for in case of a purchase or grant by a papist, they are void by statute 11 & 12 Will. 3. Michaux v. Grove, 2 Atk. 210.

2. If A. by a bond binds himself, his heirs, executors, etc., to a papist, who obtains judgment and takes out an elegit, such papist cannot maintain an ejectment, yet the bond binds the representative or obligor. Sorresby v. Hollins, 9 Mod. 223.

3. The next protestant kin may redeem a mortgage by a popish heir. Jones v. Meredith, Bunb. 346; Com. 661.

So may a tenant by elegit, statute merchant, staple, or tenant by curtesy, or in dower, as well as the mortgagor, his heir, assignee, or subsequent incumbrancer. Ib.

4. Lands leased to a papist at less than two-thirds of improved value, or for any term above thirty-one years, are forfeited to the discoverer, being a protestant. Blake v. Blake, 5 Bro. P. C. 384.

5. Dividends of a fund in court ordered to be paid to a tenant for life, a professed nun, on petition, without inquiry into the circumstances under which the petition was presented, the Court holding the solicitor who filed it responsible. Re Holdsworth's Trusts, 2 Eq. Rep. 1090; 2 W. R. 692.

6. A papist being tenant in tail, suffered a common recovery, and declared the uses to himself and his heirs; this is not a purchase within the statute 11 & 12 Will. 3, c. 4. Derwentwater (Lord), Appeal of, 9 Mod. 172.

7. By Irish Act of Parliament for preventing the growth of popery, papists are disabled from holding leases of lands for any term exceeding thirty-one years, and under a rent of not less than two-thirds of the improved yearly value at the time of making the lease. The Court of Chancery may upon evidence determine the question of value without sending it to a jury, and may also give full relief to a protestant discoverer under those Acts, without putting him to his remedy at law. Cusack v. Bulkley, 5 Bro. P. C. 369.

8. Where the eldest son of a papist had conformed to the Established Church, and thereby rendered his father tenant for life, under the 2 Ann, c. 6, a bill having been filed to secure the benefit of his reversion in fee, and to restrain the father from committing waste, an injunction was granted upon the answer. Cockburn v. Hussey, Wall. Lyn. 234.

9. On an issue directed to try the validity of a will it was a sufficient finding that the testator was a papist, such having been at the time incapacitated from devising. Farrell v. Crosbie, Wall. Lyn. 162.

10. Testator gave a legacy in trust for his daughter for life, remainder in trust for her children who should attain twenty-one, remainder in trust for two of his sons absolutely; and he gave the residue of his personal estate to his other children. By a codicil he declared that, finding that his daughter intended to become a nun, he revoked the bequest, in the event of her carrying her intention into effect, and excluded her from all reversionary advantages from his will. The daughter became a nun:—Held, that the condition annexed by the codicil was a lawful one, and that, though the bequest in favour of the daughter was merely revoked, and there was no gift over on breach of the condition, her interest under the bequest ceased on her becoming a nun. Exp. Dickson's Trust, 1 Sim., N. S., 37; 20 L. J., N. S., Ch., 33; 15 Jur. 282.

11. An English convent may be a devisee or legatee of real or personal estate. Cooke v. Manners, 40 L. J., Ch., 640; 12 L. R., Eq., 574; 24 L. T., N. S., 869; 19 W. R. 1053.

A testatrix by her will appointed the residue of her disposable property equally between the following religious institutions, viz.,—The Newport Catholic Chapel, for the general purposes thereof (and payable to the officiating priest for the time being); the Brighton Catholic Chapel, in Upper St. James's Street (payable for the like purposes, to the officiating priest); the Dominican Convent at Carisbrook (payable to the superior for the time being); and the Sisters of the Charity of St. Paul, at Selley Oak, near Birmingham (payable to the superior for the time being). The receipts of the priests and superiors were respectively made discharges for the same. The testatrix died seised of considerable realty, and pure and impure personalty, all subject to her appointment. The priests each claimed only one-fourth of the residue of the pure personalty, which was not disputed:—Held, that the appointment in favour of the Dominican Convent was valid, in toto, but that in favour of the Sisters at Selley Oak was good as a charitable bequest only. Ib.

12. The prohibition of monastic bodies in the Roman Catholic Relief Act 1829 (10 Geo. 4, c. 7) applies to such bodies as settled in the realm after the passing of the Act as well as to those who were then residing in it:—Held, therefore, that a trust for the benefit of a church belonging to the Society of St. Vincent de Paul, who came to Ireland in 1838, having left it in 1690, and who are bound by religious or monastic vows, is void. Liston v. Keegan 9 L. R., Ir., 531.

II. CONFORMITY.

13. An attorney, a papist, petitioned for leave to take the oath prescribed by stat. 31 Geo. 3, c. 32, s. 22, instead of the oath of supremacy, on being admitted a master extraordinary in chancery; but refused. Exp. Agar, 3 Ves. & B. 160.

14. A papist neglecting to take the oaths prescribed by the stat. 17 & 18 Geo. 3, c. 41, within six months, etc., was not protected by that statute from a protestant information, nor enabled to sue; but the consequences of such neglect are removed by stat. 33 Geo. 3, c. 21, upon his performing the requisites therein mentioned. Kennedy v. Daly, 1 Sch. & Lef. 355, 381.

15. The bishop's certificate of the conformity of a papist must state, in the words of the statute, that he conformed, etc. A certificate, stating the facts of the papist appearing in church, declaring his renunciation, etc., is not sufficient. Such certificate does not preclude evidence that the alleged conformist continued to be a papist. Moore v. Butler, 2 Sch. & Lef. 249.

1. The conformity of an eldest son for the purpose of making his popish father tenant for life, under the popery laws, is invalid, unless it was had before the bishop of the diocese which the conformist did inhabit. Cockburn v. Hussey, 2 Ridgw. P. C. 510.

2. An Irish papist conforming anywhere out of Ireland, cannot purchase lands in that kingdom before he had complied with the several requisites of the Irish Acts, 2 Ann, c. 6, and 8 Ann, c. 3. Carrol v. Vicars, 5 Bro. P. C. 396.

3. In a certificate of conformity under the stat. 2 Ann, c. 6, the precise words of the statute need not be followed, the object of the Act being fully satisfied if the fact be sufficiently certified; therefore, where a certificate was questioned because that it did not in precise words state that the party had conformed, it was held that the certificate was sufficient, though the word "conformed" was not in it, since it clearly certified the fact. Loveland v. Lynch, 2 Dow P. C. 324.

4. Plaintiff, whilst a papist, assigned advowson to defendant for ninety-nine years, and having conformed, brought his bill for reassignment of the term, suggesting he had only assigned it in trust for himself, to avoid the penalties of the statutes 3 Jac. 1, c. 4, and 1 Will. & M., c. 26. Semble, if the defendant had demurred, such a fraudulent conveyance would at the hearing have been absolute against the grantor. Cottington v. Fletcher, 2 Atk. 156.

The Act of 12 Ann, c. 14, does not, in the case of a papist, make the whole trust void, but only the turn upon the avoidance; which is vested in the universities. Ib.

Papists on their conformity are freed from any penalties they might otherwise sustain in respect of their recusancy. Ib.

1. Sale, What is.

1. The plaintiff had employed the defendant, who was a corn-factor, to sell a cargo of corn, which he accordingly sold to C. on the 15th May. Information was afterwards received that before this sale the corn had already been sold, on the 24th April, by the captain of the vessel chartered by the plaintiff. This was not known at the time to either of the parties. C. subsequently gave notice to the defendant that he repudiated the contract, on the ground that the cargo did not exist at the time of the sale to him. The plaintiff sought to recover the price of the cargo from the defendant, who was a factor, on a del credere commission:—Held (affirming 9 Exch. 102; 17 Jur. 1127), that the defendant was not liable for the amount, as it was the sale of a cargo which did not exist at the time. Couturier v. Hastie, 5 H. L. Ca. 673; 2 Jur., N. S., 1241; 25 L. J., Exch., 253.

2. A bailment on trust implies that there is reserved to the bailor the right to claim a redelivery of the property deposited in bailment. South Australian Insurance Co. v. Randell, 3 L. R., P. C., 101; 22 L. T. 843.

Wherever there is a delivery of property on a contract for an equivalent in money, or some other valuable commodity, and not for the return of the identical subject-matter in its original or altered form, this is a transfer of property for value—it is a sale and not a bailment. Ib.

Where, therefore, corn was deposited by farmers with a miller, to be stored and used as part of the current consumable stock or capital of his trade, and was by him mixed with other corn deposited for the like purpose, subject to the right of the farmers to claim at any time an equal quantity of corn of the like quality, without reference to any specific bulk from which it was to be taken, or in lieu thereof, the market price of any equal quantity, on the day on which he made his demand, with a small charge for general purposes:—Held, that such a transaction amounted to a sale by the farmer to the miller, and was not a bailment of the corn, and entitled the miller to claim in respect thereof upon a policy of insurance against fire as for his own property, notwithstanding that such corn was not specifically insured, or described, as required by the conditions of the policy, as "goods held in trust and on commission," upon which condition the claim was resisted by the insurers. Ib.

3. A proposal to receive tenders for certain things to be sold (specifying no limitation or qualification), and an acceptance (also specifying no limitation or qualification), is a contract for the whole. Thorn v. Public Works Commissioners, 32 Beav. 490.

The defendants advertised that offers would be received for old Portland stone of Westminster Bridge. The plaintiffs made an offer for the stone of a particular quality, which was accepted:—Held, that this was a contract for the purchase of all the stone of that quality. Ib.

4. Circumstances in the conduct of two parties may establish a binding contract between them, although the agreement, reduced into writing as a draft, has not been formally executed by either. Brogden v. Metropolitan Railway Co., 2 L. R., App. Cas., 666.

In such a case the word "approved," written by one of the parties at the end of the draft agreement, must be taken as an approval of the substance of the draft, and not, as in the case of a conveyancer's or solicitor's draft, an approval of the mere form. Ib.

B. had for some years supplied a railway company with coals. At last it was suggested by B. that a contract should be entered into between them. After their agents had met together the terms of agreement were drawn up by the agent of the company and sent to B. B. filled up certain parts of it which had been left in blank, and introduced the name of the gentleman who was to act as arbitrator in case of differences between the parties, wrote "approved" at the end of the paper, and signed his own name. B.'s agent sent back the paper to the agent of the company, who put it in his desk, and nothing farther was done in the way of a formal execution of it. Both parties for some time acted in accordance with the arrangements mentioned in the paper. Coals were supplied and payments made as therein stated, and when some complaints of inexactness in the supply of coals, according to the terms stated in the paper, were made by the company, there were explanations and excuses given by B., and the contract was mentioned in the correspondence, and matters went on as before. Finally disagreements arose, and B. denied that there was any contract which bound him in the matter:—Held, that these facts, and the actual conduct of the parties, established the existence of such a contract, and there having been a clear breach of it B. must be held liable upon it. Ib.

B. was the chief partner in a partnership of three persons. The word "approved" written by him and signed with his name was treated as an assent binding on all the partners (whose names were mentioned in the paper), although the usual form of signature of the partnership was that of "B. & Sons." Ib.

A mere mental assent to the terms stated in a proposed contract would not be binding, but acting upon those terms, by sending coals in the quantities and at the prices mentioned in it, amounted to sufficient to show the adoption of the writing previously altered and sent, and to constitute it a valid contract. Ib.

The onus of showing that both parties had acted on the terms of an agreement which had not been, in due form, executed by either, lies upon the party who rests his case on that circumstance. Ib.

2. Statute of Frauds. Effect.

5. Plea of the Statute of Frauds to an executory contract overruled. Rondeau v. Wyatt, 3 Bro. C. C. 154.

6. Teas are sold, to be paid for at appointed days, the sales being made according to the custom of the trade, whereby the goods, when sold, are left as pledge for full payment with the vendor, who in case of non-payment is at liberty to resell, and charge the loss to the original purchaser. The purchase money is not paid at the appointed time; the purchaser becomes bankrupt, and the vendor, having sold part of the teas before the fiat and the rest afterwards, gives the estate credit for the clear proceeds of the sales:—Held, that although there was no delivery of the goods, the original sale was a binding contract within the Statute of Frauds, and that the vendors were entitled to prove for the residue of the purchase money unsatisfied by the sale. Exp. Moffat, Re Tute, 2 M. D. & De G. 170; and see 1 M. D. & De G. 282.

1. C. & Co. and H. & Co. were merchants at Calcutta. H. & Co. sold to C. & Co. a large quantity of indigo through the medium of a broker, who drew up a sold note addressed to H. & Co., and submitted it to H. for his approval, when H. having objected to a particular word remaining, the broker took the sold note to C., and informed him of H.'s objection. C. struck his pen through the word objected to by H., placing his initials over that erasure, and returned it to the broker, who thereupon delivered it, so altered, to H. & Co. The broker delivered to C. & Co. on the following day a bought note, which differed in certain material terms from the sold note. In an action brought by H. & Co. against C. & Co. for non-performance of the contract contained in the sold note, the Supreme Court at Calcutta was of opinion that the sold note alone formed the contract, and found for the plaintiffs:—Held, upon appeal, that the transaction was one of bought and sold notes, and that the circumstances attending C.'s alteration of the sold note and affixing his initials, were not sufficient to make that note alone a binding contract, and that there being a material variation in the terms of the bought note with the sold note, they, together, did not constitute a binding contract. Cowie v. Remfry, 5 Moo. P. C. 232; 10 Jur. 789.

2. The parties to any contract or bargain within section 17 of the Statute of Frauds, or section 7 of Lord Tenterden's Act, must be specified either nominally or by description, or by reference, in the note or memorandum in writing required by those statutes; the name of the seller, as well as of the buyer, must appear; of the party by whom goods are to be supplied, as well as of him to whom they are to be supplied; or of the party to be guaranteed, as well as of him who is to guarantee. Hence, where a memorandum in these words, "I will furnish H. with funds for the purchase of a steam-engine and machinery for a flour-mill, on his suiting himself with the same, and notifying the purchase to me," was signed by A., but not addressed to any one, and was delivered to B., with the consent of the signer, and afterwards orally acknowledged to B. by him:—Held, that this writing was not within the clauses of the above-named statute, and that A. was not liable. Williams v. Byrnes, 2 N. R. 47.

3. Where, in a sale between brokers, the bought and sold notes were not exchanged, and there was no evidence that the seller had notice of the contract, but the contract was in part performed:—Held, that there was a binding memorandum within the Statute of Frauds. Exp. Thomas, Re Thorp, 11 Jur., N. S., 49; 11 L. T., N. S., 586; 5 N. R. 230.

4. Upon a sale by auction subject to conditions of sale, the auctioneer's entry in his book is void under the Statute of Frauds, unless the entry contains such reference to the conditions as to identify them upon production as being the conditions mentioned therein. Rishton v. Whatmore, 26 W. R. 827; 47 L. J., Ch., 629; 8 L. R., Ch. D., 467.

3. Property passing by.

5. By the law of England, under a contract of sale of specific ascertained goods, the property immediately vests in the buyer, and a right to the price in the seller, unless it can be shown that such was not the intention of the parties. If the seller is to do something to the goods sold, the property will not be changed until he has done it, or waived his right to do it. Gilmour v. Supple, 11 Moo. P. C. 551; 6 W. R. 445.

A. entered into a contract, in writing, for the sale to B. of "a raft of timber now at Carouge, in Canada, containing white and red pine, the quantity, about 71,000 feet, to be delivered at Indian Cove Booms. Price, for the whole, 7¾d. per foot. Payment, one-third cash, one-third 60 and 90 days after date." Shortly before the contract was signed, the raft had been measured by a public officer, called the Supervisor of Cullers, appointed under a Canadian Act, and the number of pieces of timber and the contents of each piece were set down in a specification thereof, which made a total of 71,445 feet, and this specification was delivered by A. before the execution of the contract to B., and sent by him to the place where the raft was to be delivered. The raft was towed to the Indian Cove Booms, the appointed place for delivery, where it arrived in the afternoon, and notice of its arrival given to the servants of B., who assisted in fastening the raft outside the Booms. This was done at the instance of B.'s servant, as, from the state of the tide, the raft could not be placed inside the Booms. During the night a storm arose, by which the raft was carried away, broken to pieces, and dispersed, and a great portion of it lost. B. employed his servants in collecting as much of the wood as was saved, and that was put into B.'s Booms:—Held, that, as A. had ascertained the price of the raft by the measurement previously made, the specification of which was in B.'s possession, and as the contract did not show that any future measurement of the raft was necessary, no act then remained to be done by A., or by B., and that the raft, upon delivery at the Indian Cove Booms, had wholly passed to B., and the loss incurred must be borne by him. Ib.

6. If the terms of a contract of sale do not show an intention of immediately passing the property until something is done by the seller before delivery of possession, then the sale cannot be deemed perfected, and the property does not pass until that thing is done. Logan v. Le Mesurier, 11 Jur. 1091.

And although, where the sale was of a specific chattel for a fixed price, assuming it to contain a certain quantity, and the price was paid, but, according to the terms of the contract, the seller was to retain possession, to carry the chattel to a certain place, there to deliver it at a certain time, and that if, upon measurement, the quantity should turn out more than as assumed, the surplus was to be paid for

at a fixed rate by the purchasers on delivery, but that, should it fall short, the difference was to be refunded by the sellers: yet it was held, that, until measurement and delivery, the sale was not complete; and that part of the property having been lost by a storm, the risk remained with the sellers. Ib.

After the day stated in the contract of sale for the delivery of goods, and before delivery, a storm dispersed the goods (timber), and the purchasers took possession of a large portion of them which were saved, and paid salvage:—Held, that this taking possession of a part could not be considered as showing, by the parties' admission, that the property in the goods had passed to the purchasers before the loss, where the terms of the contract show that it did not so pass. Ib.

1. A bill of sale and assignment of goods, described as being in certain warehouses belonging to A., was given by him for the loan of a sum expressed to have been paid on the day of the date thereof. Upon an action of trover brought against the assignee of A., who had seized the goods, it appeared in evidence that a portion only of the goods was in the warehouse specified at the date of the sale, and that no part of the loan was paid on that day, the same being discharged by instalments a few days afterwards; whereupon the judges of the Supreme Court held that there had been no valid transfer, and consequently no conversion, and gave an interlocutory judgment and verdict in accordance with such view:—Held, by the Judicial Committee, on appeal from such judgment and verdict, and from an order refusing a new trial, that the judgment and verdict were not justified by the evidence, and must be reversed, and a new trial granted. Muttyloll Seal v. O'Dowda, 4 Moo. Ind. App. 382; 6 Moo. P. C. 324.

2. The purchaser of a cargo of rice which is to be loaded on board a ship expected to arrive at a certain port, where it is to load for a voyage, he agreeing to pay a certain sum per cwt. cost and freight, has no insurable interest in the purchase; so that, should the rice be put on board before the loading is completed, he cannot recover on a policy of insurance effected on goods in the vessel. Anderson v. Morice, 1 L. R., App. Cas., 713; 35 L. T., N. S., 566; 25 W. R. 14.

A. contracted for the purchase of rice in the following terms: "Bought for account of A. of B. & Co., the cargo of new crop Rangoon rice, per Sunbeam." The day after making this contract, A. insured the rice at and from Rangoon to the United Kingdom, "as interest may appear." The ship proceeded to Rangoon, and after the greater part of the cargo had been shipped, she suddenly sank at her anchors, in fine weather, and the rice already shipped was wholly lost. In an action on the policy:—Held, that A. had no insurable interest in the rice, it not being at his risk till the cargo was completed. Ib.

3. L. was a manufacturer in Ireland. Alfred Blenkarn, who occupied a room in a house looking into Wood Street, Cheapside, wrote to L., proposing a considerable purchase of L.'s goods, and in his letter used this address—"37, Wood Street, Cheapside," and signed the letters (without any initial for a christian name) with a name so written that it appeared to be "Blenkiron & Co." There was a respectable firm of that name, "W. Blenkiron & Co.," carrying on business at 123, Wood Street. L. sent letters, and afterwards supplied goods, the letters, the goods, and the invoices accompanying the goods being all addressed to "Messrs. Blenkiron & Co., 37, Wood Street." The goods were received by Blenkarn at that place, and disposed of to a purchaser who was entirely ignorant of the fraud:—Held, that no contract was made with Blenkarn; that even a temporary property in the goods never passed to him, so that he never had a possessory title which he could transfer to this purchaser, who was consequently liable to L. for the value of the goods. Cundy v. Lindsay, 3 L. R., App. Cas., 459; 47 L. J., Q. B. D., 481; 38 L. T., N. S., 573; 26 W. R. 406; 14 Cox C. C. 93. Affirming 2 L. R., Q. B. D., 96; 25 W. R. 417; 36 L. T., N. S., 345; 46 L. J., Q. B., 233; 13 Cox C. C. 583. Reversing 45 L. J., Q. B., 381; 1 L. R., Q. B. D., 348; 24 W. R. 730; 34 L. T., N. S., 314.

When the original owner has parted with the chattel to A. upon a de facto contract, though there may be circumstances which enable that owner to set aside that contract, the bonâ fide purchaser from A. will obtain an indefeasible title. Ib.

The question, therefore, in many such cases, will be, was there a contract between the original owner and the intermediate person? Ib.

4. Merchants in London were in the habit of dealing with Reed Brothers, of Old Town Street, Plymouth. On receipt of an order from Joseph Reed & Sons, of Mincing Lane, Plymouth, they forwarded the goods asked for, under the mistaken belief that they were dealing with their old customers. The person trading as Joseph Reed & Sons was an uncertificated bankrupt, and his trustee at once seized the goods:—Held, that the trustee was bound to restore the goods, or to pay the amount due for them. Exp. Barnett, Re Reed, 3 L. R., Ch. D., 123; 45 L. J., Bky., 120; 34 L. T. 664; 24 W. R. 904.

4. Sale in Market Overt.

5. The real owner of goods does not lose his property, though the possessor makes a sale of them, unless it be in market overt; but there is no instance where a sale, made by the mere possessor, has been held to change the property, where it has marks by which it may be known. Hartop v. Hoare, 3 Atk. 49.

6. A ship is not like an ordinary chattel, which passes by delivery, and there is no market overt for ships. Hooper v. Gumm, M'Lellan v. Gumm, 36 L. J., Ch., 282; 2 L. R., Ch., 282; 15 W. R. 464; 16 L. T., N. S., 107. Affirming 15 L. T., N. S., 187.

7. The Contagious Diseases (Animals) Act 1869, s. 57, does not render the sending of diseased animals to a public market an actionable wrong, in the absence of any warranty of soundness or of any evidence of fraud or misrepresentation. Ward v. Hobbs, 27 W. R. 114; 4 L. R., App. Cas., 13.

A number of pigs was sold by auction in a public market, subject to conditions of sale which provided that no warranty would be given, and that the animals should be removed "with all faults." Shortly after the sale it was found that the pigs were infected with typhoid fever, from which the greater part of them died:—Held, that the seller of the pigs had not been guilty of misrepresentation by conduct, and was not liable in an action for misrepresentation at the suit of the purchaser. Ib.

1. The purchaser of a chattel takes it, as a general rule, subject to what may turn out to be informalities in the title. Cundy v. Lindsay, 3 L. R., App. Cas., 459; 47 L. J., Q. B. D., 481; 38 L. T., N. S., 573; 26 W. R. 406; 14 Cox C. C. 93. Affirming 2 L. R., Q. B. D., 96; 25 W. R. 417; 36 L. T., N. S., 345; 46 L. J., Q. B., 233; 13 Cox C. C. 583. Reversing 45 L. J., Q. B., 381; 1 L. R., Q. B. D., 348; 24 W. R. 730; 34 L. T., N. S., 314.

By a purchase in market overt the title obtained is good against all the world. Ib.

If not so purchased, though purchased bonâ fide, the title obtained may not be good against the real owner. Ib.

5. Sale or Hire.

2. A. and B. contracted for the purchase by B. of a billiard-table, the price to be paid by instalments. The table was delivered, and part of the price paid. B., having failed to pay some of the instalments as they became due, was induced by A. to sign the following agreement for the hire of the table at a monthly rent: "This agreement is signed for A.'s satisfaction, and will become null and void on B. carrying out the original agreement." Upon the bankruptcy of B. the trustee sold the table and received the proceeds:—Held, that the trustee was entitled to the proceeds of the sale, upon the ground that the agreement for the purchase was not abrogated by the agreement for hire, and that consequently the table, being the property of the bankrupt, passed to the trustee. Exp. Orme, Re Lloyd, 38 L. T., N. S., 328.

3. A timber merchant hired from manufacturers of engines an engine upon the terms of an agreement of hiring and suspensory sale, the payment to be by monthly instalments, with liberty to the manufacturers to retake possession upon his default, the name of the manufacturers in the meanwhile to remain on engines as owners. He became bankrupt before all the instalments were paid, and his trustees claimed to retain the engine as against the manufacturers:—Held, that the manufacturers continued owners under the agreement, and that there was no reputed ownership on the part of the bankrupt as against them. Exp. Stooke, Re Bampfield, 20 W. R. 925.

4. A trader hired a piano from H. & Co. at 15*l.* a year, payable by monthly instalments, on the terms that in the event of default in payment of the instalments, or of his death, bankruptcy, or insolvency, or execution issuing against him, H. & Co. might put an end to the hiring and take possession of the instrument; and that when the instalments amounted to 45*l.*, H. & Co. should assign the piano to the debtor, but that till such payment the debtor should have no property in the piano. The debtor paid one instalment under the agreement, and four months afterwards filed a liquidation petition, still having the piano in his possession:—Held, that a custom to let pianos on hire on the above terms being established, there was nothing in the agreement obnoxious to the provisions of the Act of 1869, s. 15, sub-s. 5, and that the piano did not pass to the trustee under the order and disposition clause. Exp. Hattersley, Re Blanchard, 47 L. J., Bky., 113; 38 L. T., N. S., 619; 26 W. R. 636; 8 L. R., Ch. D., 601.

5. By a written agreement, R. hired furniture of the value of 63*l.* from L. & Co. R. was to pay for it by monthly instalments. In the event of non-payment of any instalment, L. & Co. might seize and remove the furniture and retake possession of it. On payment of all the instalments, the furniture was to become his property, but until such payment it was to remain the sole property of L. & Co. This agreement was not registered as a bill of sale. The furniture comprised in the agreement was in the possession of R. at the commencement of his bankruptcy:—Held, that the property in the furniture did not pass to him until all the instalments had been paid; that neither the agreement nor the licence to seize the furniture amounted to a bill of sale by R., and therefore that registration was unnecessary. Exp. Lewin & Co., Re Robertson, 9 L. R., Ch. D., 419; 47 L. J., Bky., 94; 39 L. T. 12; 26 W. R. 733.

6. The defendants agreed to hire forty-four waggons from the plaintiffs, paying in respect of twenty specified waggons an annual rent of 285*l.* for five years, and in respect of the other twenty-four an annual rent of 249*l.* for three years. It was agreed that the said waggons should, at the expiration of the respective terms of the demise, and after payment of the rents reserved during the said terms respectively, become the absolute property of the lessees without any further payment whatsoever; and that until full payment of the several rents respectively reserved should be actually made, the ownership of the said waggons respectively should remain and continue in the lessors. The defendants having paid the first two years' rent in respect of the twenty-four waggons, sent to the plaintiffs the whole of the remaining one year's rent with a letter stating that this sum was paid in discharge of all rent or other payment due in respect of the twenty-four waggons. The rent in respect of the other twenty waggons was then in arrear. The plaintiffs' agent declined to receive the payment upon the terms of the letter, and entered it in the plaintiffs' ledger as a payment in respect of the entire number of waggons:—Held, that the contracts in respect of the twenty-four waggons and the twenty were several, and the hirers were entitled to the property in the twenty-four waggons upon payment of all the instalments that remained to be paid in respect of them, notwithstanding that there were unpaid instalments in respect of the twenty, and that the contract being in effect one of sale, and the provision for payment by instalments a provision solely in favour of the purchaser, he was entitled to anticipate the time fixed for the transfer of the property in the waggons by anticipating the time for payment. Lancashire Waggon Co. v. Nuttall, 42 L. T. 465.

7. C. & Co., upholsterers, lent furniture on hire to the defendants (who were hotel-keepers) to be paid for by monthly instalments, and on payment of the full price agreed upon, it was to become the property of the defendants. Until this had been done it was to remain the property of C. & Co. Upon one instalment being unpaid C. & Co. put a man in possession of the furniture, and the defendants executed an assignment of the lease of the hotel, and of all their personal chattels and effects, including the hired furniture, to C. & Co., and afterwards became bankrupts. The trustee in bankruptcy claimed the furniture on the ground that it was at the date of the bankruptcy in the possession of the bankrupts, as reputed owners, with the consent of the true owners, C. & Co.:—Held, that the assignment of the whole property which was duly registered was an act of bankruptcy, but that C. & Co.'s furniture not having been paid for remained their property, and was not in the order and disposition of the bankrupts, and did not pass by the assignment; that the assignment was good so far as it was a mortgage of the leasehold, but was void so far as it was an assignment of personalty as being an act of bankruptcy, and that the trustee was entitled to all the personal effects of the bankrupts, but not to the hired furniture. Cramcour v. Salter, 18 L. R., Ch. D., 30; 45 L. T. 62; 30 W. R. 21; 51 L. J., Ch., 495.

6. Warranties and Conditions.

1. Warranty on sale against obvious defects is not binding. Dyer v. Hargrave, 10 Ves. 507.

2. If an article sold is described, the description amounts to a warranty or a condition precedent that it shall be an article of the kind described. Bowes v. Shand, 2 L. R., App. Cas., 455; 46 L. J., Q. B., 561; 36 L. T. 857; 25 W. R. 730.

3. M., on behalf of the firm of M. & Co., merchants in Quebec, of which he was a member, entered into the following contract with R. M.: "R. M. sells, and Messrs. M. & Co. buy, all of the spars manufactured by R. M., say about 600 red pine spars, averaging by culler's measurement in Quebec sixteen inches, at the sum of, etc., delivered free of charge in Quebec. The above spars will be out of the lot manufactured by B., the lengths of which, according to his specification, I am satisfied with." The lot manufactured by B. was found to consist of 603 spars, of which only 496 averaged sixteen inches:—Held, that M. & Co. were bound to accept the 496 spars at the rate agreed on, the words, "say about 600 red pine spars," being words of expectation and estimate only, and not amounting to a warranty. M'Connel v. Murphy, 5 L. R., P. C., 203.

4. If, in the case of a contract of sale and delivery, which makes acceptance of the thing sold and payment of the price conditional on a certain thing being done by the seller, the buyer prevents the possibility of the seller fulfilling the condition, the contract is to be taken as satisfied. By a written contract A. agreed to buy of B. a digging machine, if it fulfilled certain conditions, one of which was that it should be capable of excavating a given quantity of clay in a fixed time on a "properly opened-up face" at the C. railway cutting. The machine failed at another cutting to excavate the required quantity, and on its being removed to the "C." cutting and tried at a face not a "properly opened-up one," and breaking down, after a few days' work, A. refused to give it any further trial or to pay the price of the machine:—Held, that B. was entitled to a decree against A. for payment of the price of the machine. Mackay v. Dick, 6 L. R., App. Cas. (Sc.), 251.

5. A salesman who sells in a public market meat which has no defect discoverable by an ordinary inspection, but which is afterwards found to be unfit for human food, to a purchaser who selects it himself, does not impliedly warrant that the meat is good, and is not liable to refund the price to the purchaser. Smith v. Baker, 40 L. T. 261. And see Ward v. Hobbs, 4 L. R., App. Cas., 13; 27 W. R. 114.

6. In England, if goods are sold by sample, and they are delivered, and accepted by the purchaser, he cannot return them; but if he has taken the delivery conditionally, he has a right to keep the goods for a sufficient time to enable him to give them a fair trial, and if they are found not to correspond with the sample, he is then entitled to return them. Couston v. Chapman, 2 L. R., H. L. (Sc.), 250.

In England, if a horse is sold with a warranty of soundness, and it turns out to be unsound, the purchaser cannot return the horse unless there is a stipulation that if the horse does not answer to the warranty the purchaser shall be at liberty to return it. But in Scotland, it would appear to be law that there would be an absolute right to return the horse upon the discovery of its unsoundness, without any specific stipulation to that effect. Ib.

7. Delivery by Instalments.

7. An agreement is made between A., an iron company, and B., the owner of an adjoining colliery, for the supply of coals, to be raised and delivered at the rate of 500 tons per week, A. also agreeing to loose and drain the unworked coal in B.'s colliery:—Held, that no interval in the performance of this agreement (which was continuous in its nature) should have been allowed; and that A., after the lapse of eleven months between filling his bill and breach of the agreement, was precluded from relief upon it:—Semble, that the Court will not decree specific performance of a contract for delivery of a chattel by instalments where mutual duties of a complicated nature are imposed upon the parties. Mere vicinity and convenience of situation will not induce the Court to decree specific performance of a contract for supply of goods. Observations upon Buxton v. Lister (3 Atk. 383). Pollard v. Clayton, 3 W. R. 349; 1 Kay & J. 462; 1 Jur., N. S., 342.

8. Two contracts, each for the sale of 300 tons of rice, were made in London. The first contract (which the second exactly followed) was for 300 tons "of Madras rice, to be shipped at Madras, or coast, for this port, during the months of March $\frac{\text{and}}{\text{or}}$ April 1874, per Rajah of Cochin." The 600 tons filled 8,200 bags. The vessel arrived at Madras in February, and on the 23rd of that month 1,780 bags were put on board, and on the 24th of February a like number; on the 28th of February 3,560 bags were put on board, and bills of lading were given for those amounts on the days mentioned. A bill of lading for the remaining 1,080 bags was given on the 3rd of March, but all, except fifty bags, had been put on board before that day. In an action for refusing to accept the rice, the defence was that it had not been shipped during the months of March and April:—Held, that the contract had not been complied with; that its words must be construed in their plain and ordinary sense; that evidence of any usage in the particular trade must, to affect their meaning, be very clear and consistent, and such evidence not having been given in this case, the vendors could not recover on the contract. Bowes v. Shand, 2 L. R., App. Cas., 455; 46 L. J., Q. B., 561; 25 W. R. 730; 36 L. T., N. S., 857. Reversing 2 L. R., Q. B. D., 112; 46 L. J., Q. B., 201; 36 L. T., N. S., 161; 25 W. R. 291; and affirming 1 L. R., Q. B. D., 470; 24 W. R. 734; 45 L. J., Q. B., 507; 34 L. T., N. S., 795.

1. Under a contract for the sale of merchandize, a certain quantity of the goods was to be delivered in each of eleven months, payment to be by cash fourteen days after delivery:—Held, that the true meaning of the contract was that the vendor might cease delivering in any month if the purchaser neglected to pay for the previous month's delivery. Exp. Chalmers, Re Edwards, 42 L. J., Bky., 2. Affirmed 42 L. J., Bky., 37; 8 L. R., Ch., 289; 28 L. T., N. S., 325; 21 W. R. 349.

Delivery went on under the contract for ten months, and all the lots but the tenth were paid for. On the 22nd of December, the last month of the contract, a meeting of the purchaser's creditors was held and he was then insolvent. On the 23rd, the vendors wrote that they refused to deliver any more goods, giving no reasons. The goods had greatly risen in value, and in January the purchaser claimed the difference in price on the December lot. In February he was adjudicated bankrupt on a declaration of insolvency. On a claim by the trustee for the difference on the December lot on account of the refusal:—Held, that the refusal was justified by the non-payment, and that the case was strengthened by the fact that the purchaser could not, at the time, make a valid payment. Ib.

See next Subdivision.

8. Rescission.

2. By a contract dated the 27th October 1874, the C. Company contracted to sell to the P. Company 2,500 tons of pig iron, to be delivered over the next ten months in about equal monthly quantities. Payment by four months' bill net, or cash less 2½ per cent. discount, on the 10th of the month next following each delivery. In performance of this contract the C. Company, in November and December 1874, and in January and February 1875, made deliveries amounting to 852 tons. On the 24th February the P. Company, requiring further capital to carry on its business, called a meeting of its principal creditors, with a view to an arrangement being made for an extension of credit, and laid a statement of affairs before them, showing that out of a nominal capital of 100,000*l.*, of which 80,000*l.* was paid up, the company had sustained losses to the extent of 40,000*l.* The creditors did not accept the propositions submitted to them, and the C. Company, considering the statement to be a declaration of insolvency, declined to make any further deliveries except for cash, and thereupon the P. Company cancelled the contract. Three months afterwards the P. Company was ordered to be wound up. Upon a claim by the C. Company for damages in respect of breach of the contract:—Held, that the statement of affairs laid before the creditors on the 24th February did not amount to a declaration of insolvency which justified the C. Company in refusing to deliver without cash payments, and the claim was disallowed. Exp. Carnforth Hæmatite Iron Co., Re Phœnix Bessemer Steel Co., 46 L. J., Ch., 115; 4 L. R., Ch. D., 108; 35 L. T. 776; 25 W. R. 187.

The rule laid down in Exp. Chalmers, Re Edwards (42 L. J., Bky., 2), only applies where there is something amounting to a declaration on the part of the purchasers that they will be unable to meet their engagements. Ib.

9. Breach of, Damages for.

3. The damages for the breach of a forward contract to accept goods for which there is no market, are the full amount of the damage actually sustained, the person who broke the contract not being put to additional cost by reason of the other party not doing what he ought to do, as a reasonable man, and he, on the other hand, not being bound to do otherwise than is the ordinary course of his business. The plaintiffs contracted to sell to the defendant 15,000 tons of cannel coal in weekly quantities, the deliveries not to commence before June, at 26*s.* per ton, payable by monthly instalments, the defendant not to sell in certain specified places. The defendant repudiated the contract in July, but the plaintiffs attempted to come to terms with him, and did not treat it as broken until September, when, there being no regular market for cannel coal, they tried without advertising to find another purchaser according to the ordinary course of their own business. After several failures, the coal was sold at 19*s.* per ton:—Held, that the plaintiffs were entitled to the full amount of the difference between the contract price and that which they obtained. Lever v. Dunkirk Colliery Co., 43 L. T. 706. Affirming, with variation, S. C. sub nom., Dunkirk Hall Colliery Co. v. Lever, 41 L. T. 633; 9 L. R., Ch. D., 20; 39 L. T., N. S., 239; 26 W. R. 841.

4. When the purchaser of goods sold on credit becomes bankrupt before the vendor has parted with the possession of the goods, the trustee in the bankruptcy has a right to elect to complete the contract by paying the agreed price in cash within a reasonable time. But, if he does not do so, the vendor is entitled to treat the contract as broken, and to resell the goods, without first tendering them to the trustee. And the vendor is entitled to prove in the bankruptcy for damages for the breach of contract, the measure of damages, if the market is falling, being the difference between the contract price and the price obtained on the resale. Exp. Stapleton, Re Nathan, 10 L. R., Ch. D., 586; 40 L. T. 14; 27 W. R. 327.

II. INJUNCTION AGAINST.

1. Application to stay disposal of personals must show specific right to property, and danger of same being lost. Ximenes v. France, Dick. 149.

2. A., the owner of certain chattels, pledged them to B., who was a broker, to secure advances made on his behalf by B.; and B. afterwards, in his own name, and unknown to A., re-pledged the same chattels to C. to secure advances made by C. to B., but of which, unknown to C., A. was to have the benefit. C. having subsequently applied in vain to B. for payment of his advances, threatened to realise his security by a sale, which, however, he was from time to time induced to postpone by the solicitations of B. and his assurances of speedy payment; and this was communicated by B. to A., his principal. In a suit by A. against B. and C., praying to redeem the property in pledge on payment of any balance found due on the account between himself and B., it was held that A. had no equity to restrain C. from proceeding to an immediate sale. Nicholson v. Hooper, 4 Myl. & C. 179. Reversing 2 Jur. 9.

Quære, whether under the circumstances above mentioned, C. could make a good title to a purchaser. Ib.

3. Specific chattels deposited by the plaintiff with A., his agent, which A. fraudulently contracted to assign to B., and B. advertised to be sold. Bill for an injunction to restrain the sale by B., and to restrain A. and B. from parting with the goods, the goods being still in the possession of A. the agent. Demurrer by B. overruled. Wood v. Rowcliffe, 3 Hare 304; 13 L. J., N. S., Ch., 293; 8 Jur. 771.

4. Pending an appeal, the Court will sometimes stay the sale of property which the decree has directed to be sold; but if the property consists of personal chattels remaining in the possession of the appellant, he must give ample security for their value. Nerot v. Burnand, 2 Russ. 56.

5. Defendant, before he had prayed time to answer, or was in contempt, restrained from selling diamonds. Tonnins v. Prout, Dick. 387.

6. H. contracted for the purchase of shares in a vessel, and paid part of the purchase money to P., and obtained possession of the vessel, but no bill of sale was executed. The registered owners alleged that P. was not their agent to receive the money, and arrested the vessel in the Admiralty Court, and threatened to sell the shares. They were restrained from selling or proceeding in the Admiralty Court. Hughes v. Morris, 13 Jur. 1065.

7. Where a vessel has become unable to proceed on her voyage without repairs, the owners of goods shipped on board the vessel may obtain the assistance of the Court to restrain the captain from selling the cargo. But before the Court will grant such assistance, the plaintiffs must show their title to the goods, and must settle with the captain for what is due to him, and must exonerate the captain from his contract to deliver the goods at their place of destination, and from all liability on the bills of lading. Rayne v. Benedict, 10 L. J., N. S., Ch., 297; 5 Jur. 598.

8. A company will be restrained by injunction from selling plant belonging to a contractor who has made default, where it has power in that case to take possession of the plant at a valuation, and to allow it in account with the contractor, and has also power to use it in the construction of the line, unless it appears that there is a balance of account actually due from the contractor. Garrett v. Salisbury & Dorset Junction Railway Co., 2 L. R., Eq., 358; 14 W. R. 816.

9. When the owners of a public building have contracted with the plaintiff, that he, renting a stall from them, shall have the exclusive right to exhibit and sell certain specified classes of goods, an injunction will lie against them for permitting the exhibition and sale by other renters of stalls within the building of goods so specified. Altman v. Royal Aquarium Society, 3 L. R., Ch. D., 228.

10. A. entered into a contract with B. by which B. agreed to sell to him the whole of the get of coal of a specified seam in a colliery belonging to B. during a period of five years at a certain price. On a bill by A. to restrain B. from selling the coal to other parties:—Held, that he was not entitled to any relief in equity. Fothergill v. Rowland, 17 L. R., Eq., 132; 43 L. J., Ch., 252; 29 L. T. 414; 22 W. R. 42.

11. Where the requisitions of the composition clause had not been complied with, the Court of Review refused, on the petition of the bankrupt, to restrain a sale by the assignees, though an agreement had been entered into between the bankrupt and his surety, and the assignees, for annulling the fiat, and payment of the debts in full. Exp. Nainby, 3 Dea. 587.

12. On separate commission against one partner, the assignees took possession of partnership property, and were about to sell it. Injunction, on filing bill and affidavit, granted to restrain sale. Allen v. Kilbre, 4 Madd. 464.

13. The mortgagee of a ship by bill of sale, who has omitted to procure an indorsement thereof on the certificate of registry, within thirty days after the return of the ship to port, as required by the Registry Act, the registered owner having after that time become bankrupt, has no equity, distinct from his legal rights, to restrain the sale of the ship by the assignees; the title to the ship, after the bankruptcy, depending upon the application of the rule of law with regard to order and disposition. Campbell v. Thompson, 2 Hare 140; 7 Jur. 59.

14. A contract for the sale of chattels to the plaintiff contained an express negative stipulation not to sell to any other manufacturer. The Court granted an injunction to restrain the breach of the negative stipulation, although the contract was one of which specific performance would not have been granted. Wolverhampton & Walsall Railway Co. v. London & North-Western Railway Co. (16 L. R., Eq., 433) considered. Donnell v. Bennett, 22 L. R., Ch. D., 835; 52 L. J., Ch., 414; 48 L. T. 68; 31 W. R. 316.

III. RIGHTS OF UNPAID VENDOR.

1. Lien, 6117.
2. Stoppage in Transitu. See STOPPAGE IN TRANSITU.

1. Lien.

1. A quantity of tea is sold at a price which is to be paid at a future day. After the day has elapsed, the purchaser pays a sum on account, and writes to the vendors, who have retained the warrants in their possession, requesting them to wait the arrival of the overland mail, and on its receipt to dispose of the tea. He afterwards becomes bankrupt:—Held, that the vendors have a lien on the tea for the unpaid purchase money. Exp. Twining, Re Coles, 1 M. D. & De G. 691; 10 L. J., N. S., Bky., 60.; 5 Jur. 536.

2. The lien at law upon a chattel for a portion of the price unpaid confers no right of sale upon the person having such lien, although the retention of the chattel may be attended with expense. Thames Ironworks Co. v. Patent Derrick Co., 1 John. & H. 93; 6 Jur., N. S., 1013; 29 L. J., Ch., 714.

Pursuant to an agreement, A. built a vessel for B., but had not delivered up possession, as a balance remained due from B. An action was brought to recover this balance, and a judge's order was made by consent, staying all further proceedings; A. being at liberty to sign judgment for the amount claimed, but not to issue execution unless B. should make default in paying the debt by instalments. In case of default, A. to be at liberty to issue execution; the order not to prejudice his lien as builder. Default was made in payment of a first instalment. A. filed a bill, alleging that his possession of the vessel was attended with great expense, and seeking to enforce his lien by a sale, and satisfy the debt out of the proceeds:—Held, that the lien of A. gave no right of sale, and that the Court would not assume jurisdiction to grant the relief prayed, either by directing a sale or specific performance of the order of a court of competent jurisdiction. Ib.

3. B. & Co. sold some iron rails to a company by a written contract, stipulating that payment should be made by buyers' acceptances of sellers' drafts against inspector's certificate of approval and wharfinger's certificate of each 500 tons being stacked ready for shipment. As the wharfinger's certificates were delivered the company accepted the drafts of B. & Co., according to the contract, which B. & Co. negotiated; but the rails remained in B. & Co.'s possession. The plaintiff advanced money to the company on the security of some of the wharfinger's certificates which were handed over to him with a written memorandum. The company became insolvent, and their acceptances were consequently not paid. The plaintiff filed a bill against B. & Co. and the receiver of the estate of the company, claiming a lien on the rails in the hands of B. & Co. in priority to their lien as vendors. The bill alleged that according to the custom of the iron trade the wharfinger's certificates were in fact warrants. The plaintiff having moved for an injunction to restrain B. & Co. from parting with the rails or with the money which they might receive in respect of them, the Vice-Chancellor ordered B. & Co. to pay the value of the rails into court, to be kept in medio till the decision of the case:—Held, first, that the giving of the acceptances in pursuance of the contract was not an absolute payment, but conditional on the acceptances being met; that upon the insolvency of the acceptors the vendors' lien on the goods revived; and that the fact of the vendors having negotiated the bills made no difference. Gunn v. Bolckow, Vaughan, & Co., 10 L. R., Ch., 491; 44 L. J., Ch., 732; 32 L. T., N. S., 781; 23 W. R. 739.

Held, secondly, that the wharfinger's certificates were not documents of title, and their delivery passed no right to the goods; and that no custom of trade could give them the effect of warrants or documents of title as against the vendors. Ib.

4. By the usage of the iron trade warrants for goods "deliverable (f. o. b.) to A. B., or their assigns, by indorsement hereon," are considered to pass to the holders for value free from any vendor's lien. Merchant Banking Company of London v. Phœnix Bessemer Steel Co., 5 L. R., Ch. D., 205; 46 L. J., Ch., 418; 25 W. R. 457; 36 L. T., N. S., 395.

A company, being manufacturers of steel rails, contracted with S. & Co., iron merchants, for the sale of a quantity of rails to be rolled at their works, and to be delivered at intervals, payment to be made as to three-fifths at three days' sight, and as to two-fifths by buyers' acceptances at four months. On the completion of each portion of goods a warrant for the same in the above form was sent to S. & Co., with an invoice and drafts for the purchase money, and the goods referred to in the warrants were stacked at the works. In the meantime S. & Co. pledged the several warrants, and indorsed the same to the plaintiffs. Before the contract was completed, when only part of the goods was paid for, S. & Co. became bankrupt, and their acceptances were dishonoured. At that time part of the goods had been dispatched in waggons sent by order of S. & Co., and was stored in a railway company's warehouse, addressed to the agents of S. & Co., and part remained stacked at the works:—Held, that, by the usage of the iron trade, as well as by the intention of the parties as shown by their course of dealing, the plaintiffs, as holders for value of the warrants, were entitled to the goods free from any vendor's lien. Ib.

Held, also, that even had the vendors been able to claim a lien on the undelivered goods, the transit was at an end as regarded those stored in the warehouse, and their right was gone. Ib.

Held, also, that the contract was apportionable, and that the vendors could not in any event have claimed any lien on that portion of the goods which had been fully paid for. Ib.

5. On the 3rd March goods belonging to C., lying at the St. Katharine Dock, in the custody of the Docks Company, were bought by D., as broker for buyers and sellers, for B. & Co., without disclosing the names of his principals, and D. indorsed to them the delivery order he had obtained from the sellers, on the representation of B. & Co. that the goods were wanted for immediate shipment. They, however, pledged their interest in the goods to the plaintiffs, and indorsed the order to them. On the prompt day, the 18th of March, the plaintiffs' clerk lodged the order at the London office of the Docks Company, with this memorandum, "Hold within to our order, and have warrants made out as soon as possible." He was told that the warrants would be ready with the goods on the 20th March. Three hours later a messenger from the office reached the warrant office at the Dock House with a notice that the order had been lodged. Meanwhile B. & Co. had stopped payment, and D. being so informed, and having no notice of the plaintiffs' title, on the same day paid C. for the goods, and through a clerk, who reached the Dock House before the messenger had arrived, obtained at the warrant office a warrant for the goods in the name of C., who indorsed the same to D., and gave him a second delivery order. The first delivery order was returned to the plaintiffs by the Docks Company, who refused to act upon it. In an action by the plaintiffs, claiming, as against the Docks Company, C., and D., to be entitled to the goods:—Held, that D. was the surety and B. & Co. the principal debtors; that, in the circumstances of the case, the unpaid vendors' lien had passed to D.; that the title to the goods was in D. Imperial Bank v. London and St. Katharine Docks Co., 5 L. R., Ch. D., 195; 36 L. T., N. S., 233.

1. Unless actual possession of goods sold has been delivered to the purchaser, the vendor is not deprived of his right of lien as against the assignees of the purchaser, in the event of his insolvency. Grice v. Richardson, 3 L. R., App. Cas., 319; 47 L. J., P. C., 48; 26 W. R. 358; 37 L. T., N. S., 677.

An indorsement on warehouse certificates by the vendor's clerk, making the goods deliverable to the purchaser's order, and entered in the transfer book, is not such a constructive delivery as would defeat the vendor's right. Ib.

When the vendors were also warehousemen of the goods sold, under an arrangement with the purchasers to pay warehouse rent:—Held, that, as the goods remained in the possession of the vendors and no actual delivery had been made to the purchasers, the vendors' lien revived upon the insolvency of the vendees. Ib.

Rules.] 2. The certificate of the barrister appointed under the provisions of 9 Geo. 4, c. 92, that the rules of a savings bank are in conformity with the Act, is not conclusive. Exp. Haynes, Re Clarke, 3 M. D. & De G. 663; 13 L. J., Bky., 12; 8 Jur. 791.

What is a sufficient compliance with 9 Geo. 4, c. 92, s. 6, providing that no savings bank shall have the benefit of the Act, unless its rules provide that no person, being treasurer, trustee, or manager of such institution, or having any control in the management thereof, shall derive any benefit from the deposits in the bank except as in the Act mentioned. Ib.

3. Before the passing of 9 Geo. 4, c. 92, the surplus money in savings banks, after payment of expenses and interests on deposits, was divisible among the depositors. By s. 22 of that Act, it was provided that within six weeks of the 20th November 1828 the trustees should ascertain the amount of the increased fund to that date, and, after retaining enough for future management, should appropriate the surplus in the manner provided by their rules and regulations made before the passing of the Act; or, in the event of no such provision being made, in such manner as the trustees, at a general meeting to be convened according to their rules, should think proper. The rules of the Arundel Savings Bank provided that no trustee, or any person having any control in the management of the institution, except the actuary, should derive any benefit from any deposit made therein:—Held, that an appropriation of part of such surplus to repairs of a bridge, to which the trustees were liable to be rated, was, by the joint effect of the rules and s. 22 of the Act, illegal. Whether, in the absence of any restriction by the rules, such an appropriation would, in the case of any savings bank established before the 9 Geo. 4, c. 92, be proper, quære. Holmes v. Henty, 10 Bli. N. S. 255; 4 Cl. & F. 99.

Deposits.] 1. A testator, under s. 23 of the Savings Bank Act 9 Geo. 4, c. 92, made deposits in the names of himself and his sisters, but he did not communicate to them the fact of such deposits being made:—Held, that a trust was not thereby created for the benefit of the sisters, the testator's object being, in the opinion of the Court, merely to evade the provisions of the Act. Field v. Lonsdale, 13 Beav. 78; 19 L. J., Ch., 560; 14 Jur. 995.

2. A depositor in a savings' bank cannot maintain a suit in a court of equity against the trustees; the 9 Geo. 4, c. 92, s. 45, having established arbitration as the only mode of proceeding in disputes between depositors and the institution. Cooke v. Courtown (Lord), 6 Ir. Eq. R. 266.

A suit at law and not in equity would, but for the statute, be the proper remedy. Ib.

Debt due from Treasurer.] 3. Under the Act 3 Will. 4, c. 14, s. 28, the Court will, on petition, order payment of a debt due to a savings bank, from the treasurer of such savings bank, out of the first moneys to be received, before any report made, in a suit for the administration of the estate of such treasurer; but the Court will not make any order for the payment of the costs of the petition. Hatch v. Lee, 10 L. J., N. S., Ch., 223.

Winding up.] 4. A company, called a savings bank, was formed with limited liability and registered under the Act 1856, the objects being to receive deposits, grant loans on security, and to conduct emigration agencies, with a capital divided in shares of 1*l.* each. An order to wind up was made in bankruptcy, and afterwards a petition to wind up in chancery was presented, on the ground that the company was not a banking company, and therefore that there was no jurisdiction to wind up in bankruptcy; and it being proved that the company was not registered under either of the Banking Acts 1857 and 1858; that money could not be withdrawn except upon a stated period of notice; that cheques could not be drawn in the ordinary form; and that the company itself kept an account with a banking house:—Held, before the passing of the 25 & 26 Vict., c. 89, that the company was not a banking company, and that being a company of limited liability registered under the Act of 1856, it must be wound up as directed by that statute in the Court of Bankruptcy. Exp. Coe, Re District Savings Bank, 31 L. J., Bky., 8; 5 L. T., N. S., 566; 10 W. R. 138; 3 De G. F. & J. 335.

SCHOOL BOARD.

See LANDS CLAUSES ACT, VI. 11.

Returning Officer at Election of School Boards.] 5. Though it is not necessary that the person employed as returning officer at the first election of a school board should be a solicitor, nevertheless if he is so, the board, which is directed to pay his expenses, may have his bill taxed. Re Jones, 41 L. J., Ch., 367; 13 L. R., Eq., 336; 20 W. R. 395.

Power of School Board to take Lands.] 6. A school board taking lands under the Elementary Education Act 1870, need not give notice to treat to the owners of easements over the land taken; but compensation in respect of such easements is to be given as for lands injuriously affected. Clark v. London School Board, 9 L. R., Ch., 120; 43 L. J., Ch., 421; 22 W. R. 354; 29 L. T., N. S., 903.

The School Board for London, under the compulsory powers conferred on it by the Elementary Education Act 1870 (33 & 34 Vict., c. 75), having acquired the freehold interest in a piece of land, was proceeding to build a school upon it. The plaintiff was lessee of some adjoining houses, the windows of which were ancient lights, and the board had not acquired his interest in the houses:—Held, that his remedy was not for compensation alone, under the Lands Clauses Act 1845, and an injunction was granted, restraining the Board from continuing the building until it had acquired the plaintiff's interest in the houses. S. C. 21 W. R. 723.

1. A school board served on R. the customary notice to treat for land belonging to him, all the requisite preliminaries required by the Elementary Education Act 1870 having previously been complied with. Prior, however, to the service of such notice to treat and to the passing of the Confirmation Act as required by the above Act, the board had entertained and adopted, subject to the sanction of the Education Department, a proposal from one B., a neighbouring landowner, for exchanging a portion of the land to be acquired by the board from R. for a piece of B.'s land, he undertaking to form the land so to be conveyed to him by the board into a public road. There was evidence to show that such road, when made, would be advantageous to the school intended to be erected:—Held, on motion by R. for an injunction to restrain the board from putting in force their statutory powers with respect to so much of the land comprised in the notice to treat as they proposed to convey to B., that the board were justified in the course they had taken, and could, if they obtained the sanction of the Education Department, carry out the proposal. Rolls v. London School Board, 27 L. R., Ch. D., 639; 51 L. T. 567; 33 W. R. 129.

Transfer of Schools to School Board.] 2. By two deeds, made in 1838 and 1849, the two joint rectors of a parish were appointed trustees of a Church of England school. In 1871, it having become necessary to appoint a new master, the rectors could not concur in any appointment, and the school was closed. A school board having been elected in the district, it was then proposed that the school should be transferred to the board under the Education Act of 1870, s. 23, which requires a majority of two-thirds of the trustees to effect such a transfer. With this view a memorial was presented to the charity commissioners, asking them to appoint three additional trustees, so that the requisite majority might be obtained. This course was opposed by one and supported by the other of the two joint rectors. The commissioners, however, made an order appointing three additional trustees, all of whom were churchmen, one of them being chairman of the school board. On a petition by the opposing rector, by way of appeal from the order, praying for the discharge of the order:—Held, that it is no objection to such an order, notwithstanding the Charitable Trusts Act 1860, s. 5, that the commissioners have made it on an application of a contentious character. Exp. Bates, Re Burnham National Schools, 29 L. T., N. S., 495; 17 L. R., Eq., 241; 43 L. J., Ch., 340; 22 W. R. 198.

The Charitable Trusts Act 1853, ss. 28, 32, gives the jurisdiction to appoint trustees to the Master of the Rolls and the Vice-Chancellors in cases in which it was previously necessary to file an information, bill, or petition, and by the Act of 1860 this jurisdiction is transferred to the charity commission:—Held, that the power to appoint additional trustees is clear under the ordinary jurisdiction of the Court of Chancery; that s. 32 of the Trustee Act 1850 gives a statutory power for that purpose, and therefore that such a power is vested in the commissioners. Ib.

The majority of two-thirds of the school trustees required by the Education Act anticipates any objection to the transfer of a school whose trustees are required to be churchmen. Ib.

The Court will not, upon appeal, interfere with the exercise of discretion by the commissioners, except in a very strong case of miscarriage of justice, and such discretion is properly exercised in a case where, in consequence of differences between the existing trustees, the school is closed, and education denied to the children of the district. Ib.

3. In the case of a school established by and united with the National Society, on the express condition that the children attending it were to be instructed in the Holy Scriptures, and in the Liturgy and Catechism of the Church of England, the instrument declaring the trusts of the school, providing that the school was to be always in union with, and conducted according to the principles of, and in furtherance of the ends and designs of, the National Society, but containing no provision whatever for its alienation. The managers of the school having, under the Elementary Education Act 1870, s. 23, entered into arrangements for the transfer of the school to a school board, the society appeared before the Education Department under the provisions of that section, and objected to the transfer on the ground that if it were effected, the children, under s. 14, could not be educated in the principles of the society. The department, however, overruled the objection, and the transfer was executed. Upon a bill filed by the society to set aside the transfer:—Held, that the consent of the National Society was not required to a transfer of the school to a school board, under the Elementary Education Act 1870, s. 23; and that the proper mode for the society to give effect to any objections to a transfer was by appealing before the Education Department; and that, having appeared before the Education Department and urged their objections to the transfer, the society had no further power of opposing it. National Society v. School Board for London, Att.-Gen. v. English, 44 L. J., Ch., 229; 18 L. R., Eq., 608; 23 W. R. 2; 31 L. T., N. S., 22.

4. Semble, in settling a scheme for the regulation of the funds of a charity school on its transfer to a school board, care should be taken to provide that the funds shall be applied for the advancement of learning in the school, as, for instance, by establishing exhibitions or scholarships, and not for the general purposes of the school, which would have the effect of a grant in aid of the local rates. Re Poplar and Blackwall Free School, 8 L. R., Ch. D., 553; 39 L. T., N. S., 88; 26 W. R. 827.

5. By the terms of a scheme, approved in 1852, for appropriation of the increased revenues of a charity estate originally applicable to the relief of the poor, it was provided that a sum of 90*l.* should be paid by the charity trustees to the treasurer of a school association in aid of the expenses of a school in Flint Street, Walworth, "or any other school that may be established in its stead," provided that no sum should be paid to any denominational school; and that if such school should "become materially altered in discipline, number of children, or other circumstance," then the 90*l.* should, in the discretion of the trustees, be applied for educational purposes amongst other schools of a similar character in the parish. A transfer of the Flint Street school and its endowment having been made by the managers to the School Board for London:—Held, that the Flint Street school had not by the fact of such transfer become "materially altered in discipline, number of children, or other circumstance"; and that the trustees were bound to pay the endowment of 90*l.* a year to the School Board. London School Board v. Faulconer, 8 L. 2. Scotland is out of jurisdiction of Court, and therefore witness going there may be examined de bene esse. Botts v. Verelst, Dick 454.

It was originally a state writ. Quære, whether in the common form, and security given thereupon, it can restrain the party from going into Scotland. Hunter v. Macoray, Forrest 196. II. COURTS AND PROCEDURE.

Jurisdiction.] 4. The Court of Session is a court of law and equity. Kennedy v. Cassilis (Earl), 2 Swan. 321.

5. The Court of Session has no power to alter, vary, or discharge any order of the Court of Chancery made under the jurisdiction of the Great Seal, which is as much the Great Seal of Scotland as of England. Bute (Marquis) v. Stuart, 2 Giff. 582. Affirmed 4 Macq. H. L. Ca. 1; 7 Jur., N. S., 1129; 9 W. R. 722; 4 L. T., N. S., 182.

6. If a justice has jurisdiction under 7 & 8 Geo. 4, c. 53, s. 79, the Court of Session cannot issue a suspension; but if the justice has not jurisdiction, the Court of Session may interpose. Evans v. M'Loughlan, 4 Macq. H. L. Ca. 89; 7 Jur., N. S., 1253.

Over Non-Residents.] 7. When a foreigner is actually out of Scotland, having at the time no property in that country, a Scotch creditor must proceed against him in the foreign jurisdiction, according to the universal maxim, actor sequitur forum rei. London & North Western Railway Co. v. Lindsay, 3 Macq. H. L. Ca. 99; 4 Jur., N. S., 343; 6 W. R. 396.

But if the foreigner is the owner of land or heritable property in Scotland, the Scotch Court will entertain jurisdiction over him in respect of that land. Or if the foreigner has even movable or personal effects in Scotland; or if there is a debt owing to him in Scotland, an arrestment may be ad fundandam jurisdictionem, upon which the Scotch Court will proceed against such foreigner, though absent. Ib.

A., who was domiciled in Scotland, having a cause of action, which arose in England, against an English railway company, for the purpose of having the question tried in Scotland, arrested or attached the debts belonging to the company, jurisdictionis fundandæ causa:—Held, that the courts of Scotland had jurisdiction to try the action. Ib.

8. A Scotchman, by a testamentary instrument in the Scotch form, bequeathed all his personal estate to trustees in trust to pay legacies and annuities, and the income of the surplus to A. for life, and on A.'s death to invest the capital in the purchase of lands in Scotland. The trustees named in the will having disclaimed, the Court of Sessions appointed new trustees, who, as well as A. and several of the legatees and annuitants, were resident in Scotland. A. administered to the testator's estate in England, and filed a bill in Chancery against the trustees for the usua accounts of the testator's estate possessed by them, and to have the residue ascertained and secured. The trustees filed a cross bill for an account of the testator's estate in England possessed by A., and to have the residue ascertained and paid over to them upon the trusts of the will. The Court refused to relinquish its jurisdiction over the fund in A.'s hands, and directed it to be paid into court and to be invested in consols, and the dividends to be paid to A. for life. Preston v. Melville, 15 Sim. 35.

Quære, whether the Court of Sessions has the power of appointing trustees where the trustees appointed by the author of the trust disposition decline to act. S. C. 8 Cl. & F. 16.

Interdict.] 1. The register of protests for non-acceptance and non-payment of bills of exchange and promissory notes, established by the Scotch Acts of 1681 and 1696, and the 12 Geo. 3, c. 72, and 23 Geo. 3, c. 18, is a public document, to which everybody has a right of access, and the publication of which in a printed paper does not constitute a libellous publication. A person, whose name was upon this register, applied to the Court of Session for an interim interdict to prevent, so far as his own name was concerned, the publication of a copy of the register. The Court decreed for the application:—Held, by the Lords, reversing that decree, that the interdict ought not to have been granted, and also that the costs in the Court below should be given. An interdict, though in form ad interim only, must be treated as a final judgment, and may be the subject of appeal to this house. Fleming v. Newton, 1 H. L. Ca. 363.

2. A superior court, having equitable jurisdiction, has a discretion in exceptional cases to withhold from parties applying for it that remedy to which, in ordinary circumstances, they would be entitled as a matter of course. But to justify the exercise of such a discresionary power, there must be some very cogent reason. A. suing, not as owner of the soil, nor as the proprietor of a dominant tenement, but as one of the community, applied for suspension and interdict on the 4th May 1878, against magistrates of a burgh, who were also police commissioners, building municipal stables on a piece of ground vested in them for the common use and enjoyment of the community. No interim interdict was granted, and the magistrates, who had accepted contracts for the work, went on building, and before the interdict sought was granted, on the 19th June 1879, the stables were completed at a cost to the community of about 1,900*l*. Thereupon in March 1880 A. raised this action, concluding for, inter alia, a declaration that the ground in question was vested in the magistrates in perpetuity for the use and enjoyment of the inhabitants, and that they had no right as police commissioners to build thereon; and that they ought to be ordered to remove the stables. The magistrates offered to dedicate to the use of the inhabitants in lieu of the site of the stables another piece of ground which they had acquired by feu charter dated December 1880:—Held, that in the peculiar circumstances of this case, and on the considerations (1) that the community of the burgh had an interest on both sides of the present litigation; and (2) that the tender of a substituted piece of ground was res novitor, affecting the relations of the parties which had emerged since the date of the final judgment of interdict, it was not too late for the Court to exercise its discretionary power, and to refuse the remedy which A. asked, so far as the removal of the stables was demanded. Grahame v. Swan, 7 L. R., App. Cas. (Sc.), 547.

Held, also, that A. was entitled to a declaratory decree affirming the right of the community in the ground in question; to the action being kept in court until the substituted ground had been dedicated in perpetuity to the uses of the inhabitants; and his action being necessary for the vindication of the community's rights, he was entitled to his whole expenses in the Court below and in this house. Ib.

Semble, were A. seeking to enforce the decree which he holds in his own private right and interest, the considerations of inconvenience and pecuniary loss, arising from the position in which the magistrates have placed themselves by their own acts, would not afford a relevant answer to his demand in the present action. Macnair v. Cathcart (Morr. Dic. 12,832), Sanderson v. Geddes (1 Court Sess. Car. 4th Series, 1198), Begg v. Jack (3 Court Sess. Cas. 4th Series, 35), approved, as authorities in favour of the equitable jurisdiction of the Court; but see Lord Watson as to his disapproval of the result at which the Court arrived in Begg v. Jack. Ib.

Interpleader.] 3. Where conflicting claims to a fund in medio have been settled by a decree of preference, a new claimant was only allowed to intervene upon payment of half the costs incurred by the parties declared by the decree to be entitled to the fund. Geikie v. Morris, 4 Jur., N. S., 1157; 6 W. R. 723.

A claimant may, however, intervene at any time while the fund is in medio, and before the decree of preference is pronounced. Ib.

A fund is in medio in a suit while there are conflicting claims against it. Ib.

The English analogy of a new claimant seeking to come in after a decree to distribute property has been made in an interpleader suit, stated and applied. Ib.

Evidence.] 4. In an action by a customer against his banker for a balance appearing by the pass-book, evidence prout de jure, showing error or mistake, is admissible ope exceptionis as a defence. Commercial Bank of Scotland v. Rhind, 3 Macq. H. L. Ca. 643.

A banker's pass-book is not within the category of probative writs under the Act 1681, s. 650. Ib.

5. Under the 1 Geo. 4, c. 120, s. 40, the judges of the Court of Sessions, in reviewing decisions of inferior courts, upon proof are not required to do more than to specify the facts which they find to be established, and to express how far their judgment goes on those facts, or on matters of law. Anderson v. Gill, 3 Macq. H. L. Ca. 180.

Where a document is, during the entire course of the proceedings, in the possession of a party, or of his agent, he must found upon it before the proof has been completed; otherwise he cannot afterwards make use of it, except on special leave obtained from the Court. Ib.

Where res noviter veniens ad notitiam arises after the proof has been completed, the Court should be applied to for leave to establish the new matter by proof. If such leave is not applied for and obtained, the res noviter veniens will be excluded. Ib.

Privileged Documents.] 1. The rule as to privileged communications between an English solicitor and his client, applies equally to a Scotch solicitor resident in England, not being admitted in England, and his client in Scotland. Lawrence v. Campbell, 4 Drew. 485; 5 Jur., N. S., 1071; 28 L. J., Ch., 780.

2. Circumstances under which documents which had been prepared with a view to an action were deemed to be of a confidential nature, and so not liable to production at the requisition of the other party, and this confidentiality held to protect not only the writer to the signet who had conducted the legal proceedings, but also a mining engineer employed in the business. Bargaddie Coal Co. v. Wark, 3 Macq. H. L. Ca. 467.

These documents clearly may be privileged as having been written with a view to the information of the defendant under instructions of counsel previously to raising an action, just in the same way as a brief prepared for a trial or a case for counsel's opinion would be privileged. Ib.

Parties.] 3. Persons who have no title in their own persons to raise and insist in an action, cannot have the right to sue, where nil, validated by the consent and concurrence of the party to whom alone such right or title of action belongs. B. and C., owners of an adjoining feu, raised an action with "consent and concurrence" of the common superior to enforce building restrictions contained in A.'s feu contract:—Held, that B. and C. were strangers to the action, and therefore had no title to sue. Hislop v. Leckie, 6 L. R., App. Cas. (Sc.), 560.

See remarks of Lord Watson as to the question of the importation of new parties into the suit under s. 29 of the Court of Session Act 1868 (31 & 32 Vict. c. 100). Ib.

4. Upon a decree of p'eference in a multiplepoinding parties seeking subsequently to intervene as new claimants in the suit may be put on terms, and subjected to the condition of paying a reasonable proportion of the prior costs. Geikie v. Morris, 3 Macq. H. L. Ca. 347.

Pleading.] 5. A sheriff substitute ordered a passage in certain pleadings drawn by a practitioner in his court to be struck out. He refused. The sheriff substitute suspended him for a month. The practitioner's action for damages held to be unsustainable. Hamilton v. Anderson, 3 Macq. H. L. Ca. 363.

To support an action under such circumstances against a judge, express malice must be alleged, not malice involved in the act, or to be inferred from it. Ib.

The dignity of the judicial office is not promoted by a too captious exercise of judicial power. Thus, a judge may well abstain from severity, when a practitioner improperly avers in his pleading that an interdict has been granted "without hearing the other side." Ib.

The judge may order the pleading to be reformed under 16 & 17 Vict., c. 80, s. 1, and if his order is not obeyed, the judge may himself expunge the offensive passage, for he is authorised "to strike out of the record any matter which he may deem irrelevant or unnecessary." Ib.

6. What is stated in a summons is the basis of the action, and what is averred subsequently is but matter of illustration, unless on a special application leave is given by the Court to vary the substance of the allegations. M'Ewen v. Campbell, 2 Macq. H. L. Ca. 499.

The condescendence and pleas in law are, under the 13 & 14 Vict., c. 36, held to constitute part of the summons. Ib.

Appeal and New Trial.] 7. Competency of appeal under 48 Geo. 3, c. 151, s. 15, and 55 Geo. 3, c. 42, s. 4. Scots Mines Co. v. Leadhills Mining Co., 3 Macq. H. L. Ca. 743.

8. Under a remit, the second division of the Court of Session having attempted to amend a verdict so as to render it unambiguous, the House of Lords:—Held, that the amendment was ultra vires of the Court; that even if the amendment had been ultra vires, it was ineffectual; and that there must be a new trial. Morgan v. Morris, 3 Macq. H. L. Ca. 323.

9. The 40th section of the Judicature Act of Scotland 1825 enacts, inter alia, that the judgment in cases commenced in the sheriff's court shall be subject to appeal to the House of Lords only, so far as the same depends on, or is affected by, matters of law; but shall, in so far as relates to the facts, be held to have the force and effect of a special verdict of a jury, finally and conclusively fixing the several facts specified in the interlocutor. In appeals falling within the scope of this section, the House of Lords has no concern with the proof which has been led in the sheriff's court. When it can be shown that the Court of Session has not exhausted the issue before it, and that there are material questions of fact left undetermined, a remit will be made to the Court below to pronounce findings upon these questions, but that can only be shown by a reference to the record, and not to the proof. And if the questions are not raised by the record, no remit will be made. Mackay v. Dick, 6 L. R., App. Cas. (Sc.), 251.

10. On an appeal from several interlocutors of the Court of Session, the appeal against two being technically incompetent, but a final interlocutor pronouncing a judgment in point of law within the provisions of the 9th section of 55 Geo. 3, c. 42:—Held, that the validity of the appeal in the final interlocutor opened up the whole case. Bartonshill Coal Co. v. Stewart or McGuire, 6 W. R. 697. See also Bartonshill Coal Co. v. Clark or Reid, 6 W. R. 664.

11. The 40th section of 6 Geo. 4, c. 120, provides, "When in causes commenced in any of the courts of the sheriffs, or of the magistrates of burghs, or other inferior courts, matters of fact shall be disputed, and a proof shall be allowed and taken according to the present practice, the Court of Session shall, in reviewing the judgment proceeding on such proof, distinctly specify in their interlocutor the several facts material to the case which they find to be established by the proof, and express how far their judgment proceeds on the matters of fact so found, or on matter of law, and the several points of law which they mean to decide; and the judgment on the cause thus pronounced shall be subject to appeal to the House of Lords, in so far only as the same depends on or is affected by matter of law." A. raised an action in the sheriff's court against B. for 50*l*., the sum payable by him as underwriter on a policy of insurance on A.'s vessel, the Krishna. On the 23rd May the vessel was driven on a sandy beach on the West coast of India, during a violent storm. Soon afterwards the usual monsoon commenced, and lasted till October. On the 7th June A., on hearing from the master that it was impossible to save the ship, gave notice of abandonment to the underwriters; which they refused to accept. On the 1st October A. raised this action, averring that the vessel had become a wreck; and in his amended pleadings he set out that the underwriters had taken possession of the vessel on the 15th October, had floated her on the 16th November, and taken her to Bombay, and had docked her and executed certain repairs, and that thus the underwriters had accepted the abandonment. The underwriters alleged that they only took possession of the vessel as salvors, that no repairs were done except for the safety of the ship, and that A. was informed of all they were doing, and to the last it was intimated to A. that the vessel was lying at Bombay at his risk. The Court of Session found, inter alia, "that the underwriters had not accepted the abandonment; that there was on the 7th June and continued thereafter to be a reasonable prospect of the ship being got off the sandy shore on which she lay without greater expense than a prudent uninsured owner would reasonably incur;" therefore, that there was not at that date a constructive total loss of the ship. A. contended on the question of the competency of his appeal, (1) that the finding that the underwriters did not accept the abandonment was a matter of mixed law and fact; (2) that the findings of fact were incomplete, and ought to be rectified on remit:—Held, apply the rule of Mackay v. [Dick 6 L. R., App. Cas. (Sc.), 251], that the Court had decided the issue submitted to them, an issue of fact and not of law; namely, that the underwriters did not accept the abandonment, and accordingly their finding was not open to impeachment under s. 40 of 6 Geo. 4, c. 120; and (2), that looking at the controversy raised by the record, the findings in fact were reasonably complete. Shepherd v. Henderson, 7 L. R., App. Cas. (Sc.), 49.

III. CONTRACTS.

1. By the law of Scotland, a written agreement cannot be waived or varied by words only. Bargaddie Coal Co. v. Wark, 3 Macq. H. L. Ca. 467.

But if a parol agreement there occurs, what the law calls rei interventus, that is, if acts and circumstances follow upon the agreement in performance of it, the agreement will in that case be as binding as if it had been originally in writing. Ib.

2. Tenants of quarries situated about three miles from their works, who were accustomed to convey the stones from the quarries to the works by carts, entered into an agreement with their landlord to construct a tramway from the quarry to the works, to run, inter alia, "by the end of the policy" of the landlord: and they further agreed to compensate the farm tenants along the line for any damage done to their farms during the currency of their leases. The landlord agreed, inter alia, to give gratuitously the land required for the tramway. Outside the policy ground there was a private road, the property of the landlord, which, before it reached the tenants works, ran through another tenant's stone-pavement yard. This was the only practical route outside the policy for the tramway; and it was alleged that the only obstacle to laying it along that road was, that the other tenant might refuse to allow it being laid on that part passing through his yard, but for this there were no termini habiles. The tenants claimed that the landlord was bound to give them the use and possession of land for the purpose of the tramway, and that either (1) "within and by the end of the policy," or (2) "in any other place as suitable and convenient for them in every respect":—Held, that under the agreement the stipulation was that the tramway should pass outside the walls which enclose the policy of the landlord; and that, by agreeing to give gratuitously the lands required, the landlord merely undertook to give the tenants such rights as were vested in him, leaving them (with the power to use his name) to settle with any persons who might have a right or interest entitling them to object to the formation of the tramway. Sinclair v. Caithness Flagstone Quarrying Co., 6 L. R., App. Cas. (Sc.), 340.

A landlord entered into an agreement with a tenant, the terms of which were dictated by the landlord to a person who acted as his factor. The agreement was then handed unsigned to the tenant, who was present. The factor's name did not appear in the agreement, nor had he any authority to make the agreement for the landlord. Subsequently, the tenant resiled from the agreement:—Held, that the writing was not a valid holograph writ, and therefore the tenant could resile from it. Ib.

Quære, whether the document would be valid, even if the factor had been the sole negotiator acting in the landlord's absence, and by his instructions. Ib.

3. According to the law of Scotland the execution of a formal conveyance, even when it expressly bears to be an implement of a previous contract, supersedes that contract in toto, and the conveyance thenceforth becomes the sole measure of the rights and liabilities of the contracting parties; and a reference to an antecedent agreement is not warranted either by the fact that the subjects conveyed are described in general terms in the dispositive clause of the deed, or by the fact that, in the narrative of the deed, the parties are represented as having agreed upon certain points, which were presumably matters of stipulation, in any written agreement which preceded its execution. Lee v. Alexander, 8 L. R., App. Cas. (Sc.), 853.

Although subsidiary clauses of a deed may be legitimately referred to for the purpose of solving any ambiguity which is raised by the terms of the dispositive clause, yet if the terms of the dispositive clause are per se sufficient to give a right, they cannot be controlled by a reference to the other clauses of the disposition. Ib.

Where one of a set of heads in the dispositive clause of a disposition is expressed in general terms and concludes a specific enumeration and description of separate subjects, primâ facie, and unless the contrary appear, it must be presumed that it was merely intended to carry rights ejusdem generis with those previously described and disponed. Ib.

A completed disposition, dated 1879, and made inter alia by A. in favour of B. of certain superiorities, proceeded on the narrative that it was granted in consideration of an agreement between the parties. It conveyed to B. the dominium directum of separate parcels of land by five clauses. Of the land described in four the dominium utile had been conveyed by A. and his predecessors at various dates before 1873 out and out to the G. & S.W. Railway Company. None of these conveyances was of the nature of a feu right and no mid-superiority was thereby created, and consequently the railway company held the lands thereby disponed (s. 126, Lands Clauses Consolidation (Scotland) Act 1845), under those who were the immediate superiors at the dates of the several conveyances in their favour. The 5th clause was, inter alia, in these terms: "And all other lands and others in the county of Ayr, parts of the said estates of Ballochmyle, . . . and have been disponed by me," etc., to the said G. & S.W. Railway Company. In 1878 A. had disponed an acre of land to the same railway for a reservoir, together with the servitude right of conveying water from it by means of pipes through his intervening lands to the railway station. That deed declared that the said acre of land and servitude were to be holden of the disponer in feu farm fee and heritage for ever; and the lands thus feued were described as parts of "all and whole the lands and tenandry of Ballochmyle and others, being the lands and others particularly described in a writ of clare constat granted by A. in favour of himself in 1864." In 1863 A. had completed his title as superior under the Crown of "all and whole the lands and tenandry of Ballochmyle." In 1864 he made up a feudal title to the dominium utile of these lands by obtaining from himself, as his own immediate superior, the writ of clare referred to. These several estates of superiority and fee remained vested in A. under separate titles. The effect, therefore, of the feu-disposition of 1878 was to split the dominium utile of the acre of ground and its accompanying servitude rights, as vested in A. by the writ of 1864, into two estates; one an estate of fee belonging to the railway company, and the other a subordinate (yet independent) estate of superiority, belonging to A., interposed between his vassal's estate of fee and his own estate of superiority under the Crown. B., under the above 5th clause, claimed the mid-superiority of the acre of ground feued in 1878 to the railway company. A. adduced proof to show that the land in question was misdescribed in the deed of 1878, that it did not "belong to the lands and tenandry of Ballochmyle," but was part and parcel of other lands; he also sought to refer to previous letters to show what the contract was:—Held, that the evidence was not sufficient to discredit the description of the lands, the onus probandi being on A.; that there was not in the dispositive clause any ambiguity of expression such as to necessitate or justify a reference to the other clauses of the deed or to the previous letters for aid in its interpretation; but the terms of that clause did not sustain the claim made by B. Ib.

Insurance.] 1. Consideration of the question whether in Scotland constructive total loss is to be taken from the date of notice of abandonment, or from the date of commencement of action. Shepherd v. Henderson, 7 L. R., App. Cas. (Sc.), 49.

IV. ECCLESIASTICAL PROPERTY.

2. Where a congregation of seceders had, by a formal vote, united themselves to the Free Church of Scotland; and where, in pursuance of that vote, a Free Church minister had been solemnly inducted, without any objection or dissent on the part of a small minority of four persons, who had complete knowledge of all the proceedings:—Held, that an action brought by them to have certain property, which had passed by the amalgamation, restored, "was an action instituted by them in respect of their own individual interests; and that in respect of those interests, they were precluded by their own conduct from maintaining the action." Cairncross v. Lorimer, 6 Macq. H. L. Ca. 827; 7 Jur., N. S., 149.

3. As to jurisdiction of English or Scotch Courts over and interference with the General Synod of the Scotch Church. See Forbes v. Eden, 1 L. R., H. L. (Sc.), 569.

4. The minister of the parish of B., Scotland, in 1875 raised an action of augmentation, modification, and locality against the heritors. A scheme of locality was prepared, D. lodged objections to the scheme, in so far as it localled minister's stipend on eighty-one acres of his land, alleging that these eighty-one acres were held under titles cum decimis inclusis et nunquam antea separatis, and that in respect of certain judicial proceedings in 1795 and 1807 it was res judicata that these lands were so held. The proceedings relied on were as follows: In 1795 the then minister of B. raised an action of augmentation, etc., and produced a rental of the whole lands in the parish, in which he included the eighty-one acres in question as liable for teinds. The ancestor of D. "and the other heritors" lodged a minute stating, inter alia, that these eighty-one acres were held cum decimis inclusis, and craving that they might be struck out of the rental. On the 2nd December 1795 the teind Court pronounced an interlocutor ordering them to be struck out. Rectified schemes of locality were prepared, and objections lodged by other heritors, but the proceedings were not carried out to a final decree. In 1807 the same minister raised a new action of augmentation, etc., which, after certain objections were disposed of, proceeded to a final decree. In none of the schemes of locality since 1795 were the eighty-one acres included:—Held, that the plea of res judicata was well founded. Dundas v. Waddell, 5 L. R., App. Cas. (Sc.), 249.

V. FAMILY RELATIONS.

Curator.] 1. Four persons domiciled and resident in Scotland had accepted the trusts of a Scotch deed, attested by two witnesses, by which they were duly appointed tutors and curators to a Scotch orphan child, whose only property consisted of real estates situated in Scotland. The child having come to reside in England for the sake of its health, and a suit having been instituted by other parties in its name, for the purpose of making it a ward in this Court:—Held, on the construction of the deed, that it appeared to be made in contemplation of the child continuing to reside in Scotland, and with reference solely to her so doing; and the care and custody of the child being considered to be therefore unprovided for, and the curators who under the deed had the management of the property being parties, and having appeared to the suit, the Lord Chancellor referred to the Master to approve of a scheme for the residence of the child, and to appoint guardians. Beattie v. Johnstone, 1 Ph. 17; 10 L. J., N. S., Ch., 300; 5 Jur. 671. Affirmed sub nom. Johnstone v. Beattie, 10 Cl. & F. 42.

2. A curator bonis and factor loco tutoris of Scotch infants is not bound to pay into the Court of Chancery assets belonging to the infants receivable under an English will of which the curator is administrator, and which is in course of administration by the Court. Mackie v. Darling, 12 L. R., Eq., 319; 19 W. R. 796.

Legitim.] 3. According to the Scotch law the younger children are entitled to share, under the name of legitim, a third of the personal estate of which their father may die possessed, unless they be excluded from it, either by the marriage contract of their parents, or by express renunciation by themselves. It is usual in Scotch settlements, made on the marriage of younger children, to insert such a clause of renunciation. Breadalbane (Marquis) v. Chandos (Marquis), 2 Myl. & C. 711; 7 L. J., N. S., Ch., 28.

Previously to the marriage of the son of an Englishman with the daughter of a Scotchman, proposals for a settlement were agreed upon between the fathers of the intended husband and wife, which proposals, after providing for all the purposes usual in settlements of that description, stipulated that the settlement should contain all "usual and necessary clauses." A settlement was afterwards executed in the English form, all the parties being then in England, and related to estates of the husband's family in England, Ireland, and Jamaica, and to the money portion of the wife. No clause was introduced relating to any claim which the intended wife might have, under the law of Scotland, to any part of her father's property. The wife having become entitled, by the law of Scotland, on the death of her father, to a share of his personal estate, by way of legitim, the Court (discharging an order of the Court below) refused an injunction to prevent the payment of the wife's legitim, which injunction was applied for on the ground that, under the stipulation for the insertion in the settlement of "usual and necessary clauses," a clause to bar legitim ought to have been introduced. The Lord Chancellor dissolved the injunction on the grounds—first, that the proviso was to be construed with reference to the subject matter and objects of the settlement, which was in the English form, and applied exclusively to English subject matter; and that a clause barring legitim, therefore, could not be considered as comprehended under it: secondly, that whereas the claim to legitim could only be barred by an express contract between the father and the daughter to that effect, the father, in approving of the proposals, was acting on behalf of his daughter, and not as a party dealing adversely with her, for the purchase or renunciation of her rights: and thirdly, that there was no sufficient evidence to show that the proposals constituted the final contract of the parties, and had not been varied by some subsequent agreement prior to the execution of the settlement. Ib.

An advance of a marriage portion to a daughter, does not even pro tanto of itself, by the law of Scotland, bar her claim to legitim. Such a claim cannot be barred by implication. A marriage contract, in which the father of the lady agreed to pay a certain sum of money, as the portion or fortune of his daughter, and which then went on to describe how the sum should be paid partly in his lifetime, and partly out of his estate after his death, was held not to be capable, without more, of barring her claim to legitim. S. C. 4 Cl. & F. 43. Affirming 2 Myl. & C. 711; 7 L. J., N. S., Ch., 28.

Double Portions.] 4. The presumption established in England against double portions does not exist as a canon of construction in the law of Scotland. Kippen v. Darley, 3 Macq. H. L. Ca. 203.

In the law of Scotland it does not appear that any general antecedent presumption exists against double portions. Ib.

Father's Right of Administration.] 5. A father is entitled, as his child's administrator, to demand his child's trust money. Dumbreck v. Stevenson, 4 Macq. H. L. Ca. 86.

Husband and Wife.] 6. The 6th section of the Married Women's Property (Scotland) Act 1881 enacts, "After the passing of this Act the husband of any woman who may die domiciled in Scotland shall take by operation of law the same share and interest in her movable estate which is taken by a widow in her deceased husband's movable estate according to the law and practice of Scotland, and subject always to the same rules of law in relation to the nature and amount of such share and interest, and the exclusion, discharge, or satisfaction thereof, as the case may be." A woman, married before the passing of the above-cited Act, succeeded to movable property, some before and some after the date of the Act, which was settled upon her for her personal use, and free from the jus mariti of her husband. She died, without issue, intestate, and domiciled in Scotland. In a claim by A., her husband, against her executrix:—Held, that s. 6 of the Married Women's Property (Scotland) Act 1881 applies to marriages entered into before the passing of that Act as well as to those contracted after that date; and that, therefore, B. was entitled in accordance with that section to half his wife's personal estate. Also that sub-s. 2 of s. 3 applies only to the preceding sections. Paterson v. Poe, 8 L. R., App. Cas. (Sc.), 678.

VI. HIGHWAYS.

1. The trustees of the W. S. bridge, which spans the River Dee and connects the counties of Kincardine and Aberdeen, sought to have it found that the local Acts 10 Geo. 4, c. 43, and 23 Vict., c. 26, being the W. S. Bridge and Roads Acts—had ceased to be of force and effect within the county of Kincardine (that county having adopted the Roads and Bridges Act 1878): That the trustees have ceased to be under any obligation as regards the management or maintenance of the bridge or road, and that the defenders, the county road trustees of Kincardine, and the commissioners of supply of the county of Aberdeen, are bound to maintain and keep in proper repair the bridge and road: and further, that the trustees have ceased to be liable for the debts incurred by them as trustees. By the local Act of 1865 tolls were abolished in the county of Aberdeen; but from its provisions the burgh was excluded. The Aberdeenshire portion of the road and part of the bridge are within the burgh boundary. The county of Aberdeen has not adopted the Act of 1878, and the commissioners of supply of that county deny any liability in respect to the maintenance, etc., of the bridge and road:—Held, that the true effect of the Roads and Bridges Act 1878, in the true circumstances, was to continue in force the local Acts so far as the powers and duties thereby imposed on the trustees for the management, etc., of that part of the bridge and road which is within the county and parliamentary burgh of Aberdeen, together with the powers of demanding and taking tolls within the county and burgh conferred by such Acts as long as the Roads and Bridges Act 1878 shall not be in force therein: that the liability of the trustees to the debts incurred under the local Acts had now ceased and fallen severally upon the defenders: that the commissioners of supply are entitled to receive from the W. S. bridge and road trustees all surplus of income accruing to them from tolls exacted on the bridge and road within the county and parliamentary burgh of Aberdeen, after providing for the expenses of management, etc., and, doing so, are entitled to be relieved by them from the proportion of the debts belonging under the Roads and Bridges Act 1878 to the county and parliamentary burgh of Aberdeen, and that as regards that part of the bridge and roads within the county of Kincardine, the local Acts had ceased to be in force; and the road trustees of that county are bound to maintain and keep in repair that part of the bridge and road. Aberdeen Commissioners of Supply v. Morice, 6 L. R., App. Cas. (Sc.), 881.

2. Magistrates for a burgh held the links from time immemorial for behoof of the inhabitants, and, inter alia, subject to the obligation of preserving the same for the purposes of the game of golf and for the recreation and amusement of the inhabitants. They had from time to time exercised powers of administration and management over the links, such as the letting of the pasturage, the regulation of bleaching clothes on the links, the construction of a sloping walk, and the levelling and filling up other portions of the ground. The magistrates proposed to make a macadamised road along the outside boundary of the links, where that boundary adjoins certain feus let off by them in 1820, which feus are no longer, in point of law, part of the links. P., an inhabitant of the burgh and member of the principal golfing club there, and others, the appellants, sought by note of suspension and interdict to restrain the magistrates either from making the road or from permitting any road to be used in that place for wheel traffic:—Held, substantially affirming the decision of the judges of the Court below, but altering their interlocutor, that the evidence proved that the proposed road would have no substantial interference with the obligation of golfing, etc., and that the road might be reconciled with its due observance: but that it was inconsistent with that obligation for the magistrates to alienate any part of the solum of the ground in question, or to abdicate their existing powers of administration either by granting private easements to particular individuals, or having made the road to create a public easement by dedicating it to the public. Paterson v. St. Andrew's (Provost), 6 L. R., App. Cas. (Sc.), 833.

VII. NUISANCE.

3. The Shotts Iron Company possess valuable mining leases of the iron ore under the estate of, inter alia, Penicuik, under the condition, not to calcine within a certain area. They calcined beyond this area, but near to the boundary of the lands of Glencorse. The calcining was carried on in open bings eight feet high. The proprietor of Glencorse on the ground, inter alia, that his ornamental plantations were being destroyed by the fumes from the bings, raised an action concluding for interdict against the company calcining within two miles of his estate:—Held, altering the terms of the interlocutor pronounced—that the Glencorse plantations had been injured by the calcining, and that the pursuer was entitled to interdict to prevent the company from carrying on their calcining within one mile of his lands, in the same manner hitherto pursued by them, or in any other manner whereby noxious vapours may be caused to pass over the pursuer's lands, or any part thereof, to the damage or injury of his plantations or estate,

1. By the 43rd section of the Kirkcaldy and Dysart Waterworks Act 1867 it was provided that the commissioners under the Act "should be bound to make good to the Countess of Rothes and her heirs, etc., all damages which may be occasioned to her or them, by reason of or in consequence of any bursting, or flow, or escape of water from any reservoir, or aqueduct, or pipe, or other work connected therewith" which may be constructed by the commissioners. The countess is proprietrix of lands situated below the site of one of the reservoirs, and during an extraordinary rainfall a great quantity of water was continuously discharged from the reservoir, through a waste weir, into the watercourse of a burn, and did much damage to the countess's lands. She claimed compensation. There was no failure or insufficiency of the works and no negligence: —Held, that on the construction of the above clause the countess was entitled to compensation for damage by flood waters from the reservoir, no matter how caused. Rothes (Countess) v. Kirkcaldy Waterworks Commissioners, 7 L. R., App. Cas. (Sc.), 694.

Semble, statutory provisions, such as here, in a local and personal Act must be regarded as a contract between the parties, whether made by their mutual agreement, or forced on them by the legislature. Ib.

VIII. REAL ESTATE.

Entails.] 2. An heir of entail being also heir of the line, is bound by the law of Scotland to collate or bring into account the value of the real estate to which he has succeeded, before being entitled to claim the share of the personalty of the deceased. Anstruther v. Anstruther, 4 Cl. & F. 33. S. P. Breadalbane (Marquis) v. Chandos (Marquis) id. 43. And see Id. 56. n.; 2 Myl. & C. 711; 7 L. J., N. S., Ch., 28.

3. In a suit by the heir of entail in possession, entitled under a Scotch entail to a portion of the rents of the entailed estates, the other portion of such rents being directed to be accumulated during pupillarity, and invested in lands to be conveyed to the persons taking in succession under the same entail, the substituted heirs of entail are necessary parties. Beattie v. Johnstone, 8 Hare 169.

4. The rule which allows the first tenant in tail to represent the fee in suits affecting the estate, does not apply to heirs of entail under a Scotch deed of tailsie; and, therefore, a decree made in a suit framed upon that principle for the administration of a fund, which in a certain event was liable to be invested in the purchase of land in Scotland, to the uses of a Scotch deed of tailsie, was opened at the instance of a subsequent heir of entail under that deed. Fordyce v. Brydges, 2 Ph. 497; 2 Coop. C. C. 326; 17 L. J., N. S., Ch., 135; 16 id. 81; 10 Beav. 90; 10 Jur. 1028.

5. An entail defective in any one of its prohibitions is bad in all. The rule is the same although the question may be inter hæredes. Dempster v. Dempster, 3 Macq. H. L. Ca. 62.

The consequence may be that an entail cannot be made otherwise than under the Act of 1685. But this consequence is not mischievous, because the policy of the law is not to encourage, but to discourage, entails. Ib.

6. A charter of resignation having the provisions and restrictions of an entail at length, but proceeding on a procuratory which contained them only by reference, does not constitute a binding entail. Cochrane v. Baillie, 2 Macq. H. L. Ca. 529.

An obligation to make an entail, followed in the same instrument by a procuratory defective in itself as an entail, though meant to constitute one, affords no ground for an action to have a valid entail executed. Ib.

A disposition of lands taken to the heirs, and under the restrictions of an entail of other lands, but not setting forth the restrictions at length, affords no ground for an action to have a valid entail executed. Ib.

An entail good inter hæredes, but bad against creditors, is a bar to the execution by the heir in possession under it of a new deed of strict entail. Ib.

An entail good inter hæredes, but bad against third parties, is made void to all intents and purposes by the 11 & 12 Vict., c. 36. Ib.

Semble, that an action of declarator of nullity under the 11 & 12 Vict., c. 36, in such a case is unnecessary. Ib.

7. Circumstances under which it was held, first, that the words "so often as apparent or presumptive heirs are females," did not exclusively mean daughters of the person executing a power, but might mean daughters of any one to whom the succession opened under the destination. Martin v. Kelso, 2 Macq. H. L. Ca. 556.

Secondly, that the power given to the heir of entail in possession of selecting one of the heirs portioners to the exclusion of other, was a power of substituting the younger for the elder, not to the effect of giving her a life rent, but so that the right of succession might go to the heirs of her body under the entail. Ib.

Thirdly, that a deed inter vivos was not an improper form of executing the power. Ib.

And, fourthly, that the power might be executed by the heir of entail in possession, precisely as if he were a proprietor in fee simple, and that no subsequent alteration of circumstances could defeat the execution. Ib.

8. The heir in possession of an entailed estate in Scotland petitioned under the statutes for disentail. The first heir substitute gave his consent, but the second and third refused. In valuing the interest of the second and third heirs substitute, under the 5th section of the Entailed Amendment (Scotland) Act 1875, the question arose (1) whether the probable duration of the life of the first heir substitute should be taken from the tables on the basis of his actual age, or whether his actual state of health should be ascertained by inquiry; he refusing to be medically examined, and the second and third heirs alleging that he had suffered from ailments which tended to reduce the probable duration of his life greatly below the average of persons of his age. And (2) whether, there being only one other heir in the entail existing, the second and third heirs' chance of succeeding to the fee simple by surviving all the other heirs of entail should be taken into account:—Held, reversing the de-vision of the Court below, (1) that all the facts tending to reduce the first heir's life below the average were relevant and should be taken into consideration; and (2) that the chance of succeeding to the fee simple ought to be valued. M'Donald v. M'Donald, 5 L. R., App. Cas. (Sc.), 519.

1. A., in his final general settlement dated 1853, revoking all prior deeds so far as inconsistent therewith, conveyed his whole estates to trustees with directions to execute a deed of strict entail of his lands "to and in favour of B. and his heirs whatsoever, whom failing to and in favour of C. and his heirs whatsoever," whom failing to persons thereafter to be nominated by him (the truster), always excluding heirs portioners, and failing such nomination, then to "my own heirs whatsoever and their assignees;" but declaring that any member of a family in possession of the entailed estate of M. should be excluded; and also the descendants of the body of his sister Charlotte. B. and C. were A.'s natural sons. C. predeceased A., unmarried. A. died without executing any deed of nomination of fresh heirs. His trustees executed in 1859 a deed in the form of an entail conveying the estates to B., exactly in terms of the destination in A.'s deed, leaving out C. B. treated the estates as fee simple, and left them in certain directions on his death without issue. Thereupon the heir-at-law of A. (his brother's son) raised an action against A.'s trustees and others concluding for reduction of the deed of 1859, and all subsequent writs, on the ground, inter alia, that the directions as to entailing the estates contained in his uncle's settlements had not been carried out by the trustees, in respect that the said deed was not a valid entail under the Act of 1685; and for a declaration that the trustees are bound to execute a new deed of entail in favour of himself as institute and of several other descendants of A.'s brother and sisters as substitute heirs of entail, or alternatively, assuming the deed of 1859 was executed in terms of the truster's intentions, to have it found that it was an effectual entail, and that he was entitled to succeed as heir of entail next in succession to B. He relied on the various prior deeds and settlements, which he contended should be read along with the deed of 1853, which, if done, made it clear that A.'s intention was to limit the class of heirs whatsoever of B. to heirs of the body, and also by the term "my own heirs whatsoever," he intended to designate his nearest heir of line and the heirs of the body of such heir, whom failing his own heirs whatsoever: —Held, that the deed of entail of 1859 had been executed in conformity with the terms of A.'s final trust, the terms of which were clear and unambiguous. That the pursuer had failed to establish that he either possessed or was entitled to claim the character of an heir of provision and tailzie under the entail directed by the trust deed of 1853; that the only ulterior destination being to the truster's own "heirs whatsoever and assignees" the entail came to an end in the person of B., and he could dispose of the estates as he pleased. That it was competent to read all the prior deeds to see how far any of them were to receive effect, along with his final trust settlement—but not competent to use them to put a construction on words bearing a clear and well-understood technical meaning, and which they do not bear if the deed be construed by itself. Gordon v. Gordon, 7 L. R., App. Cas. (Sc.), 713.

2. In the law of Scotland general words of disposition in a mortis causâ deed are, in the absence of any proof of a contrary intention (and the law of Scotland allows such contrary intention to be proved by evidence of a kind which in England would not be admissible for that purpose), sufficient to pass heritable property vested at the date of the deed in the disponer with a special destination to heirs substitute. A. was fee simple proprietor of the estates of Kintarbert and Crossaig in Scotland. He died leaving a disposition and settlement, without prohibitory clauses, disponing these lands to B. and his heirs male, whom failing to C. and his heirs male, whom failing, to certain cousins and their respective heirs male. B., who owned other estates, took possession, and died leaving a mortis causâ deed, giving, in language entirely general, all his heritable and movable property to C. and his heirs, whom failing, to his sister D. C. entered into possession of all B.'s estates, and soon afterwards died intestate and without issue. The sister, D., then, as heiress of provision under B.'s general mortis causâ deed, claimed the estate of Kintarbert ard Crossaig as well as the other lands of B. E. disputed D.'s right, claiming these estates as heir of provision under A.'s settlement; contending that the general term of B.'s deed could not be held to include Kintarbert and Crossaig, lands already settled upon a destination of heirs; nor was this B.'s intention:—Held, that D. was entitled, because B. was absolute fiar, being the heir in possession under a settlement or entail without fetters, and therefore a general disposition by him passed these lands as part of the universitas of his estate, there being nothing in the mere nature of such a special destination, as here, to prevent it; and no proof of any contrary intention to limit the operation of such general words. Campbell v. Campbell, 5 L. R., App. Cas. (Sc.), 787.

Heritable Bonds.] 3. Heritable bonds, together with English securities, were given on loan of money to a domiciled Englishman: —Held, that will disposing of money due on such securities was effectual, and that heir-at-law had no claim in respect of such bonds. Buccleugh v. Hoare, 4 Madd. 467.

4. A Scotch heritable bond, though containing a personal obligation, carries with it in the personal right, as being jus nobilius, and descends to the heir, and will not pass by an English will. Jerningham v. Herbert, Taml. 103.

Lord's Fine.] 5. The Conveyancing (Scotland) Act 1874 (37 & 38 Vict., c. 94), s. 4, enacts that every proprietor who at the commencement of the Act shall be duly infeft in any lands which have been feued, shall be deemed and held to be as at the date of the registration of such infeftment in the appropriate register of sasines, duly entered with the nearest superior—to the same effect as if such superior had granted a writ of confirmation according to the existing law and practice. A testator, who died on the 5th March 1873, conveyed to trustees by trust disposition his whole heritable estate. The trustees were inter alia to pay certain legacies and gradually extinguish the testator's debts; after which they were to entail the lands upon P. R., the heir-at-law of the testator, if then alive and of the age of twenty-five, and his heirs male, whom failing certain other persons. Heirs female were to be excluded, and the trustees were given power to sell or excamble any part of the lands. The trustees became infeft in the estate by recording a notarial deed in the register of sasines in March 1874. In part of the lands the testator had been the last entered vassal; and the superior of those lands demanded from the trustees a casualty of composition of a year's rent on the ground that they were singular successors. The trustees contended that they were not liable for any casualty whatever, the heir P. R. being willing to enter with the superior and pay a casualty of relief—a duplicant of the feu duty—but that, in any event, they were only liable for a casualty payable by an heir:—Held, that the trustees being impliedly entered with the superior, and being singular successors of the last vassal, were liable in a casualty amounting to a year's rent; and that the heir of the last entered vassal could not now be tendered to the superior for entry, and so relieve the trustees of payment of the higher casualty. Rankin v. Lamont, 5 L. R., App. Cas. (Sc.), 44.

Rents.] 1. The Act 4 & 5 Will. 4, c. 22, for the apportionment of rents, annuities, and other periodical payments:—Held, to extend to Scotland. Fordyce v. Bridges, 1 H. L. Ca. 1.

2. A testator directed his trustees to pay to his wife "the whole annual produce and rents of the residue of his estates both heritable and movable." Coal and iron mines were leased by the testator before his death. His trustees afterwards leased others. In a question whether the wife was entitled to the rents of those opened after the testator's death:—Held, that in law she was not entitled; and that there was nothing in the trust deed which showed that she was to have such a benefit. Campbell v. Wardlaw, 8 L. R., App. Cas. (Sc.), 641.

Held, also, that the Trusts (Scotland) Act of 1867 was merely an Act to facilitate administration without disturbing the interests of the beneficiaries under the trust, i.e., it enables trustees who also have the testator's authority to let minerals, to let them for the customary period instead of a lease for an uncertain period, namely, a tenancy for life. Whether the power to let minerals on long leases under sub-s. 3, s. 2, of the Act includes a power to open up and let new mineral fields not decided. Ib.

Warranty on Sale.] 3. Articles of roup of certain lands expressly stipulated that the purchaser was to take the property with all risks of error in the particulars. A. agreed by missives attached to the articles of roup to buy the estate, and a conveyance was executed containing a clause of warrandice in the usual general terms. Neither the disposition nor the articles of roup contained any information as to the tenure of the lands. The particulars of sale contained this statement: "The lands hold of the Crown," and in answer to an inquiry made before the sale on behalf of A. as to the nature of the holding, the seller's agents referred A. to the note of particulars, adding: "The proprietors" (B. and C.) "are not entered with the Crown, but you are aware the Crown never asks for an entry." The foundation for the belief that the lands were held direct of the Crown rested on a decree of tinsel, dated 1813, directed against the heir of line of the last superior, and a decree of forfeiture of the mid-superiority, dated 1849, followed by a Crown charter. From 1813 there had been no assertion of a contrary right. Immediately before the sale the agents for D., the disponee of the last superior, wrote to B. and C.'s agents claiming the right of mid-superiority, but this claim, on its being disputed and not further persevered with, B. and C.'s agents did not intimate to A. Two years later B.'s agents renewed the claim, and ultimately raised an action against A., claiming a year's rent as composition on his entry. A. was found liable, and the decree of forfeiture was reduced. A. thereupon raised this action against B. and C. for repetition of the sum paid, the expenses of the litigation, and a sum equal to one and a half times the casualty of composition, on the ground (1), of warrandice, and (2), misrepresentation and concealment on the part of B.'s agents:—Held, that there had been no breach of warrandice; and that the representation was perfectly true according to the knowledge and belief of those who made it, and, that being so, any error therein was covered by the express contract of the purchaser to take the property with the risks of errors in the particulars. Brownlie v. Campbell, 5 L. R., App. Cas. (Sc.), 925.

Restrictive Covenants.] 4. A restriction in a feu charter, purporting to bind not only the original contracting feuar and his heirs, but also his assignee or any tenant or possessor of the houses to be erected on the feu, and power to enforce or dispense with it, is given not to the disponer or his heirs, but to the superior for the time being; the restriction, unless repugnant to the nature of the estate taken by the feuar or to public policy, is a condition of the feu, and runs with the land against singular successors. In all cases of restrictive conditions in a feu charter, the superior must have power to enforce them, or to dispense with them according to his own will or not, whether the charter is so expressed or not, unless the benefit of them and the right to enforce them are communicated to other feuars. A restraint against carrying on the trade of a publican is as good in law, and as capable of running with the land, as a restraint against carrying on any other business; and the fact that restrictions are placed by statute upon the freedom of that particular trade constitutes no reason why a private contract to prevent it from being carried on, without the consent of the superior, should be held invalid or contrary to law. Feu rights of land in Grangemouth, a town of 5,000 inhabitants, contained restrictions against retailing malt or spirituous liquors, or allowing the same to be sold or retailed within the buildings erected on the feus without the superior's permission. The superior sought an interdict to prohibit the defenders, the feuars, from continuing to sell any kind of malt or spirituous liquors, etc., alleging that the whole of the town was built on ground held of him as superior; that he was proprietor of certain houses in the heart of the town at a rental of 750*l.*; that he had still a large extent of ground in and adjacent to the town available for feuing, and that his mansion-house was within half a mile of the town: and that these properties were damaged by the existence of so many public-houses. The defenders pleaded no interest to sue the action, acquiescence, and prescriptive use. On the question of relevancy:—Held, first, that the restrictions sought to be imposed were not personal, or inconsistent with public policy, nor repugnant to the pursuer's estate, they relating to the use and employment of buildings erected on the land; secondly, that the interest to sue the action was connected with patrimonial rights, and that the superior's case, as shown on the record, was sufficient to entitle him to the relief which he prayed. Tailors of Aberdeen v. Coutts (1 Rob. App. Cas. 296) followed. Zetland (Earl) v. Hislop, 7 L. R., App. Cas. (Sc.), 427.

Held, also, that it was the plain intention of the contracting parties that the superior should determine, whether there are to be public-houses upon any of the feus, and if so, their number and position, and accordingly the superior in granting his licence to certain feuars to sell liquor was in no sense departing from or waiving the prohibition. But it was a different question in all or some of the cases, whether the pursuer might not be seeking to enforce the restrictions under circumstances, or in a manner, which ought to deprive him of the assistance of the Court, there being facts averred, from which, if proved or admitted, it might be legally inferred that successive superiors had so acquiesced in the feuar's use of their premises for the sale of liquor that the prohibition must be held to have been unconditionally discharged. But the record leaving it open to the superior to adduce evidence which might give a different colour to these facts, the parties must proceed to proof before the questions of acquiescence and waiver, and prescriptive use, could be decided. Ib.

Semble, though Tailors of Aberdeen v. Coutts (1 Rob. App. Cas. 296) does determine, that the superior cannot enforce a restriction on property, unless he has some legitimate interest; that case does not lay down the doctrine, that an action at the superior's instance, which merely sets forth the condition of his feu right and its violation by the vassal must be dismissed as irrelevant, because the pursuer has failed to allege interest. The vassal in consenting to be bound by the restriction concedes the interest of the superior, and therefore the onus is upon the vassal, who is pleading a release from his contract to prove that any legitimate interest which the pursuer may originally have had in maintaining the restriction has ceased to exist. Ib.

1. It is settled by a series of decisions in the law of Scotland that where it appears that the restrictions in a feu contract are entered into for the benefit of other feus, either already existing, or to be created by the superior thereafter, the restrictions may be enforced by each co-feuar as far as his interest is concerned. But the fact of several feuars of neighbouring plots of building land in the same street holding from a common superior does not, by itself, entitle one of those feuars to claim the benefit of restrictions contained in the feu contract of another, unless some mutuality and community of rights and obligations is otherwise established between them, which can only be done by express stipulations in their respective contracts with the superior, or by reasonable implication from reference in both contracts to a common plan or scheme of building, or by mutual agreement between the feuars themselves. A.'s author was a party to a feu contract of a piece of land upon which a house was already built, and he was taken bound not to build any other buildings on the said piece of land except offices. The adjoining pieces of land were feued off, some being taken not to build and others having that right. It was not indicated in A.'s feu that the restrictions were imposed for the benefit of the co-feurs, beyond the facts that the feus were all given out nearly at the same time; that some of the conditions inserted in the feus are similar to each other; and that the houses being built in a square, produce a considerable degree of uniformity. B. and C., proprietors of a neighbouring feu, sought to prevent A. building a carriage show-room on the ground intervening between his house and the street of the square, and raised an interdict with the "consent and concurrence" of the superior; there was no condescendence or pleas in law for the superior:—Held (1), that the restrictive conditions as to building in A.'s feu contract was not in any sense jus quæsitum tertio; and (2), that the superior was not a party complainant in the action for own separate interest; and therefore B. and C. being strangers to A.'s contract, A. ought to have been assoilsied from the action. Hislop v. Leckie, 6 L. R., App. Cas. (Sc.), 560.

IX. SEA AND FORESHORE.

2. The officers of state in Scotland obtained a judgment or interdict against an individual who had, by erecting a wall, encroached on the seashore, the suit being instituted by them solely to protect the public right. The judgment of the Court below was appealed against and affirmed, but was affirmed without costs. Smith v. Stair (Earl), 2 H. L. Ca. 807; 13 Jur. 713.

3. Held, that the Clyde Navigation Trustees, being empowered by sects. 76 and 84 of 21 & 22 Vict., c. 149, to dredge the bed of the River Clyde to a deep of seventeen feet, cannot be interdicted from dredging ground which has been declared the property of the riparian owner, subject to any right which the public may have over it, and subject also to any rights conferred on the trustees by their Acts of Parliament: but so held without prejudice to the question of their liability to subsequent

X. WILLS.

1. The mere fact of proving a testamentary instrument to be a holograph, does not shift the onus of proving the handwriting of the testator from the party propounding the instrument. Anderson v. Anderson, 6 W. R. 526.

2. Alterations in substantialibus, in an instrument written manu alienâ, are presumed to have been made after its execution, but not so in holograph writings. The rules which have been laid down as to erasures, etc., in the former do not generally apply to the latter. Distinction between interlineation and obliteration: the former must be intentional, the latter may not. Semble, in holographs, erased words may be regarded, to discover the meaning of words not erased. When the subject of a bequest is an indefinite quantity of money, or anything else, the gift is void. But where a bequest was for the establishment of an hospital (school) for one hundred boys:—Held, that it was a gift of such a sum as would reasonably be sufficient to erect a suitable building, to maintain and educate one hundred boys, and to pay officers, etc. Semble, there is no material (if any) difference between the law of England and Scotland in regard to charities except as to mortmain; the statute 9 Geo. 2, c. 36, not applying to Scotland. Erwan (Provost of Dundee) v. Morris, 6 W. R. 556.

3. In the repositories of the deceased, who left no other testamentary instrument, was found a holograph writing, signed and dated and complete in its testamentary provisions; but headed "notes of intended settlement by" the deceased. The proof allowed threw no light on the intentions of the deceased:—Held, that the document was the last will and settlement of the deceased. Whyte v. Pollok, 7 L. R., App. Cas. (Sc.), 400; 47 L. T. 356.

Semble, a mere ambiguity occurring in the descriptive title written by the testator cannot qualify the terms or destroy the validity of the document which it professes to describe, when the legal character and effect of the document taken by itself are not doubtful. Such an ambiguity will justify inquiry; but should the parties lead no proof, or should the proof adduced by them be inconclusive, the document must receive effect according to its tenor and substance. Ib.

4. Case in which the House of Lords held that certain documents, though in several places erased and obliterated, were nevertheless not only probative and testamentary, but contained a good and an effectual expression of an intention to establish in Dundee an hospital to accommodate one hundred boys. Dundee (Magistrates) v. Morris, 3 Macq. H. L. Ca. 134.

The genuineness and authenticity of a document tendered for confirmation as the last will of a deceased person lies on the party who propounds it. As it purports to deprive the next of kin of a right which would otherwise belong to them, the tenderer or propounder of the document must show, not only that it is genuine and authentic, but that it constitutes the last will of a free and capable testator. Anderson v. Gill, 3 Macq. H. L. Ca. 180.

To shift the onus probandi, and cast it on those who dispute the genuineness and authenticity of the document, it is not enough simply to show that it is a holograph instrument, meaning thereby an instrument all in one hand. Ib.

It must be proved that the document is holograph of the deceased. Ib.

5. Where a testator, in a foreign will, expresses himself in technical language of the place where made and where he is domiciled, to obtain the intention the technical terms must be interpreted by the meaning put on them in the system of law from which they are borrowed. By the common law of Scotland the actual intention of the maker of any validly executed settlement of movables received effect when duly ascertained; and now by the Titles to Land Consolidation (Scotland) Act 1868, the Scotch law—which would previously have rejected as inoperative a foreign will dealing with Scotch lands not executed with all the required formalities; and not expressed in appropriate terms of de presenti conveyance—must, so far as may be practicable with the principles of that law, give effect to the intention as expressed in the will, just the same as if it dealt with movables and not heritage. The technical rule of Scotch law applicable to movable and immovable property, that a gift or devise to a parent in life rent, and after his death to his unborn or unnamed children in fee, confers a fee on the parent and a spes successionis only on the children—(Frog's Creditors, Mor. 4262)—is excluded by anything in the gift itself, showing beyond doubt that the intention was to give nothing more than a life interest to the parent. Studd v. Cook, 8 L. R., App. Cas. (Sc.), 577.

A testator domiciled in England, who died possessed of lands in England and Scotland, left a will executed according to the forms of English law, by which he devised all his lands as consisted of "freehold of inheritance" to the use of his eldest son, E. F. S., and his assigns for his life "without impeachment of waste," and after the death of E. F. S. to the use of the first and every other son of E. F. S. successively according to their respective seniorities in tail male, with remainders over. Under a subsequent clause E. F. S. took as residuary legatee all property not otherwise disposed of. Subsequent to the date of the will children were born to E. F. S. He claimed the Scotch estate as vested in him absolutely, or alternatively, that the estate belonged to him as residuary legatee, or as heir-at-law. This claim was opposed on behalf of his infant children:—Held, that under the statute of 1868, the law of Scotland must, so far as practicable, give effect to the intention of the testator, as gathered from the whole context interpreted by English law; and (2) that undoubtedly the intention of the testator was that E. F. S. should take a life interest only; and that the fee of the Scotch estates should go to the eldest son of E. F. S., and the others nominated; (3) that that intention, so far as the separate destination of the life rent and fee of the estate, could be carried out substantially without inconsistency with the practice or policy of the law of Scotland, the rule being valeat quantum valere potest; (4) that a registrable title fell to be made up in accordance with such intention; but that the technical way in which effect might be given to the intention by the Scotch law was immaterial. Ib.

XI. OTHER MATTERS.

1. By the law of Scotland, if there is a pecuniary loss occasioned by a fraudulent misrepresentation, and the party guilty of it dies, an action can be maintained against his executor if he is lucratus—that is, possessed of assets. Davidson v. Tullock, 6 Jur., N. S., 543; 8 W. R. 309.

2. Although the law of companies in Scotland does not provide for winding up a dissolved company, it gives special opportunities to the shareholders for obtaining their rights out of court. Orr v. Glasgow, Airdrie, & Monklands Railway Co., 6 Jur., N. S., 877; 8 W. R. 643.

A shareholder in a Scotch railway company instituted a suit against the directors and the company itself for repayment of two calls, on the ground that the directors had made them for personal and corrupt purposes, and that they were unnecessary for any of the statutory purposes of the company, no part of the railway having been made, and the company's powers having expired prior to the commencement of the suit:—Held, that the calls having been originally valid, such a suit would not lie either for an account or for damages. Ib.

3. Quære, how far the principle of English law, that a trustee cannot hold an office of profit under the trust (except with the express sanction of the Court), has been established in Scotland. Quære, also, as to the soundness of the principle. Home v. Pringle, 8 Cl. & F. 264.

4. An affidavit made by a defendant in a suit in the Exchequer, and sworn before a magistrate in Scotland, was permitted to be read. Ellis v. Sinclair, 3 Y. & J. 273.

5. A. assigned a policy on his own life, effected in an insurance office having offices both in England and Scotland, to B. as a security for moneys advanced; and notice was given to the office of the assignment. A. and B. were both resident and carried on business in London; but the former had also a place of business in Scotland, where his estate became sequestered, and C. was appointed trustee for his creditors. On the death of A. proceedings were instituted in Scotland by C. against B. for an account; and he also sued out a writ of arrestment jurisdictionis fundandæ causâ to attach the moneys secured by the policy in the hands of the company. B. appeared in this suit, but, before putting in any answer, commenced proceedings in Chancery in England against C. and the company. An order was made in the suit, in which C., the trustee, appeared, that the money should be paid into court, but without prejudice to the Scotch proceedings. On motion for a decree, however, B. was declared entitled to a lien on the policy, and an account was directed to be taken of what was due to him under his assignment. The parties attended before the chief clerk, who, by his certificate, found that the sum due to B. exceeded the amount payable under the policy; and upon this certificate, Wood, V.-C., ordered the fund in court to be paid to him. On appeal, orders appealed from were affirmed. Venning v. Lloyd, 6 Jur., N. S., 81; 29 L. J., Ch., 152.

The decree directing the inquiry was erroneous; the proceedings in Chancery should have been restrained until the Scotch suit had been determined; but as C. had been guilty of laches in prosecuting his appeal, and had somewhat acquiesced in the proceedings by going before the chief clerk upon the inquiry, the appeal must be dismissed. Ib.

Rule in Exp. Waring.] 6. The rule of the English bankruptcy system fixed by Exp. Waring (19 Ves. 345; 2 Rose 182), and as extended in subsequent cases, has not been adopted in Scotland, and is inconsistent with Scotch bankruptcy law. Royal Bank of Scotland v. Commercial Bank of Scotland, 7 L. R., App. Cas. (Sc.), 366; 47 L. T. 360; 31 W. R. 49.

In Scotch practice where B. accepts bills drawn by A. against goods left in B.'s hands as security, if both become bankrupt, the billholder can rank on the estate of each for the amount of the bills to the effect of recovering full payment; but B.'s estate is entitled to be indemnified for any dividends which his estate may be required to pay in respect of the bills, A.'s estate having a right to the balance of the proceeds of the goods after such indemnity has been given. By agreement between A. and B., the latter undertook to employ his works in heckling and spinning yarns at a specific rate. By the 8th article of the agreement, it was provided that all material and yarn at B.'s works should continue to be the sole property of A., subject only to the lien of B. for the cost and manufacture and for advances made by him, or other debts due to him by A. By the 9th article B. became bound to give his acceptances for a sum not exceeding three-fourths of the value of the raw material and yarn held by him on A.'s account, and should be entitled to "a right of lien or retention of goods to a value sufficient to cover such acceptances." Both A. and B. became bankrupt. At the date of the bankruptcy D. was liable as acceptor on bills drawn by A. to the amount of 16,000*l.*, and he held goods belonging to A. (since sold for 4,025*l.* 14*s.* 2*d.*) on which he had a right of lien or retention to indemnify him from that liability. The holders of the bills claimed to have the whole proceeds applied, in the first place, in payment of the bills, as far as they would extend, so as to reduce their amount of proof against the two estates to about 12,000*l.* instead of 16,000*l.*, relying upon the English case of Exp. Waring (19 Ves. 345; 2 Rose 182). B.'s trustees maintained that the billholders must continue to rank on both bankrupt estates for the full amount of the bills, and claimed that all dividends paid by them to the billholders out of B.'s estate should be repaid to them from the fund in medio:—Held, that in view of the agreement, and in accordance with the principles on which the bankruptcy laws have hitherto been administered by the courts of Scotland, B.'s trustees were entitled to the fund in medio, in order that they might apply it towards their relief from the payments which they were liable to make in the shape of dividends to the holders of the bills; (2) that the balance of the fund, if any, was payable to A.'s trustee. Ib.

Held, also, if the security were sufficient to cover the whole amount of the acceptances, the rule of Exp. Waring might be the most convenient practicable way of giving effect to the contract between the drawers and acceptors, but where the securities are insufficient, the rule confers a benefit on the billholders to which they are not entitled, at the expense of the acceptors, which was inequitable, nor could it be reconciled with the reasons of Lord Eldon's judgment in Exp. Waring. Ib.

Semble, assuming that the positive rule of administration which has been accepted as the law in England since the rule Exp. Waring was made, must be understood in accordance with the determination in Powles v. Hargreaves (3 De M. & G. 453), still so far as it is a positive rule, and not the necessary result of equitable principles, it cannot be held to be of force in Scotland, merely because it is so in England. Ib.

The reasons assigned by Lord Cranworth in Powles v. Hargreaves (3 De M. & G. 453), to justify the extension of Exp. Waring to the case of a deficient security are unsatisfactory if applied to such a contract as this, and appear to overlook the fact that, when the whole benefit of a deficient security is given to the billholder, the estate of the bankrupt acceptor may lose some part of the indemnity to which, by the contract, he is entitled. Ib.

1. In General.

1. A proprietor of a feu, described in the feu-charter as bounded by the seashore, enclosed a portion of the sands, which it was proved the public had immemorially used for purposes of enjoyment and otherwise:—Held, dismissing an appeal against an interlocutor of perpetual interest, that, the feuar being a wrongdoer, the officers of State on behalf of the Crown, irrespective of the question as to the right of property, were entitled to the interdict. Smith v. Her Majesty's Officers of State for Scotland, 13 Jur. 713. S. C. nom. Smith v. Stair (Earl), 2 H. L. Ca. 807.

Quære, does the jus coronæ in the seashore extend to high-water mark at ordinary spring tides. Lord Hale's authority, Hargreave's tracts, "De Jure Maris." Ib.

2. In the absence of all evidence of particular usage, the extent of the right of the Crown to the seashore landwards is primâ facie limited by the line of the medium high tide between the springs and the neaps. Att.-Gen. v. Chambers, 4 De G. M. & G. 206; 18 Jur. 779; 23 L. J., Ch., 662; 2 Eq. Rep. 1195; 2 W. R. 636.

3. The foreshore below high-water mark may be parcel of the adjoining manor, and where, by an ancient grant of the manor, its limits are not sufficiently defined, acts of ownership are admissible as evidence that such foreshore is parcel of the manor. Exp. Tomline, Re Walton-cum-Trimley Manor, 28 L. T., N. S., 12; 21 W. R. 475.

2. Crown Grant.

4. The Crown may grant by letters patent to a corporation, a town and borough, being caput portûs as Portsmouth, all the land between the high- and low-water marks; but this subject matter of grant, as being jus privatum in the king, must be subject to the jus publicum or public right of the king and people to the easement of passing and repassing both over the water and the land. Att.-Gen. v. Burridge, 10 Price 350.

5. Where a part of the sea coast or shore, being the property of the Crown, and giving jus privatum to the king, is granted to a subject for uses, or to be enjoyed so as to be detrimental to the jus publicum therein, such grant is void as to such parts as are open to such objection, if acted upon so as to effect a nuisance by working injury to the public right; or it is a grant which does not divest the Crown, or invest the grantee. Att.-Gen. v. Parmeter, 10 Price 378.

6. The Crown, by letters patent, granted all the regions, countries, or territories of C., and also all other manors, lands, etc., lying and being in and within the limits, meres, and bounds of the said territory; and stated, in describing the boundaries, that the river of L. on the west and north-west, "and the seashore towards the east, and the bank of the bay of K. towards the north, is held to be the most noted mere and boundary of the territory aforesaid," and excepted from the grant all weirs and fisheries in the river:—Held, first, that the description did not necessarily exclude from the grant the shore of the bay between high- and low-water mark. Exp. Ranfurly (Earl), 1 Ir. R., Eq., 128.

Held, secondly, that continuous acts of ownership by the grantees on the shore of the bay were admissible to show that the foreshore constituted part of the premises granted. Ib.

1. Upon the evidence furnished by ancient documents and modern acts of ownership which have passed unquestioned by the Crown, a title to a portion of the soil lying between high- and low-water mark of the Thames, as forming part of the adjoining manor, may be sustained as against the Crown, although no grant from the Crown of the land in question can be produced. Re Alston's Estate, 5 W. R. 189.

2. A grant by the Crown of "all coals under the commons, waste grounds, or marshes" of a certain manor, held to pass coal lying under the space between high- and low-water mark on the shore of such manor. Att.-Gen. v. Hanmer, 6 W. R. 804.

3. The bed of all navigable rivers where the tide flows and reflows, and of all estuaries or arms of the sea, is vested in the Crown, but subject to the right of navigation which belongs by law to the subjects of the realm, and of which the right to anchor forms a part; and every grant made by the Crown of the bed or soil of an estuary or a navigable river must be subject to such public right of navigation. Gann v. Free Fishers of Whitstable Co., 11 H. L. Ca. 192; 35 L. J., C. P., 29; 13 W. R. 589; 12 L. T., N. S., 150.

If a payment is claimed from ships by the owner of the soil of an estuary or a navigable river as an anchorage due, some facts must be shown which either prove, or from which it can be inferred, that the soil of such estuary or river was originally within the precincts of a port or harbour, or that some service or aid to navigation was rendered to the public in respect of which the grant of soil was made. Ib.

Such a claim cannot be supported on the ground of its having been immemorially made and submitted to. Ib.

4. A possessory title sufficient against a trespasser may be established by persons claiming foreshore, without producing evidence sufficient to displace the title of the Crown. Hastings (Corporation) v. Ivall, 19 L. R., Eq., 558; 22 W. R. 724.

In a suit against a trespasser by persons claiming title to foreshore and giving evidence of acts of ownership in support of their title, it is not open to the defendant to prove any acts of ownership by the Crown except such as can be shown to have been done with the knowledge of the plaintiffs. Ib.

Queen Elizabeth, by royal letters patent, granted to the corporation of Hastings lands in and about Hastings, which were liable to forfeiture, as being affected by superstitious uses, and had been previously concealed, all "that her parcel of land and her hereditaments called the Stone Beache, with the appurtenances in Hastings aforesaid, in her county of Sussex, and all messuages, houses, edifices, and buildings whatsoever, with their appurtenances, in and upon the aforesaid parcel of land called the Stone Beache":—Held, first, that there was no presumption from the language of the grant against the extension of the grant to the part of the beach below high-water mark. Ib.

Held, secondly, that inasmuch as it appeared that the expression "Stone Beach" was now applied to the entire part of the beach covered with shingle, which extended below as well as above high-water mark, and that the inferior boundary, called the "Stone's Foot," was liable to vary according to the state of the wind and tide, the whole present foreshore, whether now shingle or sand, must, as against a person not claiming any title in himself, be presumed to be included in the grant, and injunction granted accordingly to restrain the deposit of earth on the sand below the Stone's Foot. Ib.

3. Alluvial Lands and Encroachments.

5. Lands formed by alluvion—that is, by gradual and imperceptible deposit on the shore of the sea—belong to the owners of the adjoining demesne lands, and not to the king jure coronæ. Rex v. Yarborough (Lord), 2 Bli., N. S., 147; 1 Dow & Cl. 178; 5 Bing. 163; 7 D. & R. 790; 3 B. & C. 91.

6. Land formed by gradual accretion belongs to the owner of the adjacent soil. Doe d. Seebkrists v. East India Co., 10 Moo. P. C. 140; 6 Moo. Ind App. 267.

7. The officers of State in Scotland obtained a judgment on interdict against an individual who had, by erecting a wall, encroached on the seashore, the suit being instituted by them solely to protect the public right. The judgment of the Court below was appealed against and affirmed, but was affirmed without costs. Smith v. Stair (Earl), 2 H. L. Ca. 807. S. C. nom. Smith v. Her Majesty's Officers of State for Scotland, 13 Jur. 713.

8. On an information an issue was raised as to the right of the Crown to alluvion produced by artificial causes, the Crown claiming to have the boundary of the rights of the Crown defined as it would have existed but for such artificial causes. Att.-Gen. v. Chambers, Att.-Gen. v. Lewis, Att.-Gen. v. Rees, 5 Jur., N. S., 745; 4 De G. & J. 55; 2 Eq. Rep. 1195; 2 W. R. 636.

An information for the purpose of having the title of the Crown to alluvium gained from the sea declared and established is analogous to a bill to ascertain boundaries, and requires in support of it admissions or evidence showing a title in the Crown to some lands in the possession of the defendants. Ib.

But where the witness in support of the information deposed that the alluvium had been added to the mainland, not gradually and imperceptibly, but rapidly:—Held, that a sufficient case had been made for directing issues. Ib.

Where there is a gradual accretion of land, which is the result of artificial causes produced by the lawful use of the land by the owner, such accretion does not belong to the Crown. Ib.

Where the accretions are of gradual and imperceptible progress, there is no distinction between accretions produced by natural and artificial causes. Ib.

If, however, the artificial causes can be shown to have been intended to produce the accretion, the Crown would be entitled. Ib.

Turning cattle upon alluvium by the proprietor of land not separated from it by any boundary, although without interruption, is not an assertion of right so acquiesced in as to raise a presumption of title. Ib.

A. claimed the seashore in front of his land, upon the ground of uninterrupted enjoyment for sixty years, evidence of user being that his cattle had been allowed to stray over the invisible line of boundary separating his land from the seashore:—Held, that where property is of a nature that it cannot be easily protected against intrusion, and if it could it would not be worth the trouble of preventing it, mere user is not sufficient to establish a right. Ib.

1. Where the Crown seeks to recover land alleged to have been reclaimed from the sea by encroachment or purpresture, if the defendant disputes the Crown's title to the soil between the present high- and low-water mark, the Court will direct issues to try that right before inquiring how far, in former times, the ancient high-water mark extended in land; and this course will be adhered to notwithstanding the hardship it may impose upon the defendant, who by admitting the soil on which he has done acts of ownership to be part of the foreshore, will, in effect, have proved the case of the Crown, in the event of his failing to satisfy a jury that a grant must be presumed. Att.-Gen. v. Chamberlaine, 4 Kay & J. 292.

But if in a case like the above, the defendant admits the Crown's title to the soil between present high- and low-water mark, then, upon an inquiry what is the boundary of the foreshore, the onus would be thrown upon the Crown of showing that the high-water mark in former times extended further inland than at present. Ib.

Form of issue directed in a suit to establish the right of the Crown to a part of the foreshore of the Mersey, the defendants asserting a right to the whole of the foreshore, and not merely to that lying between the ancient high- and low-water mark. Ib.

4. Injuries by Removal of Shingle.

2. It is the duty of the Crown to protect the realm from the inroads of the sea by maintaining the natural barriers, or by raising artificial barriers; and therefore no subject is entitled to destroy a natural barrier against the sea. And if the destruction of such natural barrier would cause an injury to a neighbouring landowner, he is entitled to an injunction to restrain it. Accordingly, in an action by the attorney-general, on behalf of the Crown as owner of a piece of land adjoining the foreshore, an injunction was granted to restrain the defendant, the owner of the foreshore, from removing shingle therefrom so as to endanger the Crown land or expose it to the inroads of the sea. Att-Gen. v. Tomline, 12 L. R., Ch. D., 214; 48 L. J., Ch., 593; 40 L. T. 775. Affirmed 14 L. R., Ch. D., 58; 49 L. J., Ch., 377; 42 L. T. 380; 28 W. R. 870.

3. A highway board is not entitled, under 5 & 6 Will. 4, c. 50, ss. 51, 52, to remove shingle for the repair of the highways from below high-water mark, so as to cause increased danger of encroachment by the sea. Pitts v. Kingsbridge Highway Board, 19 W. R. 884; 25 L. T., N. S., 195.

A special custom to take shingle from the beach above high-water mark for the repairing of the highways of the parish is bad as to such portion of the beach as is private property, being a custom of a profit à prendre in another man's land. Ib.

4. The plaintiff, by virtue of a grant from the Crown, made 36 Hen. 8., claimed, as lord of the manor of C., to be entitled to the beach or shore of the sea between high- and low-water mark. The defendants, the surveyors of highways, took the stones to mend the highway of the parish. Upon a bill filed by the plaintiff against them, the defendants put in their answer, denying the right claimed by the plaintiff, and insisting upon their right to take the stones by custom, and also by prescription, and also under the Highways Act 5 & 6 Will. 4, c. 50; and upon a motion to dissolve the injunction obtained by the plaintiff:—Held, that the rights claimed by the plaintiff were legal, and must be decided by an action; that the Court must consider which of the two parties were likely to sustain most injury; that, notwithstanding the want of distinct evidence respecting injury, the Court, to prevent a possible mischief, would grant an injunction, and give the plaintiff leave to bring an action, but it refused to say that he must do so. Clowes v. Beck, 20 L. J., N. S., Ch., 505.

5. Right to Seaweed.

5. In 1861 the trustees for sale under the will of A. (executed in 1854) purported to convey to M. the foreshore of a townland, and in 1865 he obtained a verdict against P. K., a tenant of adjoining lands, for trespassing on the foreshore and taking seaweed therefrom. In that action, proof was given of exclusive acts of ownership over the foreshore by M. and his predecessors in title for above sixty years, but there was no positive evidence of a grant of it from the Crown. In 1873 T. K. and others, who were also adjacent tenants, proceeded to carry off the seaweed in assertion of an alleged public right, whereupon M.'s successors in title having filed a bill against them praying that the plaintiffs might be declared entitled to the foreshore and seaweed, and be quieted in the exclusive possession and enjoyment thereof, and for the usual injunction:—Held, that upon the facts the plaintiffs were entitled to the relief sought; and that as the defendants and P. K. were members of the same local class, asserting an adverse public right, the record and judgment in the action of 1865 were properly receivable in evidence. Mulholland v. Killen, 9 Ir. R., Eq., 471.

6. A. was owner of an estate, of which the estate of N. M. formed part. A portion of the land was let on lease to a "tenant, with liberty to take the sea-ware, along with the other tenants, for manuring the land." In 1814 part of the estate known as N. M. was sold to F., and the lands were described in the conveyance as "the same is presently possessed by the tenant." The conveyance contained no express grant of the right to take the sea-ware, but it contained the words, "together with all the appurtenances":—Held, that there was no easement created by prescription, and that the words "together with the appurtenances" did not of themselves pass an easement to F. to go and collect the sea-ware adjoining A.'s estate to manure his lands. Baird v. Fortune, 7 Jur., N. S., 926; 10 W. R. 2; 5 L. T., N. S., 2.

1. The lord of a manor cannot establish a claim to the exclusive right of cutting sea-weed on rocks, situate below low-water mark, except by a grant from the Crown, or by such long and undisturbed enjoyment of it as to give him a title by prescription. Benest v. Pipon, 1 Knapp 60.

II. SEA WALLS.

2. The purchaser of lands situate below the level of the sea is bound to inquire how all walls necessary for the protection of his property against the encroachments of the sea are maintained. Morland v. Cook, 6 L. R., Eq., 252; 37 L. J., Ch., 825; 18 L. T., N. S., 496; 16 W. R. 777.

III. DROITS OF ADMIRALTY.

3. A log of wood found floating in the sea near the shore was drawn on a rock by a person wading into the water; another log having been cast upon the beach, and by the next tide swept out to the sea, and then taken while floating:—Held, both are droits of Admiralty, and do not belong to the grantee by patent of wreck on the coast. Stackpole v. Reg., 9 Ir. R., Eq., 619.

The log cast on the beach having been marked by a knife, with the design of claiming property in it for the grantee of wreck before it was swept back to sea, does not prevent its becoming a droit of Admiralty when afterwards found floating Ib.

SECRETARY OF STATE.

4. A secretary of state, made a defendant in a suit in equity, cannot refuse to appear on the ground that the Court has no jurisdiction over him, and that he could only be proceeded against on a petition of right. Felkin v. Herbert, 1 Dr. & Sm. 608; 8 Jur., N. S., 90.

5. The funds voted by parliament for the public service are not trust funds in the hands of the secretaries of state who receive them from the treasury; and the Court of Chancery has no jurisdiction to take any account of the application of such funds. Grenville-Murray v. Clarendon (Earl), 9 L. R., Eq., 11; 39 L. J., Ch., 221.

A general allegation that a defendant holds a fund upon trust for the plaintiff will not protect a bill from demurrer for want of equity. For that purpose the bill must allege facts showing that the relation of trustee and cestui que trust exists between the plaintiff and the defendant. Ib.

6. Livery of seisin not having been made according to the terms of a joint power contained in a feoffment, and one of the parties to whom the power was given to deliver seisin having refused to execute it, the Court doubted whether authority could be given to deliver seisin, as to part only. Att.-Gen. v. Pearson, 3 Meriv. 416.

2. The entry of the widow as guardian to the son does not prevent his having such a seisin as to convey title to his customary heir. Forder v. Wade, 4 Bro. C. C. 521.

3. Mother receiving profits and continuing in possession as guardian in socage is sufficient seisin; but ejectment without confession of lease, entry, and ouster would not be sufficient. Sterling v. Penlington, 9 Mod. 247.

4. A deed of lands in two different counties was made by way of feoffment, and livery and seisin of the lands in one county was indorsed. The deed was made in 1657:—Decreed, that though no livery appeared of the other lands, yet, by reason of the possession and great length of time, equity will suppose and supply it; yet it had been much stronger, if livery had been indorsed of lands of one county, in the name of both, for then it would have been an implication that it was designed for both. Jackson v. Jackson, Sel. Ch. Ca. 81; Fitzg. 146.

5. After twenty-five years' enjoyment of an estate, livery shall be presumed, if livery and seisin cannot be proved. Byden v. Loveden, Toth. 54; 1 Vern. 196.

9. R., being seised of freehold houses, died intestate in 1864, leaving A. his sole heiress-at-law. Upon R.'s death his widow wrongfully entered into possession, and retained possession till her death in 1869, when her devisees entered. A. died in 1871, without ever having entered into possession, having devised to L. "all real estate (if any) of which she might die seised." An action having been brought by L. against the widow's devisees for recovery of possession, the devisees demurred to the statement of claim on the ground that A.'s devise did not pass the property or any right of entry therein to L.:—Held, that "seised" being a purely technical word must be construed according to its technical meaning; and that as the seisin in law which A. had on R.'s death had been destroyed, and she had not at her death any seisin either in law or in fact, the property did not pass under her devise. Leach v. Jay, 6 L. R., Ch. D., 496; 46 L. J., Ch., 499; 25 W. R. 574. Affirmed 27 W. R. 99; 39 L. T., N. S., 242; 9 L. R., Ch. D., 42; 47 L. J., Ch., 876.

10. A father, who died in 1760, made a general devise of freeholds and copyholds to his daughter in tail. His grandson was in 1783 admitted to the copyholds as tenant in tail, and was proved to have been in 1833 in possession of the copyholds and of certain freeholds then held therewith. He made a will purporting to devise these freeholds and the copyholds, and died in 1840. His brother and heir in 1841 executed a deed purporting to be for the purpose of barring any estates tail in the freeholds, whereby he conveyed the freeholds to the devisee under the will, and covenanted to surrender the copyholds. This deed was not inrolled, but the devisee was admitted to the copyholds. The devisee died intestate, and his brother succeeded him as his heir, and made a will purporting to devise the freeholds and the copyholds in fifths, the plaintiff taking one-fifth and the defendant another fifth. The defendant afterwards agreed to buy the plaintiff's one-fifth, and a conveyance was made by her conveying to the defendant her one-fifth and all her estates and shares in the land, neither of them being aware of the earlier title. Four years afterwards the deed purporting to bar the estate tail was found, and thereupon the defendant requested the plaintiff, who was heir in tail of the original testator, to confirm the sale, and sent to her the draft of a deed reciting that the original testator was seised in fee of the freeholds and devised them, and that she was tenant in tail. She then filed a bill to have her conveyance set aside and to be declared tenant in tail of the freeholds:—Held, that the conveyance by the plaintiff of the fee in the whole when she had intended to convey one-fifth only might embarrass her in proceeding at law, and that the Court must determine the question; but that the plaintiff was bound to show that the original testator was seised in fee of the freeholds claimed by her, and that as she had not done so, her bill must be dismissed; and that, under the circumstances, the sending by the defendant of the draft deed stating that the original testator was seised in fee was not an admission by the defendant of the fact. The defendant had conveyed his estate to mortgagees, and that they, as purchasers for valuable consideration without notice, could not be interfered with. Bulley v. Bulley, 9 L. R., Ch., 739; 22 W. R. 779; 30 L. T., N. S., 848; 44 L. J., Ch., 79.

I. GENERAL PRINCIPLES.

1. The equitable right of set-off is not derived from, or dependent upon, any statutory right, but is founded on the Roman law, semble. Freeman v. Lomas, 9 Hare 113; 20 L. J., N. S., Ch., 564; Jur. 648.

Where one demand is equitable and the other is legal, there may be set-off in equity, if there would be set-off at law had both the demands been legal. S. C. 9 Hare 116.

The Court has, on slight circumstances, presumed the existence of an agreement to set off one against another cross demand, although existing in different rights; but such an agreement will not be presumed without some circumstances from which it might be inferred, semble. S. C. 9 Hare 114.

2. Where both debts are legal, there can be no set-off allowed in equity, without special circumstances. Harvey v. Wood, 5 Madd. 459.

3. If a party neglect to plead a legal set-off to an action, he is not entitled to the assistance of a court of equity to give him the benefit of the set-off. Exp. Ross, Buck 125.

4. Where set-off may be made at law, no bill for injunction will lie to stay proceedings at law. Hirst v. Peirse, 4 Price 339.

5. Equitable set-off upon mutual credit; though no mutual debts upon which a set-off could be sustained at law. James v. Kynnier, 5 Ves. 106.

6. Where there are cross demands between two parties of such a nature that if both were recoverable at law they would be the subject of legal set-off, then if either of the demands is matter of equitable jurisdiction the set-off will be enforced in equity. Clark v. Cort, Cr. & Ph. 154; 10 L. J., N. S., 113.

7. The mere existence of cross demands is not a sufficient ground for the interference of equity to set off one against the other; there must be some equity attaching to the demand which is sought to be enforced at law (and not merely arising out of the same subject matter), as that it is an item of a complicated account which can only be taken in equity, or that there has been a breach of contract by plaintiff at law, relating to the subject matter on his action. In this case, where an action was brought at law for non-acceptance of bills of exchange at stated times, being the mode of payment agreed upon between the parties in a course of dealing between them, the defendant at law was not allowed to set off in equity what appeared to the Court an uncertain balance alleged to be due upon a complicated state of accounts. Rawson v. Samuel, Cr. & Ph. 161; 10 L. J., N. S., Ch., 214; 3 Jur. 947.

1. Cross demands are not alone a sufficient foundation for equitable set-off; and, quære, whether equitable set-off is not confined to cases in which the equity of the bill impeaches the title of the legal demand. Fisher v. Baldwin, 11 Hare 352.

2. The right of set-off can only arise out of some contract, express or implied, between the parties, to pay and receive money, or other persons standing in their shoes. Smee v. Baines, 7 Jur., N. S., 902; 9 W. R. 802; 4 L. T., N. S., 573.

3. Stoppage no payment at law or in equity, unless under special circumstances, and in case of special demands where the balance only is the debt. Jeffs v. Wood, 2 P. W. 128.

4. Where the answer to a bill for an account sets up a counterclaim, as to which it is doubtful whether it would or would not be available to the defendant as an item of discharge under the general account directed by the decree, the Court, as the safer course, will make it the subject of a special inquiry. Lord v. Wightwick, 2 Ph. 110.

5. If a party, knowing all the circumstances, makes a payment without taking advantage of his right to make certain deductions at the time, he cannot afterwards claim a set-off as between himself and his creditor for such omissions. Exp. Turner, 13 W. R. 104; 11 L. T., N. S., 352.

II. CROSS DEMANDS IN AUTRE DROIT.

6. A debt cannot be set off against another, if they are in different rights. Whitaker v. Rush, Ambl. 407.

7. No set-off allowed where the demand is in autre droit. Medlicot v. Bowes, 1 Ves. 207.

8. B., a residuary legatee, and surviving executrix of her husband, to whom C. and O. had given a joint bond; C. died, and the plaintiff was indebted on her own private account to O., who was a bankrupt; the bill brought against his assignees for an injunction, and to set off what was become due to her as executrix against the debt from herself to the bankrupt. Injunction denied: for as such a set-off could not be done at law, there is no instance of its being allowed here; for the debts are due in different rights, and 2 Geo. 2 does not comprehend it. Bishop v. Church, 3 Atk. 691; 2 Ves. 100, 371.

9. A., being indebted to B. in a sum of 1,000*l*., executed a bond to him for securing that amount, and interest. B. subsequently died, having by his will appointed C. and D. his executors and residuary legatees. An apportionment of B.'s residuary estate being made, the bond is allotted to C. as part of his share; C. being the steward of A., and having a running account with him, enters the bond in that account. C. dies intestate, leaving a widow who takes out administration to his estate, and also administration de bonis non to B.; and as such administratrix, de bonis non, she files a bill as a specialty creditor against the representatives of A.:—Held, that in this suit the representatives of A. could not make a set-off against the demand in respect of sums which they alleged to have been omitted or improperly charged in the account of C.; but must file a cross bill. There can be no set-off either at law or equity, where either of the debts is a debt in autre droit. Gale v. Luttrell, 1 Y. & J. 180.

10. Cross demands existing in separate rights cannot be set off one against the other, except under special circumstances. Stammers v. Elliott, 37 L. J., Ch., 353; 18 L. T., N. S., 1; 16 W. R. 489; 3 L. R., Ch., 195. And see S. C. 16 L. T., N. S., 200; 4 L. R., Eq., 675; 15 W. R. 618.

11. One of several trustees of a real estate, having become mortgagee of the trust estate, partly by taking an assignment of a mortgage prior to the trust, partly by taking an assignment of a mortgage created under the trust, and partly for money which he had lent to the cestui que trust, filed his bill for foreclosure simply. The cestui que trust of the equity of redemption filed his bill for an account of the trust and of the mortgages, and that the mortgage securities might stand only for the balance due on both accounts; and the plaintiff obtained an order for hearing both causes together:—Held, that the Court might make one decree in both causes, so as to give the mortgagor any set-off he might be entitled to, or make a decree of foreclosure in the former suit, and a separate decree for an account against the trustee personally in the latter, according to the circumstances and justice of the case. Dodd v. Lydall, 1 Hare 333.

12. When a plaintiff is suing merely as trustee, and the defendant has a claim against the cestui que trust, which, but for the intervention of the trust, would have been a legal set-off, such claim can be set off in equity, and, therefore, in an action can be set off by an equitable plea. Thornton v. Maynard, 44 L. J., C. P., 382; 10 L. R., C. P., 695; 33 L. T., N. S., 433.

13. T. improperly allowed part of the trust fund to be received by B., the tenant for life. S., one of the reversioners, borrowed money from C., and mortgaged to him her share in the trust funds. B. at the same time gave C. a bond and a mortgage of other property for the same debt, B. being a surety for S. in this transaction. The defendant having been paid out of B.'s estate:—Held, that T.'s representative could not claim to have this payment set off against the claim of S. in respect of the misapplied part of the trust fund. Life Association of Scotland v. Siddal, 3 De G. F. & J. 58; 7 Jur., N. S., 785; 9 W. R. 541; 4 L. T., N. S., 311.

14. I., a consignee of a West India estate, was appointed trustee thereof by B., the tenant for life, for the purpose of keeping down incumbrances. I. was also private agent and banker for B., with the understanding that B. was not, nor were his funds, to be liable for advances made by I. for the estate. I. becoming embarrassed, was declared bankrupt, and assignees were appointed:—Held, by the Lords, reversing orders of the Court of Chancery, on a bill filed by B. and the other owners of the estate, to remove I. from the possession and management, that a sum found due from I. to B., on their private dealings, might be set off against a sum found due to I. in respect of his advances and payments for the estate. Baillie v. Edwards, 2 H. L. Ca. 74. Reversing S. C. nom. Baillie v. Innes, 14 L. J., N. S., Ch., 341.

1. A person advancing to a married woman, deserted by her husband, and left wholly without provision, sums of money which have been actually laid out in the purchase of necessaries for her, is, in a court of equity, entitled to stand in the place of the tradespeople supplying those necessaries, and the sums so advanced and so laid out, constitute an equitable set-off against a legal debt due to the husband from the person making those advances. Jenner v. Morris, 1 Dr. & Sm. 218. Affirmed 7 Jur., N. S., 375; 30 L. J., Ch., 361; 9 W. R. 391; 3 L. T., N. S., 871.

Therefore, in a suit instituted by a person who had deserted his wife, to enforce against the defendant's life interest in real estate a judgment recovered by the plaintiff against him in an action, a set-off in respect of such advances to her for necessaries was allowed to the defendant, although he could not have recovered them at law. Ib.

2. A. and his wife and children were entitled under a settlement to 1,500*l.* charged on real estate of which B. was tenant for life; the 1,500*l.* was the wife's property vested in trustees for the husband for life, with usual remainders. A. was indebted to B. for money advanced for the wife:—Held, that on raising the charge, B. could not set off his claim against A.'s life interest. Jenner v. Morris, 1 Dr. & Sm. 334; 9 W. R. 29; 2 N. R. 479.

3. A mercantile firm, being indebted to the plaintiffs, assigned their property and business to trustees by a deed containing a proviso that, if the firm became bankrupt before a certain day, the deed should be void. The trustees carried on the business, and the plaintiffs became indebted to them in the course of trade. Before the day specified in the deed the firm became bankrupt, and afterwards the trustees brought an action against the plaintiffs for the debt due to them:—Held, in a suit by the plaintiffs to establish an equitable set-off, that the plaintiffs could not set off the debt due to them from the firm against the debt due from them to the trustees. Hunt v. Jessell, 2 W. R. 219; 18 Beav. 100.

4. A demand, in the character of trustee or executor, cannot be set off against a debt due from the trustee or executor personally, although the executor gives evidence to show that he is, in fact, personally beneficially entitled to the amount which is due to him in the character of executor. Middleton v. Pollock, Exp. Nugee, 44 L. J., Ch., 584; 20 L. R., Eq., 29; 23 W. R. 766; 33 L. T., N. S., 240.

The only cases in which such a set-off of claims arising in different rights can be allowed are those where the person claiming the benefit of it can show some equitable ground (other than the mere claim of set-off) for being protected against the legal demand. Ib.

A. was an executor and trustee of a fund to which as to one moiety he was entitled beneficially. The fund was in the hands of P., who died insolvent; at the time of P.'s death A. was indebted to P.:—Held, that A. could not set off the debt to the trust against his debt due to P. Ib.

5. Cross demands, existing in separate rights, are not, in equity (except under special circumstances), allowed to be set off one against the other; and therefore an executor and trustee of a legacy, who was also the residuary legatee, and had become a creditor of the husband and administrator of a deceased legatee, was not, in the absence of any special agreement, allowed to set off his debt against the legacy to which the husband (having survived his wife the legatee) was, as such administrator, entitled. Freeman v. Lomas, 9 Hare 109; 15 Jur. 648; 20 L. J., Ch., 564.

6. A debt from a bankrupt to a married woman dum sola, cannot be set off against a debt from her husband to the bankrupt. Exp. Blagden, 19 Ves. 465; 2 Rose 249.

7. Upon the bill of a married woman entitled to a share of the personal estate as one of the next of kin of the intestate against her husband and administrator, the latter claiming to retain toward satisfaction of a debt by bond from the husband to him, it was declared he was not entitled to retain, but that the plaintiff's share was subject to a further provision in favour of her and her children, the settlement on her marriage being inadequate to the fortune she then possessed; and it was referred to the Master to see a proper settlement made on her and her children; regard being had to the extent of her fortune, and the settlement already made upon him. Elibank (Lady) v. Montolieu, 5 Ves. 737.

III. JOINT AND SEPARATE DEMANDS.

1. In General, 6141.
2. Partnership, 6142.

1. In General.

8. Joint and separate debts cannot be set off against each other at law. Exp. Twogood, 11 Ves. 519.

9. B. and M. had various transactions in negotiating bills, and M. had paid for B. 3,000*l.* During these transactions M. committed a secret act of bankruptcy. The assignees recovered a verdict for 3,000*l.* against B., who insisted on being allowed 712*l.* which he paid for the bankrupt. Lord Chancellor thought B. not concluded by the verdict, but entitled to the allowance which might be sued for in equity as a matter of contract and account. Billon v. Hyde, 1 Atk. 126; 1 Ves. 326.

An equitable set-off was allowed under circumstances, as there could be none at law. Ib.

1. A. has a joint demand against B. and C., who are also creditors of A. B., by letter, having made himself separately liable to A. on account of the demand originally joint, cannot, either at law or in equity, set off the joint debt due from A. to himself and C. Exp. Ross, Buck 125.

2. There is no rule that a debt due to joint creditors, which has been contracted by fraud, can be set off against a separate debt due from one of the joint creditors. Middleton v. Pollock, Exp. Knight and Raymond, 20 L. R., Eq., 515; 44 L. J., Ch., 618.

P., the solicitor of K. and R. (who were trustees of a marriage settlement), received on their behalf 4,000*l.*, and represented that he had invested the whole of it on mortgage. He did invest on mortgage two sums of 2,200*l.* and 850*l.*, part thereof; but he never invested the balance of 950*l.* The debt of 2,200*l.* was (with the knowledge of K. and R.) paid off and received by P., and retained by him for reinvestment; but no reinvestment was ever made. P. died insolvent:—Held, that neither of the sums of 2,200*l.* and 950*l.* due from his estate could be set off against a separate debt due to the estate from K. Ib.

2. Partnership.

3. Where two partners were creditors of a bankrupt, and one of them was separately his debtor:—Held, the joint debt cannot be set off against the separate demand. Exp. Riley, W. Kel. 24.

4. Debtor by bond to the separate estate of a deceased partner, not allowed in equity to set off his bond debt, in respect of acceptances for which he had become liable to the partnership estate, and which were proved by him under a joint commission of bankruptcy. Addis v. Knight, 2 Meriv. 117.

5. Set-off in bankruptcy of a debt of the bankrupt's to one partner separately, against a joint debt of him and his partner, on their bond to secure the separate debt of the former. Exp. Hanson, 18 Ves. 232; 1 Rose 156. And see, confirmatory of this doctrine, Vulliamy v. Noble, 3 Meriv. 593.

A., entering into partnership with B., applies to his bankers for a loan to constitute his capital. They consent upon condition that B. shall join in a security for the repayment of the loan, which is complied with. The partnership open an account with the bankers, who also continue the private bankers of A. On the bankruptcy of the bankers the balance on the joint account arising from this loan is against A. & B., but A.'s private account is in his favour. A. & B. were allowed to set off this private balance against the joint debt, it being but a security for the separate debt. A. & B. soon after the partnership commenced took in another partner, but it was understood that the account with the bankers was to continue as before. This partner drew cheques in the partnership name, and paid them into his private accounts. The assignees were held not entitled to charge the cheques so transferred against the partnership account. Ib.

6. A. and B. entered into partnership as brewers, A. bringing in, as his share of the capital, a brewhouse and other premises, which were subject to mortgages for debts due by him. A. retired from the business, which was continued by B. alone, who agreed to take the brewhouse, etc., at a valuation, but the amount was not to be paid till the mortgages were satisfied. B. becomes bankrupt, and the mortgage debts remaining unpaid, his assignees, before any proof made in respect of A.'s debt, paid off the mortgages:—Held, that the assignees were entitled to deduct the sums paid by them from the dividends on the sum which was due to A. from B. at the time of his bankruptcy. Rowe v. Anderson, 4 Sim. 267.

7. A. and B., partners, gave a joint and several bond to C., who afterwards becomes indebted to A. B. becomes bankrupt. C. proves the bond under the commission, and then brings a joint action against A. and B., to which B. pleads his certificate. A. being by this form of action precluded from setting off his separate debt, applies for and obtains injunction against C.'s proceeding in the joint action. Bradley v. Millar, 1 Rose 273.

8. Joint simple contract creditor may proceed against a clear residue of assets of deceased partner, the survivor being insolvent; and may set off, against a debt to the deceased from the survivor and himself as his surety, a debt to the survivor from deceased, which was agreed to be applied in liquidation of debt secured. Cheetham v. Crook, M'Clel. & Y. 307.

9. If a customer borrows money from his banker's and gives a bond to secure it, and afterwards on his general banking account a balance is due to the customer from the same bankers, who are the obligees of the bond, a right to set-off the balance against the money due on the bond exists both at law and in equity. Cavendish v. Geaves, 24 Beav. 163; 3 Jur., N.S., 1086; 27 L.J., Ch., 314; 5 W. R. 615.

If the firm were altered, and the bond assigned by the original obligees to the new firm, and notice of that assignment given to the debtor, and if, after this, a balance were due to him from the new firm (the assignees of the bond), then no right of set-off would exist at law, because the assignment of the chose in action would be inoperative at law, and the obligees of the bond and the debtor in the general account would be different persons; but as, in equity, the persons entitled to the bond and the debtors on the general account would be the same person, a right of set-off would exist, and the customer would in equity be entitled to set-off the balance due to him against the bond debt due from him. Ib.

10. P. and D., in the year 1814, commenced a partnership as solicitors. W. was a client of the firm, and employed D. as his private agent to receive his rents. The partnership was dissolved in 1817, when W. was indebted to the firm for a bill of costs, in a sum of 867*l.*, and D., upon a settlement of the partnership between him and P., was found indebted to P. in a sum of 750*l.*, for which he gave security, and agreed to assign to P. the outstanding partnership debts. Of this settlement, debt, and agreement, notice was given to W. in 1821. During the partnership, and afterwards, D. had received moneys on account of W. beyond the amount of the bill of costs; there was no evidence of any direction given by W. to D., to apply the moneys received by D. on his account to the payment of the bill of costs, nor of any settlement of accounts between W. and D.; but it was in evidence, that, upon one occasion, W. said to D., that he had better keep some money of W.'s which he had in his hands, as he might want it. A bill in equity, filed by P., stating these facts, and that D. had possession of the partnership books, to which P. had not access; that D. had refused to concur with him in suing W. at law, or to permit the use of his name for that purpose; and that by collusion between W. and D. the moneys of W. received by D. had, as they pretended, been applied to payment of the partnership debt, and praying an account and payment of the debt, was dismissed by the Master of the Rolls; but on appeal to the Lord Chancellor this order was reversed, and a decree for account and payment made against the executors of W., and this decree was affirmed on appeal. Nottidge v. Pritchard, 8 Bli. N. S. 493; 2 Cl. & F. 379.

1. By articles of partnership, entered into in May 1843, between A. and B., as solicitors, it was agreed, that on the death of either the surviving partner should during the joint lives of himself and the widow of the deceased partner pay to the appointee of the deceased partner an annuity of 200*l.*, or one-fourth part of the profits of the business according as the surviving partner should elect. In August 1843 A., on his marriage with the petitioner, made an appointment in her favour of an annuity of 200*l.*, or at B.'s election, of one-fourth of the part of the profits of B. in the business. The partnership between A. and B. continued until A.'s death, in September 1851. B. then conducted the business alone until his bankruptcy in 1856; but he did not in the interval between the death of A. and his own bankruptcy make any payment, either in respect of the annuity of 200*l.* or of one-fourth part of the profits of his business, nor did he make any election between the two; his assignees in bankruptcy, however, elected, if obliged to elect, to pay to the petitioner one-fourth part of the profits. At the death of A. the partnership was indebted to different persons to an amount exceeding such one-fourth part of the profits, and those debts had been paid off by B. prior to his bankruptcy:—Held, that the assignees were entitled to set-off against the profits of the business payable to the petitioner the amount of the debts due from the partnership at A.'s death. Exp. Harper, 1 De G. & J. 180; 3 Jur., N. S., 724; 26 L. J., Bky., 74.

2. A. and B., traders, had a joint account at their bankers, and A. had also a separate account at the same bank. The bankers suspended payment; at that time the joint account of A. and B. was indebted to the bankers, but the bankers were indebted to A. upon his separate account. A. and B., in pursuance of an arrangement between themselves, gave a notice to the bankers, desiring them to transfer the money standing to the separate account of A. to the joint account of A. and B. The bankers omitted to comply with this order, and afterwards became bankrupts, and their assignees brought an action against A. and B. for the balance due to the bankers upon their joint account. A. and B. filed this bill to restrain the proceedings at law:—Held, that the bankers after a suspension of payment could not transfer or set off one account against another; that they had no lien upon the separate balance in their hands for the money due to them upon the joint account; and that A. and B. had no right to be relieved from the proceedings at law, and the bill was dismissed with costs. Watts v. Christie, 11 Beav. 246; 18 L. J., N. S., Ch., 173; 13 Jur. 244, 845.

3. As to the equity of set-off for partnership debts paid by a continuing partner, against a legal debt due from him to a retired partner, upon a bond for a private loan. Lee v. Flood, 2 Sm. & G. 250.

One of two partners as bankers lent to his partner a sum of money on the joint and several bond and covenant of the borrower and another person in 1821, and died in 1833; the obligor continued to pay interest till 1843, when he died, and his executor paid interest up to 1847. On the death of the obligee in 1833, some settlement of the banking affairs was come to between his executor and the surviving partner and another subsequently admitted, which the executor alleged was final, but which was disputed. The executor of the obligee then became a partner, and other changes subsequently took place in the firm, each new firm taking on itself all the former liabilities and assets. In 1847 the firm in which the executor had continued a partner became bankrupt. In a suit for the administration of the estate of the obligor, certain creditors of the firm, on promissory notes given prior to 1833, whose debts had been adopted by the successive firms, were admitted as separate creditors of the estate. The executor of the obligee was admitted as a creditor for the loan, and no equitable set-off for contribution was allowed, none having been established in respect of the said estate of the obligee being separately liable to the creditors, although it was probable that in winding up the partnership affairs, some claim by the obligor's estate against the estate of the obligee might be established. Ib.

4. Assignees of a chose in action are liable to all the equities which attach to the thing assigned as against the assignor. Smith v. Parkes, 16 Beav. 115.

A retiring partner received security from the continuing partners for his share, and which he assigned to third parties:—Held, that the assignees took subject to the right of equitable set-off of the continuing against the retiring partner. Held also that the assignees having assented to a substituted security in 1846, in lieu of a prior one in 1845, were subject to all the equities existing at the date of the second security. Ib.

5. A testator, who had advanced money to his son, and paid large sums on his account, bequeathed him a legacy without making mention of the debt:—Held, that the loan and unascertained balance must be set off against the legacy. Smith v. Smith, 3 Giff. 263; 7 Jur., N. S., 1140; 5 L. T., N. S., 302.

Upon the same principle, the Court held that the assignees of a firm indebted to the testator were not entitled to receive a legacy bequeathed by the testator to a member of the firm. Ib.

6. The account of a customer of a firm consisted of debits and credits arising from the purchase and sale of goods. The partner-

1. A. has a joint demand against B. and C., who are also creditors of A. B., by letter, having made himself separately liable to A. on account of the demand originally joint, cannot, either at law or in equity, set off the joint debt due from A. to himself and C. Exp. Ross, Buck 125.

2. There is no rule that a debt due to joint creditors, which has been contracted by fraud, can be set off against a separate debt due from one of the joint creditors. Middleton v. Pollock, Exp. Knight and Raymond, 20 L. R., Eq., 515; 44 L. J., Ch., 618.

P., the solicitor of K. and R. (who were trustees of a marriage settlement), received on their behalf 4,000*l.*, and represented that he had invested the whole of it on mortgage. He did invest on mortgage two sums of 2,200*l.* and 850*l.*, part thereof; but he never invested the balance of 950*l.* The debt of 2,200*l.* was (with the knowledge of K. and R.) paid off and received by P., and retained by him for reinvestment; but no reinvestment was ever made. P. died insolvent:—Held, that neither of the sums of 2,200*l.* and 950*l.* due from his estate could be set off against a separate debt due to the estate from K. Ib.

2. Partnership.

3. Where two partners were creditors of a bankrupt, and one of them was separately his debtor:—Held, the joint debt cannot be set off against the separate demand. Exp. Riley, W. Kel. 24.

4. Debtor by bond to the separate estate of a deceased partner, not allowed in equity to set off his bond debt, in respect of acceptances for which he had become liable to the partnership estate, and which were proved by him under a joint commission of bankruptcy. Addis v. Knight, 2 Meriv. 117.

5. Set-off in bankruptcy of a debt of the bankrupt's to one partner separately, against a joint debt of him and his partner, on their bond to secure the separate debt of the former. Exp. Hanson, 18 Ves. 232; 1 Rose 156. And see, confirmatory of this doctrine, Vulliamy v. Noble, 3 Meriv. 593.

A., entering into partnership with B., applies to his bankers for a loan to constitute his capital. They consent upon condition that B. shall join in a security for the repayment of the loan, which is complied with. The partnership open an account with the bankers, who also continue the private bankers of A. 7. A. and B., partners, gave a joint and several bond to C., who afterwards becomes indebted to A. B. becomes bankrupt. C. proves the bond under the commission, and then brings a joint action against A. and B., to which B. pleads his certificate. A. being by this form of action precluded from setting off his separate debt, applies for and obtains injunction against C.'s proceeding in the joint action. Bradley v. Millar, 1 Rose 273.

8. Joint simple contract creditor may proceed against a clear residue of assets of deceased partner, the survivor being insolvent; and may set off, against a debt to the deceased from the survivor and himself as his surety, a debt to the survivor from deceased, which was agreed to be applied in liquidation of debt secured. Cheetham v. Crook, M'Clel. & Y. 307.

9. If a customer borrows money from his banker's and gives a bond to secure it, and afterwards on his general banking account a balance is due to the customer from the same bankers, who are the obligees of the bond, a right to set-off the balance against the money due on the bond exists both at law and in equity. Cavendish v. Geaves, 24 Beav. 163; 3 Jur., N.S., 1086; 27 L. 10. P. and D., in the year 1814, commenced a partnership as solicitors. W. was a client of the firm, and employed D. as his private agent to receive his rents. The partnership was dissolved in 1817, when W. was indebted to the firm for a bill of costs, in a sum of 867*l.*, and D., upon a settlement of the partnership between him and P., was found indebted to P. in a sum of 750*l.*, for which he gave security, and agreed to assign to P. the outstanding partnership debts. Of this settlement, debt, and agreement, notice was given to W. in 1821. During the partnership, and afterwards, D. had received moneys on account of W. beyond the amount of the bill of costs; there was no evidence of any direction given by W. to D., to apply the moneys received by D. on his account to the payment of the bill of costs, nor of any settlement of accounts

N. S. 493; 2 Cl. & F. 379.

1. By articles of partnership, entered into in May 1843, between A. and B., as solicitors, it was agreed, that on the death of either the surviving partner should during the joint lives of himself and the widow of the deceased partner pay to the appointee of the deceased partner an annuity of 200*l.*, or one-fourth part of the profits of the business according as the surviving partner should elect. In August 1843 A., on his marriage with the petitioner, made an appointment in her favour of an annuity of 200*l.*, or at B.'s election, of one-fourth of the part of the profits of B. in the business. The partnership between A. and B. continued until A.'s death, in September 1851. B. then conducted the business alone until his bankruptcy in 1856; but he did not in the interval between the death of A. and his own bankruptcy make any payment, either in respect of the annuity of 200*l.* or of one-fourth part of the profits of his business, nor did he make any election between the two; his assignees in bankruptcy, however, elected, if obliged to elect, to pay to the petitioner one-fourth part of the profits. At the death of A. the partnership was indebted to different persons to an amount exceeding such one-fourth part of the profits, and those debts had been paid off by B. prior to his bankruptcy:—Held, that the assignees were entitled to set-off against the profits of the business payable to the petitioner the amount of the debts due from the partnership at A.'s death. Exp. Harper, 1 De G. & J. 180; 3 Jur., N. S., 724; 26 L. J., Bky., 74.

2. A. and B., traders, had a joint account at their bankers, and A. had also a separate account at the same bank. The bankers suspended payment; at that time the joint account of A. and B. was indebted to the bankers, but the bankers were indebted to A. upon his separate account. A. and B. filed this bill to restrain the proceedings at law:—Held, that the bankers after a suspension of payment could not transfer or set off one account against another; that they had no lien upon the separate balance in their hands for the money due to them upon the joint account; and that A. and B. had no right to be relieved from the proceedings at law, and the bill was dismissed with costs. Watts v. Christie, 11 Beav. 246; 18 L. 3. As to the equity of set-off for partnership debts paid by a continuing partner, against a legal debt due from him to a retired partner, upon a bond for a private loan. Lee v. Flood, 2 Sm. & G. 250.

One of two partners as bankers lent to his partner a sum of money on the joint and several bond and covenant of the borrower and another person in 1821, and died in 1833; the obligor continued to pay interest till 1843, when he died, and his executor paid interest up to 1847. On the death of the obligee in 1833, some settlement of the banking affairs was come to between his executor and the surviving partner and another subsequently admitted, which the executor alleged was final, but which was disputed. The executor of the obligee then became a partner, and other changes subsequently took place in the firm, each new firm taking on itself all the former liabilities and assets. In 1847 the firm in which the executor had continued a partner became bankrupt. In a suit for the administration of the estate of the obligor, certain creditors of the firm, on promissory notes given prior to 1833, whose debts had been adopted by the successive firms, were admitted as separate creditors of the estate. The executor of the obligee was admitted as a creditor for the loan, and no equitable set-off for contribution was allowed, none having been established in respect of the said estate of the obligee being separately liable to the creditors, although it was probable that in winding up the partnership affairs, some claim by the obligor's estate against the estate of the obligee might be established. Ib.

4. Assignees of a chose in action are liable to all the equities which attach to the thing assigned as against the assignor. Smith v. Parkes, 16 Beav. 115.

A retiring partner received security from the continuing partners for his share, and which he assigned to third parties:—Held, that the assignees took subject to the right of equitable set-off of the continuing against the retiring partner. Held also that the assignees having assented to a substituted security in 1846, in lieu of a prior one in 1845, were subject to all the equities existing at the date of the second security. Ib.

5. A testator, who had advanced money to his son, and paid large sums on his account, bequeathed him a legacy without making mention of the debt:—Held, that the loan and unascertained balance must be set off against the legacy. Smith v. Smith, 3 Giff. 263; 7 Jur., N. S., 1140; 5 L. T., N. S., 302.

Upon the same principle, the Court held that the assignees of a firm indebted to the testator were not entitled to receive a legacy bequeathed by the testator to a member of the firm. Ib.

6. The account of a customer of a firm consisted of debits and credits arising from the purchase and sale of goods. The partnership was dissolved, the customer being greatly indebted to it, but the account was continued in the same mode by the succeeding firm:—Held, that the doctrine of appropriation of payments applied to the debtor's account. Laing v. Campbell, 36 Beav. 3.

1. A. and B. were partners in a firm. A. allowed a debtor to the partnership to set off a separate debt of his own against money due to the firm, the debtor knowing the interest which B. had in the debt. B. filed a bill against the debtor and against A., to have it declared that the debtor had no right to retain his share in the debt towards payment of the separate debt of A.:—Held, that, although one partner could bind another in the receipt and payment of partnership debts, he could not set off his separate debts against the debts due to the firm; and the debtor's knowledge of the co-partner's interest rendered the bill sustainable as against him. Piercy v. Fynney, 12 L. R., Eq., 69; 40 L. J., Ch., 404; 19 W. R. 710.

Held, also, that this was a proper subject for a suit in equity, since one partner must sue in an action in the name of himself and his co-partner. Ib.

IV. BANKER AND CUSTOMER.

2. If a customer borrows money from his bankers, and gives a bond to secure its repayment, and the balance upon the general banking account is afterwards in favour of the customer, a right to set off such balance against the amount due on the bond exists both at law and in equity. Cavendish v. Geaves, 3 Jur., N. S., 1086; 5 W. R. 615; 24 Beav. 163; 27 L. J., Ch., 314.

But if the firm is altered, and the bond is assigned by the obligees to the new firm, with notice of the assignment to the obligor, and the balance upon the general banking account is afterwards in favour of the customer, no right of set-off exists at law; but in equity the customer is entitled to set off the balance due on the banking account against the amount due on the bond. Ib.

If after the bond had been given it had been assigned to strangers, and no notice of that assignment given to the original debtor (the obligor of the bond), then his rights would remain the same. Thus if the assignment had been made to the stranger before any alteration of the firm, then the right off set-off would remain at law, where the obligees of the bond and the debtors on the general account would be the same persons; and in equity also, if the matter of account were brought there, as the chose in action would be bound by the equities affecting their assignors. Ib.

But if notice of that assignment had been given to the original debtor, no right of set-off would exist for the balance subsequently due from the bankers to the obligor, because the persons entitled to the bond would, as the obligor knew, be different persons from the debtors to him on the general account, with whom he had continued to deal. Ib.

If the assignment of the bond had been made to the new firm, with notice to the obligor, they would, if debtors on the general account, be liable to the same rights of set-off in equity as if they had been the obligees. Ib.

If, after the alteration of the firm, and after the assignment of the bond to the new firm, with notice to the debtor or obligor of that assignment, an assignment had been made of the bond to strangers, and no notice of such second assignment given to the obligor, then the rights of set-off would still remain to him in equity, as against the first assignees, of whose assignment he had notice; and the second assignees would, in equity, be bound by it, because the assignees of the bond take it subject to all the equities which affect the assignors. Ib.

Bankers, to whom a customer had given a bond, assigned it over to third parties, who gave no notice to the obligor:—Held, that notwithstanding the assignment, the customer's right continued of setting off moneys due to him from his bankers against the bond. Ib.

3. Where bankers were directed to lay out money in navy annuities, but did not do so, but represented that they made entries, and accounted for dividends accordingly, and took promissory note from party under that supposition, from the party and her brother to receive debt from him to them; upon which the assignees under their bankruptcy sued him alone; an order was made for proof only of balance, setting off the debt upon the note, and an injunction and delivery of the note. Exp. Stephens, 11 Ves. 24.

4. H., who had an account with bankers, drew bills, which were accepted by his customers, and discounted by his bankers. Before the bills were at maturity, the bankers, on the ground of H.'s liabilities on the bills, and of some of the acceptors having stopped payment, refused to honour H.'s cheques. H. brought an action for the balance in his banker's hands and for damages. Before the trial one of the bills became due, and was dishonoured by the acceptor, and was not paid by H. The bankers filed a bill, and obtained an injunction to restrain all further proceedings in the action. Agra and Masterman's Bank (Limited) v. Hoffman, 11 Jur., N. S., 335; 34 L. J., Ch., 285; 11 L. T., N. S., 701; 5 N. R. 214.

5. A testator directed that his debts and legacies (other than charitable legacies) should be paid by his executors out of his impure personalty, and his charitable legacies out of his pure personalty. The pure personalty was insufficient to pay all the charitable legacies in full. In December 1871 he borrowed 8,000*l.* of his bankers, to be repaid in March 1872. This sum was placed to his credit on a loan account. He died in February 1872, having, at the day of his death, 629*l.* standing to his credit on his general drawing account:—Held, that the executors were not bound to pay out of the impure personalty the whole amount of the debt due on the loan account at the day of the death, but only the difference between that amount and the amount then standing to the testator's credit on his general drawing account. Thomas v. Howell, 18 L. R., Eq., 198; 43 L. J., Ch., 799; 30 L. T. 244; 22 W. R. 676.

V. JUDGMENTS.

6. Bill by insurance broker for discovery and account of money paid and received by him in that capacity on account of defendant, and money due to him for commission, etc., and for promissory notes indorsed to him, and to restrain action as brought contrary to universal custom of business. Demurrer allowed, the subject being matter of set-off at law. Dinwiddie v. Bailey, 6 Ves. 136.

1. Demurrer to a bill for a general account to be taken of all dealings and transactions between the parties, and for an injunction to restrain the defendant from taking out execution on a judgment recovered by him in an action at law, allowed on the grounds, that the statement in the bill did not furnish such a case of matter of account between the parties, as to entitle the plaintiff to interference of the Court on the principles of equity, in that it was nothing more than matter of set-off, or other defence at law; and if it had been a stronger case the plaintiff, after having suffered the action at law to be tried and determined at nisi prius, had come too late to ask the interference of the Court. Cooper v. Hatton, 12 Price 502.

2. Motion refused to dissolve an injunction (granted on affidavit and certificate) to restrain execution on a judgment obtained by the defendant against the plaintiff, the latter having obtained a judgment to a greater amount against the former. Williams v. Davies, 2 Sim. 461.

3. Cross demand acquired after verdict is not ground for injunction here, to stay proceedings under verdict. Whyte v. O'Brien, 1 Sim. & S. 551.

4. Equitable right of set-off enforced after a judgment at law. Smith v. Parkes, 16 Beav. 115.

5. Where money, to be set off against a judgment debt, becomes due before the judgment, the judgment is treated in Equity as obtained for the difference only. Where such money becomes due at any time after the judgment, it is to be set off firstly against the interest up to that time, and then in diminution of the capital at the same time. Such set-off is not a charge upon the judgment debt, but a satisfaction of it pro tanto. Fenner v. Morris, Webster v. Morris, 2 N. R. 479.

A. is a debtor to B. on a judgment, and succeeds in establishing a set-off in equity for moneys advanced to B.'s wife for necessaries. B. has a charge upon estates in which A. has a life interest, such charge, when raised, being payable to the trustees of B.'s settlement. A. cannot claim the same set-off against B. in respect of the charge, because it is not a personal demand on both sides as in the other case. S. C. 9 W. R. 29, 391; 1 Dr. & Sm. 334, 218; 7 Jur., N. S., 375; 30 L. J., Ch., 361; 3 L. T., N. S., 871.

VI. LANDLORD AND TENANT.

6. Injunction to stay proceedings at law for rent by landlord, prayed on ground of agreement constituting a legal set-off, refused. Townrow v. Benson, 3 Madd. 203.

Quære, whether this Court will relieve by allowing an equitable set-off on demand for rent. Ib.

7. Tenant having a claim against his landlord for unliquidated damages, occasioned by cutting timber on the demised premises, in pursuance of a power so to do reserved by the lease, the landlord brought an ejectment for non-payment of rent. On bill filed by tenant, stating his claim and charging that if ascertained and credit given for it there would not be a year's rent in arrear, and on that fact being established, upon an issue, tenant was restored to the possession (which landlord had obtained in the meantime) on paying the balance due by him, and decreed entitled to an account of mesne profits, etc. Beasley v. Darcy, 2 Sch. & Lef. 403. n.

8. A., as assignee of B., a bankrupt, gave an undertaking to C., who was the mortgagee of one farm, and was under a contract to purchase another farm, both the property of the bankrupt, and who had a distress upon the mortgaged premises, that if the distress were withdrawn he would pay to C. the arrears then due, in respect of the mortgage, out of the effects on the premises. C. withdrew the distress accordingly, and afterwards the bankruptcy was annulled, before A. had obtained possession of any part of the bankrupt's effects, whereupon C. brought an action on the undertaking, and rendered judgment against A. personally:—Held, on a bill filed by A. against C., to which B. was no party, that A. could have no relief in equity against the judgment at law, and that he was not entitled, as against C., to claim repayment of the sum thereby recovered, out of the fine which C. had contracted to pay for the other farm. Pell v. Stephens, 2 Myl. & K. 334; Coop. temp. Brough. 266. And see this case, 4 Tyrw. 6.

9. Where an action for trespass for mesne profits is brought against a party who has a cross claim against the plaintiff at law for money expended on the land, the Court will grant an injunction to restrain the proceedings at law, there being no right of set-off in such an action. Cawdor (Lord) v. Lewis, 1 Y. & Coll. 427.

A tenant had judgment in an action against his landlord for excessive distress for a certain sum. The landlord subsequently had awarded to him for damages, under an arbitration clause in the lease, a larger sum. The tenant took proceedings to enforce payment, and the landlord filed a bill, and moved for an injunction to restrain such proceedings on the ground of set-off. Injunction refused, with costs. Maw v. Ulyatt, 7 Jur., N. S., 1300; 31 L. J., Ch., 33; 10 W. R. 4; 5 L. T., N. S., 251.

10. The tenant of a farm died indebted to his landlord in a sum of money. His administrator surrendered the farm to the landlord, who took the farm stock at a valuation, and who bought some of the furniture and fixtures at the sale of the intestate's effects:—Held, that the landlord could not set off the amount of the valuation, or of the goods purchased by him, against the debt due from the intestate. Lambarde v. Older, 2 W. R. 32; 23 L. J., Ch., 18; 17 Jur. 1110.

11. Where a tenant of leaseholds, who had paid certain rents to one of the persons beneficially entitled thereto, filed a bill against the landlord, claiming to set off such payments and a private debt due from the landlord, against the rent due to the landlord as trustee, a demurrer for want of equity was allowed. Pratt v. Keith, 10 Jur., N. S., 305; 33 L. J., Ch., 528.

1. By a deed of even date with a lease, the lessor covenanted that the lessee should retain part of each year's rent until satisfaction of a debt due from the lessor to the lessee:—Held, that though the covenant might be pleaded at law as a release pro tanto of the rent, this was only to avoid circuity of action, and the covenant was not for all purposes a release. Ledger v. Stanton, 2 John. & H. 687.

Therefore, the lessee having specially bequeathed the premises subject to the rent:—Held, as between the executors and the specific legatees, that specific legatees took subject to the whole rent, and that the benefit of the covenant for reduction of rent went to the executors. Ib.

2. Upon the marriage of A., the grandson of W., from whom A. had large expectations, a house and lands were settled upon A., and it was agreed that the grandfather should occupy the house and lands, and also some glebe-lands belonging to A. There was evidence as to the rent that was to be paid, which was about the actual value. A. never enforced the rent during the eight years of his grandfather's occupancy, which ceased with his death, but had received sums in money and goods equal to about half the alleged rent:—Held, that there was either an express contract to pay the rent, or an agreement to occupy as any other tenant, and pay a quantum meruit; the sums and goods paid to go towards the rent. Alington v. Booth, 3 Jur., N. S., 50.

3. The plaintiff, a landlord, was liable to the defendant, his tenant, for the costs of an injunction suit for an alleged breach of covenant, which suit had been dismissed. He had subsequently recovered judgment against the defendant in an action for rent. He then became liable to the defendant for damages which had been assessed in chambers, in respect of the wrongful injunction. He was further entitled to his costs of a summons to vary the certificate for damages taken out by the defendant, which had failed:—Held, that he was entitled to set off the judgment debt against the damages but not against the costs of the suit; and that he was also at liberty to set off his costs of the defendant's summons to vary against the costs of the suit. Throckmorton v. Crowley, 3 L. R., Eq., 196.

VII. MORTGAGES.

4. Devisee of an equity of redemption is not entitled to have an arrear of interest upon legacy from mortgagee to mortgagor, set off against the interest due upon mortgage. Pettat v. Ellis, 9 Ves. 563.

5. A mortgagee having inadvertently burnt the mortgage deed and the documents relating to the title to the mortgaged estate, some of which were original, and others attested and office copies, was ordered, in a foreclosure suit, not only to procure fresh attested and office copies, but to make compensation for the damage done to the estate by the destruction of the deeds, the amount to be settled by the Master, and deducted from the mortgage debt. Hornby v., Matcham, 16 Sim. 325; 17 L. J., N. S., Ch. 471; 12 Jur. 825.

6. On a bill by a mortgagor whose estate had been discharged from the mortgage, and who had taken a reconveyance against the mortgagee for the delivery up of the title deeds, or for an indemnity, it was found that the deeds were lost by the mortgagee or his agent. The Court thereupon refusing to take into consideration the speculative damages which the title or marketable value of the estate might sustain upon any future dealing with it, from the absence of the deeds, yet held that the mortgagor was upon the authorities entitled to relief in respect of the additional expense of producing evidence of his title, and directed a reference (as in Hornby v. Matcham, 16 Sim. 327) to ascertain what ought to be allowed to him as a sufficient compensation for the damage done to the estate by the loss of the deeds. Brown v. Sewell, 11 Hare 49; 17 Jur. 708; 22 L. J., Ch., 1063.

VIII. SHIPPING.

7. Charterparty of affreightment between the owners of the ship M., and the Commissioners of Transports, for and on behalf of his Majesty: during continuance in the transport service, the ship makes a capture, which is condemned: and upon petition to the treasury, two-thirds of a moiety of the proceeds arising from the capture ordered, by warrant from the Crown, to be paid to the owners. These proceeds are entirely in the discretion of the Crown; and, upon motion for payment into court of a sum admitted by the Commissioners of Transports to be due for freight under the charter party, which motion was resisted on the ground that the commissioners were entitled to set off the amount of the proceeds received by the owners under the warrant, payment was ordered accordingly, without prejudice to the question of ownership. Thurgar v. Morley, 3 Meriv. 20.

8. The charterer of a ship in a foreign port, who had notice of a prior mortgage on the ship and its future earnings, agreed with the master, who was also owner, to advance on bottomry such sum as should be necessary to equip the ship for the homeward voyage, and a bottomry bond was accordingly executed, but the amount of the necessary expenses of outfit turned out greater than that for which the bond was given:—Held, that as against the mortgagee, he was not entitled to set off the excess against the sum which became due under the charter party. Dobson v. Lyall, 2 Ph. 325. n.

9. Certain consignments of oil were made from Colombo to certain persons in England. During the voyage several of the casks leaked and some of the oil escaped and and was lost, but the greater part was collected and sold in one mass by the captain in the course of the voyage for 750*l.*:—Held, first, that a bill in equity was sustainable by the consignees against the shipowner for an account of the oil lost, and the oil sold; secondly, that in action brought by the shipowner against an individual consignee for freight and average, the latter could not set off his share (as ascertained by the agreement) of the moneys arising from the oil sold; consequently, that he could maintain a bill in equity to establish a right of equitable set-off. Jones v. Moore, 4 Y. & Coll. 351.

IX. SURETYSHIP.

1. The obligor in a bond, becoming surety for advances to the obligee, and being, after the insolvency of the obligee, compelled to pay the debt for which he had become surety, is entitled to set off the sum so paid against the amount due upon the bond. Jones v. Mossop, 3 Hare 568; 13 L. J., N. S., Ch., 470; 8 Jur. 1064.

2. Joint simple contract creditor may proceed against a clear residue of assets of deceased partner, the survivor being insolvent; and may set off, against a debt to the deceased from the survivor and himself as his surety, a debt to the survivor from deceased, which was agreed to be applied in liquidation of debt secured. Cheetham v. Crook, M'Clel. & Y. 307.

3. A legacy may be set off against a debt of the legatee to the testators, though such debt is barred by the Statute of Limitations. A. was indebted to R. in two sums of 1,000*l.* each, for one of which S. was surety. B. afterwards obtained from A. a life policy, as a security for both debts. A. subsequently became bankrupt; and B. proved for 1,500*l.* on the two debts, and he received a dividend of 97*l.*, and a sum of 97*l.* 10*s.*, upon the surrender of the policy:—Held, first, that by surrendering the policy the surety was not released; and, secondly, the surety was not liable for half the debt proved, after deducting half the dividends and half the produce of the policy. Coates v. Coates, 33 Beav. 249; 10 Jur., N. S., 532; 33 L. J., Ch., 448; 12 W. R. 634; 9 L. T., N. S., 795.

4. The money payable on a policy on the life of A. deposited with the insurance company as a security for a loan to B. is to be paid to the surety of B. satisfying the loan, and cannot be set off against a debt due by A. to the company of which B.'s surety had no notice. Re Jeffery, 20 W. R. 857.

5. A surety, who, in an action by the creditor, has omitted to plead by way of set off, the the receipt by the creditor of dividends from the debtor's estate, is not precluded from establishing his title to such dividends in equity. Thornton v. McKewan, 1 N. R. 16; 11 W. R. 140.

A surety gave to a creditor a guarantee to the extent of 5,000*l.* against losses that might arise from advances to be made to his principal. Advances were made to the principal to an amount considerably exceeding 5,000*l.*, and after his death the creditor proved in an administration suit for the whole debt, and received dividends thereon. He afterwards recovered the 5,000*l.*, in an action against the surety. Upon a bill filed by the surety:—Held, that he was entitled to be paid such a proportion of the past and future dividends as was received in respect of the 5,000*l.*, and that he had not lost his equity by not pleading a set-off to the action. S. C. 23 L. J., Ch., 69; 11 W. R. 140; 1 Hem. & M. 525.

6. A. guaranteed to B. & Co. the payment of all goods supplied by them to H. until they received notice from C. of the discontinuance of the guarantee, "but so as A.'s liability under the guarantee should not at any time exceed 250*l.*" H. afterwards became bankrupt, and owed B. & Co. for goods 657*l.*, upon which sum they received a dividend in the bankruptcy. A. paid the 250*l.* under his guarantee:—Held, that A. was entitled to receive from B. & Co. a proportionate part of the dividend. Hobson v. Bass, 19 W. R. 992.

X. OTHER DEBTS AND DEMANDS.

7. A., a clothier, and B., a dyer, had mutual dealings in the way of their trade, which were carried on several years, without payment of money on either side. B. dies intestate, and indebted to others by specialties, who, as principal creditors, take out administration to him, and sue A. at law. Equity will enjoin the action and order an account, and that A. shall be allowed, by way of discount, what was due to him from B. Downam v. Matthews, Pre. Ch. 580.

8. A. being bound in a bond to B., the bond is assigned by B. to C., in satisfaction of a debt due from B. to C.: B. becomes a bankrupt, and C., not being able to sue at law in B.'s name, brings a bill against A. to be paid the money due on the bond. Whether A., out of the money due on the bond, shall retain a debt due to himself from B., quære. Peters v. Soame, 2 Vern. 428.

9. Set-off, where a creditor had borrowed from the debtor, under an express promise to repay. Taylor v. Okey, 13 Ves. 180.

10. Where a balance of account is taken, and a note given as the balance, that must be paid, although there are subsequent accounts upon which the payee may actually be found in arrear. Preston v. Stratton, 1 Anstr. 50.

11. The defendant, who was a customer of and had an account with a bank, was also employed by the bank to raise money on certain Spanish bonds, which he accordingly did; the money being afterwards recalled by the mortgagees, and not paid, the bonds were sold, and the defendant received the balance and retained it, without the knowledge of the bank. On a bill filed on behalf of the bank for the payment of this balance, and also for a general account:—Held, that, although the defendant, by his answer, said the result of the general account when taken would be in his favour, yet he was not entitled to withhold payment of the balance received by him in respect of the bonds until the general account should be taken, and a decree for payment of that balance and interest was accordingly made, and also the decree for taking the general account. Gordon v. Pym, 3 Hare 223.

12. Two sons had, as against their father, a lien on his estate, for an outlay made thereon by them; on the other hand, the father had a claim against the sons in respect of a suretyship entered into by him for them:—Held, that these demands might be set off in equity. Unity Joint Stock Mutual Banking Association v. King, 25 Beav. 72; 4 Jur., N. S., 1257; 27 L. J., Ch., 585; 6 W. R. 264.

13. In taking account, charge for board not allowed as set-off from sum due, unless agreed upon. Hangate v. Fothergil, 2 Com. 613.

14. Where there is a general trust of money for a society, a particular member cannot set off a private debt against a share he may be entitled to on a contingency. Lee v. Carter, 2 Atk. 84.

15. An annuitant, whose annuity was charged upon a particular settled estate, which proved deficient:—Held, to have been rightly paid out of the general estate, against which she had a claim of larger amount in respect of maintenance of infant children. Colby v. Colby, 1 Jur. 890.

1. In calculating bankrupt's allowance under 6 Geo. 3, c. 16, s. 128, assignees may set off sums due from bankrupt to the estate, but the bankrupt cannot set off against that sums due to him from assignees personally. Exp. & Re Cooper, 3 Mont. & A. 137; 2 Dea. 41.

2. P. & Co., having borrowed a large sum of the Bank of Bengal, deposited company's paper with the bank, to a greater amount as a collateral security, accompanied with a written agreement, authorising the bank, in default of repayment of the loan by a given day, "to sell the company's paper for the reimbursement of the bank, rendering to P. & Co. any surplus." Before default was made in the repayment of the loan, P. & Co. were declared insolvents under the Indian Insolvent Act, 9 Geo. 4, c. 73, by the thirty-sixth section of which it was declared, that where there had been mutual credit given by the insolvents and any other person, one debt or demand might be set off against the other, and that all such debts as might be proved under a commission of bankruptcy in England might be proved in the same manner under the Indian Insolvent Act. At the time of the adjudication of insolvency, the bank were also holders of two promissory notes of P. & Co. which they had discounted for them, before the transaction of the loan, and the agreement as to the deposit of the company's paper. The time for repayment of the loan having expired, the bank sold the company's paper, the proceeds of which, after satisfying the principal and interest due on the loan, produced a considerable surplus. In an action by the assignees of P. & Co. against the bank, to recover the amount of the surplus:—Held, that the bank could not set off the amount of the two promissory notes, and that the case did not come within the clause of mutual credit in the Bankrupt Act. Young v. Bengal (Bank), 1 Moo. P. C. 150.

3. A., a firm in Calcutta, having, as such, dealings with B., a firm in London, who acted as their agents, employ them to receive for them the dividends of stock in England, which had been bequeathed to them by their father (whom they succeeded in the firm, and who had also employed B. as his agents), and they request B. to carry the dividends to a separate account in their different names. The dividends were accordingly received by B., one of the partners taking out administration for the purpose, and in their correspondence with A. they treat them as a separate item of account, but it did not appear clearly from the correspondence what was the understanding as to these moneys being or not being applicable to the general account. The house of A., which did not then include all who were beneficially included in the stock, becoming afterwards indebted, assigned all their property to trustees for their creditors:—Held, reversing the judgments of the Vice-Chancellor and Lord Chancellor, that all the interest of the then firm in the stock passed by the assignment, and that B. had no right to retain in payment of a debt to them any part of the dividends received after notice of the assignment. Colvin v. Hartnell, 5 Cl. & F. 484.

4. A petition presented to L. C. before 11th January 1832, to supersede an action at law, was directed to try validity of commission; costs reserved. Verdict in favour of petitioner. A new petition was thereupon presented to C. R. and granted:—Held, the petitioner was entitled to costs of both petitions, and that C. R. had no jurisdiction in question whether the petitioning creditor could set off the debt really due to him against those costs. Exp. Thomas, 1 Dea. & Ch. 443.

5. A. being entitled to a share under a settlement, the funds of which had been lent to B. on this covenant, became executor of B. A suit was instituted to recover the trust funds out of B.'s estate, and generally for administration. After a decree for accounts, A. assigned his share, with notice of the suit, and was subsequently found to be indebted as executor to B.'s estate beyond the amount of his share. By the order, on further directions, A.'s share had been declared liable to make good his debt:—Held, that the creditors of B. were entitled to be paid out of the estate in priority to the assignees of A.'s share. Irby v. Irby, 6 W. R. 853; 4 Jur., N. S., 989. And see 24 Beav. 525; 3 Jur., N. S., 1314.

6. A grandfather having made a will of his real and personal estate in 1808, cancelled it in 1810, but wrote on the back of the will a letter addressed to his only daughter, stating that she was his heiress-at-law, and charging her to fulfil his wishes at her death, by a disposition of a specified freehold estate to her eldest son, and by an equal disposition of his "property" equally among his grandchildren, her eldest and youngest son and daughter, her three only children. The letter was unattested, and thought to be inoperative as to the grandfather's personal as well as real property. The daughter became his administratrix, and entered into possession of his real estate, and she and her husband received his personal estate in right of the daughter, as sole next of kin. By a settlement, in 1811, between the husband of the daughter, and the daughter and two trustees, and the three children of the daughter, reciting the will, its cancellation, and the letter, and that the testator had died wholly intestate, but that the daughter was desirous of fulfilling the intention of the grandfather, his real estates were settled in accordance with the directions contained in the letter. The daughter died in 1827, and her husband became her administrator, and also administrator de bonis non of the grandfather. The husband of the daughter died in 1840, having previously, by will, after reciting his wish to carry into effect the desires of the grandfather, disposed of the grandfather's and his own real and personal property, between the two grandsons and the granddaughter, his children, accordingly. The granddaughter, who had married in 1843, obtained letters of administration to the grandfather with his letter to his daughter, which was then admitted as a will, annexed, and instituted a suit against the personal representative of her father, claiming that the personal estate of the grandfather should be accounted for to her; but the benefits she received under the settlement of 1811 and will of 1837 were greater than those she claimed under the testamentary paper, the letter of the grandfather; and it was contended that she must elect between these benefits:—Held, that the deed of 1811 and will of 1837 were expressed to be founded on the intention of the grandfather in reference to his real estate only, and that, even after an acquiescence since 1811 in the family arrangement, no case of election arose. Lee v. Egremont, 5 De G. & Sm. 348; 16 Jur. 352.

Under the same circumstances, the granddaughter had received an allowance of 300*l.* a year from the time of her marriage, in 1829, till the death of her father; and her husband was also greatly indebted for advances made to him on several occasions, and became bankrupt, and obtained his certificate, and a disclaimer by the assignees of all interest under the grandfather's will in his favour:—Held, that the allowance must go towards satisfaction of interest on the granddaughter's one-third of the grandfather's personal estate; and that the debt due from the husband of the granddaughter must be set off against the third of his wife, the granddaughter, to be recovered by him in right of his wife against the estate of her father. Ib.

1. Bankers stopped payment, being indebted to A. on his separate account, and creditors of A. and B. on the joint account. A. assigned the credit to A. and B., and gave notice to the bankers to transfer it accordingly, which they neglected to do. Afterwards the bankers committed an Act of Bankruptcy, and were declared bankrupts:—Held, that, in equity, A. and B. were not entitled to set off the two debts. Watts v. Christie, 11 Beav. 546; 18 L. J., N. S., Ch., 173; 13 Jur. 244, 345.

2. A landowner employs an agent to act for him generally in his money matters, draw cheques on his bankers, etc. The person so employed, being directed by his principal to pay a certain debt on the next rent day, gives notice to the creditor that the debt will be paid at the time. Semble, that this direction and notice, even with the additional promise by the agent that the debt should be paid out of the rents, give the creditor no specific lien on the rents. Moore v. Jervis, 2 Colly. 60.

A debtor who, for money advanced, had given to his creditor his promissory note, and, as a collateral security, had deposited with him a policy of assurance, and who had, on the other hand, a right of set-off in respect of goods sold, applied to the creditor to have the policy delivered up, for a purpose unconnected with the debt, and replaced by another security. The policy was accordingly delivered:—Held, that the debtor's right of set-off was not thereby displaced. Ib.

T. being under a will trustee of 800*l.* for two persons, in moieties, leaves that sum outstanding on the promissory note of J. The note is payable to T. only, and not to T., or order. In 1839 T. becoming embarrassed, indorses the note to his banker M. (who is also the banker of J), as a security for advances, M. having no notice of the trust; in 1840 T. becomes beneficially entitled to one moiety of the 800*l.*; in 1841 J. becomes a creditor of T. for goods sold and claims set off against the note. On the 7th April 1842 J. has notice through his agent of the indorsement of the note of M. In July 1842 T. becomes bankrupt:—Held, that as to the moiety of the 800*l.* which is held by T. in trust, the trust must prevail against the banker's security; secondly, that as to the other moiety, the set-off of J. must prevail against the banker's security up to the 7th April 1842. Ib.

3. A defendant to a bill for specific performance of a clear contract for a specific sum, cannot resist it by way of set-off, on the ground that, on an account between him and the plaintiff in respect of antecedent transactions affecting the subject matter, there would be a balance due to the defendant. Phipps v. Child, 3 Drew. 709.

4. In an action by the assignees of a bankrupt underwriter against a broker, for premiums due to bankrupt, semble, that the broker cannot set off a loss on policy effected by him as agent, without a commission del credere, where there has been no adjustment, though the loss take place before the bankruptcy. Baker v. Langhorn, 2 Mar. 215.

5. The executors of a deceased partner are all, except one, partners in the firm, and leave his estate, or a portion thereof, invested in the business. This portion, to the amount of 19,000*l.*, is entered in the books to the credit of the executors, on an account of a residuary legatee, to whom it belonged when he should attain twenty-five. Moneys were advanced by the firm to this legatee on the credit of this and security of another fund to an amount which, after making the security available, left the sum of 11,000*l.* due. The firm became bankrupt. Quære, whether the 11,000*l.* could be recovered by way of set-off:—Held, the residuary legatee was entitled to it. Fairlie v. Hartwell, 3 Jur. 791.

6. A. and B., executors under a will under which A. was also residuary legatee, kept an executorship account with a bank, at which A. kept also a private separate account. The bankers stopped payment, and filed a liquidation petition, and a trustee was appointed. Previously to the stoppage the executors had paid all the debts, and funeral and testamentary expenses, and set apart securities to answer the annuities bequeathed by the will; but the executors were jointly liable for two small sums for rates and taxes, and their solicitor's bill of costs in relation to the estate. At the date of the stoppage a sum of 1,400*l.* was due from the bank on the executorship account, while a sum of 1,200*l.* was owing by A. on his separate account. A claimed to prove in the liquidation for the difference between the two sums, as having a right to set off as against the debt due from him the money owing from the bank on the executorship account, on the ground that the money on that account constituted in fact a clear net residue in which he was absolutely interested:—Held, that the one account could not be set off against the other, the rules of equitable set-off or mutual credit not applying unless A. was so much the person solely beneficially interested in the balance of the joint account that a court of equity would without any terms or further enquiry have obliged B. to transfer the account into the name of A. alone. Exp. Morier, Re Willis, 12 L. R., Ch. D., 491; 49 L. J., Bky., 9; 40 L. T. 792; 28 W. R. 235.

7. A devise of real estate to trustees for a term, upon trust, inter alia, to raise 1,000*l.* and to pay the dividends thereof to the

out of the general estate, against which she had a claim of larger amount in respect of maintenance of infant children. Colby v. Colby, 1 Jur. 890.

1. In calculating bankrupt's allowance under 6 Geo. 3, c. 16, s. 128, assignees may set off sums due from bankrupt to the estate, but the bankrupt cannot set off against that sums due to him from assignees personally. Exp. & Re Cooper, 3 Mont. & A. 137; 2 Dea. 41.

2. P. & Co., having borrowed a large sum of the Bank of Bengal, deposited company's paper with the bank, to a greater amount as a collateral security, accompanied with a written agreement, authorising the bank, in default of repayment of the loan by a given day, "to sell the company's paper for the reimbursement of the bank, rendering to P. & Co. any surplus." Before default was made in the repayment of the loan, P. & Co. were declared insolvents under the Indian Insolvent Act, 9 Geo. 4, c. 73, by the thirty-sixth section of which it was declared, that where there had been mutual credit given by the insolvents and any other person, one debt or demand might be set off against the other, and that all such debts as might be proved under a commission of bankruptcy in England might be proved in the same manner under the Indian Insolvent Act. At the time of the adjudication of insolvency, the bank were also holders of two promissory notes of P. & Co. which they had discounted for them, before the transaction of the loan, and the agreement as to the deposit of the company's paper. The time for repayment of the loan having expired, the bank sold the company's paper, the proceeds of which, after satisfying the principal and interest due on the loan, produced a considerable surplus. In an action by the assignees of P. & Co. against the bank, to recover the amount of the surplus:—Held, that the bank could not set off the amount of the two promissory notes, and that the case did not come within the clause of mutual credit in the Bankrupt Act. Young v. Bengal (Bank), 1 Moo. P. C. 150.

3. A., a firm in Calcutta, having, as such, dealings with B., a firm in London, who acted as their agents, employ them to receive for them the dividends of stock in England, which had been bequeathed to them by their father (whom they succeeded in the firm, and who had also employed B. as his agents), and they request B. to carry the dividends to a separate account in their different names. The dividends were accordingly received by B., one of the partners taking out administration for the purpose, and in their correspondence with A. they treat them as a separate item of account, but it did not appear clearly from the correspondence what was the understanding as to these moneys being or not being applicable to the general account. The house of A., which did not then include all who were beneficially included in the stock, becoming afterwards indebted, assigned all their property to trustees for their creditors:—Held, reversing the judgments of the Vice-Chancellor and Lord Chancellor, that all the interest of the then firm in the stock passed by the assignment, and that B. had no right to retain in payment of a debt to them any part of the dividends received after notice of the assignment. Colvin v. Hartnell, 5 Cl. & F. 484.

4. A petition presented to L. C. before 11th January 1832, to supersede an action at law, was directed to try validity of commission; costs reserved. Verdict in favour of petitioner. A new petition was thereupon presented to C. R. and granted:—Held, the petitioner was entitled to costs of both petitions, and that C. R. had no jurisdiction in question whether the petitioning creditor could set off the debt really due to him against those costs. Exp. Thomas, 1 Dea. & Ch. 443.

5. A. being entitled to a share under a settlement, the funds of which had been lent to B. on this covenant, became executor of B. A suit was instituted to recover the trust funds out of B.'s estate, and generally for administration. After a decree for accounts, A. assigned his share, with notice of the suit, and was subsequently found to be indebted as executor to B.'s estate beyond the amount of his share. By the order, on further directions, A.'s share had been declared liable to make good his debt:—Held, that the creditors of B. were entitled to be paid out of the estate in priority to the assignees of A.'s share. Irby v. Irby, 6 W. R. 853; 4 Jur., N. S., 989. And see 24 Beav. 525; 3 Jur., N. S., 1314.

6. A grandfather having made a will of his real and personal estate in 1808, cancelled it in 1810, but wrote on the back of the will a letter addressed to his only daughter, stating that she was his heiress-at-law, and charging her to fulfil his wishes at her death, by a disposition of a specified freehold estate to her eldest son, and by an equal disposition of his "property" equally among his grandchildren, her eldest and youngest son and daughter, her three only children. The letter was unattested, and thought to be inoperative as to the grandfather's personal as well as real property. The daughter became his administratrix, and entered into possession of his real estate, and she and her husband received his personal estate in right of the daughter, as sole next of kin. By a settlement, in 1811, between the husband of the daughter, and the daughter and two trustees, and the three children of the daughter, reciting the will, its cancellation, and the letter, and that the testator had died wholly intestate, but that the daughter was desirous of fulfilling the intention of the grandfather, his real estates were settled in accordance with the directions contained in the letter. The daughter died in 1827, and her husband became her administrator, and also administrator de bonis non of the grandfather. The husband of the daughter died in 1840, having previously, by will, after reciting his wish to carry into effect the desires of the grandfather, disposed of the grandfather's and his own real and personal property, between the two grandsons and the granddaughter, his children, accordingly. The granddaughter, who had married in 1843, obtained letters of administration to the grandfather with his letter to his daughter, which was then admitted as a will, annexed, and instituted a suit against the personal representative of her father, claiming that the personal estate of the grandfather should be accounted for to her; but the benefits she received under the settlement of 1811 and will of 1837 were greater than those she claimed under the testamentary paper, the letter of the grandfather; and it was contended that she must elect between these benefits:—Held, that the deed of 1811 and will of 1837 were expressed to be founded on the intention of the grandfather in reference to his real estate only, and that, even after an acquiescence since 1811 in the family arrangement, no case of election arose. Lee v. Egremont, 5 De G. & Sm. 348; 16 Jur. 352.

Under the same circumstances, the granddaughter had received an allowance of 300*l.* a year from the time of her marriage, in 1829, till the death of her father; and her husband was also greatly indebted for advances made to him on several occasions, and became bankrupt, and obtained his certificate, and a disclaimer by the assignees of all interest under the grandfather's will in his favour:—Held, that the allowance must go towards satisfaction of interest on the granddaughter's one-third of the grandfather's personal estate; and that the debt due from the husband of the granddaughter must be set off against the third of his wife, the granddaughter, to be recovered by him in right of his wife against the estate of her father. Ib.

1. Bankers stopped payment, being indebted to A. on his separate account, and creditors of A. and B. on the joint account. A. assigned the credit to A. and B., and gave notice to the bankers to transfer it accordingly, which they neglected to do. Afterwards the bankers committed an Act of Bankruptcy, and were declared bankrupts:—Held, that, in equity, A. and B. were not entitled to set off the two debts. Watts v. Christie, 11 Beav. 546; 18 L. J., N. S., Ch., 173; 13 Jur. 244, 345.

2. A landowner employs an agent to act for him generally in his money matters, draw cheques on his bankers, etc. The person so employed, being directed by his principal to pay a certain debt on the next rent day, gives notice to the creditor that the debt will be paid at the time. Semble, that this direction and notice, even with the additional promise by the agent that the debt should be paid out of the rents, give the creditor no specific lien on the rents. Moore v. Jervis, 2 Colly. 60.

A debtor who, for money advanced, had given to his creditor his promissory note, and, as a collateral security, had deposited with him a policy of assurance, and who had, on the other hand, a right of set-off in respect of goods sold, applied to the creditor to have the policy delivered up, for a purpose unconnected with the debt, and replaced by another security. The policy was accordingly delivered:—Held, that the debtor's right of set-off was not thereby displaced. Ib.

T. being under a will trustee of 800*l.* for two persons, in moieties, leaves that sum outstanding on the promissory note of J. The note is payable to T. only, and not to T., or order. In 1839 T. becoming embarrassed, indorses the note to his banker M. (who is also the banker of J), as a security for advances, M. having no notice of the trust; in 1840 T. becomes beneficially entitled to one moiety of the 800*l.*; in 1841 J. becomes a creditor of T. for goods sold and claims set off against the note. On the 7th April 1842 J. has notice through his agent of the indorsement of the note of M. In July 1842 T. becomes bankrupt:—Held, that as to the moiety of the 800*l.* which is held by T. in trust, the trust must prevail against the banker's security; secondly, that as to the other moiety, the set-off of J. must prevail against the banker's security up to the 7th April 1842. Ib.

3. A defendant to a bill for specific performance of a clear contract for a specific sum, cannot resist it by way of set-off, on the ground that, on an account between him and the plaintiff in respect of antecedent transactions affecting the subject matter, there would be a balance due to the defendant. Phipps v. Child, 3 Drew. 709.

4. In an action by the assignees of a bankrupt underwriter against a broker, for premiums due to bankrupt, semble, that the broker cannot set off a loss on policy effected by him as agent, without a commission del credere, where there has been no adjustment, though the loss take place before the bankruptcy. Baker v. Langhorn, 2 Mar. 215.

5. The executors of a deceased partner are all, except one, partners in the firm, and leave his estate, or a portion thereof, invested in the business. This portion, to the amount of 19,000*l.*, is entered in the books to the credit of the executors, on an account of a residuary legatee, to whom it belonged when he should attain twenty-five. Moneys were advanced by the firm to this legatee on the credit of this and security of another fund to an amount which, after making the security available, left the sum of 11,000*l.* due. The firm became bankrupt. Quære, whether the 11,000*l.* could be recovered by way of set-off:—Held, the residuary legatee was entitled to it. Fairlie v. Hartwell, 3 Jur. 791.

6. A. and B., executors under a will under which A. was also residuary legatee, kept an executorship account with a bank, at which A. kept also a private separate account. The bankers stopped payment, and filed a liquidation petition, and a trustee was appointed. Previously to the stoppage the executors had paid all the debts, and funeral and testamentary expenses, and set apart securities to answer the annuities bequeathed by the will; but the executors were jointly liable for two small sums for rates and taxes, and their solicitor's bill of costs in relation to the estate. At the date of the stoppage a sum of 1,400*l.* was due from the bank on the executorship account, while a sum of 1,200*l.* was owing by A. on his separate account. A claimed to prove in the liquidation for the difference between the two sums, as having a right to set off as against the debt due from him the money owing from the bank on the executorship account, on the ground that the money on that account constituted in fact a clear net residue in which he was absolutely interested:—Held, that the one account could not be set off against the other, the rules of equitable set-off or mutual credit not applying unless A. was so much the person solely beneficially interested in the balance of the joint account that a court of equity would without any terms or further enquiry have obliged B. to transfer the account into the name of A. alone. Exp. Morier, Re Willis, 12 L. R., Ch. D., 491; 49 L. J., Bky., 9; 40 L. T. 792; 28 W. R. 235.

7. A devise of real estate to trustees for a term, upon trust, inter alia, to raise 1,000*l.* and to pay the dividends thereof to the testator's daughter for her life, for her separate use, and after her decease to divide the capital among her children at twenty-one. In 1817 the trustees released the land, and assigned the term to the owner of the land subject to the charge. An entry of a memorandum, dated January 1816, was found in a private journal belonging to such owner (since deceased), stating that he had paid the 1,000*l.* to the daughter's husband. The daughter died in 1829. Her only surviving child attained twenty-one in 1835, when he was informed of the circumstances under which the release had been given. He did not file his bill until 1854: —Held, that the entry was admissible as evidence of the 1,000*l.* having been paid to the husband. Held, also, that although the plaintiff was put upon inquiry as to his rights in 1835, and was acquainted with the circumstances under which the legacy had been paid to his father, and therefore forbore to press his claim, lapse of time and acquiescence were no bar to the present suit. The surviving trustee became bankrupt, but did not prove under the commission:—Held, that he was liable to the extent of the dividends which might have been received had he so proved. The plaintiff received a distributive portion of his father's estate:—Held, that it must be set off against the proportionate amount due in respect of the legacy and interest. Orrett v. Corser, 1 Jur., N. S., 882.

1. Bills are drawn by the plaintiff upon the defendant and accepted by him, and the plaintiff executes an assignment of the furniture at his hotel as a collateral security, accompanied by a defeasance not under seal, admitting the bills to be the only consideration. The goods are seized on the first bill becoming due, and an injunction granted to restrain the seizure, and the money secured by the bills and assignment paid into court. The plaintiff claims damages, and also prays that, in any action he might bring, the defendant might be decreed to admit that the defeasance was under seal; and for an account. The defendant had resided at the plaintiff's hotel, and it was said there was an agreement for a set-off:—Held, that no agreement for a set-off appeared, although there was sufficient to warrant an inquiry. The plaintiff could have no damages, that being the province of a court of law; nor could the defendant be ordered to admit the defeasance to be under seal: if the plaintiff had no remedy at law, equity would not help him, there appearing to have been no fraud. Drew v. Sheddon, 2 W. R. 663.

2. In a suit for specific performance by the vendor (the purchaser having been in possession for ten years), a mortgage debt due to the purchaser carrying interest at 5 per cent. was set off against unpaid purchase money carrying interest at 4 per cent. Wallis v. Bastard, 2 W. R. 47; 17 Jur. 1107; 2 Eq. Rep. 508; 4 De G. M. & G. 251.

3. If A. assigns a debt to B. with notice to the debtor, and B. assigns to C. without such notice, and afterwards becomes bankrupt, the debtor may set-off against C. any other debt due to him from B. Cavendish v. Geaves, 5 W. R. 615; 24 Beav. 163; 27 L. J., Ch., 314; 3 Jur., N. S., 1086.

4. In order to establish a right of set-off on the basis of mutual credits between the parties, there must be an actual bankruptcy, and the assignment by the several partners of a firm is not sufficient to establish the right of set-off against their trustees, or to bind the joint estate. London, Bombay, and Mediterranean Bank v. Narraway, 27 L. T., N. S., 572.

When the plaintiff claimed to set off certain bills of exchange against the proceeds of a promissory note, which were claimed to be retained by A., and he was not the bonâ fide holder of the bills, but had got possession of them for the purpose of establishing the set-off, and was under an engagement to re-deliver them to the real holders in case the claim to set-off failed, the bill was dismissed with costs. Ib.

I. Jurisdiction. Ouster of.

1. By section 21 of the 19 & 20 Vict., c. 120, no application is to be granted where a similar application has been rejected by Parliament. Where, therefore, a petitioner had several times applied to Parliament for similar powers of leasing settled property as were asked for by the petition, and such applications were rejected:—Held, that the Court had no power to grant such an application. Re Wilson, 1 L. T., N. S., 25.

II. "Settlement" and "Settled Estates." What are.

2. G., in 1831, devised her estates, on trust, for her daughter for life, with remainder for all the daughter's children equally, as tenants in common, the shares of the children to be vested at twenty-one or marriage. The will contained clauses of survivorship and accruer, but no powers of sale or demise. The daughter died in 1856, leaving nine children. G. died in 1858, and the shares of two children were resettled by the parties entitled. Four other children had attained twenty-one, and their shares were vested absolutely in them. The other three children were infants. Under the provisions of the 19 & 20 Vict., c. 120, and the 21 & 22 Vict., c. 77, on a petition presented for the purpose by the parties entitled to all the shares (including the trustees and cestuis que trustent of the two shares resettled, certain mortgagees, and the guardians of the three infants), the Court made an order for a sale of the whole of the property. Re Goodwin, Exp. Butler, 8 Jur., N. S., 1170; 10 W. R. 612; 6 L. T., N. S., 530; 3 Giff. 623.

In determining whether the estate is "settled," reference must be had to the state of things at the date of the instrument, and not to the state of circumstances when it comes into operation. Ib.

The interest which may be taken by way of accruer is a limitation, "by way of succession," within the meaning of the Acts. Ib.

The shares of children who have attained twenty-one may be included in an order for sale of the whole estate upon such children becoming co-petitioners. Ib.

3. At the date of an application for a sale under the 19 & 20 Vict., c. 120, a succession, remainder, or reversion must be existing. The words "stand limited," in the 1st section of the Act, refer to the time of the application to the Court. The 27th section of the Act only limits the time within which the Court is empowered to lease or sell, etc., under the Act. Re Birtie's Settled Estate, 2 N. R. 252.

4. Property in the county palatine of Lancaster was, by will, limited to trustees during the life of the longest liver of his wife and five named children; and from the death of such longest liver to the respective issue then living of his children, in undivided fifth shares, as tenants in common in fee with cross limitations. The longest liver of the testator's wife and five children died in 1861, when the property vested absolutely in fee in undivided shares in numerous persons. All these persons, several of whom are still infants, concurred in an application for an order, under 19 & 20 Vict., c. 120, to sell the property; but, the Vice-Chancellor of the county palatine thought the property had ceased to be settled, and that he had no power to make an order. The Court, on appeal, agreed, considering that ments might be considered sufficient. Re Hemsley, 16 L. R., Eq., 315; 21 W. R. 821; 29 L. T., N. S., 173; 43 L. J., Ch., 72.

2. Further Advertisements. When Necessary.

1. A leasing power having been granted by the Court to a tenant for life who had since died, a petition was presented by the succeeding tenant for life and her husband, praying that the power might be vested in one of the trustees of the settlement:—Held, that it was not necessary, under such circumstances, to repeat the advertisements, and the order was made accordingly. Re Kentish Town Estate, Weeding v. Weeding, 1 John. & H. 230.

2. In amending a petition for the purpose of obtaining the Court's authority to grant a lease of trust property, it is not necessary to republish advertisements relating to the same, provided the averments contained in such advertisements are not affected by the amendment. Re Corbet, 15 L. T., N. S., 173.

3. Upon a petition, an infant, remotely interested, had been born after the advertisement had been made. The Court permitted him to be made a party by amendment, and dispensed with further advertisements. Re Horton, 34 Beav. 386.

4. When, after a petition has been presented under the Leases and Sales of Settled Estates Act, 19 & 20 Vict., c. 120, and advertised, amendments in it became necessary, it is not of course upon the amended petition to begin de novo with respect to the advertisements. The course to be adopted will depend upon the discretion of the Court, which will be governed by the particular circumstances of each case. Re Bunbury, 4 De G. J. & S. 573; 11 Jur., N. S., 27; 13 W. R. 370; 11 L. T., N. S., 585; 5 N. R. 229.

If the amendment involves the statement of such new facts or the introduction of such new parties as to give to the petition a new character, new advertisements would be directed. Ib.

Circumstances under which advertisements of an amended petition under the Act were held not to be necessary. Ib.

Where in a joint petition of an eldest and a youngest son, it was alleged that the former was the customary heir, instead of the latter, no fresh advertisements need issue. Ib.

So, where an amendment of a petition was directed in consequence of one of the petitioners having, subsequently to its presentation, made an appointment of a share of the property after his decease to his wife, fresh advertisements were unnecessary. Ib.

5. After a petition had been advertised, one of the parties married and assigned a portion of his interest in the settled estate to the trustees of his marriage settlement. The Court allowed the trustees to be made parties by amendment, and dispensed with further advertisements. Re Wilkinson, 21 W. R. 537. And see S. C. 9 L. R., Eq., 71.

6. Interpretation put upon a judge's order, that advertisements be entered in certain newspapers for three successive weeks. Browne v. Pennefather, 4 N. R. 221.

7. When a petition was presented under the above Act by a lady who at the time of the presentation was a feme sole, nad the usual advertisements were inserted in the newspapers and she married before the hearing of the petition, a question arose as to whether new advertisements should be issued, and also whether she ought to be examined as a feme covert:—Held, that fresh advertisements were not necessary. Re Marshall, 27 L. J., N. S., 439; 15 L. R., Eq., 66.

8. A petition and advertisements under the repealed Acts for the Leases and Sales of Settled Estates omitted to describe in the title certain property contained in a contract for sale and ordered by the Court to be sold. On a fresh petition under the Settled Estates Act 1877, containing proper descriptions, fresh advertisements were not directed. The Court further dispensed with the consent and examination of married women contingently entitled to rent charges on or to portions out of the settled estates, the trustees for one of the married women and the trustees for raising portions being before the Court; and service on their respective husbands and children (if any) was also dispensed with. Re Kilmorey (Earl), 25 W. R. 54.

9. Where trustees have obtained, on petition, general barring powers, and it is desired to obtain the same power for the tenant for life, the Court will rescind the former order, and without prejudice to anything done under it make the order. The advertisements issued on the first petition need not, however, be repeated. Wheeler v. Tootal, 18 L. T., N. S., 534; 16 W. R. 273.

IV. PARTIES.

10. Where a testator leaves property to his widow for life or during widowhood, and she and the parties entitled in remainder join in a petition, under the 19 & 20 Vict., c. 120, that is a sufficient compliance with the terms of the 16th section. Williams v. Williams, 9 W. R. 888.

11. A person of unsound mind, not found lunatic by inquisition, was entitled to a charge of 200*l.* per annum upon the property proposed to be dealt with:—Held, that such person was not a necessary party to a petition, as the Court would direct that what was done under the petition should be subject to that charge. Re Tarbutt, 11 W. R. 657; 8 L. T., N. S., 603; 2 N. R. 158.

12. After a petition had been advertised, one of the parties married and assigned a portion of his interest in the settled estate to the trustees of his marriage settlement. The Court allowed the trustees to be made parties by amendment, and dispensed with further advertisements. Re Wilkinson, 21 W. R. 537. And see 9 L. R., Eq., 371.

13. Leasehold interests in mines were limited to trustees for a term of twenty-one years, upon trust that during that period the mines should be worked by the trustees, and the profits invested on certain trusts, and subject to the trusts of that term, upon trusts corresponding to limitations of freehold estates, under which A. was tenant for life, with remainders over. A. presented a petition for the sale of the mines:—Held, that during the subsistence of the trust term of twenty-one years the Court had not jurisdiction to make the required order for sale upon the petition of A. alone, but that the Court would have jurisdiction if the trustees were joined as co-petitioners, and liberty to amend the petition was accordingly given. Exp. Pusley, 2 Ir. R., Eq., 237.

1. Persons beneficially entitled to real estates settled by a will applied by petition, to which two beneficiaries, of whom one was an infant, were made respondents, for the sale of the estates out of court:—Held, that the petition was properly presented, all the beneficiaries being before the Court, but that the sale could not be made out of Court, but must be made under the direction of the Court. Re Dryden's Settled Estates, 50 L. J., Ch., 752; 45 L. T. 254; 29 W. R. 884.

2. When the Court sees clearly on the construction of a will that two persons or one of them are or is indefeasibly entitled to an estate in fee simple, it can direct a sale on the petition of the two persons so entitled. Re Williams, 20 W. R. 967; 27 L. T., N. S., 335.

3. On a petition by a married woman and her children and others under the Settled Estates Acts (19 & 20 Vict., c. 120, and the 37 & 38 Vict., c. 33):—Held, that an infant born after the presentation of the petition need not be served. Re Lewis, 24 W. R. 103.

4. An order under the Leases and Sales of Settled Estates Acts (19 & 20 Vict., c. 120, and the 37 & 38 Vict., c. 33) can only be made upon the petition of a person who is, within the meaning of the Acts, "entitled to the possession or the receipt of the rents and profits" of the settled estate, and if there is no such person, no order can be made. Taylor v. Taylor, 1 L. R., Ch. D., 426; 45 L. J., Ch., 373. Affirmed 3 L. R., Ch. D., 145; 35 L. T., N. S., 450.

5. Where an estate is vested in trustees and there is not for the time being any beneficial owner of the rents and profits, the trustees are persons who may, under the 23rd section of the Settled Estates Act 1877, apply to the Court by petition in a summary way to exercise the powers conferred by the Act. Wolley v. Jenkins (23 Beav. 53; 26 L. J., Ch., 379; 3 Jur., N. S., 321) discussed. Vine v. Raleigh, 24 L. R., Ch. D., 238; 49 L. T. 440; 31 W. R. 855.

6. Leave to serve a petition under the Leases and Sales of Settled Estates Act, 19 & 20 Vict., c. 120, on a respondent out of the jurisdiction was refused. Re Mewburn, 22 W. R. 752.

7. The Leases and Sales of Settled Estates Amendment Act 1874, s. 3, does not enable the Court to dispense with any consent to an application under the principal Act without notice of the application being given, in manner provided by s. 2 of the Amendment Act, to the person whose consent is required by the principal Act. Re Rylar, 24 W. R. 949.

V. CONSENTS AND NOTICES.

1. By Whom, 6155.
2. When Dispensed with by the Court, 6156.
3. Infants, 6157.
4. Lunatics, 6158.
5. Married Women, Examination of, 6158.

1. By Whom.

8. Cestuis que trustent of a term for raising portions must be served with a copy of a petition presented under the 19 & 20 Vict., c. 120, s. 17, although their trustees, who have powers of sale and of giving receipts for the purchase money of the property, appear and consent to the prayer of the petition. Re Boughton, 12 W. R. 34; 9 L. T., N. S., 360.

9. Estates were settled upon A. for life, and then to trustees, with powers of sale, upon trust for the children of A.:—Held, that the trustees, and not the children, ought to be served with a petition under the 19 & 20 Vict., c. 120. Re Potts, 15 W. R. 29. And see 16 L. R., Eq., 631. n.

10. A devise and bequest to trustees upon trust to sell and convert at their discretion and invest the proceeds, and pay the income to one for life with remainders over, constitute a "settled estate" within the meaning of 19 & 20 Vict., c. 120, s. 1. In such a case if there are remaindermen who are sui juris, and who may become beneficially interested in the proceeds of sale, they must be served as well as the trustees. But service on the infant children of such remaindermen who may ultimately become beneficially entitled instead of their parents may be dispensed with under 37 & 38 Vict., c. 33. Re Chamberlain, 23 W. R. 852.

11. Real estate, the equity of redemption in which was devised in strict settlement, was ordered to be sold, and an order was made, appointing A. and B., under the 19 & 20 Vict., c. 120, to convey. A subsequent order declared that the order should bind the mortgagees. After this the mortgagees conveyed the legal estate in the real estate to the trustees of the will:—Held, that notwithstanding such conveyance by the mortgagees, A. and B. had power to convey, and that the concurrence of the trustees of the will was unnecessary. Eyre v. Saunders, Exp. Yeo, 5 Jur., N. S., 703; 28 L. J., Ch., 439.

12. The expression "persons entitled" in 19 & 20 Vict., c. 120, means persons beneficially entitled, and all persons beneficially entitled must concur. Trustees can only consent for unborn children; but trustees with a power of sale may join in a sale which will bind all persons claiming under their trust. Grey v. Jenkins, 26 Beav. 351.

13. The Court cannot authorise a lease, under the 19 & 20 Vict., c. 120, if any one of the parties interested under the settlement opposes the application. Re Merry, 36 L. J., Ch., 168; 15 L. T., N. S., 529; 15 W. R. 307.

14. The persons whose consent is required by s. 17 of the 19 & 20 Vict., c. 120, to an application for a sale are persons whose consents are capable of being obtained. Beioley v. Carter, 4 L. R., Ch., 230; 38 L. J., Ch., 381; 20 L. T., N. S., 381; 17 W. R. 300. Reversing 19 L. T., N. S., 472; 38 L. J., Ch., 92; 17 W. R. 130.

Therefore, where a freehold estate was limited in trust for A. for life, with remainder (subject to a general power of appointment by A.) in trust for the person whom A. should leave her heir-at-law in fee:—Held, that an order for sale made on the application of A., with the concurrence of the trustee of the settlement, was not invalid by reason of the nonconcurrence of the unascertained contingent remainderman. Ib.

15. Lands were devised to trustees for a tenant for life, and after her death to sell, with ments might be considered sufficient. Re Hemsley, 16 L. R., Eq., 315; 21 W. R. 821; 29 L. T., N. S., 173; 43 L. J., Ch., 72.

2. Further Advertisements. When Necessary.

1. A leasing power having been granted by the Court to a tenant for life who had since died, a petition was presented by the succeeding tenant for life and her husband, praying that the power might be vested in one of the trustees of the settlement:—Held, that it was not necessary, under such circumstances, to repeat the advertisements, and the order was made accordingly. Re Kentish Town Estate, Weeding v. Weeding, 1 John. & H. 230.

2. In amending a petition for the purpose of obtaining the Court's authority to grant a lease of trust property, it is not necessary to republish advertisements relating to the same, provided the averments contained in such advertisements are not affected by the amendment. Re Corbet, 15 L. T., N. S., 173.

3. Upon a petition, an infant, remotely interested, had been born after the advertisement had been made. The Court permitted him to be made a party by amendment, and dispensed with further advertisements. Re Horton, 34 Beav. 386.

4. When, after a petition has been presented under the Leases and Sales of Settled Estates Act, 19 & 20 Vict., c. 120, and advertised, amendments in it became necessary, it is not of course upon the amended petition to begin de novo with respect to the advertisements. The course to be adopted will depend upon the discretion of the Court, which will be governed by the particular circumstances of each case. Re Bunbury, 4 De G. J. & S. 573; 11 Jur., N. S., 27; 13 W. R. 370; 11 L. T., N. S., 585; 5 N. R. 229.

If the amendment involves the statement of such new facts or the introduction of such new parties as to give to the petition a new character, new advertisements would be directed. Ib.

Circumstances under which advertisements of an amended petition under the Act were held not to be necessary. Ib.

Where in a joint petition of an eldest and a youngest son, it was alleged that the former was the customary heir, instead of the latter, no fresh advertisements need issue. Ib.

So, where an amendment of a petition was directed in consequence of one of the petitioners having, subsequently to its presentation, made an appointment of a share of the property after his decease to his wife, fresh advertisements were unnecessary. Ib.

5. After a petition had been advertised, one of the parties married and assigned a portion of his interest in the settled estate to the trustees of his marriage settlement. The Court allowed the trustees to be made parties by amendment, and dispensed with further advertisements. Re Wilkinson, 21 W. R. 537. And see S. C. 9 L. R., Eq., 71.

6. Interpretation put upon a judge's order, that advertisements be entered in certain newspapers for three successive weeks. Browne v. Pennefather, 4 N. R. 221.

7. When a petition was presented under the above Act by a lady who at the time of the presentation was a feme sole, nad the usual advertisements were inserted in the newspapers and she married before the hearing of the petition, a question arose as to whether new advertisements should be issued, and also whether she ought to be examined as a feme covert:—Held, that fresh advertisements were not necessary. Re Marshall, 27 L. J., N. S., 439; 15 L. R., Eq., 66.

8. A petition and advertisements under the repealed Acts for the Leases and Sales of Settled Estates omitted to describe in the title certain property contained in a contract for sale and ordered by the Court to be sold. On a fresh petition under the Settled Estates Act 1877, containing proper descriptions, fresh advertisements were not directed. The Court further dispensed with the consent and examination of married women contingently entitled to rent charges on or to portions out of the settled estates, the trustees for one of the married women and the trustees for raising portions being before the Court; and service on their respective husbands and children (if any) was also dispensed with. Re Kilmorey (Earl), 25 W. R. 54.

9. Where trustees have obtained, on petition, general barring powers, and it is desired to obtain the same power for the tenant for life, the Court will rescind the former order, and without prejudice to anything done under it make the order. The advertisements issued on the first petition need not, however, be repeated. Wheeler v. Tootal, 18 L. T., N. S., 534; 16 W. R. 273.

IV. PARTIES.

10. Where a testator leaves property to his widow for life or during widowhood, and she and the parties entitled in remainder join in a petition, under the 19 & 20 Vict., c. 120, that is a sufficient compliance with the terms of the 16th section. Williams v. Williams, 9 W. R. 888.

11. A person of unsound mind, not found lunatic by inquisition, was entitled to a charge of 200*l.* per annum upon the property proposed to be dealt with:—Held, that such person was not a necessary party to a petition, as the Court would direct that what was done under the petition should be subject to that charge. Re Tarbutt, 11 W. 12. After a petition had been advertised, one of the parties married and assigned a portion of his interest in the settled estate to the trustees of his marriage settlement. The Court allowed the trustees to be made parties by amendment, and dispensed with further advertisements. Re Wilkinson, 21 W. R. 537. And see 9 L. R., Eq., 371.

13. Leasehold interests in mines were limited to trustees for a term of twenty-one years, upon trust that during that period the mines should be worked by the trustees, and the profits invested on certain trusts, and subject to the trusts of that term, upon trusts corresponding to limitations of freehold estates, under which A. was tenant for life, with remainders over. A. presented a petition for the sale of the mines:—Held, that during the subsistence of the trust term of twenty-one years the Court had not jurisdiction to make the required order for sale upon the petition of A. alone, but that the Court would have jurisdiction if the trustees were joined as co-petitioners, and liberty to amend the petition was accordingly given. Exp. Pawley, 2 Ir. R., Eq., 237.

1. Persons beneficially entitled to real estates settled by a will applied by petition, to which two beneficiaries, of whom one was an infant, were made respondents, for the sale of the estates out of court:—Held, that the petition was properly presented, all the beneficiaries being before the Court, but that the sale could not be made out of Court, but must be made under the direction of the Court. Re Dryden's Settled Estates, 50 L. J., Ch., 752; 45 L. T. 254; 29 W. R. 884.

2. When the Court sees clearly on the construction of a will that two persons or one of them are or is indefeasibly entitled to an estate in fee simple, it can direct a sale on the petition of the two persons so entitled. Re Williams, 20 W. R. 967; 27 L. T., N. S., 335.

3. On a petition by a married woman and her children and others under the Settled Estates Acts (19 & 20 Vict., c. 120, and the 37 & 38 Vict., c. 33):—Held, that an infant born after the presentation of the petition need not be served. Re Lewis, 24 W. R. 103.

4. An order under the Leases and Sales of Settled Estates Acts (19 & 20 Vict., c. 120, and the 37 & 38 Vict., c. 33) can only be made upon the petition of a person who is, within the meaning of the Acts, "entitled to the possession or the receipt of the rents and profits" of the settled estate, and if there is no such person, no order can be made. Taylor v. Taylor, 1 L. R., Ch. D., 426; 45 L. J., Ch., 373. Affirmed 3 L. R., Ch. D., 145; 35 L. T., N. S., 450.

5. Where an estate is vested in trustees and there is not for the time being any beneficial owner of the rents and profits, the trustees are persons who may, under the 23rd section of the Settled Estates Act 1877, apply to the Court by petition in a summary way to exercise the powers conferred by the Act. Wolley v. Jenkins (23 Beav. 53; 26 L. J., Ch., 379; 3 Jur., N. S., 321) discussed. Vine v. Raleigh, 24 L. R., Ch. D., 238; 49 L. T. 440; 31 W. R. 855.

6. Leave to serve a petition under the Leases and Sales of Settled Estates Act, 19 & 20 Vict., c. 120, on a respondent out of the jurisdiction was refused. Re Mewburn, 22 W. R. 752.

7. The Leases and Sales of Settled Estates Amendment Act 1874, s. 3, does not enable the Court to dispense with any consent to an application under the principal Act without notice of the application being given, in manner provided by s. 2 of the Amendment Act, to the person whose consent is required by the principal Act. Re Rylar, 24 W. R. 34; 9 L. T., N. S., 360.

9. Estates were settled upon A. for life, and then to trustees, with powers of sale, upon trust for the children of A.:—Held, that the trustees, and not the children, ought to be served with a petition under the 19 & 20 Vict., c. 120. Re Potts, 15 W. R. 29. And see 16 L. R., Eq., 631. n.

10. A devise and bequest to trustees upon trust to sell and convert at their discretion and invest the proceeds, and pay the income to one for life with remainders over, constitute a "settled estate" within the meaning of 19 & 20 Vict., c. 120, s. 1. 11. Real estate, the equity of redemption in which was devised in strict settlement, was ordered to be sold, and an order was made, appointing A. and B., under the 19 & 20 Vict., c. 120, to convey. A subsequent order declared that the order should bind the mortgagees. After this the mortgagees conveyed the legal estate in the real estate to the trustees of the will:—Held, that notwithstanding such conveyance by the mortgagees, A. and B. had power to convey, and that the concurrence of the trustees of the will was unnecessary. Eyre v. Saunders, Exp. Yeo, 5 Jur., N. S., 703; 28 L. J., Ch., 439.

12. The expression "persons entitled" in 19 & 20 Vict., c. 120, means persons beneficially entitled, and all persons beneficially entitled must concur. Trustees can only consent for unborn children; but trustees with a power of sale may join in a sale which will bind all persons claiming under their trust. Grey v. Jenkins, 26 Beav. 351.

13. The Court cannot authorise a lease, under the 19 & 20 Vict., c. 120, if any one of the parties interested under the settlement opposes the application. Re Merry, 36 L. J., Ch., 168; 15 L. T., N. S., 529; 15 W. R. 307.

14. The persons whose consent is required by s. 17 of the 19 & 20 Vict., c. 120, to an application for a sale are persons whose consents are capable of being obtained. Beioley v. Carter, 4 L. R., Ch., 230; 38 L. J., Ch., 381; 20 L. T., N. S., 381; 17 W. R. 300. Reversing 19 L. T., N. S., 472; 38 L. J., Ch., 92; 17 W. R. 130.

Therefore, where a freehold estate was limited in trust for A. for life, with remainder (subject to a general power of appointment by A.) in trust for the person whom A. should leave her heir-at-law in fee:—Held, that an order for sale made on the application of A., with the concurrence of the trustee of the settlement, was not invalid by reason of the nonconcurrence of the unascertained contingent remainderman. Ib.

15. Lands were devised to trustees for a tenant for life, and after her death to sell, with power to give receipts, and to hold the proceeds for all the children of the tenant for life who should be living at her death and should attain twenty-one, and the issue then living, who should attain twenty-one, of any child who should have previously died, per stirpes as tenants in common. The tenant for life had six children, one of whom, Mrs. W., was married and had infant children. Upon a petition for a sale under the Leases and Sales of Settled Estates Act, the trustee, the tenant for life, and all her children were either represented or willing to concur, but the infant children of Mrs. W. were not represented:—Held, first, that, as a class of persons entitled to a contingent interest who could not at present be ascertained, the concurrence of the infant children of Mrs. W. was not requisite. Re Strutt, 43 L. J., Ch., 69; 16 L. R., Eq., 629; 21 W. R. 880.

Held, secondly, that the property being devised to trustees upon trust for sale with power to give receipts, the concurrence of the cestuis que trustent was unnecessary. Ib.

1. A marriage settlement made in 1862 comprised certain shares, the liability on which was unlimited, and contained a provision for varying the investments with the consent of the tenant for life. A call was made on these shares in 1874, which (the trustee having no funds in hand to meet it) the remainderman paid to save forfeiture:—Held, that there was not sufficient ground for the Court to order a sale of the shares upon the application of the remainderman without the consent of the tenant for life. Parke v. Thackray, 24 W. R. 21.

2. When property was vested in a trustee upon trust after the death of the tenant for life to sell and divide the proceeds among numerous persons who would become absolutely entitled, with power to the trustee to give receipts on a petition by the tenant for life, for a sale of the property:—Held, that under the Settled Estates Act (19 & 20 Vict., c. 120), s. 17, the consent of all the beneficiaries was necessary. Re Ives, Bailey v. Holmes, 3 L. R., Ch. D., 690; 24 W. R. 1068.

3. An equitable tenant for life and one of the trustees under a will (which contained peculiar and unusual provisions as to management and as to the application of the rents and profits) presented a petition under 19 & 20 Vict., c. 120, praying for an order vesting in the concurring trustee a power to grant leases. The other trustee, who was entitled to the property in remainder in fee, contingently on his surviving the tenant for life, opposed the petition, on the ground that, from the nature of the property, his interests would be interfered with if there were a power to grant leases without his consent:—Held, that his consent was necessary and ought not to be dispensed with under the power to dispense given to the Court by 37 & 38 Vict., c. 33, s. 3. Taylor v. Taylor, Taylor v. Keily, 25 W. R. 279; 45 L. J., Ch., 848; 35 L. T. 450; 3 L. R., Ch. D., 145. Affirming 1 L. R., Ch. D., 426; 45 L. J., Ch., 373.

4. A. on her marriage settled a contingent reversionary interest to which she was entitled under a will. She had four children under age. On a petition to approve a sale of part of the settled estate:—Held, that under s. 17 of the Settled Estates Act 1856, her children were beneficiaries whose consent was necessary, and leave was given to amend the petition by making the children respondents, and serving notice on their father. Re Dendy, 46 L. J., Ch., 417; 4 L. R., Ch. D., 879; 25 W. R. 410.

To Application of Purchase Money.] 5. Estates having been sold under the 19 & 20 Vict., c. 120, and the proceeds paid into Court, a petition was presented for reinvestment in other lands:—Held, that it was unnecessary again to serve those parties whose concurrence had previously been obtained at the time of the sale. Re Cleveland's (Duke) Harte Estate, 1 Dr. & Sm. 481; 7 Jur., N. S., 769; 30 L. J., Ch., 862; 9 W. R. 883; 2 L. T., N. S., 78.

The words "every application," in the 17th section of the 19 & 20 Vict., c. 120, refer only to applications under the Act for the sale of estates, and not to petitions dealing with purchase money. Ib.

6. A private Act provided that sales of certain settled estates should be made under the provisions of the 19 & 20 Vict., c. 120, and contained a proviso as to the application of the purchase money precisely similar to s. 24 of the last mentioned Act. A petition was presented under the private Act by the tenant for life for the reinvestment of the purchase money, but was not served upon any of the other parties interested under the settlement:—Held, that the petition must be served upon the different parties interested under the settlement, down to the first tenant in tail. Re Bolton Estates Act 1863, 19 W. R. 429; 24 L. T., N. S., 86.

7. Where an estate has been sold under the 19 & 20 Vict., c. 120, it is not necessary to publish in the newspapers any notice of an application for the reinvestment of the purchase money in other land. Re Sexton Barns, 10 W. R. 416; 6 L. T., N. S., 40.

2. When Dispensed with by the Court.

8. Where a testator who had devised estates in settlement has, by his will, given to the tenant for life leasing powers, which are expressly to be exercised only with the consent of a person named (devisee for life of contiguous property), the Court will not exercise the powers given it by the 19 & 20 Vict., c. 120, so as to enable the tenant for life to dispense with such consent, even though it appears that the person whose consent is required has arbitrarily, but not maliciously, refused. Re Hurle, 2 Hem. & M. 196; 11 Jur., N. S., 78; 11 L. T., N. S., 592; 13 W. R. 171; 5 N. R. 167.

9. The Leases and Sales of Settled Estates Amendment Act 1874, s. 3, does not enable the Court to dispense with any consent to an application under the principal Act without notice of the application being given, in manner provided by s. 2 of the Amendment Act, to the person whose consent is required by the principal Act. Re Rylar, 24 W. R. 949.

10. On petition under the Settled Estates Acts 1856 and 1874, the beneficiaries being very numerous, the Court dispensed with service of the petition on a wife and her husband entitled to a life interest in one-tenth of the settled estates, and with the separate examination of another married woman entitled to one-fortieth of the same estates; and also held that notice to the parties, whose concurrence was dispensed with, was unnecessary. Re Cundee, 37 L. T., N. S., 271.

1. A testator devised real estate to two trustees, of whom K. was one, in fee, to receive the annual produce and rents, and subject to the payment out of the rents of a portion of the estate of all ground rent, taxes, repairs, and other outgoings, to apply the net rents to M. for life; and by a codicil he gave the ultimate remainder in certain events to K. The will contained no power of leasing. On petition by M., which was opposed by K., praying that a power to grant leases might be vested in the other trustee:—Held, that the opposition of K. was fatal to the application. Taylor v. Taylor, Taylor v. Keily, 45 L. J., Ch., 848; 25 W. R. 279; 3 L. R., Ch. D., 145; 35 L. T. 450. Affirming 1 L. R., Ch. D., 426; 45 L. J., Ch., 373.

The Court will not dispense with the concurrence of persons opposing an application if their number and the value of their interests are nearly equal to those of the persons supporting the application. Ib.

2. Testator, being entitled in fee to a settled estate, subject to a shifting clause in favour of A. in the event of testator's children dying without issue under twenty-one, and being also seised in fee of another property adjoining and partly intermingled with the settled estate, devised all his real estate to trustees in trust for sale. Testator left four children, the eldest being twelve years old. The trustees presented a petition under the Settled Estates Act 1877 (40 & 41 Vict., c. 18), for the sale of the two properties together and the apportionment of the purchase money. A. opposed the sale:—Held, that A.'s interest was too remote to be considered, and the Court being satisfied on the evidence that the proposed sale would be more advantageous than if the properties were sold separately, the same was ordered accordingly. Re Spurway's Settled Estates, 10 L. R., Ch. D., 230; 48 L. J., Ch., 213; 27 W. R. 302; 40 L. T. 377.

3. A petition and advertisements under the repealed Acts for the Leases and Sales of Settled Estates omitted to describe in the title certain property contained in a contract for sale and ordered by the Court to be sold. On a fresh petition under the Settled Estates Act 1877, containing proper descriptions, fresh advertisements were not directed. The Court further dispensed with the consent and examination of married women contingently entitled to rent charges on or to portions out of the settled estates, the trustees for one of the married women and the trustees for raising portions being before the Court; and service on their respective husbands and children (if any) was also dispensed with. Re Kilmorey (Earl), 25 W. R. 54.

Order made without prejudice.] 4. If upon a petition presented under the 19 & 20 Vict., c. 120, it is very difficult or impossible to obtain the consent of all the parties interested, the Court will, under the 18th section, make an order in the absence of those parties, expressing in the order that it is subject to and so as not to affect their rights. Re Legge's Settled Estates, 6 W. R. 20.

5. Order was made saving the rights of pecuniary legatees interested in the estate, who were numerous. Re Parry, 34 Beav. 462.

Amending Order.] 6. Order XLI. A (December 1879), provides as follows:—"Clerical mistakes in judgments or orders, or errors arising therein from any accidental slip or omission, may at any time be corrected by the Court or a judge on motion without an appeal." Upon a motion under the above rule an order made on petition under the Settled Estates Act 1877, which had been passed and entered, was directed to be varied so as to dispense with the consent of tenants for life to the exercise of leasing powers granted by the order. Re Riley's Trusts, 30 W. R. 78.

3. Infants.

7. Under the 36th section of the 19 & 20 Vict., c. 120, a guardian to an infant may, after a petition has been presented by the infant, be appointed. Whilst they point out the most convenient course of proceeding under the Act, the regulations of the 8th August 1857 are not absolutely obligatory in every case. Re Hargreaves, 5 Jur., N. S., 60; 20 L. J., Ch., 197.

8. In a petition presented under the Settled Estates Act, 19 & 20 Vict., c. 120, when there are infant petitioners the concurrence of the father is not sufficient, though he has no adverse interest, but a guardian must be appointed in the regular manner on a summons at chambers. Re Caddick's Settled Estates, 7 W. R. 334.

9. The regulations of the 8th August 1857 are not absolutely binding as orders. Re Longstaffe, 1 Dr. & Sm. 142; 8 W. R. 491.

Therefore, though those regulations direct that a guardian to an infant petitioner must be appointed before the petition is presented, the Court authorised such an appointment on an application after petition had been presented and answered. Ib.

10. In a petition for a sale of property in which an infant is interested in remainder, the consent of the testamentary guardian of the infant is not sufficient, and a guardian must be appointed for the purpose of consenting on behalf of the infant. Re James, 5 L. R., Eq., 334.

11. Where an infant was entitled to an undivided share of land the Court refused to appoint one of the co-owners to exercise on behalf of the infant the power of concurring in a sale under the Settled Estates Act. Upon a sale under the Act the infant's share in the purchase money was directed to be brought into court. Form of application under the Act on behalf of an infant. Re Greenville Estate, 11 L. R., Ir., 138.

12. On a petition by a married woman and her children under the Settled Estates Acts (19 & 20 Vict., c. 120, and 37 & 38 Vict., c. 33):—Held, that an infant born after the presentation of the petition need not be served. Re Lewis's Settled Estates, 24 W. R. 103.

4. Lunatics.

1. The service of an intended application under the Settled Estates Acts (19 & 20 Vict., c. 120), on a person of unsound mind, not so found by inquisition, who had only a remote contingent interest in the property, was dispensed with, there being others in the same interest who concurred. Re Frankling's Settled Estates, 7 W. R. 45.

2. Consent to an application may be given on behalf of a person of unsound mind not found so by inquisition, by a guardian appointed by the Court for the purpose. Re Venner, 6 L. R., Eq., 249; 16 W. R. 1033.

3. The Court cannot appoint a guardian to consent, on behalf of a lunatic not so found by inquisition, to a sale of his estates. Re Clough, 42 L. J., Ch., 393; 15 L. R., Eq., 284; 21 W. R. 452; 28 L. T., N. S., 261.

4. The committee of a lunatic must obtain the permission of the Court of Lunacy before he consents to an application to the Court of Chancery under the 19 & 20 Vict., c. 120. Re Woodcock, 3 L. R., Ch., 229; 16 W. R. 469, 532.

5. A notice, under 37 & 38 Vict., c. 33, s. 2, of an application under the Leases and Sales of Settled Estates Act, may be given to a person of unsound mind, not so found by inquisition. Re Crabtree, 44 L. J., Ch., 261; 10 L. R., Ch., 201; 23 W. R. 761; 32 L. T., N. S., 349.

5. Married Woman. Examination of.

(a) At What Stage, 6158.
(b) How Taken, 6158.
(c) When Necessary or Dispensed with, 6159.

(a) At What Stage.

6. The examination of a married woman, under the 19 & 20 Vict., c. 120, s. 37, ought not to take place until the petition has been presented and answered, and carried into the chambers of the judge by whom it is to be heard, but ought to take place before any judicial step has been taken by him upon it. Re Foster, 1 De G. & J. 386; 24 Beav. 220; 26 L. J., Ch., 836; 5 W. R. 726.

The issuing of advertisements, under s. 20, before the examination, will not invalidate the proceedings; but as a general rule it is desirable that the examination should take place immediately after the petition has been carried into chambers and before the advertisements are issued. Ib.

7. The examination of a married woman applying to the Court under 19 & 20 Vict., c. 120, may be taken after the presentation of a petition at any time before it is heard. Re Hooper's Settled Estates, 5 W. R. 670.

8. The examination of a married woman, and her consent to any application intended to be made by her under the Leases and Sales of Settled Estates Act (19 & 20 Vict., c. 120), must be obtained before the petition is presented. Re Brealy's Settled Estates, 5 W. R. 613.

9. The examination of a married woman and her consent to any application under the Leases and Sales of Settled Estates Act (19 & 20 Vict., c. 120), must, if the married woman be a petitioner, be obtained before the petition is presented. But quære if she be a respondent. Re Hadwen's Settled Estates, 5 W. R. 614.

10. Where a married woman is the petitioner her consent under the 19 & 20 Vict., c. 120, ss. 37, 38, should be taken subsequent to the petition being answered, but before any further proceedings, and an independent solicitor should take her consent. Re Manson's Settled Estates, 24 Beav. 220.

11. A married woman entitled to a jointure charged on settled estates must be examined under the 37th section of the Leases and Sales of Settled Estates Act (19 & 20 Vict., c. 120). Upon an application under the Act the examination was allowed to be taken after the order was made on the petition, but before it was drawn up, the petition being ordered to be mentioned again after the examination. Re Turbut's Estate, 2 N. R. 487.

12. The examination of a married woman ordered to be taken in court when the petition came on to be heard. Re Taylor, 14 L. R., Eq., 557; 27 L. T., N.S., 335; 27 L. T. 335; 42 L. J., Ch., 504.

13. The examination by the Court of a married woman, who is herself a petitioner, under 19 & 20 Vict., c. 120, s. 27, may be taken at any time before an order is made. Re Packer, 39 L. J., Ch., 220.

(b) How Taken.

14. The 19 & 20 Vict., c. 120, s. 38, in requiring the appointment of a solicitor to examine a married woman abroad, meant a solicitor of the Court of Chancery in England, and therefore the Court refused to direct a commission to a barrister and solicitor of a court in Canada for that purpose, but this is not necessary since the 21 & 22 Vict., c. 77, s. 6. Turner v. Turner, 2 De G. & J. 534; 6 W. R. 355; 27 L. J., Ch., 272; 4 Jur., N. S., 127. Reversing 6 W. R. 95; 27 L. J., Ch., 232; 4 Jur., N. S., 57.

15. A writer to the signet will not be appointed to take the consent of a married woman residing in Scotland. Re Hooper's Settled Estates, 5 W. R. 670.

16. The examination of a married woman and her consent to any application intended to be made by her under the Leases and Sales of Settled Estates Act (19 & 20 Vict., c. 120), must be obtained before the petition is presented. Semble, the solicitor appointed to take such examination must not be the solicitor acting in the matter. Re Brealy's Settled Estates, 5 W. R. 613

17. The 38th section of 19 & 20 Vict., c. 120, does not authorise a commission to examine a married woman abroad. Re Noyes' Settled Estates, 6 W. R. 7.

18. No person connected with the husband ought to be present when a married woman's examination as to her consent is taken. Re Bendyshe, 5 W. R. 816; 3 Jur., N. S., 727; 26 L. J., Ch., 814.

19. On a petition by a married woman under the Settled Estates Acts, 19 & 20 Vict., c. 120, and 37 & 38 Vict., c. 33:—Held, that the fact that the signatures of the married woman and the commissioner to her examination had been attested by the husband's solicitor, will be no objection to the admission of the certificate. (Contrary to a dictum of Kindersley, V.-Ch., in Re Bendyshe, 5 W. R. 816.) Re Lewis, 24 W. R. 103.

(b) When Necessary or Dispensed with.

1. The Court dispensed with the separate examination of a married woman, as to her consent to an application, under the 19 & 20 Vict., c. 120, s. 37, where her interest was remote, and was sufficiently represented by trustees, who consented. Re De Tabley (Lord), 8 L. T., N. S., 719; 11 W. R. 936.

2. Where a petition has been presented under the Settled Estates Act (19 & 20 Vict., c. 120), but not answered, in which a married woman is co-petitioner, her examination previously to the presenting of the petition being requisite, the Court gave leave to omit the name of the married woman as a petitioner. Re Reedley's Settled Estates, 5 W. R. 649.

3. When a petition asked for general leasing powers, which would greatly benefit the estate, the separate examination of a married woman, who was entitled to a life interest with a possible absolute interest in the whole, and who was living in America, was dispensed with by the Court. Re Thorne, 20 W. R. 587.

4. For the purposes of the 19 & 20 Vict., c. 120, a married woman who is under age is in the same position as if she were of full age, and must be examined under s. 37. It is not sufficient for her to concur in the petition as an infant by a special guardian. Re Broadwood, 7 L. R., Ch., 323; 41 L. J., Ch., 349; 26 L. T., N. S., 650; 20 W. R. 458.

5. Where a married woman is a petitioner, the Court may, upon reasonable ground, dispense with the examination required by s. 37, of the 19 & 20 Vict., c. 120, and will do so where it is satisfied that the order asked for is beneficial to all parties, and that the delay necessary for taking the examination would be prejudicial. Re Halliday, 12 L. R., Eq., 199; 19 W. R. 966; 40 L. J., Ch., 687.

6. When a petition is presented to authorise a sale of settled estates under 19 & 20 Vict., c. 120, and a party interested, being a married woman, is abroad and served, the Court will dispense with her acknowledgment. Re Tibbett, 20 L. T., N. S., 299; 17 W. R. 394.

7. Notwithstanding the provision of s. 50 of the Settled Estates Act 1877 that when a married woman consents to an application to the Court under the Act, she is to be examined apart from her husband as to her consent, such an examination is not now necessary in the case of a woman who has married since the commencement of the Married Women's Property Act 1882. Ridel v. Errington, 26 L. R., Ch. D., 220; 50 L. T. 584; 32 W. R. 680.

8. A petition and advertisements under the repealed Acts for the Leases and Sales of Settled Estates omitted to describe in the title certain property contained in a contract for sale and ordered by the Court to be sold. On a fresh petition under the Settled Estates Act 1877, containing proper descriptions, fresh advertisements were not directed. The Court further dispensed with the consent and examination of married women contingently entitled to rent charges on or to portions out of the settled estates, the trustees for one of the married women and the trustees for raising portions being before the Court; and service on their respective husbands and children (if any) was also dispensed with. Re Kilmorey (Earl) 25 W. R. 54.

9. A spinster, with others, presented a petition under the above Act. After the publication of advertisements, but before the hearing of the petition, she married. Fresh advertisements, and the examination of the married woman, were dispensed with. Re Marshall, 15 L. R. Eq., 66; 27 L. T. 439.

Affidavit of no Settlement.] 10. An Affidavit of no settlement is not necessary in the case of a married woman under the Settled Estates Act. Re Standish, 25 W. R. 8.

VI. TIME FOR SETTING DOWN OR HEARING.

11. Where the publication of the last of the advertisements required by 19 & 20 Vict., c. 120 would expire in time to allow the twenty-one days necessary to elapse before setting down the petition for a hearing, so that the petitioner would be thrown over the long vacation, the Court allowed the petition to be set down on the last day of petitions before the vacation. Re Adam, 6 L. T., N. S., 604.

12. An application to set down a petition, under the 19 & 20 Vict., c. 120, before the time fixed by the Consolidated Order XLI., art. 20, refused. Re Mallin, 6 Jur., N. S., 809.

13. Where a petition is presented under 19 & 20 Vict., c. 120, before it can come on to be heard, the secretary of the Lord Chancellor must certify that the advertisements ordered have been inserted, and that the twenty-one days since the last advertisement, required by the General Order XLI., Rule 20, have expired. Re Blake, 6 Jur., N. S., 724; 8 W. R. 539.

14. Special leave granted to move under 19 & 20 Vict., c. 120, s. 20 (the seven days after the publication of the advertisement of the application having expired), where the applicant was resident out of the jurisdiction. Re Merry, 14 W. R. 665; 14 L. T., N. S., 510.

Such special leave refused in the case of an applicant not resident out of the jurisdiction, who assigned no reason for his delay. Ib.

15. The Court will abridge the time required by the General Orders to elapse between the publication of the last advertisement of a petition under 19 & 20 Vict., c. 120, and the hearing of the petition, when the petition would otherwise be thrown over the long vacation. Re Bower, 18 W. R. 1085; 23 L. T., N. S., 358.

16. A petition cannot be set down for hearing until the expiration of twenty-one days from the publication of the last of the advertisements, although that time may prevent the petition being set down till after the long vacation. Re Townsend, 14 L. R., Eq., 433.

17. A petition was allowed to be placed in the paper for the last petition day before the long vacation, although the twenty-one days from the last advertisement prescribed by Consolidated Order XLI., Rule 20, would not then have expired. Re Taylor, 14 L. R., Eq., 557; 27 L. T., N. S., 335; 42 L. J., Ch., 504.

I. WHEN AUTHORISED.

1. The powers of leasing conferred by the 19 & 20 Vict., c. 120, s. 2, can only be exercised in cases where the contracts for granting the leases are strictly within the terms of that Act. In such cases the Trustee Acts apply only after a decree in a suit to which the intended lessees would be necessary parties. If the powers of leasing are not aided by either of these Acts, the prudent course is to apply to Parliament for the proper powers. Cust v. Middleton, 7 Jur., N. S., 151; 30 L. J., Ch., 260; 9 W. R. 242.

A testator in his lifetime entered into contracts for leases of parts of his estate for building purposes. The contracts provided for granting separate leases of the houses when built, apportioning the whole ground-rent among some of them, and leaving the rest to be demised at a peppercorn rent. He devised the estate in strict settlement, without any power under which the leases could be granted:—Held, that the 19 & 20 Vict., c. 120, could not safely be resorted to for granting these leases. S. C. 3 De G. F. & J. 33.

2. Declaratory decree that it is fit and proper that an application should be made to Parliament to extend the leasing powers affecting a settled estate. Savil v. Bruce, 29 Beav. 557.

3. The Court authorised the granting of building leases of settled estates for 999 years, or at fee-farm rent, upon evidence that, according to the custom of the country, that was the mode of disposing of property for building purposes, and that it could not be beneficially disposed of for such purposes on any other terms. Re Carr, 7 Jur., N. S., 1267; 6 W. R. 776.

4. The Court will authorise the grant of a new lease upon the surrender of an old one, if the best rent, which under all the circumstances of the case can be retained, is reserved. Re Rawling, 14 W. R. 218; 13 L. T., N. S., 626. S. C. nom. Re Rawlin, 1 L. R., Eq., 286.

5. A lease may be authorised upon the surrender of an existing lease, although an underlease granted by the surrendering lessee is unexpired. Re Ford, 8 L. R., Eq., 309.

6. When a mansion house and appurtenances were settled in strict settlement under a will which contained an express direction that the mansion house should not be let, the Court, though it would have been greatly for the benefit of all parties, and of the estate, that the house should be let (the tenant for life not having a sufficient income to keep it up), refused an application by the tenant for life with the consent of the remainderman, to let it for seven years. Re Cleveland (Duchess), 22 W. R. 818.

7. Trustees of a charity authorised to grant building leases for 600 years, such being the custom of the neighbourhood, and it appearing beneficial. Re Cross, 27 Beav. 592.

8. Under the 19 & 20 Vict., c. 120, the Court will not authorise the sale of a portion of the estate, for raising money to make the necessary roads on building land; but it will authorise leases on the terms of the lessees making such roads. Re Chambers, 28 Beav. 653; 29 L. J., Ch., 924; 6 Jur., N. S., 1005; 8 W. R. 646.

9. The trustees of a will, by which two contiguous estates were devised to them upon distinct trusts, obtained from the Court an order giving them power to grant mining leases in conformity with and subject to the provisions of the Settled Estates Act 1856, 19 & 20 Vict., c. 120, s. 10, and with the consent of the respective tenants for life for the time being. The trustees and the tenants for life of the two estates afterwards entered into an agreement to grant a mining lease of the two estates for forty years, rents and royalties being reserved as if the two estates were one property. On a bill by the trustees to enforce specific performance of the agreement:—Held, that the trustees had no power to grant such a lease of the two estates, and that the bill therefore must be dismissed. Tolson v. Sheard, 36 L. T., N. S., 756; 5 L. R., Ch. D., 19; 25 W. R. 667.

10. Trustees of a marriage settlement had power to grant mining leases for twenty-one years, and an order was made under 19 & 20 Vict., c. 120. The lessees asked that words might be introduced into the order which would include contiguous lands:—Held, that the words "so much land as the trustees should consider necessary for the convenient and effective working of the minerals" might be inserted. Re Reveley, 11 W. R. 744; 8 L. T., N. S., 450; 32 L. J., Ch., 812.

II. BY WHOM.

11. A husband devised two-fifths of real and personal estate to trustees, to receive the rents and income and pay the same to his widow for life. He then, subject to annuities and legacies, gave his residuary real and personal estate to the same trustees upon trust, after defraying "ground and landlord's rent (if any), and all taxes, charges, and expenses of insurance, repairs, collections, and other necessary outlay," to pay the "net annual rents, interest, and income then left" to his widow for life, with remainder over. The will contained no power of leasing:—Held, that his widow had no power to grant leases under the Leases and Sales of Settled Estates Act, s. 33 (19 & 20 Vict., c. 120). Taylor v. Taylor, Exp. Taylor, 44 L. J., Ch., 727; 20 L. R., Eq., 297; 23 W. R. 947; 33 L. T., N. S., 89.

The fact that the Court in its discretion might upon terms put an equitable tenant for life into possession, or take the receipt of the rents from the trustees, and give them to him, does not make him a person "entitled to the possession, or to the receipt of the rents and profits," within s. 32. Ib.

III. VESTING POWERS OF LEASING IN TRUSTEES.

1. On petition, the Court made an order vesting in trustees of a settlement certain powers to grant leases, and to do other things, without in the first instance directing a reference to the conveyancing counsel, or ordering an inquiry as to the propriety of the powers. Re Jones, 5 Jur., N. S., 138, 564.

2. The Court will grant an order under 19 & 20 Vict., c. 120, s. 10, and 27 & 58 Vict., c. 45, s. 2, vesting in trustees powers of granting mining leases, without inserting in such order a clause requiring a form of lease to be settled in chambers. Re Dorning's Settled Estates, 14 W. R. 125; 13 L. T., N. S., 494.

3. An assignee of a tenant for life having petitioned the Court to sanction a particular mining lease, and to grant a power of making mining leases, and there being persons unborn interested, the Court entertained the application as to particular lease, but refused the general power to make mining leases. Re Hutchinson, 12 Jur., N. S., 244; 14 W. R. 473; 14 L. T., N. S., 129.

4. Where the Court has granted general powers of leasing to trustees, enabling them, under 19 & 20 Vict., c. 120, s. 14, to lay out lands for squares, roads, etc., the Court will not always require plans to be laid before it. Re Hargreave, 15 W. R. 54; 15 L. T., N. S., 173.

5. Where trustees have obtained, on petition, general leasing powers, and it is desired to obtain the same powers for the tenant for life, the Court will rescind the former order, and, without prejudice to anything done under it, make the order. Wheeler v. Tootal, 18 L. T., N. S., 534; 16 W. R. 273.

6. Two contiguous estates were devised to trustees upon trust for distinct cestuis que trustent. By an order made under the Settled Estates Act (19 & 20 Vict., c. 130) power was given to the trustees to grant mining leases in conformity with and subject to the provisions of the Settled Estates Act; such leases to be granted with the consent of the respective tenants for life if of age. The trustees and the tenants for life entering into an agreement with the defendants to grant them a mining lease of the two estates for forty years (or fifty years if the Court should consent), both estates were intended to be comprised in the same lease, and the rents and royalties were to be reserved as if they were one estate, and there was to be one shaft for working the minerals under both estates; and it was also agreed that the lessors should be at liberty to apply to the Court under the Settled Estates Act for further powers of leasing:—Held, that the trustees had no power to grant such a lease of the two estates, and specific performance of the agreement was refused. Tolson v. Sheard, 5 L. R., Ch. D., 19; 25 W. R. 667; 46 L. J., Ch., 815; 35 L. T., N. S., 756.

7. A testator devised real estate to two trustees, of whom K. was one, in fee, to receive the annual produce and rents, and subject to the payment out of the rents of a portion of the estate of all ground-rent, taxes, repairs, and other outgoings, to apply the net rents to M. for life; and by a codicil he gave the ultimate remainder in certain events to K. The will contained no power of leasing. On petition by M., which was opposed by K., praying that a power to grant leases might be vested in the other trustee:—Held, that the opposition of K. was fatal to the application. Taylor v. Taylor, Taylor v. Keily, 45 L. J., Ch., 848; 3 L. R., Ch. D., 145; 35 L. T. 450. Affirming 1 L. R., Ch. D., 246; 45 L. J., Ch., 373.

8. A testator gave his real estate to trustees for a term of one hundred years, on trust to raise annuities, and accumulate the rents and profits for twenty-one years or till some devisee entitled in possession should attain twenty-five; the accumulations to be laid out in real estate to be conveyed to the uses of the will. Subject to the term of one hundred years, he gave his real estate to A. for life, remainder to his first and other sons in tail male, with divers remainders over. He gave power to any tenant for life in possession who should have attained twenty-one, and to trustees during minorities, to grant building leases. A. had attained twenty-one, but not twenty-five. The first tenant in tail in existence was an infant. The trustees having purchased a building estate, a petition was presented by the trustees and A. and the first tenant in tail, asking that power to grant building leases might be vested in the trustees so long as there should be no tenant for life in possession who should have attained twenty-five:—Held, that as all parties interested concurred, and the exercise of a power of leasing would be beneficial to the estate, the Court would give the power. Re Harris's Settled Estates, 42 L. T. 583; 28 W. R. 721.

IV. SETTLEMENT OF LEASES BY THE COURT.

9. Leases granted by trustees under an order in pursuance of the 19 & 20 Vict., c. 120, s. 10, must be settled in chambers. Re Procter's Settled Estates, 5 W. R. 464; 3 Jur., N. S., 534.

10. Under the 19 & 20 Vict., c. 120, an order was made, authorising leases to be granted by trustees of settled estates, subject to a condition that the leases should be granted with the approbation of the judge in chambers. Subsequently to making this order, the 27 & 28 Vict., c. 45, was passed. On an application under s. 2, the Lord Chancellor varied the order, by the insertion of the following words, "The Lord Chancellor doth not think fit to insert a condition requiring the leases to be settled by the Court or a judge thereof, or to be made conformable with a model lease deposited in the judge's chambers." Re Hoyle, 10 Jur., N. S., 811; 12 W. R. 1125; 10 L. T., N. S., 775.

11. Where the Court, under the 27 & 28 Vict., c. 45, s. 2, amended an order under the 19 & 20 Vict., c. 120, s. 10, by striking out a condition that certain mining leases should be settled by the judge, the costs of the application were directed to be paid out of the one-fourth part of the rents set aside by the trustees as representing the share of the inheritance, in accordance with the terms of the prior one. Lovat v. Leeds (Duke), 11 L. T., N. S., 442.

12. Where trustees have been enabled by the Court under the Settled Estates Act (19 & 20 Vict., c. 120) to grant building leases over a small piece of ground in the neighbourhood of a town, the Court will direct a model lease to be settled and adopted for all the remaining leases without the necessity of applying to chambers in each case. Re Hemingway, 7 W. R. 279.

1. An order is made under the 19 & 20 Vict., c. 120, to empower trustees to grant agricultural, mining, and building leases, and the words "and such leases to be settled by the judge" are inserted in the order. The building leases relate to small takes, and have heretofore been granted in a printed form at a trifling cost, but if every lease is to be settled by the judge the expense will be more than doubled: under these circumstances:—Held, that the words "and such leases to be settled by the judge" must be expunged. Re Jersey (Earl), 9 W. R. 609.

2. An order made on petition under 19 & 20 Vict., c. 120, s. 10, contained a condition as to settling the leases, such as was formerly required by the practice of the Court; but it appearing that 27 & 28 Vict., c. 45, which provided that no such condition should be inserted in future, had become law between the presentation and the hearing of the petition, the order was amended by striking out the condition. Re Russell, 22 W. R. 399.

3. Where it was necessary to grant a large number of building leases of charity lands in nearly the same form, under the provisions of an Act of Parliament, and one lease had been settled in chambers, the Court allowed the charity to grant other building leases from time to time in the same form, without reference to chambers, the model leave being appended to the order. Att.-Gen. v. Christ Church, Oxford, 3 Giff. 514; 8 Jur., N. S., 989; 7 L. T., N. S., 238.

I. WHEN AUTHORISED.

4. Where realty, which was comprised in a settlement, had been in part subjected to subsettlements, operating through powers of appointment in the original deed, and in part emancipated from all settlement, by becoming vested in persons as tenants in fee, and in other persons as mortgagees:—Held, that an order obtained in the matter of the 19 & 20 Vict., c. 120, and in the matter of the estates comprised in the original settlement, for the sale of all the lands comprised therein, was erroneous. Re Thompson, Green v. Thompson, 1 Johns. 418; 5 Jur., N. S., 1343.

It is competent to a purchaser, under the 19 & 20 Vict., c. 120, to object at any time before completion that the order for sale was in excess of the jurisdiction of the Court. Ib.

Semble, that the Court has jurisdiction to order a sale under the Act, notwithstanding the existence of powers under which the proposed sale may be effectual. Ib.

5. The power given to the Court by the 14th section of the Leases and Sales of Settled Estates Act (19 & 20 Vict., c. 120) is not incident to the grant of a power of leasing under the Act, but can be exercised independently of it. When the settlor declared that the estate shall not be leased or sold until the happening of a future event, the Court will not, merely to save expense, make a prospective order. Semble, that the relative weight to be attached to the expression of intention in the settlement, and to extrinsic evidence under the 29th section, is the same whether the settlement came into operation before or after the passing of the Act. Re Hurle's Settled Estates, 5 N. R. 167; 2 Hem. & M. 196; 11 Jur., N. S., 78; 11 L. T., N. S., 592.

6. A testator devised real estate to trustees upon trust to pay an annuity to his daughter, and after her death upon trust for all her children who should attain twenty-one, equally. The daughter died, leaving children, some of whom were infants. The trustees having entered into a contract for the sale of a portion of the real estate, a petition was presented on behalf of the infant children for an order authorising such sale under the 19 & 20 Vict., c. 120, but the Court refused to make the order asked for. Re Burdin, 5 Jur., N. S., 1378; 2 L. T., N. S., 70. Affirming 7 W. R. 711.

7. Land of which a lunatic is tenant for life cannot be sold for building purposes, under 16 & 17 Vict., c. 70, s. 125, which applies only to lands of which a lunatic is seised or entitled in fee. Re Corbett, 1 L. R., Ch., 516; 12 Jur., N. S., 679; 35 L. J., Ch., 793; 14 W. R. 904; 14 L. T., N. S., 748.

Neither can such land be sold under the powers conferred by s. 116, unless the sale is actually for one of the purposes specified in that section. Ib.

Semble, where it is desirable that the land of a lunatic tenant for life, who has a sufficient maintenance, should be sold for building purposes, the proper course is to apply to the Court under the Settled Estates Acts. Ib.

8. G., in 1831, devised her estates, on trust for her daughter for life, with remainder for all the daughter's children equally, as tenants in common, the shares of the children to be vested at twenty-one or marriage. The will contained clauses of survivorship and accruer, but no powers of sale or demise. The daughter died in 1856, leaving nine children. G. died in 1858, and the shares of two children were resettled by the parties entitled. Four other children had attained twenty-one, and their shares were vested absolutely in them. The other three children were infants. Under the provisions of the 19 & 20 Vict., c. 120, and the 21 & 22 Vict., c. 77, on a petition presented for the purpose by the parties entitled to all the shares (including the trustees and cestuis que trustent of the two shares resettled, certain mortgages, and the guardians of the three infants), the Court made an order for a sale of the whole of the property. Re Goodwin, Exp. Butler, 8 Jur., N. S., 1170; 10 W. R. 612; 6 L. T., N. S., 530; 3 Giff. 623.

Where parties entitled absolutely to some of the shares joined as petitioners, the Court decreed the whole estate to be sold. Ib.

The shares of children who have attained twenty-one may be included in an order for sale of the whole estate upon such children becoming co-petitioners. Ib.

II. SEVERANCE OF MINERALS.

1. The 19 & 20 Vict., c. 120 empowers the Court to authorise the sale and conveyance of minerals situate under a settled estate, apart from the surface thereof. Re Law, 7 Jur., N. S., 511.

2. The Court has power, under the 19 & 20 Vict., c. 120, to authorise the sale and conveyance of minerals apart from the surface of the land. Re Mallin, 3 Giff. 126; 30 L. J., Ch., 929; 9 W. R. 588; 4 L. T., N. S., 435.

The contract for sale was ordered to be carried into effect by a grant, with a provision limiting the time within which the coal was to be worked out. Ib.

3. The Court has jurisdiction under the Leases and Sales of Settled Estates Act to order a sale of mines apart from the surface, with rights of using the surface for the workings, reserving a rent in respect of the surface damaged from time to time. Re Milward, 6 L. R., Eq., 248; 16 W. R. 1078.

Under Powers of Sale and the Confirmation of Sales Act (25 & 26 Vict., c. 108). See POWER, XXI. VIII. 8.

III. HOW CARRIED OUT.

4. On a petition for the purchase of a trust estate without the necessity of a sale by auction, the Court referred the matter to chambers, and directed that, if it should appear by the certificate that it was fit and proper, and for the benefit of all parties interested, the petitioner should be the purchaser of the property, a conveyance should be made to that effect. Re Hilton, 14 L. T., N. S., 129.

5. Upon a petition for the sale of settled real estate, partly freehold and partly copyhold, the Court directed the copyholds to be enfranchised, the whole to be sold as freehold, and the costs of enfranchisement to be paid out of the proceeds of sale. Re Adair, 42 L. J., Ch., 841; 16 L. R., Eq., 124.

6. It is competent to a purchaser under the 19 & 20 Vict., c. 120, to object at any time before completion that the order for sale was in excess of the jurisdiction of the Court. Re Thompson, Green v. Thompson, 1 Johns. 418; 5 Jur., N. S., 1343.

Conveyance.] 7. Real estate, the equity of redemption in which was devised in strict settlement, was ordered to be sold, and an order was made appointing A. and B., under the 19 & 20 Vict., c. 120, to convey. A subsequent order declared that the order should bind the mortgagees. After this the mortgagees conveyed the legal estate in the real estate to the trustees of the will:—Held, that notwithstanding such conveyance by the mortgagees, A. and B. had power to convey, and that the concurrence of the trustees of the will was unnecessary. Eyre v. Saunders, Exp. Yeo, 5 Jur., N. S., 703; 28 L. J., Ch., 439.

8. Where there was no trustee of the settled estate which had been sold in existence, the Court required new trustees to be appointed, and the conveyance of the lands purchased to be made to such new trustees. Re Sexton Barnes, 10 W. R. 416; 6 L. T., N. S., 40.

9. Pending the completion of a sale of a portion of a settled estate, one of the two trustees of the settlement died. A purchaser having refused to take a conveyance from the sole surviving trustee, the Court directed a petition to be presented for the appointment of a new trustee in the place of the deceased trustee. Scott v. Heisch, 33 L. T., N. S., 498; 24 W. R. 108.

10. Where land is sold pursuant to an order of the Court, under the 19 & 20 Vict., c. 120, the conveyance must be settled by the judge whether the parties differ or not. Re Eyre, 4 Kay & J. 268; 4 Jur., N. S., 830.

But where land is to be sold in lots, and one conveyance has been settled by the conveyancing counsel of the Court, it may be adopted by the chief clerk for all the rest, in which no special circumstances exist to render such a course improper. Ib.

11. The effect of a sale by the Court under the powers conferred by the Settled Estates Act 1877, of any settled estates, is, by the operation of the 22nd section of that Act, to revoke the uses of the settlement; and by the operation of the 42nd section of the Succession Duty Act 1853 the duty is shifted from the land sold to the purchase money or its investments, and the land in the hands of a purchaser is freed from the succession duty. Re Warner's Settled Estates, Warner to Steel, 17 L. R., Ch. D., 711; 50 L. J., Ch., 542; 45 L. T. 37; 29 W. R. 726.

Sale out of Court.] 12. A sale out of court may be directed under the Settled Estates Act 1877 (40 & 41 Vict., c. 18), the purchase money being brought into court; and such a sale may be authorised to be made by public auction or private contract, subject to a reserved price to be fixed by the judge in chambers. Re Adams' Settled Estates, 9 L. R., Ch. D., 116; 38 L. T., N. S., 877; 27 W. R. 110.

13. Persons beneficially entitled to real estates settled by a will applied by petition, to which two beneficiaries, of whom one was infant, were made respondents, for the sale of the estates out of court:—Held, that the petition was properly presented, all the beneficiaries being before the Court, but that the sale could not be made out of Court, but must be made under the direction of the Court. Re Dryden's Settled Estates, 50 L. J., Ch., 752; 45 L. T. 254; 29 W. R. 884.

14. The Court has no jurisdiction to direct a sale under the Settled Estates Act 1877 to be conducted out of court. Re Adams' Settled Estates (9 L. R., Ch. D., 116) not followed.

Conveyancing Counsel.] PRACTICE (CONVEYANCING COUNSEL).

IV. VESTING POWERS OF SALE IN TRUSTEES.

1. Under the 19 & 20 Vict., c. 120, the Court, upon petition to sanction a contract for sale by trustees, can only authorise a contract already entered into, or such contracts as the petitioners may satisfy the Court to be beneficial, but it cannot authorise a sale generally. Re Peacock, 12 Jur., N. S., 959; 15 W. R. 100; 15 L. T., N. S., 263.

2. Land stood settled upon trust for A. for life, and after her decease for sale. The trustees, tenant for life, and all other beneficiaries, petitioned that the Court would authorise a sale during her life. No particular contract was referred to in the petition:—Held, that the Court could under the 40 & 41 Vict., c. 18, s., 16 authorise the trustees to sell indefinitely, they bringing the proceeds into court. Re Andrew, 38 L. T., N. S., 877; 26 W. R. 811.

3. The Court has power under the Confirmation of Sales Act, 25 & 26 Vict., c. 108, to give a general direction that persons having powers of sale and exchange in a settlement or will which do not expressly authorise the reservation of mines and minerals on a sale of the settled property, or the sale of minerals apart from the land, may exercise the powers as if they did authorise such reservation or separation. Re Wynn, 16 L. R., Eq., 237; 21 W. R. 695.

V. INDEFEASIBLE TITLE OF PURCHASER.

4. Observations upon the effect of s. 28 of the 19 & 20 Vict., c. 120, in curing an informality in a sale made in pursuance of the Act. Beioley v. Carter, 4 L. R., Ch., 230; 38 L. J., Ch., 381; 20 L. T., N. S., 381; 17 W. R. 300.

5. Held, that if the order under the 19 & 20 Vict., c. 120, was wrong, the purchaser having the concurrence of all persons beneficially interested would take an indefeasible title under s. 28. Re Shepheard, 39 L. J., Ch., 173.

Under s. 28 a purchaser obtains by a conveyance under the Act an indefeasible title, except against persons beneficially interested whose concurrence has not been obtained, although the estate is not a settled estate. S. C. 8 L. R., Eq., 571; 21 L. T., N. S., 525.

6. Semble, that the conveyance when completed under the 19 & 20 Vict., c. 120, will give an indefeasible title by virtue of s. 28, notwithstanding any excess of jurisdiction. Re Thompson, Green v. Thompson, 1 Johns. 418; 5 Jur., N. S., 1343.

7. An order for sale under the Settled Estates Act 1877 contained a direction dispensing with the concurrence or consent of the persons entitled, whether beneficially or otherwise, to any estate or interest subsequent to a certain estate tail, without naming them. The purchaser objected to the title on the ground that the order on the face of it was irregular:—Held, by Hall, V.-Ch., that under the special circumstances of the case it was unnecessary for the parties whose concurrence was dispensed with to be named in the order. But held, by the Court of Appeal, that under the 70th section of the Conveyancing and Law of Property Act 1881, the purchaser would in any event have a good title—that section being applicable whether the objection to the order appears on the face of it or not, and that the purchaser must complete. Re Hall Dare's Contract, 21 L. R., Ch. D., 41; 51 L. J., Ch., 671; 46 L. T. 755; 30 W. R. 556.

VII. Dedications.

8. The Court refused to sanction the sale, under the 19 & 20 Vict., c. 120, s. 14, of one part of the settled estate, for the purpose of employing the produce of the sale in laying out roads on another part of the estate, with a view to granting building leases, but it will authorise leases on the terms of the lessees' making such roads. Re Chambers, 28 Beav. 653; 29 L. J., Ch., 924; 6 Jur., N. S., 1005; 8 W. R. 646.

A. devised property, subject to an annuity thereout for his widow, B., and the use for her life of the dwelling house upon the estate, to A. for life, with an ultimate remainder to A. in fee. The will provided that it should be lawful for A. during his life, "but nevertheless, during the life of B., only with her consent in writing for that purpose," to grant building leases. B. refused her consent. On petition by A., under the 19 & 20 Vict., c. 120, s. 18, to obtain authority from the Court to grant building leases, make roads, and raise the money for raising such roads by sale of a part of the settled estates:—Held, that the Court could not so disregard the terms of the will as to give power to A. to grant building leases against the consent of B., but that leave would be given to make roads and dedicate them to the public at his own expense; the Court refusing to sanction the sale of a portion of the estate for that purpose. Ib.

9. When a tenant for life, without power to dedicate roads to the public, applies to the Court for that purpose, the Court will direct such roads to be made only where they are either beneficial to the property in its actually existing state, or required for the purposes of houses then about to be built on leases then immediately contemplated, and will not sanction the laying out of roads prospectively upon the chance that they may be beneficial at some future time to the property in its then state; and the Court will not, in any case, sell any portion of the property for the purpose of making such roads. Re Hurle, 13 W. R. 171; 2 Hem. & M. 196; 11 L. T., N. S., 592; 2 N. R. 167.

10. Before the 19 & 20 Vict., c. 120, the Court had no power to charge, mortgage, or sell part of a settled estate in order to raise money for making roads and sewers on building land forming other part of the estate; nor had it power to apply for that purpose money which was liable to be laid out in the purchase of lands to be settled to the same uses as the settled estate. Re Venour, Venour v. Sellon, 2 L. R., Ch. D., 522; 45 L. J., Ch., 409; 24 W. R. 752.

1. The Settled Estates Act 1877 does not empower the Court to direct the carrying out of schemes of drainage for agricultural purposes; but the power given by ss. 20 and 21 have reference to the development of lands for the purposes of a building estate. Order of reference under the Drainage Act (8 & 9 Vict., c. 56). Re Poynder's Settled Estates, Dickson-Poynder v. Cook, 50 L. J., Ch., 753; 45 L. T. 403; 30 W. R. 7.

2. Where the Court has granted general powers of leasing to trustees, enabling them, under 19 & 20 Vict., c. 120, s. 14, to lay out lands for squares, roads, etc., the Court will not always require plans to be laid before it. Re Hargreave, 15 W. R. 54; 15 L. T., N. S., 173.

Sites for Churches.] 3. A father who was a tenant for life, of a settled estate cannot, as guardian by nature of his infant son, who is entitled to the inheritance in remainder, concur on the son's behalf in a grant by himself of part of the settled estate as a site for a church under 36 & 37 Vict., c. 50, s. 1, Places of Worship Sites Act. Re Salisbury (Marquis) and Ecclesiastical Commissioners, 2 L. R., Ch. D., 29; 45 L. J., Ch. Div., 250; 24 W. R. 380; 34 L. T., N. S., 5. Reversing 20 L. R., Eq., 527; 44 L. J., Ch., 541; 23 W. R. 824.

VIII. Protection of Settled Estates.

4. The trustees of settled estates presented a petition under s. 30 of Lord St. Leonards' Act 1859, asking the opinion of the Court whether they were justified—(1) in applying money in their hands, proceeds of sales, and enfranchisements of the settled estates, towards paying costs incurred by the tenant for life as plaintiff and defendant in a series of actions undertaken by him to resist claims of rights of common over the settled estates; (2) whether they might apply similar sums to be derived from future sales, and towards discharging their costs; (3) whether in discharging these costs they might properly treat them as a solicitor and costs; (4) whether they might adopt the acts and proceedings of the tenant for life. The petition was also entitled in the Settled Estates Act 1877, under which the trustees prayed that such costs as were not provided for as above might be raised and paid as between solicitor and client by means of a charge on the settled estates:—Held, that the first four questions might be answered in the affirmative, and that the order for raising and paying the residue of the costs as between solicitor and client might be made to the Court under s. 17, although no application had been made to the Court before commencing proceedings. Re De la Warr's (Earl) Settled Estates, 51 L. J., Ch., 407; 46 L. T. 340.

Where proceedings have been instituted (though without the preliminary sanction of the Court), whether by claim in an action, or by defence to an action, for the protection of a settled estate, the Court will, if it sees fit, give permission to the trustees to apply the proceeds of the sale of a portion of the estate in defraying the costs already incurred, and which must necessarily be incurred, by the tenant for life, in instituting such proceedings. S. C. 16 L. R., Ch. D., 587; 50 L. J., Ch., 383; 50 L. J., Ch., 383; 44 L. T. 56; 29 W. R. 350.

5. The tenant for life of settled estates having successfully opposed a sewage scheme proposed by the sanitary authority of the parish in which the settled estates were situate, on the ground that the works would deteriorate the value of the estate, incurred certain costs. The trustee of the settled estates applied, under 22 & 23 Vict., c. 35, s. 30, for the advice of the Court, whether they would be justified in paying these costs out of money in their hands, representing the proceeds of part of the settled estates sold under the order of the Court made in 1874. The petition was entitled in the matter of the Settled Estates Act 1856, and the Amendment Acts of 1858 and 1864, and the Act 22 & 23 Vict., c. 35. The Court was of opinion that s. 30 of the Act 22 & 23 Vict., c. 35, only gave the Court power to advice, and did not empower it to authorise the payment, but that the case came within s. 17 of the Settled Estates Act 1877, and ordered that the petition should be amended by entitling it in the matter of that Act, when, on the amount extended by the tenant for life not exceeding a sum named, being proved before the registrar, the Court would advise the trustees to pay it. Re Willan's Settled Estates, or Re Twyford Abbey Settled Estates, 45 L. T. 745; 30 W. R. 268.

6. Where an estate was settled on legal limitations in favour of one for life, with remainder to an infant tenant in tail, the Court declined to order that the costs of an application to parliament for a private Act to carry into effect a proposed sale which was beneficial to the estate should be borne by the estate whether such application were or were not successful. But the tenant for life consenting, the Court, being of opinion that the proposed application to parliament would be for the benefit of the infant, sanctioned the application on the terms that the costs were to be borne by the tenant for life, unless an Act of Parliament was obtained otherwise directing. Stanford v. Roberts, 52 L. J., Ch., 50; 48 L. T. 262.

VI. APPORTIONMENT OF ON SALES OF LEASEHOLDS.

1. Leaseholds for lives in settlement subject to a trust for renewal were, after refusal of the lessor to renew, sold under the Leases and Sales of Settled Estates Act 1877:—Held, that the first taker was entitled only to the income of the purchase money. Re Barber's Settled Estates, 18 L. R., Ch. D., 624; 50 L. J., Ch., 769; 45 L. T. 433; 29 W. R. 909.

2. Where leasehold property, held for an unexpired term of years, was sold under the Settled Estates Act 1877, and the tenant for life suffered by reason of the sale a diminution of income, the Court, applying the principle of Askew v. Woodhead (14 L. R., Ch. D., 27), directed a calculation to be obtained from an actuary of what equal half-yearly sums, for the residue of the terms, the proceeds of the sale would produce, taking interest at 3 per cent. so as to exhaust that sum at the expiration of the term, and that in each half-year the dividends on the stock then remaining, in which the proceeds of sale were invested, should be paid to the tenant for life, and so much of the stock transferred to the same person as with the cash dividend would make up the half-yearly sum so to be ascertained, the residue of the fund, if any, at the expiration of the life interest, to go to the persons absolutely entitled in remainder. The Court allowed the tenant for life the costs, as between solicitor and client, of the application for compensation. Re Walsh's Trusts, 7 L. R., Ir., 554.

X. Costs and Expenses.

3. Petitions having been presented under the 19 & 20 Vict., c. 120, and under a private Act, respecting money in court, to which an infant remainderman was entitled, the Court directed that a guardian ad litem should be appointed to represent the infant remainderman, and also that the trustees of the will, under which the property was settled, should have their costs of appearing upon the petition. Re Hart Estates Act, 29 L. J., Ch., 530; 8 W. R. 336; 2 L. T., N. S., 78.

4. Where the Court, under the Settled Estates Amendment Act (27 & 28 Vict., c. 45, s. 2), amended an order made under the Settled Estates Act (19 & 20 Vict. c. 120, s. 10), by striking out a condition that certain mining leases should be settled by the judge, the costs of the application were directed to be paid out of the one-fourth part of the rents set aside by the trustees as representing the share of the inheritance, in accordance with the terms of the Act. Lovat v. Leeds (Duke), 11 L. T., N. S., 442.

5. Costs under the Settled Estates Act, 19 & 20 Vict., c. 120, ordered to be paid out of corpus as the deficiency was caused by the testator. Wheeler v. Tootal, 16 W. R. 273.

6. The Court will grant an order under the 19 & 20 Vict., c. 120, s. 10, and the 27 & 28 Vict., c. 45, s. 2, vesting in trustees powers of granting mining leases, without inserting in such order a clause requiring a form of lease to be settled at chambers. The costs to come out of the three-fourths of the profits which the Act directed to be set apart for the inheritance. Re Dorning's Settled Estates, 14 W. R. 125; 13 L. T., N. S., 494.

7. Upon a petition for the sale of settled real estate, partly freehold and partly copyhold, the Court directed the copyholds to be enfranchised, the whole to be sold as freehold, and the costs of enfranchisement to be paid out of the proceeds of sale. Re Adair, 16 L. R., Eq., 124; 42 L. J., Ch., 841.

8. The Court, in approving of an agreement to demise landed estates, and in directing that the costs of the application should be a charge on the property, ordered the name of the person advancing the money necessary for the payment of such costs to be inserted in the order. Re Tunstall, 14 L. T., N. S., 352.

9. A. devised property, subject to an annuity thereout for his widow, B., and the use for her life of the dwelling-house upon the estate, to A. for life, with an ultimate remainder to A. in fee. The will provided that it should be lawful for A. during his life, "but nevertheless, during the life of B., only with her consent in writing for that purpose," to grant building leases. B. refused her consent. On petition by A., under the 19 & 20 Vict., c. 120, s. 18, to obtain authority from the Court to grant building leases, make roads, and raise the money for making such roads by a sale of a part of the settled estates:—Held, that the Court could not so disregard the terms of the will as to give power to A. to grant building leases against the consent of B., but that leave would be given to make roads and dedicate them to the public at his own expense; the Court refusing to sanction the sale of a portion of the estate for that purpose. Re Hurle, 13 W. Where leasehold property, held for an unexpired term of years, was sold under the Settled Estates Act 1877, and the tenant for life suffered by reason of the sale a diminution of income, the Court allowed the tenant for life the costs, as between solicitor and client, of the application for compensation. Re Walsh's Trusts, 7 L. I. EFFECT OF ON SETTLEMENT POWERS.

11. Upon a summons under the Settled Land Act 1882 to obtain the opinion and direction of the Court as to the effect of the Act upon certain clauses in a settlement where an infant tenant in tail was entitled to possession, the following questions were decided: (1) The settlement gave the trustees power, during the minority of any person entitled to possession, to receive and apply rents and profits in management of estate and maintenance of infant, and to accumulate and apply the surplus in paying off charges or in purchase of real estate, to be settled to the same uses:—Held, that the rents and profits received by the trustees during the minority were to be treated in manner directed by the settlement, and without regard to the Act. Re Newcastle's (Duke) Estates, 24 L. R., Ch. D., 129; 52 L. J., Ch., 645; 48 L. T. 779; 31 W. R. 782.

Sale and Exchange.] (2) Power in the settlement to the trustees, with the consent of tenant for life, if of age, and if not, of his guardians, to sell or exchange:—Held, that this power was exercisable by the trustees during the minority, at the request and by the direction of the guardians of the infant tenant in tail. Ib.

Powers of Leasing.] (3) Power in the settlement for the guardians during minority to grant leases for twenty-one years, building leases for ninety-nine years, and mining leases for sixty years:—Held, that this power was exercisable during minority by the guardians, with the consent of the trustees. Ib.

Mining Leases.] (4) Held, that the rents derived from mining leases were to be applied by the trustees in manner directed by the settlement, as coming within the term "contrary intention" expressed in the 11th section of the Act:—(5) Held, that there being no power in the settlement to sell surface land apart from minerals, the trustees could exercise that power under s. 17 of the Act; and this being an execution of a statutory power, the consent of the guardians would not be necessary. Ib.

II. APPOINTMENT OF TRUSTEES.

1. Where a tenant for life is a lunatic and his committee wishes to exercise the powers of leasing given by the Settled Land Act 1882, if there are no trustees of the settlement in existence new trustees must be appointed for the purposes of the Act. Re Taylor, 52 L. J., Ch., 728; 49 L. T. 420; 31 W. R. 596.

2. It is a sufficient objection to the appointment of one of the trustees of a settlement of lands as a trustee of the same lands for the purposes of the Settled Land Act 1882, that he is the solicitor of the tenant for life, and has been acting for him in the matter of a proposed sale of the lands. Re Walker's Trusts, 48 L. T. 632; 31 W. R. 716.

3. A testator devised his real estate to the use of G. and W. in fee upon trusts in strict settlement, and bequeathed to them his residuary personal estate upon trust to invest it in the purchase of land to be conveyed to them upon the same trusts. The will contained no power of sale. W. was the family solicitor, a person of good position and high character, and after the death of the testator, he acted as solicitor to the trustees and also to the tenant for life. The tenant for life being desirous of selling part of the estates under the powers of the Settled Land Act 1882, applied to the Court to appoint G. and W. trustees for the purposes of the Act:—Held, that W. ought not to be appointed, for that although he was in all other respects a most proper person, his being solicitor to the tenant for life, made him unsuitable for an office the duties of which required him to check the proceedings of the tenant for life. Re Kemp's Settled Estates, 24 L. R., Ch. D., 485; 52 L. J., Ch., 950; 49 L. T. 231; 31 W. R. 930.

4. The share or interest of an infant under the Statute of Distributions in realty which has improperly been allowed to remain unconverted, is settled land within the meaning of s. 59 of the Settled Land Act 1882, so as to enable the Court, under s. 38, to appoint trustee to exercise the powers conferred by that Act. Re Wells, 49 L. T. 859; 31 W. R. 764.

5. Where a testator's daughter was beneficial tenant for life of a fund paid into court upon the compulsory purchase of the testator's property, the daughter being one of the two trustees of the will, and both trustees being desirous of resigning their trusts, and there being no power of sale in the will, the Court appointed two new trustees of the settlement effected by the will for the purposes of the Settled Land Act 1882, and ordered the fund to be paid out to such trustees, to be held by them upon the trusts of the will. Re Wright's Trusts, 24 L. R., Ch. D., 662.

6. J. W. by his will, devised an estate to trustees upon trust to receive and pay the rents to his grandson for life, and after his decease to sell and to stand possessed of the moneys for all the grandson's children. The tenant for life was upwards of seventy years of age, and a widower. He had one child only, a daughter, and she and her husband in July 1880, contracted to sell her reversion in the estate to the plaintiff. The Settled Land Act (45 & 46 Vict., c. 38) came into operation in January 1883, and the tenant for life at the end of that month advertised the estate for sale under the powers of the Act. The plaintiff brought an action for an injunction to restrain the tenant for life from selling; and to restrain the other defendants, devisees of the legal estate under the will of the survivor of the trustees of J. W.'s will appointed by the Court, from executing any assurance of the estate, and on motion for that purpose:—Held, that the tenant for life had power under the Act to sell the fee-simple and inheritance of the property if he should comply with the provisions of the Act; but held, also, that there were no trustees to whom he could under s. 45 give notice; and an injunction was granted to restrain him from selling until trustees had been properly appointed for the purposes of the Act. Wheelwright v. Walker, (No. 1), 23 L. R., Ch. D., 752; 52 L. J., Ch., 274; 48 L. T. 70; 31 W. R. 363.

Held, also, that the plaintiff was entitled to be served with any summons for the appointment of new trustees, and (the plaintiff objecting) that the defendant's solicitor ought not to be appointed. Ib.

VI. APPORTIONMENT OF ON SALES OF LEASEHOLDS.

1. Leaseholds for lives in settlement subject to a trust for renewal were, after refusal of the lessor to renew, sold under the Leases and Sales of Settled Estates Act 1877:—Held, that the first taker was entitled only to the income of the purchase money. Re Barber's Settled Estates, 18 L. R., Ch. D., 624; 50 L. J., Ch., 769; 45 L. T. 433; 29 W. R. 909.

2. Where leasehold property, held for an unexpired term of years, was sold under the Settled Estates Act 1877, and the tenant for life suffered by reason of the sale a diminution of income, the Court, applying the principle of Askew v. Woodhead (14 L. R., Ch. D., 27), directed a calculation to be obtained from an actuary of what equal half-yearly sums, for the residue of the terms, the proceeds of the sale would produce, taking interest at 3 per cent. so as to exhaust that sum at the expiration of the term, and that in each half-year the dividends on the stock then remaining, in which the proceeds of sale were invested, should be paid to the tenant for life, and so much of the stock transferred to the same person as with the cash dividend would make up the half-yearly sum so to be ascertained, the residue of the fund, if any, at the expiration of the life interest, to go to the persons absolutely entitled in remainder. The Court allowed the tenant for life the costs, as between solicitor and client, of the application for compensation. Re Walsh's Trusts, 7 L. R., Ir., 554.

X. Costs and Expenses.

3. Petitions having been presented under the 19 & 20 Vict., c. 120, and under a private Act, respecting money in court, to which an infant remainderman was entitled, the Court directed that a guardian ad litem should be appointed to represent the infant remainderman, and also that the trustees of the will, under which the property was settled, should have their costs of appearing upon the petition. Re Hart Estates Act, 29 L. J., Ch., 530; 8 W. R. 336; 2 L. T., N. S., 78.

4. Where the Court, under the Settled Estates Amendment Act (27 & 28 Vict., c. 45, s. 2), amended an order made under the Settled Estates Act (19 & 20 Vict. c. 120, s. 10), by striking out a condition that certain mining leases should be settled by the judge, the costs of the application were directed to be paid out of the one-fourth part of the rents set aside by the trustees as representing the share of the inheritance, in accordance with the terms of the Act. Lovat v. Leeds (Duke), 11 L. 6. The Court will grant an order under the 19 & 20 Vict., c. 120, s. 10, and the 27 & 28 Vict., c. 45, s. 2, vesting in trustees powers of granting mining leases, without inserting in such order a clause requiring a form of lease to be settled at chambers. The costs to come out of the three-fourths of the profits which the Act directed to be set apart for the inheritance. Re Dorning's Settled Estates, 14 W. R. 125; 13 L. T., N. S., 494.

7. Upon a petition for the sale of settled real estate, partly freehold and partly copyhold, the Court directed the copyholds to be enfranchised, the whole to be sold as freehold, and the costs of enfranchisement to be paid out of the proceeds of sale. Re Adair, 16 L. R., Eq., 124; 42 L. J., Ch., 841.

8. The Court, in approving of an agreement to demise landed estates, and in directing that the costs of the application should be a charge on the property, ordered the name of the person advancing the money necessary for the payment of such costs to be inserted in the order. Re Tunstall, 14 L. T., N. S., 352.

9. A. devised property, subject to an annuity thereout for his widow, B., and the use for her life of the dwelling-house upon the estate, to A. for life, with an ultimate remainder to A. in fee. The will provided that it should be lawful for A. during his life, "but nevertheless, during the life of B., only with her consent in writing for that purpose," to grant building leases. I. EFFECT OF ON SETTLEMENT POWERS.

11. Upon a summons under the Settled Land Act 1882 to obtain the opinion and direction of the Court as to the effect of the Act upon certain clauses in a settlement where an infant tenant in tail was entitled to possession, the following questions were decided: (1) The settlement gave the trustees power, during the minority of any person entitled to possession, to receive and apply rents and profits in management of estate and maintenance of infant, and to accumulate and apply the surplus in paying off charges or in purchase of real estate, to be settled to the same uses:—Held, that the rents and profits received by the trustees during the minority were to be treated in manner directed by the settlement, and without regard to the Act. Re Newcastle's (Duke) Estates, 24 L. Sale and Exchange.] (2) Power in the settlement to the trustees, with the consent of tenant for life, if of age, and if not, of his guardians, to sell or exchange:—Held, that this power was exercisable by the trustees during the minority, at the request and by the direction of the guardians of the infant tenant in tail. Ib.

Powers of Leasing.] (3) Power in the settlement for the guardians during minority to grant leases for twenty-one years, building leases for ninety-nine years, and mining leases for sixty years:—Held, that this power was exercisable during minority by the guardians, with the consent of the trustees. Ib.

Mining Leases.] (4) Held, that the rents derived from mining leases were to be applied by the trustees in manner directed by the settlement, as coming within the term "contrary intention" expressed in the 11th section of the Act:—(5) Held, that there being no power in the settlement to sell surface land apart from minerals, the trustees could exercise that power under s. 17 of the Act; and this being an execution of a statutory power, the consent of the guardians would not be necessary. Ib.

II. APPOINTMENT OF TRUSTEES.

1. Where a tenant for life is a lunatic and his committee wishes to exercise the powers of leasing given by the Settled Land Act 1882, if there are no trustees of the settlement in existence new trustees must be appointed for the purposes of the Act. Re Taylor, 52 L. J., Ch., 728; 49 L. T. 420; 31 W. R. 596.

2. It is a sufficient objection to the appointment of one of the trustees of a settlement of lands as a trustee of the same lands for the purposes of the Settled Land Act 1882, that he is the solicitor of the tenant for life, and has been acting for him in the matter of a proposed sale of the lands. Re Walker's Trusts, 48 L. T. 632; 31 W. R. 716.

3. A testator devised his real estate to the use of G. and W. in fee upon trusts in strict settlement, and bequeathed to them his residuary personal estate upon trust to invest it in the purchase of land to be conveyed to them upon the same trusts. The will contained no power of sale. W. was the family solicitor, a person of good position and high character, and after the death of the testator, he acted as solicitor to the trustees and also to the tenant for life. The tenant for life being desirous of selling part of the estates under the powers of the Settled Land Act 1882, applied to the Court to appoint G. and W. trustees for the purposes of the Act:—Held, that W. ought not to be appointed, for that although he was in all other respects a most proper person, his being solicitor to the tenant for life, made him unsuitable for an office the duties of which required him to check the proceedings of the tenant for life. Re Kemp's Settled Estates, 24 L. 4. The share or interest of an infant under the Statute of Distributions in realty which has improperly been allowed to remain unconverted, is settled land within the meaning of s. 59 of the Settled Land Act 1882, so as to enable the Court, under s. 38, to appoint trustee to exercise the powers conferred by that Act. Re Wells, 49 L. T. 859; 31 W. R. 764.

5. Where a testator's daughter was beneficial tenant for life of a fund paid into court upon the compulsory purchase of the testator's property, the daughter being one of the two trustees of the will, and both trustees being desirous of resigning their trusts, and there being no power of sale in the will, the Court appointed two new trustees of the settlement effected by the will for the purposes of the Settled Land Act 1882, and ordered the fund to be paid out to such trustees, to be held by them upon the trusts of the will. Re Wright's Trusts, 24 L. R., Ch. D., 662.

6. J. W. by his will, devised an estate to trustees upon trust to receive and pay the rents to his grandson for life, and after his decease to sell and to stand possessed of the moneys for all the grandson's children. The tenant for life was upwards of seventy years of age, and a widower. He had one child only, a daughter, and she and her husband in July 1880, contracted to sell her reversion in the estate to the plaintiff. The Settled Land Act (45 & 46 Vict., c. 38) came into operation in January 1883, and the tenant for life at the end of that month advertised the estate for sale under the powers of the Act. The plaintiff brought an action for an injunction to restrain the tenant for life from selling; and to restrain the other defendants, devisees of the legal estate under the will of the survivor of the trustees of J. W.'s will appointed by the Court, from executing any assurance of the estate, and on motion for that purpose:—Held, that the tenant for life had power under the Act to sell the fee-simple and inheritance of the property if he should comply with the provisions of the Act; but held, also, that there were no trustees to whom he could under s. 45 give notice; and an injunction was granted to restrain him from selling until trustees had been properly appointed for the purposes of the Act. Wheelwright v. Walker, (No. 1), 23 L. R., Ch. D., 752; 52 L. J., Ch., 274; 48 L. T. 70; 31 W. R. 363.

Held, also, that the plaintiff was entitled to be served with any summons for the appointment of new trustees, and (the plaintiff objecting) that the defendant's solicitor ought not to be appointed. Ib.

7. Certain estates were devised to the use of the testator's wife and G. T., upon trust to pay the net rents and income of the estates to the wife for the maintenance, education, and benefit of the testator's son until he should attain twenty-one, and without being liable to account to the trustees or to the son for the same; and upon the son's attaining twenty-one, then upon trust for him absolutely; but if he should die under twenty-one without leaving issue, then upon trust to permit the wife to receive such rents and income for her life, and after her death upon the trusts therein mentioned. The trustees of the will appointed trustees for the purposes of the Settled Land Act 1882. Re Morgan, 24 L. R., Ch. D., 114; 48 L. T. 964; 31 W. R. 948.

III. SALES.

1. Subject to a term for raising certain sums freehold estates were devised to the use of trustees during the life of A. without impeachment of waste, with remainders to the use of A.'s children in tail. The trustees were to enter into possession, and during the life of A. manage the property and pay all expenses and outgoings, and keep down the interest on charges, and pay the balance or ultimate residue of the rents and profits to A. during his life. After paying all outgoings, only a very small annual surplus remained payable to A.:—Held, that A. was under the will a person "entitled to the income of land under a trust or direction for payment thereof to him during his life, subject to expenses of management," within the Settled Land Act 1882, s. 58, cl. 1 (ix.), and therefore possessed the powers of selling given by the Act to tenants for life. Re Jones, 24 L. R., Ch. D., 583; 50 L. J., Ch., 969; 48 L. T. 812.

2. Certain portions of a settled estate were, in 1878, directed by the Court to be sold with the approbation of the judge, under the Settled Estates Act 1877. No sale had taken place, and trustees for sale under the Settled Land Act 1882 had been recently appointed:—Held, that the order of 1878 would prevent the tenant for life from selling under the Settled Land Act 1882, but that the Court had power, if a proper case were made out, to stay proceeding under that order. Re Barrs-Haden's Settled Estates, 49 L. T. 661; 32 W. R. 194.

3. The notice to be given, under s. 45 of the Settled Land Act 1882, by the tenant for life of settled land to the trustees of the settlement for the purposes of the Act, when he is intending to make a sale or lease, must be—not merely general notice of an intention to sell or lease all or any part of the estate at any time after the expiration of one month from the date of the notice as and when a proper opportunity shall from time to time occur—but a notice of a specific sale or lease which is contemplated at the time when the notice is given. The committee of a lunatic tenant for life cannot give a valid notice under s. 45, unless he has previously obtained authority from the Court of Lunacy to do so. Re Ray's Settled Estates, 25 L. R., Ch. D., 464; 53 L. J., Ch., 205; 32 W. R. 458.

4. J. W., by his will, devised an estate to trustees upon trust to receive and pay the rents to his grandson for life, and after his decease to sell and to stand possessed of the moneys for all the grandson's children. The tenant for life was upwards of seventy years of age, and a widower. He had one child only, a daughter and she and her husband, in July 1880, contracted to sell her reversion in the estate to the plaintiff. The Settled Land Act (45 & 46 Vict., c. 38), came into operation in January 1883, and the tenant for life at the end of that month advertised the estate for sale under the powers of the Act. The plaintiff brought an action for an injunction to restrain the tenant for life from selling; and to restrain the other defendants, devisees of the legal estate under the will of the survivor of trustees of J. W.'s will appointed by the Court, from executing any assurance of the estate, and on motion for that purpose:—Held, that the tenant for life had power under the Act to sell the fee-simple and inheritance of the property if he should comply with the provisions of the Act; but held, also, that there were no trustees to whom he could under s. 45 give notice; and an injunction was granted to restrain him from selling until trustees had been properly appointed for the purposes of the Act. Wheelwright v. Walker, (No. 1), 23 L. R., Ch. D., 752; 52 L. J., Ch., 74; 48 L. T. 70; 31 W. R. 363.

Held, also, that the plaintiff was entitled to be served with any summons for the appointment of new trustees, and (the plaintiff objecting) that the defendant's solicitor ought not to be appointed. Ib.

5. Where the tenant for life of a settled estate is attempting to sell it under the provisions of the Settled Land Act 1882, and the remainderman offers to buy the estate at its full value, the remainderman is entitled to an injunction restraining the tenant for life from selling at a less price than that offered by the remainderman, or from selling to any person other than the remainderman without giving him a reasonable opportunity of purchasing the estate at a higher price than may be offered by any other bidder. Wheelwright v. Walker (No. 2), 48 L. T. 867; 31 W. R. 912.

6. Certain estates were devised to the use of the testator's wife and G. T., upon trust to pay the net rents and income of the estates to the wife for the maintenance, education, and benefit of the testator's son until he should attain twenty-one, and without being liable to account to the trustees or to the son for the same; and upon the son's attaining twenty-one then upon trust for him absolutely; but if he should die under twenty-one without leaving issue, then upon trust to permit the wife to receive such rents and income for her life, and after her death upon the trusts therein mentioned:—Held, under the Settled Land Act 1882, s. 58, sub-s. 2, that the infant son had the powers of a tenant for life, being tenant in fee-simple with an executory limitation over in case of dying under twenty-one without issue. The trustees of the will appointed trustees for the purposes of the Act. Re Morgan, 24 L. R., Ch. D., 114; 48 L. T. 964; 31 W. R. 948.

7. Independently of the cumulative powers of sale given to tenants for life by the Settled Land Act 1882, the tenant for life, and the trustees under a will which gives them power to sell the estate at the request and by the direction of the person or persons for the time being entitled to the actual freehold of the devised property, will not be restrained from selling the estate at the request and for the benefit of the tenant for life on merely speculative evidence adduced by the remainderman objecting to an immediate sale, of an expected future increase in the value of the property from the development of coal mines, and the construction of a railway through the estate. Thomas v. Williams, 24 L. R., Ch. D., 558; 52 L. J., Ch., 603; 49 L. T. 111; 31 W. R. 943.

1. In determining whether land vested in trustees on an absolute trust for sale is subject to the provisions of s. 63 of the Settled Land Act 1882, the Court must look simply at the instrument which created the trust, and if at the time when a contract for sale is entered into by the trustees, there is no person who, by virtue of the provisions of that instrument, is entitled to the income of the money arising from the sale, or of the land until sale, for his life, or any other limited period, s. 63 does not apply, but the trustees can exercise the trusts for sale just as they could have done prior to the passing of the Act. Re Earle and Webster's Contract, 24 L. R., Ch. D., 144; 52 L. J., Ch., 828; 48 L. T. 961; 31 W. R. 887.

Conveyancing Act 1881, 44 & 45 Vict., c. 41, s. 41—Infant.] 2. Real estate to which an infant was entitled contingently on his attaining twenty-one was ordered to be sold as a settled estate within the provisions of the Act. Re Liddell, Liddell v. Liddell, 52 L. J., Ch., 207; 31 W. R. 238.

IV. PURCHASE MONEY, APPLICATION AND INVESTMENT.

3. Where, under a will, money is bequeathed to trustees in trust to lay it out in the purchase of land, to be settled in strict settlement, the trustees may invest it in debenture stock, in accordance with the provisions of s. 21 of the Settled Land Act 1882. Re Mackenzie's Trusts, 23 L. R., Ch. D., 750; 52 L. J., Ch., 726; 48 L. T. 936; 31 W. R. 948.

4. Lands belonging absolutely to a charity were taken by a public body, and the purchase money paid into court under the Lands Clauses Act:—Held, that the purchase money could be dealt with under the provisions of the 32nd section of the Settled Land Act 1882, as "money liable to be laid out in the purchase of land to be made subject to a settlement." Re Byron's Charity, 23 L. R., Ch. D., 171; 48 L. T. 515; 31 W. R. 517.

5. In a petition presented by the trustees of a settlement for payment out to them of a sum paid into court under the Lands Clauses Consolidation Act 1845, it appeared that the trustees had a power to sell, but no power to sell reserving the minerals, and, as it was desired to effect a sale reserving the minerals, the sale had been effected by the tenant for life under the Lands Clauses Consolidation Act 1845, s. 7, and the question arose whether the Court had jurisdiction to make the order for payment out to the trustees by virtue of the provisions of the Settled Land Act 1882:—Held, that the Court has jurisdiction, under ss. 22 and 32 of the Settled Land Act 1882, to order money paid in upon a sale of land by the tenant for life under the Lands Clauses Consolidation Act 1845, to be paid to the trustees of the settlement, the tenant for life consenting. Re Rutland's (Duke) Settlement, 49 L. T. 196; 31 W. R. 947.

6. A testator devised freehold property to trustees in trust for his grandson for life, and then for his issue in tail. There were four trustees of the will, and the testator's grandson was one of such trustees. The will contained no power of sale. Shortly after the testator's death a portion of the property comprised in the will was purchased by a railway company under their powers, and the money was paid into court. Upon petition for payment of the money out of court, an order was made appointing three of the trustees of the will, omitting the testator's grandson (the tenant for life), to be trustees of the settlement effected by the will for the purposes of the Settled Land Act 1882; and the fund was ordered to be paid out to such three trustees to be held by them upon the trusts of the will. And it appearing that the trustees of the will had advanced a large sum of money on mortgage including, by anticipation, a sum of money equivalent to the fund in court, it was ordered that the three trustees appointed by the Court be at liberty to pay the fund to the four trustees of the will upon the execution by them of a declaration of trust in favour of the three trustees of so much of the principal sum, secured by the mortgage, as should be equivalent to the proceeds of the fund ordered to be paid out of court. Re Harrop's Trusts, 24 L. R., Ch. D., 717; 48 L. T. 937.

V. COSTS AND EXPENSES.

7. The Settled Land Act 1882, s. 32, provides that where, under any special Act, money is in court liable to be laid out in the purchase of land to be settled, that money may be invested as capital money arising under the Act, on the like terms, if any, "respecting costs," as if the mode of investment were authorised by the special Act:—Held, that the costs of an interim investment in debenture stock of such money, paid into court by the Commissioners of Sewers under their special Act (which did not authorise an investment in debenture stock), must be paid by them in like manner as if the mode of investment were authorised by the special Act. Re Hanbury, 52 L. J., Ch., 687; 31 W. R. 784.

8. Settled property which had been put up for sale by auction by the tenant for life under the Settled Land Act 1882, but withdrawn for want of any sufficient offer, having been sold by private contract on the same day:—Held, on summons by the trustees for the decision of the Court, that one charge, according to the scale set out in Part I. of Schedule 1 of the General Order under the Solicitor's Remuneration Act 1881 was payable out of the purchase money to the tenant for life's solicitor for conducting the sale, including the conditions of sale, and one charge for deducting the title and completing the conveyance, including the preparation of the contract; and that the costs of the concurrence in the sale by the mortgagees of the tenant for life, and a proper sum for the auctioneer's charges, were also payable out of the purchase money. Re Peck, Cartington Estate, Re, 24 L. R., Ch. D., 608; 52 L. J., Ch., 815; 49 L. T. 95; 31 W. R. 910.

I. Agreement for. Statute of Frauds.

1. Whether a letter written during a treaty of marriage, and there are subsequent treaties and proposals, is an agreement within the Statute of Frauds. Cokes v. Mascal, 2 Vern. 34.

Marriage agreement reduced into writing, but not signed by either party, yet decreed to be performed. Id. 200.

2. Agreements since the Statute of Frauds are not to be part parol, and part in writing, yet a deposit for performance of a written agreement, though there is no writing declaring the deposit to be a security, is not within the statute. Hales v. Van Berchem, 2 Vern. 617.

3. An agreement not in writing before marriage by the husband is within the Statute of Frauds. Montacute (Viscountess) v. Maxwell, 1 P. W. 618; 1 Stra. 236.

4. Bond by husband on marriage, reciting agreement to settle wife's estate on the issue, etc.; the wife not an executing party. After the marriage, a real estate of the wife came into possession. The husband dies; the wife marries B. and dies. Bill by a younger child against B., and the heir of his mother; it seems that the Statute of Frauds could not have been taken advantage of on account of the wife not having been an executing party, since the marriage took place in consequence of the instrument executed by the husband. Here, however, the wife had proved, and acted under her first husband's will, which recited the bond, from whence it was held, she had bound herself at all events. Archer v. Pope, 2 Ves. 523.

5. On a marriage treaty, the intended husband and the young lady's father went to a counsellor's chambers to have, in consideration of the portion the father proposed to give, a settlement drawn. Minutes of the agreement were taken down in writing by the counsel, and given by him to his clerk to be drawn up in form. The next day the father dies, and the day following the marriage was solemnised. This agreement, notwithstanding these preparations, held to be within the Statute of Frauds and Perjuries. Bawdes v. Amherst, Pre. Ch. 402.

6. A father on treaty of marriage of his daughter, agrees by letter written to a third person, to give 1,500*l.* portion to his daughter, and to charge it upon his land; this, as it is a writing signed by the party, takes it out of the Statute of Frauds, and being to charge land, is properly suable in equity. Moore v. Hart, 1 Vern. 110, 201.

7. Promising by letter to give so much as a portion, sufficient to bring the agreement out of the Statute of Frauds. Seagood v. Meale, Pre. Ch. 561.

8. A letter from a father to his daughter, by which he agrees to give her 3,000*l.* portion, and this not shown to the man who afterwards marries her, does not take the promise out of the Statute of Frauds. Ayliffe v. Tracy, 2 P. W. 65.

9. Pending an arrangement for a marriage, the grandmother of the lady signed a memorandum drawn by her agent, stating that she intended to leave the lady 2,000*l.* at her death, to be secured by a bond, as a provision for her on her intended marriage. On the same day her agent by her directions wrote to the intended husband, stating that she intended giving the lady 2,000*l.* at her death, and her house at Cheltenham. The agent shortly after wrote to the grandmother, stating that the intended husband wished to have her bond, and also the house she intended giving, and that he had referred him to her solicitor. That letter was read to the grandmother, who gave it to the lady, saying that it related to her affairs. The marriage was solemnised, and the grandmother died without having executed either bond or conveyance:—Held, that there was a sufficient agreement in writing within the Statute of Frauds. Saunders v. Cramer, 3 Dr. & War. 87; 5 Ir. Eq. R. 12. S. C. nom. Greene v. Cramer, 2 Con. & L. 54.

A contract upon marriage, as well as one upon the sale of land, may be made out from a correspondence. Ib.

10. A., who under a settlement entered into upon the marriage of his father in 1783, was entitled to a younger child's portion, filed his bill in 1825 for the purpose of raising the same, praying at the same time an account of all prior incumbrances, the inheritrix having set up certain prior articles executed in the year 1765 upon the marriage of the plaintiff's uncle (the elder brother of his father), and which articles had been registered in the year

1767; the plaintiff amended his bill in 1829 by bringing before the Court B. and her husband, who were the only parties beneficially entitled under these articles. B. having answered the bill, a decree was pronounced in 1834, according to the terms of the prayer, and the usual reference made; B. and her husband claimed before the Master, in right of her charge under the articles of 1765, the principal sum so charged by those articles, and sixty-eight years' interest thereon. The Master having made his report:—Held, upon exceptions thereto, that the memorial of the articles of 1765 was good secondary evidence of those articles, possession having been shown to have gone along with them, and that execution of that memorial by the grantee was sufficient to satisfy the statute. Peyton v. M'Dermott, 1 Dr. & Wal. 198.

1. To a parol agreement by a father to convey property in consideration of the marriage then contemplated of his daughter, followed by delivery of possession to the husband after the marriage, the Statute of Frauds cannot be set up by way of defence. Surcome v. Pinniger, 17 Jur. 196; 22 L. J., Ch., 419.

A father, shortly before the marriage of his daughter, told her intended husband that he meant to give certain leasehold property to the couple on their marriage. After the marriage he gave up possession of the property to the husband, to whom he directed the tenants to pay the rents, and handed to the husband the title-deeds. The husband expended money upon the property:—Held, sufficient part performance to take the case out of the Statute of Frauds. S. C. 3 De G. M. & G. 571.

2. A. encouraged his son's courtship to B.'s daughter. B. promised, by letter, to give her 500*l.* if A. would settle 100*l.* per annum on the son, which A. refused. The son and daughter married privately. After this letter, A. consented and B. refused. On a bill for performance of this agreement, objected, that these promises were within the Statute of Frauds, and that the letter, being after the marriage, should not bind. But decreed contra, for the father consented to the marriage. The agreement was admitted by the answer, and was out of the statute, as if no letter had been written; but this case did not depend upon parol evidence or admission, for the letter after marriage, considering the transaction before, is sufficient. Hodgson v. Hutchinson, 5 Vin. 522, pl. 34.

3. A parent, by his agent, on the marriage of his daughter, entered into an engagement in writing with her intended husband, in which his name was written but not signed:—Held, that a letter written by the parent after the marriage, referring to the memorandum as stating the terms of the engagement, was either a sufficient agreement signed by the party within the Statute of Frauds, or a sufficient recognition of the use made of his name in the memorandum. De Biel v. Thompson, 3 Beav. 469. Affirmed on appeal S. C. nom. Hammersley v. De Biel (Baron), 12 Cl. & F. 45.

4. A father having agreed to settle a certain sum for the benefit of his daughter, and the children of her intended marriage with Lord G., a memorandum of the terms of the settlement was by his direction written by his solicitor, and approved of by him and Lord G., and he gave the solicitor instructions to prepare such settlement, but died before the same was ready for execution, having by his will given the daughter real estates and a moiety of the residue of his personal estate. Lord G. married the daughter, and performed his part of the settlement in conformity to the written memorandum:—Held, that the memorandum was not a complete agreement binding within the Statute of Frauds, and of an incomplete agreement there cannot be part performance. Thynne (Lady) v. Glengall (Earl), 2 H. L. Ca. 131; 12 Jur. 805. Affirming S. C. nom Glengall (Earl) v. Barnard, 1 Keen 769; 6 L. J., N. S., Ch., 25.

5. A father verbally promised, in contemplation of the marriage of his daughter, to give her a house as a wedding present, and immediately after the marriage he put the daughter and her husband into possession. The father was then the owner of the house, which was leasehold, and was subject to a charge in favour of a building society, payable by instalments. The father paid those which fell due during his lifetime, and at his death there remained a balance of 110*l.*, which fell due shortly afterwards:—Held, that the verbal promise to give the house having been established, the possession was a part performance which took the case out of the Statute of Frauds, that the contract was to give the house free from incumbrances, and that the 110*l.* was payable out of the father's estate. Ungley v. Ungley, 4 L. R., Ch., 73; 46 L. J., Ch., 189; 25 W. R. 39; 35 L. T., N. S., 189 Affirmed 5 L. R., Ch., 887; 46 L. J., Ch., 854; 25 W. R. 733; 37 L. T., N. S., 52.

6. Invalidity of a parol agreement of the husband, prior to marriage, to settle the wife's property. Spicer v. Spicer, 24 Beav. 365.

7. Prior to his marriage, a husband entered into a parol contract to settle his intended wife's property. The property was not settled after the marriage:—Held, that the ante-nuptial parol contract was inoperative, under the Statute of Frauds, that the marriage was not a part performance, that the post-nuptial settlement was voluntary, and, the husband being greatly indebted at the time, that the settlement was void as against the husband's creditors. Warden v. Jones, 23 Beav. 487; 5 W. R. 446; 26 L. J., Ch., 427; 3 Jur., N. S., 459; 2 De G. & J. 76.

The execution of a post-nuptial settlement in pursuance of a parol ante-nuptial agreement is not a part performance which avoids the statute. Semble there can be no such part performance in the case of a parol agreement for a marriage settlement unless some part of the agreement is to be performed by a third party. Ib.

8. A written memorandum after marriage of a prior agreement is sufficient within the 29 Car. 2, c. 3, s. 4. Barkworth v. Young, 4 Drew. 1; 3 Jur., N. S., 34; 26 L. J., Ch., 153; 5 W. R. 156.

An affidavit made in chancery is a sufficient writing within the statute. Ib.

A plaintiff stated in his bill a verbal promise given by a testator, and a subsequent affidavit by the testator referring to the words used by him when he gave the promise:—Held, on demurrer, that the promise was sufficiently stated in the bill, and was in compliance with the requisitions of the Statute of Frauds. Ib.

The promise was one from the testator to the intended husband of his daughter, previous to her marriage, that she should share in the testator's property, equally with the rest of his children. The daughter married and died in the lifetime of the testator, leaving issue by the plaintiff two children, who survived the testator. The testator died, leaving two daughters him surviving. He gave nothing to the wife on her marriage, and by his will, after giving a legacy to one of his two surviving daughters, he bequeathed the residue of his property to the other absolutely:—Held, that the agreement might have been performed in two ways by the testator, making a provision by will for his daughter, or by dying intestate; and that though he was precluded by his daughter's death from performing it in the first way, he was not thereby exonerated from making a provision in the way still open to him of dying intestate, and therefore the plaintiff was entitled to a third of the testator's residuary property in right of his deceased wife, but that her personal representative was a necessary party to the suit. Ib.

1. M. had given a bond and warrant of attorney to secure the re-payment of a sum of money. Judgment had been entered up, but not executed; the bond and warrant of attorney came into the possession of L., as personal representative of the original obligee. She was on terms of affectionate friendship with M., and often said that he had been unfairly treated, in being made to enter into these securities. L. had in early life received from the father of M. a conveyance of some property in India; the deed of conveyance was expressed to be for a money consideration of 10,000 rupees. In truth, the money consideration was, if any, a debt of 1,200 rupees; the rest was a purely voluntary gift, and no money whatever passed when the conveyance was executed. M. was about to marry, and when his marriage was in contemplation, discussions arose about the bond and warrant of attorney. M.'s father told L. that he was advised, if she did not abandon the claim on the bond and warrant of attorney against his son, to execute a deed, which would put an end to the conveyance of this Indian property as a voluntary conveyance made without consideration. In his depositions he said that L. promised not to enforce the bond and warrant of attorney, if he would abstain from interfering with the conveyance. Other evidence was given of directions by her, that she had abandoned the claim, and of a promise, often repeated, that she would never trouble M. about it:—Held, that this promise, if it constituted a contract, was not a contract made in consideration of marriage, so as to bring it within the words of the Statute of Frauds. Jorden v. Money, 5 H. L. Ca. 185; 23 L. J., Ch., 865. S. C. nom. Money v. Jordan, 2 De G. M. & G. 318; 21 L. J., Ch., 893.

2. G., in anticipation of the marriage of his daughter S., had conversations with her, in which he promised her that he would after her marriage pay her the interest on a certain sum of money during her life, and he further said that her husband would have the principal after his death. G., as alleged, made several payments on account of the interest due on the principal sum, but the payments were not regular, and no settlement was ever come to during his life. In administering the estate of G., S. and her husband claimed to be entitled to a certain sum as the balance of the interest due, but, in consequence of dispositions in their favour made by the testator in his will, the principal sum was not claimed. The chief clerk allowed the claim. On motion to vary the certificate, the Court held, that, even admitting the payments by G., during his life to have been made in pursuance of a virtual agreement, they did not constitute such a part performance as to take the case out of the Statute of Frauds, and therefore the claim must be disallowed. Re Gulliver, Stroughill v. Gulliver, 2 Jur., N. S., 700; 4 W. R. 684.

3. In consideration of B. giving security for an advance to A. of 1,000*l.* and paying off mortgages for 4,000*l.* on A.'s estate, A. agreed to settle his estate on his wife (B.'s daughter) and children. The 1,000*l.* was obtained, but nothing more was done under the agreement until A.'s death, several years after:—Held, that it did not create any charge in favour of the children of A. as against creditors. Cubitt v. Blake, 2 W. R. 604, 640.

4. Prior to a marriage the intended husband and wife caused a settlement of the wife's property to be prepared in accordance with a memorandum in the husband's handwriting; but before its execution the husband verbally promised the wife that if she would forego the settlement he would give her the same benefits by his will. In accordance with this promise, he, immediately after the marriage, executed a will to that effect prepared before the marriage. Upon his death, some years afterwards, that will was not forthcoming, but a later will was found disposing of the property in a different manner:—Held, that there was no contract within the Statute of Frauds binding the husband to make a will, or any fraud or part performance to take the case out of the statute. Caton v. Caton, 1 L. R., Ch., 137; 12 Jur., N. S., 171; 35 J. L., Ch., 292; 14 W. R. 267; 14 L. T., N. S., 171. Affirmed 2 L. R.. H. L., 127; 36 L. J., Ch., 886. Reversing 34 L. J., Ch., 564; 13 W. R. 800; 12 L. T., N. S., 532.

Subsequent marriage is not part performance of a parol contract in consideration of marriage. Acts of part performance by the party sought to be charged will not prevent the operation of the statute. Ib.

5. C., proposing to marry H., wrote out a paper beginning thus: "In the event of a marriage between the undermentioned parties, the following conditions as a basis for a marriage settlement are mutually agreed upon." Then followed several sentences, each in this form, "C. to do so-and-so, H. to have so-and-so." No name of either party was signed to the paper, which was delivered by C. to H.'s solicitor for the purpose of drawing the settlement. Two of the clauses in it appeared to have been, by mutual arrangement, struck out. No settlement was ever executed; it was dispensed with by H. at C.'s request, upon C.'s verbal promise to give H. certain advantages by his will. C. died, and the will was not found to fulfil the promise:—Held, that H. was not entitled (independently of the question whether, as a matter of fact, there had been any waiver) to specific performance of the arrangements mentioned in the written paper, as it did not constitute a contract within the meaning of the Statute of Frauds. S. C. 2 L. R., H. L., 127; 36 L. J., Ch., 886.

1. A partial performance of a marriage contract will not be enforced by the Court, semble. Fryer v. Cooke, 12 L. J., N. S., Ch., 487.

Where the whole right of the plaintiff depends on the execution of a contract which he has entered into, that right must be first established by him before he can make it a foundation for proceedings to enforce a right against another person. Demurrer allowed, with liberty to amend. Ib.

2. By a parol ante-nuptial agreement, it was agreed that the husband should take a certain portion of the wife's property, and that the residue should be settled for her separate use. This agreement was carried out so far as related to the husband, but no settlement was made on the wife. The wife, subsequently to her marriage, filed her bill by her next friend, stating these facts, and praying that her interests in certain property consisting of real estate coming to her might be declared accordingly. The husband, by his answer, admitted the statements in the bill. A deed was then prepared, purporting to be a settlement on the wife, in pursuance of the agreement, and giving her a power to dispose of her property by will. This deed, though signed by the wife, was not acknowledged by her. She made a will disposing of her property in favour of her husband and other parties, and died. The husband then filed a supplemental bill, praying, as against the heir of the wife, that the parol agreement might be carried into effect, that the want of an acknowledgment might, if necessary, be supplied, and that the will of the wife might be established as a valid execution of the power given to her by the deed:—Held, that the contract so entered into before marriage, there being nothing but marriage following, could not be carried into effect under the Statute of Frauds; and that the Court would not supply the want of the acknowledgment, as tending to destroy the protection which the law throws around married women. Lassence v. Tierney, 1 Macn. & G. 551; 2 H. & Tw. 115; 14 Jur. 182.

3. A. being tenant for life, under a settlement, with remainder to his wife for her jointure, remainder to the issue male of the marriage, remainder over, with a power to revoke all the uses, except those to his wife and her issue, agrees that in consideration of her surrendering her jointure estate so as to enable him to suffer a recovery and raise 6,000*l.* to pay his debts, he would re-settle his whole estate to particular uses. The surrender was made, and the money raised, but no settlement made according to the agreement:—Held, that this agreement, having been in part performed, the parties were entitled to a specific execution, and decreed accordingly. Herbert v. Winchelsea (Earl), 1 Bro. P. C. 145.

II. Representations and Promises before Marriage. When enforced.

4. A. by letter says he will give 1,500*l.* with his daughter; the daughter marries and A. is privy to it, and seems to approve of it. The daughter dies and the husband takes administration. The father decreed to pay the 1,500*l.* portion. Wankford v. Fotherley, 2 Vern. 322.

5. The mother, who was the absolute owner of a term, is present at a treaty for her son's marriage, and hears her son declare that the term was to come to him at his mother's death, and is a witness to the deed, whereby the reversion of the term is settled on the issue of this marriage after the mother's death. The mother is compellable in equity to make good this settlement, and to settle the reversion of the term accordingly after her death. Hunsden v. Cheyney, 2 Vern. 150.

6. A second husband having, by letters in his lifetime, declared he was willing the daughter of his wife by her first husband should have the mother's whole fortune; as he is dead, these letters are to be taken as an appropriation of the fortune for the benefit of the infant. Grosvenor v. Lane, 2 Atk. 181.

7. Bill by husband to have wife's portion, part of which was invested in stock, made up of money, on ground either of express contract or representation upon which the marriage took place, dismissed; the description by articles, though generally "the sum of 4,000*l.*" referring to that sum in settlement, and the representation under circumstances not amounting to warranty, and proceeding on a common mistake. Ainslie v. Medlycott, 9 Ves. 13.

8. On a treaty of marriage the husband applied to the wife's brother, to know her fortune, and how it was secured. The brother represented it fairly, as he then conceived it, and as being charged on a real estate under the father's will; and added, that the husband need not examine the will, nor the father's family deeds, for the fact was as he represented. A recital to the same effect was also made in the settlement, to which the brother was a party. It afterwards turned out that the father had no power to charge the estate by his will; but this fact was unknown to all the family at the time of the marriage:—Held, that the representation of the brother would not bind him to make it good. Merewether v. Shaw, 2 Cox 124.

9. Annuity given by father on daughter's marriage, by a letter to the intended husband in these words, viz., "I promise to you, until it is convenient to me to do something better for you, to allow to my daughter 100*l.* a year, which you can have as you may require":—Held, to be an annuity during the joint lives of the father and daughter; and though incapable of valuation, and though no other evidence of the genuineness of the letter, held to be provable (Sir J. Cross, dissent, upon the ground that the facts required further investigation). Exp. Annandale, Re Curtis, 4 Dea. & Ch. 511.

10. Settlement decreed according to a letter previously to the marriage, though no express assignment, the marriage having taken place immediately: a distinct positive dissent would be necessary to prevent the effect of the letter, and that could be evidenced only by an actual settlement before marriage. Luders v. Anstey, 4 Ves. 501.

1. A., on the marriage of his son B., wrote a letter to his intended wife's mother, stating his intention to leave him certain property, and promising him an annuity in the meantime. On the marriage of E., another son, A., agreed to settle the lands of S., and to secure him 400*l.* a year if the lands should not produce so much, which agreement was afterwards carried out by a deed by which it was declared that the deficiency should be made up out of A.'s other property:—Held, first, that the letter was a mere expression of intention and not an agreement; second, that E. was entitled to have the deficiency (which arose) made up out of A.'s other freehold property; and third, that property devised by A. to B. was not exempt from contribution. Quinlan v. Quinlan, Hay & J. 785.

2. Construction of a letter as not amounting to an absolute agreement to give a marriage portion. Randall v. Morgan, 12 Ves. 67.

A letter subsequent to the marriage, authorising the husband to draw for interest due on a bond which was never executed, cannot prevail as evidence of a promise, which, if subsequent to the marriage, is void as nudum pactum. Ib.

3. Material representations of the circumstances of a person contracting marriage, directed to be made good, even at the instance of persons concerned in fraudulently defeating such representations. De Manneville v. Crompton, 1 Ves. & B. 355.

4. A., by letter under his hand, promises 1,000*l.* with his niece, but in his letter dissuaded her from marrying the plaintiff; and though he was afterwards present at the marriage, and gave her in marriage, yet the Court would not decree the payment of the 1,000*l.*, but left the plaintiff to his action at law. Douglas v. Vincent, 2 Vern. 202; sed quære. And see id. n.

5. A., on the marriage of B., promised, by letter, to join him in a bond of indemnity against a rent-charge issuing out of B.'s estate. A. never signed the bond, but the marriage took effect in confidence of A.'s letter. B. died insolvent, and then A. died:—Held, the marriage is a sufficient consideration to support the undertaking to indemnify, and it will support an assumpsit at law. Ramsden v. Oldfield, 4 Vin. Abr. 453, pl. 5.

6. A representation made by one party for the purpose of influencing the conduct of another, and acted on by him, will in general be sufficient to entitle him to the assistance of a court of equity for the purpose of realising such representation. And so in proposals of marriage, if the parent or his agent deliberately holds out inducements to the suitor to celebrate it, believing it was intended that he should have the benefits so held out to him, a court of equity will give effect to the proposals. Proposals of marriage, written by the lady's brothers, acting by her father's authority, stated that "Mr. J. P. T., the father, also intends to leave a further sum of 10,000*l.* in his will to Miss T., to be settled on her and her children, the disposition of which, supposing she has no children, will be prescribed by the will of her father. These are the bases of the arrangement, subject of course to revision, but they will be sufficient for Baron B. to act upon." Baron B., upon receiving the proposals, provided a jointure as required by them for his intended wife, and then married her. In the settlement afterwards executed, there was no mention of this sum of 10,000*l.*; and it was not left by J. P. T. in his will:—Held, that his estate was liable to the payment of 10,000*l.*, with interest from the end of one year after his death. Hammersley v. De Biel (Baron), 12 Cl. & F. 45. Affirming S. C. nom. De Biel v. Thompson, 3 Beav. 469; and an order of the Lord Chancellor.

7. A., being informed that an eligible offer of marriage was made by the plaintiff to his grand-niece, wrote to her mother:—"I have always told you what I intended leaving her, which is 2,000*l.*, and which I am now also ready to settle on her, provided there is a proper settlement made on her, and all matters arranged to your satisfaction." He had previously desired that no communication should be made to him till the match was off or on. The plaintiff answered the letter, offering to settle an equal sum, and saying he waited A.'s reply. A. wrote immediately before the marriage disapproving of the match, and saying, that the plaintiff's father should come forward, but the letter was not shown to the plaintiff till just before the marriage ceremony. The plaintiff made a suitable settlement, the lady's mother was satisfied, and the plaintiff was afterwards well received by A.:—Held, that the promise of A. had never become an absolute one, and that there was no representation on the faith of which the marriage was brought about, such as to give plaintiff a claim on A.'s assets. Madox v. Nowlan, Beat. 632.

8. P. C., while in India, made his will, leaving his daughter, who was born there, a lac of rupees. Upon the completion of her education, P. C., who had returned to England, sent her back to India, and on that occasion he wrote to a particular friend, to whose guardianship and charge he confided her, "In regard to her settlement in life I shall be naturally anxious." "You may assure the young gentleman she may choose, that, on his marriage with her, he shall have 2,000*l.* sterling; nor will that be all. She is and shall be noticed in my will, but to what further amount I cannot say, owing to the present reduced and reducing state of interest, which puts it out of my power to determine at present what I may have to dispose of." H. M. having made proposals of marriage, was informed of the letter written by P. C., and also of the will he had made, and after some negotiations, the marriage was solemnised in 1826; and in 1829, H. M. and his wife returned to England. In the same year, P. C., who was a domiciled Scotchman, executed, in Edinburgh, another will, by which he gave all his real and personal property for the benefit of his wife and his two sons by her; and, in case of their dying without issue, he gave the whole to the issue of his daughter. P. C. died in 1831, without having made any provision for his daughter, leaving the will made by him in India in the state it was when he executed it; and upon a bill filed by his daughter, insisting that the testator had contracted to settle a lac of rupees upon her, and that the contract was contained in the letter written by him:—Held, that in construing contracts, the Court must ascertain the real meaning of the words used; that when no definite or specific sum was mentioned or referred to, the Court cannot enforce any contract; that the testator had not afforded means of reference to any other document; that, except from the answer of H. M., there was no evidence that he married on the faith and belief that a lac of rupees would be settled; and that it was not evidence to be acted upon in favour of the plaintiff against the estate of the testator, as previous to marriage it had been pointed out to H. M. that the letter did not state any precise sum; and that the testator had left himself unfettered by any contract: and the bill was dismissed, but without costs. Moorhouse v. Colvin, 21 L. J., Ch., 177; 15 Beav. 341. Affirmed 21 L. J., Ch., 782.

1. On a treaty respecting the marriage of H. M., who was believed to have considerable expectations from his uncle, H. E., the guardians of the lady desired a settlement; and H. M. addressed a letter to H. E., who answered, "I have made my will, and left you my property in the county of T., which is very considerable." The guardians still refused their consent, "until a suitable settlement shall be made by Mr. H. E. of real estate upon the marriage, in the usual course of settlement, and until the sum of 10,000*l.* shall be secured to the trustees of the estate" of the father of the lady, from whom H. M. had some time before borrowed that money, in order to become a partner in a bank. The resolution of the trustees was communicated to H. E., who, in September 1815, wrote: "My sentiments respecting you continue unalterable; however, I shall never settle part of my property out of my power while I exist; my will has been made for some time, and I am confident that I shall never alter it to your disadvantage. I have mentioned before, and I again repeat, that my county of Tipperary estate will come to you at my death, unless some unforeseen occurrence should take place. I have never settled anything on any of my nephews, and I should give cause for jealousy if I was to deviate in this instance from a resolution I have long made." This answer was, at the desire of H. E., communicated to the guardians, who, in March 1816, consented to the proposed marriage, which accordingly took place in July of that year. A settlement was then drawn up, in which it was recited, that "H. M. has reason to expect that he will, upon the decease of H. E., become entitled, by virtue of the will of H. E., to a certain portion of his estate and property, pursuant to the declaration of H. E., contained in his letter to H. M. of September 1815." H. E. was made one of the trustees of the settlement, and, about twelve months afterwards, he executed the deed; but there was no evidence that he knew anything of its contents, beyond the fact that he was named as one of the trustees. H. E. afterwards devised his property to other persons:—Held, affirming the decision of the Court below, that H. M. could not maintain a suit to compel the trustees under the will of H. E. to convey the Tipperary estate to him, for that H. E.'s letters did not amount to a contract to settle it on him. Maunsell v. White, 4 H. L. Ca. 1039; 1 J. & L. 539; 7 Ir. Eq. R. 413.

2. It is a principle equally of law and of equity that if a person makes any false representation to another, who acts upon it, the person making it shall not afterwards be allowed to set up that what he said was false, and to assert the real truth in place of the falsehood which has so misled the other. Actual knowledge of the falsity of the representation is not necessary if the party makes it under such circumstances that he had resonable ground for supposing that the person whom he was misleading was to act upon it. But dissentiente St. Leonards (Lord), this doctrine does not apply where the representation is not a representation of a fact, but a statement of something which the party intends or does not intend to do. And in this case the not adhering to the statement is not a fraud. Therefore where a bond creditor at various times declared that she had abandoned the debt, and particularly upon the occasion of negotiations respecting the marriage of the obligor represented that she had abandoned it, and upon the faith of such representations the marriage took effect and settlements were made:—Held, nevertheless, that the representations amounted merely to a promise not to enforce the debt, binding only in honour, and that therefore the creditor could not be restrained afterwards suing on the bond. But, è contra per St. Leonards (Lord), it is immaterial whether it is a misrepresentation of fact as it actually existed, or a misrepresentation of an intention to do or to abstain from doing an act which would lead to the damage of the party who is thereby induced to deal in marriage, or in purchase, or in anything of that sort, upon the faith of that representation. And per eundem, the Statute of Frauds in such a case will have no operation, but the promise to do an act, followed by marriage, which cannot be undone, is equivalent to a binding agreement to do that act. A promise not to sue on bonds is not within the Statute of Frauds. If a particular allegation is supported by only one witness and is positively denied by the answer, and there is nothing to show that the one is to be credited more than the other, the claim founded upon that allegation cannot be enforced against the defendant. For this purpose the answer must be looked at with all the concomitant circumstances which may tend to depreciate it, and the value of the particular denial may be legitimately tested by a comparison of the answer with the evidence on other points. Jorden v. Money, 5 H. L. Ca. 185; 23 L. J., Ch., 865.

During a treaty for a marriage, which afterwards took place, a bond creditor of the intended husband, who was an intimate friend of his family, and was aware of the proposed marriage, repeatedly declared it to be her determination never to enforce payment of the bond debt, and made these declarations under circumstances which were calculated to lead, and which did lead, to the communication of them to the friends of the intended wife:—Held, by the Lord Justice Knight Bruce, agreeing with the Master of the Rolls, that the declarations above mentioned afforded possibly sufficient ground for the interposition of a court of equity to restrain proceedings at law upon the bond; and there being, in addition, the testimony of one witness to a positive promise to the above effect, in consideration of another promise on the part of the witness, which he performed:—Held, that although this promise was denied by the answer, yet that the answer being in many respects inaccurate, showed that the defendant's memory could not be depended on, so that the testimony of the witness ought to prevail, and that the case was a proper one for a perpetual injunction, a decree for which was accordingly affirmed, dissentiente Lord Cranworth, who held, that the declarations being of intention merely, and not of fact, were not such representations as to bind the creditor, on the ground of fraud or otherwise, and that an actual contract could not, in opposition to the answer, be considered proved by the evidence of one witness, S. C. nom. Money v. Jordan, De G. M. & G. 318; 21 L. J., Ch., 893.

Held, that forbearance to make a new settlement upon an intended marriage, would be a sufficient consideration to support the release of a debt due to a person who was a cestui que trust under an existing settlement which appeared to be voluntary, although it might be doubtful whether that settlement was voluntary, or could have been defeated by a subsequent settlement. Ib.

1. K. in 1832, after a long correspondence with Mrs. and Miss B., in reference to making a provision for his son, the plaintiff, on the occasion of his marriage with Miss B., stated to the latter his ultimate proposals, namely, to give his son a sum, inclusive of his own property, equal in value to 5,000*l.*, of which 3,600*l.* would be settled upon him and his children before marriage, so as to make up the joint income to 600*l.* a year, till such time as their own resources rendered it unnecessary; "and, finally, to recognise his son, in common with the rest of the family, in the future provisions of his will." In November 1832 the marriage took place. K. settled 3,600*l.* on the plaintiff, and expended about 1,000*l.* in furnishing a house on his marriage, and by his will, dated in April 1841, after directing his trustees to pay the rents of the trust property to five of his children (not including the plaintiff) for life, with remainder for the benefit of their issue, directed that in case either of the five children should die without leaving issue at his or her decease, his or her part or share should be transferred, or paid to, or appropriated for the benefit of any other surviving child (including the plaintiff), and the issue then living of any of his sons and daughters (including the issue of the plaintiff) who might be then dead. By a codicil, dated in 1846, K. bequeathed to the plaintiff a legacy of 2,500*l.* On a bill praying that the plaintiff might be declared to be entitled to one equal sixth part of the residuary estate, or that he was entitled to one equal seventh part of the same, the plaintiff being willing, upon receiving such payment, to deal with the interest bequeathed to him by the will and codicil in such manner as the Court should direct:—Held, that the provision made by the will and codicil was such a recognition of the plaintiff by K. in common with the rest of his family, as to sufficiently comply with the promise upon the faith of which the marriage took place; but inasmuch as the difficulty had been created by K. in the negotiations conducted and the representation made by him, the costs were ordered to be paid out of his estate. Kay v. Crook, Kay v. Kay, 3 Jur., N. S., 104; 3 Sm. & G. 407.

2. Where it was shown, with sufficient certainty, that declarations and representations were actually made by a father to an intended husband, and to other persons, previously to, and in contemplation of, and subsequent to the marriage of his natural daughter to him, and that the marriage was contracted in a confidence in such representations, that he had irrevocably settled or intended to settle an estate, and a sum of sicca rupees, as a provision for, and which would upon his death become the property of his reputed daughter and her children: and where there was evidence that certain documents, purporting to settle the estate and sicca rupees, were executed by the settlor, but there was a total want of evidence as to the contents or effect of such documents, the Court gave effect to the representations by declaring that the children of the marriage were entitled to the estate and the sicca rupees as tenants in common absolutely. Prole v. Soady, 5 Jur., N. S., 1382.

It is essential in such a case that there should also be perfect or reasonable certainty as to the amount and nature of the property to which the representations apply. Ib.

The settlor having, by his will, bequeathed to trustees 4,000*l.* in trust for the children of the marriage of his daughter and her husband, the Court directed a reference to the chief clerk, for him to inquire and certify whether it would be for the benefit of the children to take the estate and the sicca rupees, or to take the benefits given to them by the will. Ib.

Where the husband's statement, that he was himself to have a life estate, was not supported by other evidence:—Held, that he was not entitled to it. Ib.

A bill by infants against the devisee of their grandfather, to establish a settlement of real and personal estate, alleged to have been made or promised on the marriage of their parents. The Court, on parol evidence that the marriage had taken place on the faith of representations made by the testator previously to the marriage, and on evidence of representations made by him after the marriage, directed a settlement in accordance with such representations, though the bill was not filed until seventeen years afterwards. S. C. 2 Giff. 1; 29 L. J., Ch., 721.

3. In the course of a conversation between L. & H., with respect to the provision to be made on the marriage of L. with the daughter of H., a statement was made by H. which was thus referred to in a letter written by L. to H. shortly afterwards: "You were pleased to say, that with relation to your property, it would be equally divided between your children who survived you." H., in reply, stated, "All we possess will be divided at our decease equally among our children." Subsequent correspondence took place between L. and H. upon the subject, to the same effect, but in a settlement executed prior to the marriage there was no expression of any such intention:—Held, that all that was intended to be binding on the father was embodied in the settlement. Lowley v. Heath, 1 De G. F. & J. 489; 6 Jur., N. S., 436; 29 L. J., Ch., 313. Affirming 6 Jur., N. S., 262; 8 W. R. 314; 27 Beav. 523.

If a father, in contemplation of the marriage of his daughter, corresponds with his intended son-in-law, and makes promises which are personal to his daughter, they will not enure for the benefit of her husband or child. Ib.

1. A., hearing that a marriage, to which he had not given his assent, had been fixed between his daughter and B., signed and sealed a document, by which he agreed to settle, assign, and make over to his daughter, on the occasion of her marriage with B., a house free of all rent for his own term thereof, to the purpose that it should be settled on herself and her issue by B.; and to execute any further instrument or conveyance of the same which counsel should advise or deem necessary to carry out the assignment of the premises to his daughter, as a marriage portion. That document was enclosed in a letter to D., in which A. expressed his ultimate intentions as to the remainder of this property to be, that after the death of himself and his wife, part of it should go to his sons, and another part should be divided, share and share alike, among his three daughters, with such arrangements as should secure the property to the family, so that, if one died without issue, that portion should not go to strangers, but pass to the other branches of the family. The letter reached B. on the morning of the marriage, which had been previously fixed, and which took place. B., being separated from his wife, filed a petition, in the name of himself and his wife, for a specific performance of the agreement, by an assignment, in trust for A. for life, or until bankruptcy or insolvency; then to his wife, to her separate use; and, after their death, to the issue of the marriage; and if no issue, to A. absolutely. Semble, the agreement should be carried into effect by settling the house to the separate use of A.'s daughter for her life, and after her death upon her issue, if any, or by settling it on her without any limitation to her separate use; but:—Held, that the letter would not be enforced as an addition to the agreement, or as itself containing a binding agreement. Kirwan v. Burchell, 10 Ir. Ch. R. 63.

Held, also, that the letter could not be enforced as a representation, as the marriage did not take place on the faith of it; and there was a written contract executed by A. Ib.

2. A parol ante-nuptial contract is not a good consideration to support a post-nuptial settlement, as against creditors. Goldicutt v. Townsend, 28 Beav. 445.

A parol promise by a father, prior to the marriage of his son, to make a future provision for him, his wife and children, cannot be enforced, if the marriage did not take place by reason of any reliance on such promise, or if it was not acted on as a reason and consideration for the marriage. Ib.

3. Parents of the contracting parties to a marriage mutually agreed in writing, after the marriage, as a mode of giving effect to the verbal promises made before, to provide a marriage portion, and the father of the woman promised to pay 200*l.* to his son-in-law, and the father of the man to pay 100*l.*:—Held, that the son-in-law being a stranger to the consideration could not sue the executor of his father-in-law, upon the promise; and that the relation of parent and child did not create any exception to the rule. Tweddle v. Atkinson, 30 L. J., Q. B., 265; 9 W. R. 781; 4 L. T. N. S., 468.

4. Upon negotiations taking place previously to a marriage, the father of the lady wrote to the gentleman's father in these words: "When my eldest daughter married, I gave her 1,000*l.* settled on herself, with a promise of sharing with my other daughters what I may be able hereafter to leave them; and this I can do for A." (the intended bride). A settlement was prepared in the Scotch form, and executed, whereby the father assigned 1,000*l.* to trustees for his daughter, and also all other means and estate whatsoever to which she would be entitled to succeed on his death. The father afterwards transferred 3,333*l.* to the trustees of his daughter A.'s settlement, and he made his will, whereby he gave more property to his other daughters than to A. Upon a bill by the daughter and her husband claiming to be entitled to an equal share with the other children:—Held, that the settlement was a final instrument, and the estate of the father could not be bound by his letter, and the daughter had no right to come upon his assets for an equal share with his other children. Sands v. Sodon, 31 L. J., Ch., 870; 10 W. R. 765.

5. Upon the treaty for a marriage, the father of the lady wrote to the husband, "I still adhere to my last proposition, viz., to allow Elizabeth 100*l.* a year, . . . and at my decease she shall be entitled to her share of whatever property I may die possessed of":—Held, first, that this was a contract binding on the father. Laver v. Fielder, 32 Beav. 1; 11 W. R. 245; 7 L. T., N. S., 602; 9 Jur., N. S., 190; 32 L. J., Ch., 365; 1 N. R. 188.

Held, secondly, that it was not so vague as to prevent its being enforced. Ib.

Held, thirdly, that it did not include freehold property. Ib.

Held, fourthly, that the daughter was entitled to an equal share with the other children of the personal estate of which the testator died possessed, after deducting the widow's one-third share and the debts and expenses. Ib.

Held, fifthly, that parol evidence was inadmissible to show what was intended by the words "her share." Ib.

Held, sixthly, that the suit ought not to be by the daughter alone, but that her husband ought to be a co-plaintiff. Ib.

6. Previously to a marriage, the solicitor to the father of the intended wife in a letter stated that the father did not propose to exercise a certain power of appointment; and the fund to which the wife would become entitled in default of appointment was comprised in the settlement made on the marriage. The father afterwards exercised his power in favour of his other children:—Held (affirming 11 Jur., N. S., 106; 13 W. R. 335; 11 L. T., N. S., 620), under the circumstances, that the child of the marriage was entitled to have brought into the settlement, out of the father's estate, a sum equal to that which would have come under the settlement in default of appointment. Walford v. Gray, 11 Jur., N. S., 473; 13 W. R. 761; 12 L. T., N. S., 437.

1. Distinction between an ante-nuptial parol contract between husband and wife in consideration of marriage, and an ante-nuptial parol contract between a third party and the husband, for other valuable consideration. The Court will enforce the latter after the marriage, but not the former. Warden v. Jones, 2 De G. & J. 76; 23 Beav. 487.

2. In a letter containing proposals of marriage with a young lady, addressed to her mother, the writer said: "If your daughter has, or may have, money, my wish and intention would be, that it should be so settled for her sole and entire use." The marriage took place shortly afterwards without the mother's knowledge, and without a settlement:—Held, that the husband was bound, on the faith of the promise, to make a settlement of the whole of the wife's property, present and future, to her separate use. Alt v. Alt, 8 Jur., N. S., 1075; 7 L. T., N. S., 266.

3. An infant wrote to the trustee of the property of his intended wife, who was an adult, begging him "as speedily as possible to arrange matters concerning her little property," and adding, "I especially wish it entirely settled on herself, lest her friends might think I had pecuniary reasons for marrying her." On the day on which that letter was written, the parties intermarried; but no further settlement was executed. The wife, however, afterwards expressed to the trustee a wish to have her property settled upon herself:—Held, that the letter was neither a settlement, nor an agreement for a settlement, binding on either the husband or the wife, and that the subsequent expression of her wishes on the subject amounted to nothing, as she was then a married woman. Beaumont v. Carter, Carter v. Beaumont, 32 Beav. 586; 8 L. T., N. S., 685.

4. By a marriage settlement, it was recited that the husband was absolutely entitled to 7,000*l.*, part of the personal estate of a deceased person then being administered in the Court of Chancery. The husband settled 5,000*l.*, part of the 7,000*l.*, but the assets proved insufficient to pay the 5,000*l.*:—Held, that this was not a representation which the husband was bound to make good, and that the deficiency did not constitute a debt payable out of his assets. Evans v. Wyatt, 31 Beav. 217; 10 W. R. 813; 7 L. T., N. S., 86; 8 Jur., N. S., 499.

5. H., during the negotiation which preceded the marriage of his daughter T. with the plaintiff, stated to the latter that she would have "10,000*l.* at the very least" after his own and his wife's death, and himself drew up a document as instructions for the marriage settlement, expressing his desire that a covenant upon his own part should be therein contained to the effect that his daughter should, upon his own and his wife's death, have a property of not less than that amount. A settlement, to which H. was a party, was accordingly prepared and executed, reciting that T. would, upon the death of both her parents, be entitled to 10,000*l.* and upwards; but no covenant was contained therein upon the part of H.:—Held, after the death of H. and his wife, that, upon the above representation, the same having been clearly and distinctly made, the estate of H. was bound to make good the fortune of T. to the amount of 10,000*l.* Bold v. Hutchinson, 24 L. J., Ch., 285; 1 Jur., N. S., 365; 3 Eq. Rep. 743.

6. The plaintiff in the suit having been advised that his daughter, then an infant, was entitled in fee to two-fourth parts of certain freehold estates, then vested in trustees, subject only to a question whether he, the plaintiff, was or was not entitled to the rents thereof for his life, as tenant by the curtesy of England, instituted, in 1826, a suit, to which he was not a party, but in which he was named and acted as next friend of his infant daughter, and in 1830 obtained a decree in such suit, inconsistent with any title in himself as tenant by the curtesy, declaring his daughter to have become entitled at the death of her mother "to two-fourths of the estates in fee, and to the rents and profits thereof," and directing a partition, and an allotment of two-fourths of the estates to the daughter. In 1833, the father, still acting as next friend of his daughter in the suit, obtained an order of the Court approving of a deed of partition, containing a conveyance by the trustees of two-fourths of the estates in question to the daughter in fee, and declaring that the father, his executors, etc., should have the use of the same for ten years, if the daughter should so long live, and remain an infant and unmarried; and from and after the happening of either of those events, to the daughter in fee; and providing that the rents received by the father should be applied, at the discretion of the father, towards the maintenance of the daughter. This the father accordingly did until the daughter attained her majority in 1843; after which, until her marriage in 1847, without her father's consent, he duly accounted to her for the rents of the estates. After the marriage the daughter and her husband brought ejectment against the father, who thereupon, in 1852, obtained the common injunction, claiming by the same bill to be entitled as tenant by the curtesy to the rents of the estates in question, on the ground that his title was not concluded by the suit commenced in 1826, to which he was not a party, but which he alleged had been instituted and conducted by him as next friend of his daughter, in ignorance of his own right to curtesy:—Held, dismissing, with costs, an appeal from the decision of Sir J. Stuart, V.-Ch., declaring the plaintiff not entitled to curtesy, that the proceedings and conduct of the plaintiff from the commencement of the suit of 1826 were tantamount to a waiver, as against his daughter and her husband, of his right to curtesy out of the estates in question; and moreover that the representations shown in evidence to have been made by him to his daughter were such as that the marriage must be considered as having been contracted by her upon the faith of the correctness of those representations, and the plaintiff considered as liable to have that faith treated as the legitimate consequence of such representations. Stone v. Godfrey, 18 Jur. 524; 23 L. J., Ch., 769; 5 De G. M. & G. 76; 2 Eq. Rep. 886.

7. A promise to a woman about to marry of a sum of money to be settled for her benefit previous to her marriage, if communicated to her intended husband, entitles her to call for a settlement for the benefit of her children; but if she dies without exercising that right, her husband, as her administrator, is entitled absolutely, to the exclusion of the issue of the marriage. Lovett v. Lovett, 1 Johns. 118.

1. Where a person seeks to make a third party make good representations made by him on his marriage, he must establish, and that clearly, first, that sufficient representations were made; and, secondly, that the marriage took place on the faith of them. Jameson v. Stein, 21 Beav. 5; 25 L. J., Ch., 41.

A husband and wife alleged that, on their marriage, the wife's father stated, in a letter, which, however, they stated had been destroyed, "that he could do no more for her than he had done, and that he had settled his W. estate upon her." He had, in fact, previously settled that estate on her, but subject to a prior charge of 5,000*l*. They sought to have the representation made good, by payment of the 5,000*l*. out of the father's estate. The Court doubted whether the principle applied to such representation, and also whether the marriage took place on the faith of it, and refused relief. Ib.

2. Letters written by a widower previously to the marriage of his only daughter stated that he would settle all his property after his death on her and her children. The father married again, and by his will left certain benefits to his widow:—Held, that the daughter was entitled to have the whole of her father's property settled. Coverdale v. Eastwood, 42 L. J., Ch., 118; 15 L. R., Eq., 121; 21 W. R. 216; 27 L. T., N. S., 646.

3. A father, before the marriage of his son, stated in a letter to the father of the intended wife, "I will give C. one-third of my business, which will at present be sufficient to support them respectably and something to spare; and at my death he will have half the business and a child's share of what property I may be worth." The father, in his lifetime, in consideration of love and affection, assigned a mortgage to the son, to take effect at the father's death, with a power of revocation reserved thereby to the father, which he did not exercise. He also advanced other property to others of his children at different periods during his life. By his will he left to his son C. "one shilling in full of all claims in reference to my property, having already given to him what I consider fair and reasonable;" he directed his debts to be paid, and divided his property among his widow and other children:—Held, that by the letter the father contracted a debt payable out of the assets which he left at his death, but that the son was bound to bring into account and give credit for the value of the mortgage which the son insisted on retaining. Held, also, that the other children were not bound to bring into account the advancements made to them. Keays v. Gilmore, 8 Ir. R., Eq., 290; 22 W. R. 465.

4. A. verbally promised to give his daughter 200*l*., on her marriage with B., if B.'s father would give the like amount. B. told A. that his father would do so. A. then paid the 200*l*., after which the marriage was solemnised. B.'s father paid 50*l*. of his 200*l*., and died leaving B. his executor. B. claimed a right to retain 150*l*. out of his father's assets. The judge of the county court decided in his favour; and an appeal from that decision was dismissed with costs. Williams v. Williams, 18 L. T., N. S., 783; 37 L. J., Ch., 854.

5. The fact that a parol promise had been made by a relative of a young lady to her then intended husband that he would "make a suitable provision for her" does not supply a valuable consideration for a bond for 200*l*. passed by him to the husband subsequently to the marriage. M'Askie v. M'Cay, 16 W. R. 1187; 2 Ir. R., Eq., 447.

6. A., upon the engagement of his daughter to T., wrote a letter to T. saying that the settlement proposed by him was satisfactory, and that he, A., had made his will, dividing his property equally among his daughters. The marriage took place, T. believing, as he alleged, that the will operated as a settlement of one-third of A.'s property on his wife. T. made no settlement, and his wife died in A.'s life, leaving children. A. died, having made another will, whereby he left all his property to H., another daughter. Upon a claim by T. and his children to a third share of A.'s estate:—Held, that the letter constituted only a conditional contract, and that T. not having performed his part of the contract, it was not binding, and that in any event the letter was too vague to be enforced as a contract, and the claim was disallowed. Re Allen, Hinchs v. Allen, 49 L. J., Ch. 553; 28 W. R. 533.

7. An unattested paper signed by A. and by him handed to B., stated that as a mark of his esteem and great friendship he agreed to allow B. 500*l*. a year, and that after his (A.'s) death he had in lieu thereof bequeathed to him 10,000*l*. B. took this document to C., who thereupon consented to the marriage of her daughter with B., such consent having hitherto been withheld on the ground of B.'s want of means. The marriage took place, but no settlement was made by B. on his wife. A. died about six months after signing the paper, having paid B. the first quarter of the allowance of 500*l*. a year. His will contained no provision whatever in favour of B.:—Held, that assuming the consent of C. to her daughter's marriage with B. to have been given on the faith of the engagement contained in the paper, there was no such connection between A.'s promise or representation and the consent given by C. as to sustain a claim against A.'s estate. Dashwood v. Jermyn, 12 L. R., Ch. D., 776; 27 W. R. 868.

8. The Court, having come to the conclusion, as a matter of fact, that the marriage of W. had taken place upon the faith of a previous voluntary settlement made by his father:—Held, first, that the marriage supplied an ex post facto consideration for the settlement. Guardian Assurance Co. v. Avonmore (Viscount), 6 Ir. R., Eq., 391.

Held, secondly, that, in such a case, there is no presumption as to whether or not a marriage had taken place on the faith of the voluntary deed, but that it is the duty of the Court, in the absence of direct proof, to form a reasonable judgment, by way of inference from the circumstances shown to have existed, whether or not the parties did know of the deed and act on it. Ib.

1. Previously to the marriage of the plaintiff and his wife C. W., negotiations for a settlement of her property had been going on, and on the 14th January 1878 M., a connection of C. and trusteee of her property, wrote to the plaintiff: "I trust to you that all will be done as we should desire, and if from any cause you are tempted to marry before the settlements are signed, you will before the wedding write a letter to our solicitors contracting to settle on C. all her fortune coming to her eventually." On the 16th January the plaintiff accordingly wrote to the solicitor: "In the event of my marriage with Miss W. taking place before the settlements are ready, I agree to Miss W.'s fortune being settled on herself." The marriage took place next day without any settlement or any further agreement or articles having been signed:—Held, that the marriage must be presumed to have taken place in reliance by C. W. upon the plaintiff's letter, and that there was a contract to settle C.'s property signed by the parties to be charged. Reference accordingly to chambers to settle a proper settlement. Viret v. Viret, 17 L. R., Ch. D., 365. n.; 50 L. J., Ch., 69; 43 L. T. 493.

2. The father of a lady wrote to her intended husband that he and his wife had determined to settle on their daughter 2,000*l.*, and that in addition she would have 2,000*l.* on her mother's death, and at least as much on her father's death. Eleven months afterwards the marriage took place; and on that occasion a formal agreement for a settlement of 2,000*l.* was executed, the letter not being in any way referred to. The mother died sixteen years and the father died twenty-five years after the marriage. The husband then claimed from the father's estate 4,000*l.* under the promises contained in the letter:—Held, that the letter had, under the circumstances, been superseded by the agreement for a settlement, and claim disallowed. Re Badcock, Kingdon v. Tagert, 17 L. R., Ch. D., 361; 43 L. T. 688; 29 W. R. 278.

I. COVENANTS TO BEQUEATH.

3. Covenant in marriage articles, "to leave wife a moiety of personal estate at his death": —Held, to apply to his property at the time of the articles. Webster v. Milford, 2 Eq. Abr. 362.

4. By covenant in a marriage settlement, the husband was bound to give, by his last will or otherwise, to his children in equal shares, all his real estates other than a settled estate and personal property:—Held, that the covenant bound only such real estate as he should die seised of; and that the covenant bound shares of the settled estate, which the husband became entitled to by a devise from a child who died in his lifetime. The children living at the death of the husband were alone entitled to the benefit of the covenant. Needham v. Smith, 4 Russ. 318; 6 L. J., Ch., 107.

5. By marriage articles M. S. covenanted that he would, at his death, leave and devise to W. S., his heirs, executors, etc., all such property, real and personal, as he should then be possessed of, or entitled unto, charged with a jointure for his wife, and with pecuniary legacies not exceeding 1,000*l.*; and that the eldest son of the marriage should have and be entitled under 400*l.* a year, to issue out of, and be charged upon all and singular the real and personal estates which M. S. or W. S., or either of them, should be seised and possessed of or entitled unto, subject to sum of 2,000*l.* for the younger children of the marriage:—Held, that by the proper construction of this covenant, it bound only the estates real and personal of M. S. at his death after payment of his debts, and the jointure and the legacy of 1,000*l.* Ennis v. Smith, Jon. & C. 400.

6. The testator, upon the marriage of his daughter C., covenanted to make her fortune equal to that of any one of his five other daughters. By his will he gave to C. absolutely a provision equal to that which he gave to any one of his other five daughters and their issue; but the fortunes bequeathed to these five daughters were limited to them for life only, with remainder to their issue; and in case any one of the five should die without leaving issue, her share was to go to the others of the four daughters and their issue, in the same manner as their original shares. One of the five died without issue:—Held, the provision for C. being given to her absolutely, she thereby takes an equivalent in value to the contingent interests which the five daughters took in each other's share, and she is therefore not entitled to claim any further provision in respect of the benefit derived by the four daughters from the share of the fifth daughter, who died without issue. Clegg v. Clegg, 2 Russ. & M. 570.

7. Under an agreement executed previously to the intended marriage, "that in case one or either of the parties survives the other, the survivor shall, in case of issue, leave the said issue two-thirds of whatever property may remain, retaining one-third, or, to be more specific, that if the husband survived he should settle two-thirds of the property he may possess; and if the wife survived, she should settle and hand over two-thirds of any property remaining at the time":—Held, that the wife surviving was entitled to one-third of all the property, and was bound to hand over two-thirds immediately to the children. M'Donnell v. M'Donnell, 2 Con. & L. 481; 4 Dr. & War. 376.

If the husband had survived, his obligation would have been confined to a disposition by will. Ib.

1. A father, upon the marriage of his daughter, covenanted with the husband, his executors, etc., by deed or will to give, leave, and bequeath unto his (the covenantor's) daughter, an equal share with his other children of all the real and personal estate of which he should die seised or possessed. The daughter died in the lifetime of the father, and the father, having made some disposition of property in favour of a son in his lifetime, by his will devised and bequeathed his real and personal estate for the benefit of his widow and surviving daughters:—Held, by the Court of Common Pleas, and by this Court, concurring in the certificate, that the husband and covenantee had not, under the circumstances, any good cause of action against the executor of the father; and that if the father had died possessed of no personal estate, the husband could not have recovered any substantial damages in such action. Jones v. Howe, 7 Hare 267; 19 L. J., N. S., Ch., 324; 14 Jur. 145. And see S. C. at law, 9 C. B. Rep. 1.

2. A father on the marriage of his daughter A., gave her husband 1,500*l.* for her present portion or fortune, and he covenanted that, in case he should give his other daughter B., on her marriage or otherwise, a greater portion or fortune than 1,500*l.* in money or value, his executors would, within a year after the death of himself and wife, pay or deliver to the husband of A. such further or other sum or property as would be equal with the portion or fortune given to B. The father, on the marriage of B., gave her a portion of 1,500*l.*, and by his will, after charging his real estate with the payment of his debts, gave B. his furniture and a life interest for her separate use in some freehold and leasehold property:—Held, that the life interest was within the covenant, but the furniture not; and, secondly, that a debt of this nature was charged on the real estate. Eardly v. Owen, 10 Beav. 572; 11 Jur. 1047; 17 L. J., N. S., Ch., 67.

3. Covenant on her marriage, to make provision for daughter, by will or otherwise, as great as testator should, by will or otherwise, provide for his other children:—Held, that proportion did not extend to any advancement made for other children during lifetime of testator. Willis v. Black, 1 Sim. & S. 525; 2 L. J., Ch., 131.

P. B., on his daughter's marriage, settled a sum of money on her and her husband, and their issue, and, after reciting that he had agreed to make a further provision for his daughter equal to his younger children, covenanted to settle, by his will or otherwise, on the husband and wife, and their issue, as great a share of his property as he should, by his will or otherwise, provide for any of his other younger children, to take effect on the death of the survivor of himself and wife; and if he died intestate, or omitted to make such provision, that his executors should pay to the trustees as great a share of his property as any of his younger children should in that event become entitled to:—Held, that the trustees had a claim upon the executors in respect of subsequent advancements by the settlor to his other younger children in his lifetime, and not merely for a provision equal to that which any of the other children became entitled to at his death. S. C. on appeal, 4 Russ. 170; 7 L. J., Ch., 3.

4. A father joined in a settlement executed on the marriage of his daughter, which contained a recital that he was desirous to give her, as a marriage portion, such sum or child's share as he might be entitled to dispose of, which child's share it was calculated would be at the least 5,000*l.*, but the same or the precise amount could not be ascertained until his death, and the intended husband, who had a power to jointure to the amount of 10*l.* per cent. on the fortune which he should receive with his wife appointed a jointure of 500*l.* a year, which was also collaterally secured on other land not the subject of the power. The daughter died in the father's lifetime:—Held, that the recital amounted to an absolute covenant that his daughter should have, on his death, an equal share of his personal estate with his other children. Duckett v. Gordon, 11 Ir. Ch. R. 181.

Held, also, that the obligation was not discharged by the daughter's death in his lifetime. Ib.

Held, also, in calculating the amount payable under the covenant, sums advanced to other children by the father in his lifetime should be taken in account, and be added to the assets. Ib.

Held, also, that interest should not be calculated on the sums so advanced. Ib.

5. A letter, addressed to the intended husband of the writer's daughter, contained the words, "she shall be entitled to her share in whatever property I may die possessed of":—Held, that the daughter and her husband were entitled only to the share of the personalty which the daughter would have taken in case of intestacy. Laver v. Fielder, 1 N. R. 188; 33 Beav. 1; 11 W. R. 245; 7 L. T., N. S., 602; 9 Jur., N. S., 190; 32 L. J., Ch., 365.

6. A covenant in a marriage settlement that the wife shall, out of the property of which the husband shall die seised or possessed, receive an annuity, only binds the residue of his property after payment of debts. Rowan v. Chute, 13 Ir. Ch. R. 169.

7. Covenant by A. to bequeath to B. by will "one full fourth part of the real and personal estate whatsoever of or to which A." should, at the time of his death, be entitled, and in default, that his heirs and executors should immediately after his death convey "one full fourth part" of it:—Held, upon the context, to mean one fourth in value, and not one undivided fourth of every item of property in specie. Bell v. Clarke, 25 Beav. 437; 27 L. J., Ch., 674; 4 Jur., N. S., 499; 6 W. R. 476.

8. A father covenanted, at his daughter's marriage, to leave her at his death a full and equal share of his personal estate with his son; he began and continued for some years to sell real estates, and vested the produce in bank stock, together with the produce of his personal estate, the whole of which he transferred into his son's name, who verbally promised to pay the father the dividends for life. The son sold out the bank stock, and invested produce in India stock, which produced a greater interest, but paid his father only the amount of former interest

The father died, and left personalty only to a small amount. The India stock held liable to the articles. Jones v. Martin, 6 Bro. P. C. 437.

1. A., in consideration of the intended marriage of his niece, entered into a bond, with a penalty conditioned to give by will or otherwise, unto or in trust for her or the issue of the intended marriage, so much in money or in valuable effects, as he should by his will give or bequeath to any one of his next of kin, or to any other person whomsoever:—Held, that this condition was not to be satisfied by the penalty, but must be specifically performed. All voluntary assignments and transfers of personal property, and all conveyances of real estate purchased subsequently to the date of the bond, in which real estate or personal property the obligor retained a life interest, were declared to be in the nature of testamentary dispositions, to be considered in equity, for the purpose of giving effect to the true intent of the agreement in the bond, as if the said estates had been given or devised by the obligor's will. The persons entitled to the benefit of the bond were declared to be specialty creditors upon the obligor's estate, for satisfaction of their claims under the bond. Logan v. Wienholt, 1 Cl. & F. 611; 7 Bli. N. S. 1.

2. Where a settlor intimated his wish to settle a certain sum, part of a particular share of property, which he specified, but that share did not prove of so much value as the sum he wished to settle, his general estate held not liable to make good the difference. Evans v. Wyatt, 10 W. R. 813; 7 L. T., N. S., 86; 31 Beav. 217; 8 Jur., N. S., 449.

3. A father, on a treaty for his eldest son's marriage, promised, by letter, to settle a sum of money forthwith, and to recognise his son, in common with the rest of his family, in the future provisions of his will. The sum of money was settled and the marriage took place on the faith of the representation in the letter. By his will the testator made a substantial provision for his son, but much less than equal to those made for his other children:—Held, that the promise was so vague as to the amount, that, consistently with it, the testator might leave all his property to a stranger, and that the promise was satisfied by the provision in the will and codicil. Kay v. Crook, 3 Sm. & G. 407; 3 Jur., N. S., 104.

4. Covenant in settlement to leave by will satisfied by legacy to amount, though followed by general direction for payment of debts. Wathen v. Smith, 4 Madd. 236, 325.

5. A covenant to bequeath a sum of money constitutes a specialty debt against the covenantor's estate, and is not satisfied by the mere insertion of such a bequest in his will. Graham v. Wickham, 9 Jur., N. S., 702; 11 W. R. 1009; 8 L. T., N. S., 679; 31 Beav. 447; 2 N. R. 410; 1 De G. & S. 474.

The covenantee being the son of the covenantor, the covenant is not satisfied by an appointment under a power to appoint to children contained in the covenantor's marriage settlement. Ib.

6. A., on the marriage of his daughter, covenanted that in certain events (which happened) he would by his will, or otherwise, in his lifetime, give or charge upon all his real or personal estate (except his share in certain real hereditaments), of or to which he might be seised, or possessed, or entitled at or immediately before his decease, 3000*l.*, upon certain trusts, for the benefit of his daughter and her issue. He accordingly bequeathed to the trustees, in satisfaction of this covenant, a legacy of 3,000*l.* Upon his death his estate proved insufficient:—Held, that the trustees were entitled, not as legatees merely, but as specialty creditors against the estate. Eyre v. Munro, 3 Kay & J. 305; 3 Jur., N. S., 584; 26 L. J., Ch., 757; 5 W. R. 870.

7. A person who has covenanted to bequeath or otherwise provide that a share of his estate shall go to the covenantee, fulfils his covenant by bequeathing the share to the covenantee, who then stands in the same position as any other legatee. Jervis v. Wolferstan, 18 L. R., Eq., 18; 43 L. J., Ch., 809; 30 L. T., N. S., 452.

A testator had covenanted to leave by will or otherwise provide for his daughter one-third of the residuary estate; he bequeathed one-third to her, which was settled on her marriage and paid to the trustees of her marriage settlement:—Held, that the testator had satisfied his covenant; that the daughter took her share, not as a creditor, but as a residuary legatee, and that her trustees must refund the amount with the other residuary legatees. Ib.

8. S. conveyed certain real estate to M., his natural daughter, and covenanted for payment after his death by his heirs, executors, and administrators to M. of 500*l.* out of his real and personal estate, thereby charging all his real and personal estate with the payment; and in case the personal estate should prove insufficient and default should be made in payment within a reasonable time, M. was empowered to enter upon all or any part of the real estate of which he should die seised, and retain the rents until the 500*l.* had been satisfied. S. subsequently conveyed the remainder of his real estate to his son J., in consideration of natural love and affection:—Held, that the real estate conveyed to J. was not liable to payment of the 500*l.*, and that M. was entitled to payment out of the personal estate, and if that was insufficient out of the real estate (if any) of which S. died seised. Watson v. Argile, 30 L. T. 215.

9. By articles executed on the marriage of his daughter, a father covenanted to give, by will, to trustees, a child's share or equal part of all the real and personal estate of which he should die possessed, to the use of the husband for life, remainder to the daughter for life, remainder to the children of the marriage as the husband and wife or the survivor should appoint, and, in default of appointment, to the children in equal shares, with benefit of survivorship in case of the death of any one or more of the children under twenty-one without issue, and if but one such child the whole to such one child, with remainder over. The father made his will in the terms of the covenant. Only one child of the marriage attained twenty-one, and he died intestate and unmarried before the testator:—Held, that this child took no interest under the will or under the covenant. Re Brookman, 18 W. R. 199. Reversing 38 L. J., Ch., 585; 17 W. R. 818.

Satisfaction of, in case of Children.] See PORTION, XI. 1. 3.

II. COVENANTS TO LEAVE PROPERTY AS UPON AN INTESTACY.

1. A covenant to settle on particular persons all the covenantor's personal estate, subject only, nevertheless, and without prejudice to any other dispositions, qualifications, or changes, which he should make by his will of or concerning the same or any part thereof, is only a provision for a case of intestacy, and does not prevent the covenantor from bequeathing the whole of his personal estate to other persons. Stocken v. Stocken, 4 Myl. & C. 95; 7 L. J., N. S., Ch., 305; 2 Jur. 693; 4 Sim. 152. And see 2 Myl. & K. 489.

2. Covenant to leave a portion of the personal estate, as upon an intestacy, does not prevent the covenantor's expending the whole; or admit his reserving part for his own benefit, nor consequently vesting it in land. Cochran v. Graham, 19 Ves. 66.

3. Father, under covenant for an equal division at death, of all the property he should die seised or possessed of, between his two daughters or their families, though he retains the power of free disposition by act in his life, cannot defeat the covenant by a disposition in effect testamentary, as by reserving to himself an interest for life. Fortescue v. Hennah, 19 Ves. 67.

III. COVENANTS BY HUSBAND OR WIFE.

1. What Property Included, 6187.
2. Lien of, 6188.
3. Further Security by Husband, 6189.
4. How Enforced, 6189.
5. Proof on in Bankruptcy. See BANKRUPTCY, XXIV. xxvii.

1. What Property Included.

4. A., on his marriage, covenanted that if his wife should die before him, leaving issue of their bodies, he would pay, etc., to and for such issue one-third part of all his chattels, real and personal, which at the death of his wife he should be possessed of, to be divided between them; if more than one, as he should direct. The wife died, leaving two daughters, and the husband, during the coverture, acquired some freehold leases for lives:—Held, that these leases were included in the covenant, but that daughters were not entitled to a division till after father's death, he being ordered to give security. Hankes v. Jones, 5 Bro. P. C. 136.

5. Effect of a contract on marriage by bond, to devise, convey, or assure all such goods, personal and effects, that the husband should at any time during the joint lives of him and his wife be possessed of, to the use of them and the survivor; attaching on capital, not income, unless laid up as capital; admitting, therefore, expenditure and debts, in a fair application of income, not liable to a minute account. On that principle an estate, purchased by the husband with money partly his own, partly borrowed on his personal security, and some paid off by him, was after his death held to belong, not to the trust, but to the heir, charged for the benefit of the trust with the money that was his own, the debts paid on account of that purchase, and expenditure in repairs, improvements, etc. Lewis v. Maddocks, 17 Ves. 48.

6. Bond executed on marriage of obligor conditioned to settle lands, "if he should become seised in possession," affects copyhold as well as freehold. Prebble v. Boghurst, 1 Swan. 580; 1 Wils. 161.

A bond conditional to settle lands, "if the obligor shall become seised," will not affect lands of which he is seised at the date of the bond. Id. 321.

J., on his marriage with S., executed bond in penalty of 2,000*l.*, with condition to be void if, in event of S. surviving J., his executors, etc., should, within three months after his decease, pay to trustees 1,000*l.* in trust for S.; and if, in event of J. surviving S., and there being any child or children of marriage living at decease of J., his executors, etc., should, within three months after his decease, pay to trustees 1,000*l.* in trust for such child or children; and further, if J. should, at any time during his natural life, become seised of any messuages, etc., in possession, and should settle same upon S. and issue of intended marriage, by such good conveyances in law as counsel should advise, in such parts and proportions, and to such use and uses, as should be thought requisite, better to make a provision for S. in case she should happen to survive J.; after death of S., J. having married again, and then, and not before, become seised of real estates, and having, at his death, left issue by both marriages, all real estates of which he became seised during his life were subject to obligation, and settled on issue of first marriage as tenants in common in fee. S. C. 1 Swan. 309; 1 Wils. 161.

7. A husband covenanted to settle the share of his wife and of himself "in her right" in the stocks comprised in her great-uncle's will. Under the will, the fund was limited to the husband, in case of his surviving his wife and her father, and of there being no issue:—Held, that the husband's interest was not comprised in his covenant. Ibbetson v. Grote, 25 Beav. 17.

8. By an ante-nuptial settlement, a trader covenanted with the trustees of it to pay them 3,000*l.* out of the first capital moneys, or real or capital personal estate, or capitalised income, of or to which he should be or become possessed or in anywise entitled after the solemnisation of the marriage, within six months after he should "have become" so possessed or entitled. The trader was at the time possessed of the stock in trade and effects exceeding in value 3,000*l.*, and so continued for more than six months after the date of the settlement, but did not after the marriage acquire additional property to that amount. He became bankrupt after the expiration of the six months:—Held, that the event contemplated by the covenant had happened before the bankruptcy, and that there was a breach of the covenant entitling the trustees to prove. Exp. Evans, 2 De G. M. & G. 948; 22 L. J., Bky., 5.

9. Under a marriage settlement real estate stood limited to H., the husband, for life, with remainder to the use of such of the children or issue of the marriage as he should by deed or will appoint; and in default of appoint-

The father died, and left personalty only to a small amount. The India stock held liable to the articles. Jones v. Martin, 6 Bro. P. C. 437.

1. A., in consideration of the intended marriage of his niece, entered into a bond, with a penalty conditioned to give by will or otherwise, unto or in trust for her or the issue of the intended marriage, so much in money or in valuable effects, as he should by his will give or bequeath to any one of his next of kin, or to any other person whomsoever:—Held, that this condition was not to be satisfied by the penalty, but must be specifically performed. All voluntary assignments and transfers of personal property, and all conveyances of real estate purchased subsequently to the date of the bond, in which real estate or personal property the obligor retained a life interest, were declared to be in the nature of testamentary dispositions, to be considered in equity, for the purpose of giving effect to the true intent of the agreement in the bond, as if the said estates had been given or devised by the obligor's will. The persons entitled to the benefit of the bond were declared to be specialty creditors upon the obligor's estate, for satisfaction of their claims under the bond. Logan v. Wienholt, 1 Cl. & F. 611; 7 Bli. N. S. 1.

2. Where a settlor intimated his wish to settle a certain sum, part of a particular share of property, which he specified, but that share did not prove of so much value as the sum he wished to settle, his general estate held not liable to make good the difference. Evans v. Wyatt, 10 W. R. 813; 7 L. T., N. S., 86; 31 Beav. 217; 8 Jur., N. S., 449.

3. A father, on a treaty for his eldest son's marriage, promised, by letter, to settle a sum of money forthwith, and to recognise his son, in common with the rest of his family, in the future provisions of his will. The sum of money was settled and the marriage took place on the faith of the representation in the letter. By his will the testator made a substantial provision for his son, but much less than equal to those made for his other children:—Held, that the promise was so vague as to the amount, that, consistently with it, the testator might leave all his property to a stranger, and that the promise was satisfied by the provision in the will and codicil. Kay v. Crook, 3 Sm. & G. 407; 3 Jur., N. S., 104.

4. Covenant in settlement to leave by will satisfied by legacy to amount, though followed by general direction for payment of debts. Wathen v. Smith, 4 Madd. 236, 325.

5. A covenant to bequeath a sum of money constitutes a specialty debt against the covenantor's estate, and is not satisfied by the mere insertion of such a bequest in his will. Graham v. Wickham, 9 Jur., N. S., 702; 11 W. R. 1009; 8 L. T., N. S., 679; 31 Beav. 447; 2 N. R. 410; 1 De G. & S. 474.

The covenantee being the son of the covenantor, the covenant is not satisfied by an appointment under a power to appoint to children contained in the covenantor's marriage settlement. Ib.

6. A., on the marriage of his daughter, covenanted that in certain events (which happened) he would by his will, or otherwise, in his lifetime, give or charge upon all his real or personal estate (except his share in certain real hereditaments), of or to which he might be seised, or possessed, or entitled at or immediately before his decease, 3000*l.*, upon certain trusts, for the benefit of his daughter and her issue. He accordingly bequeathed to the trustees, in satisfaction of this covenant, a legacy of 3,000*l.* Upon his death his estate proved insufficient:—Held, that the trustees were entitled, not as legatees merely, but as specialty creditors against the estate. Eyre v. Munro, 3 Kay & J. 305; 3 Jur., N. S., 584; 26 L. J., Ch., 757; 5 W. R. 870.

7. A person who has covenanted to bequeath or otherwise provide that a share of his estate shall go to the covenantee, fulfils his covenant by bequeathing the share to the covenantee, who then stands in the same position as any other legatee. Jervis v. Wolferstan, 18 L. R., Eq., 18; 43 L. J., Ch., 809; 30 L. T., N. S., 452.

A testator had covenanted to leave by will or otherwise provide for his daughter one-third of the residuary estate; he bequeathed one-third to her, which was settled on her marriage and paid to the trustees of her marriage settlement:—Held, that the testator had satisfied his covenant; that the daughter took her share, not as a creditor, but as a residuary legatee, and that her trustees must refund the amount with the other residuary legatees. Ib.

8. S. conveyed certain real estate to M., his natural daughter, and covenanted for payment after his death by his heirs, executors, and administrators to M. of 500*l.* out of his real and personal estate, thereby charging all his real and personal estate with the payment; and in case the personal estate should prove insufficient and default should be made in payment within a reasonable time, M. was empowered to enter upon all or any part of the real estate of which he should die seised, and retain the rents until the 500*l.* had been satisfied. S. subsequently conveyed the remainder of his real estate to his son J., in consideration of natural love and affection:—Held, that the real estate conveyed to J. was not liable to payment of the 500*l.*, and that M. was entitled to payment out of the personal estate, and if that was insufficient out of the real estate (if any) of which S. died seised. Watson v. Argile, 30 L. T. 215.

9. By articles executed on the marriage of his daughter, a father covenanted to give, by will, to trustees, a child's share or equal part of all the real and personal estate of which he should die possessed, to the use of the husband for life, remainder to the daughter for life, remainder to the children of the marriage as the husband and wife or the survivor should appoint, and, in default of appointment, to the children in equal shares, with benefit of survivorship in case of the death of any one or more of the children under twenty-one without issue, and if but one such child the whole to such one child, with remainder over. The father made his will in the terms of the covenant. Only one child of the marriage attained twenty-one, and he died intestate and unmarried before the testator:—Held, that this child took no interest under the will or under the covenant. Re Brookman, 18 W. R. 199. Reversing 38 L. J., Ch., 585; 17 W. R. 818.

Satisfaction of, in case of Children.] See PORTION, XI. 1. 3.

II. COVENANTS TO LEAVE PROPERTY AS UPON AN INTESTACY.

1. A covenant to settle on particular persons all the covenantor's personal estate, subject only, nevertheless, and without prejudice to any other dispositions, qualifications, or changes, which he should make by his will of or concerning the same or any part thereof, is only a provision for a case of intestacy, and does not prevent the covenantor from bequeathing the whole of his personal estate to other persons. Stooken v. Stooken, 4 Myl. & C. 95; 7 L. J., N. S., Ch., 305; 2 Jur. 693; 4 Sim. 152. And see 2 Myl. & K. 489.

2. Covenant to leave a portion of the personal estate, as upon an intestacy, does not prevent the covenantor's expending the whole; or admit his reserving part for his own benefit, nor consequently vesting it in land. Cochran v. Graham, 19 Ves. 66.

3. Father, under covenant for an equal division at death, of all the property he should die seised or possessed of, between his two daughters or their families, though he retains the power of free disposition by act in his life, cannot defeat the covenant by a disposition in effect testamentary, as by reserving to himself an interest for life. Fortescue v. Hennah, 19 Ves. 67.

III. COVENANTS BY HUSBAND OR WIFE.

1. What Property Included, 6187.
2. Lien of, 6188.
3. Further Security by Husband, 6189.
4. How Enforced, 6189.
5. Proof on in Bankruptcy. See BANKRUPTCY, XXIV. xxvii.

1. What Property Included.

4. A., on his marriage, covenanted that if his wife should die before him, leaving issue of their bodies, he would pay, etc., to and for such issue one-third part of all his chattels, real and personal, which at the death of his wife he should be possessed of, to be divided between them; if more than one, as he should direct. The wife died, leaving two daughters, and the husband, during the coverture, acquired some freehold leases for lives:—Held, that these leases were included in the covenant, but that daughters were not entitled to a division till after father's death, he being ordered to give security. Hankes v. Jones, 5 Bro. P. C. 136.

5. Effect of a contract on marriage by bond, to devise, convey, or assure all such goods, personal and effects, that the husband should at any time during the joint lives of him and his wife be possessed of, to the use of them and the survivor; attaching on capital, not income, unless laid up as capital; admitting, therefore, expenditure and debts, in a fair application of income, not liable to a minute account. On that principle an estate, purchased by the husband with money partly his own, partly borrowed on his personal security, and some paid off by him, was after his death held to belong, not to the trust, but to the heir, charged for the benefit of the trust with the money that was his own, the debts paid on account of that purchase, and expenditure in repairs, improvements, etc. Lewis v. Maddocks, 17 Ves. 48.

6. Bond executed on marriage of obligor conditioned to settle lands, "if he should become seised in possession," affects copyhold as well as freehold. Prebble v. Boghurst, 1 Swan. 580; 1 Wils. 161.

A bond conditional to settle lands, "if the obligor shall become seised," will not affect lands of which he is seised at the date of the bond. Id. 321.

J., on his marriage with S., executed bond in penalty of 2,000*l.*, with condition to be void if, in event of S. surviving J., his executors, etc., should, within three months after his decease, pay to trustees 1,000*l.* in trust for S.; and if, in event of J. surviving S., and there being any child or children of marriage living at decease of J., his executors, etc., should, within three months after his decease, pay to trustees 1,000*l.* in trust for such child or children; and further, if J. should, at any time during his natural life, become seised of any messuages, etc., in possession, and should settle same upon S. and issue of intended marriage, by such good conveyances in law as counsel should advise, in such parts and proportions, and to such use and uses, as should be thought requisite, better to make a provision for S. in case she should happen to survive J.; after death of S., J. having married again, and then, and not before, become seised of real estates, and having, at his death, left issue by both marriages, all real estates of which he became seised during his life were subject to obligation, and settled on issue of first marriage as tenants in common in fee. S. C. 1 Swan. 309; 1 Wils. 161.

7. A husband covenanted to settle the share of his wife and of himself "in her right" in the stocks comprised in her great-uncle's will. Under the will, the fund was limited to the husband, in case of his surviving his wife and her father, and of there being no issue:—Held, that the husband's interest was not comprised in his covenant. Ibbetson v. Grote, 25 Beav. 17.

8. By an ante-nuptial settlement, a trader covenanted with the trustees of it to pay them 3,000*l.* out of the first capital moneys, or real or capital personal estate, or capitalised income, of or to which he should be or become possessed or in anywise entitled after the solemnisation of the marriage, within six months after he should "have become" so possessed or entitled. The trader was at the time possessed of the stock in trade and effects exceeding in value 3,000*l.*, and so continued for more than six months after the date of the settlement, but did not after the marriage acquire additional property to that amount. He became bankrupt after the expiration of the six months:—Held, that the event contemplated by the covenant had happened before the bankruptcy, and that there was a breach of the covenant entitling the trustees to prove. Exp. Evans, 2 De G. M. & G. 948; 22 L. J., Bky., 5.

9. Under a marriage settlement real estate stood limited to H., the husband, for life, with remainder to the use of such of the children or issue of the marriage as he should by deed or will appoint; and in default of appointment, to the use of the children of the marriage equally as tenants in common in fee. There was issue of the marriage two children only, a son and a daughter. The daughter married, and by her marriage settlement she and her intended husband covenanted with the trustees for the conveyance and settlement of all property which she then was "seised of, or interested in, or entitled to," upon the trusts therein mentioned, including in effect reversionary interests. The daughter survived her husband, and thereupon H. by deed appointed the real estate comprised in the original settlement, subject to his life estate, to his son and daughter equally in fee, the daughter thus taking the same share as she would have taken in default of appointment: —Held, that inasmuch as the reversionary moiety appointed to the daughter constituted a new interest acquired by her subsequently to the date of her settlement, such moiety was not bound by the covenant in her marriage settlement. Sweetapple v. Horlock, 11 L. R., Ch. D., 745; 48 L. J., Ch., 660; 27 W. R. 865; 41 L. T. 272.

1. Where a man in his marriage settlement describes himself as entitled to an expectant estate in remainder in two pieces of land, and covenants that when "such remainder" in two pieces of land shall become vested in possession he will convey it to the uses of the settlement, if he becomes possessed of either of these pieces of land by a title different from that described in the settlement, the covenant will not attach upon it. Smith v. Osborne, 6 H. L. Ca. 375; 3 Jur., N. S., 1181; 6 W. R. 21.

A marriage settlement of C. contained a recital that he was entitled, under the will of his grandfather, to a contingent remainder in property. In a subsequent part of the deed there was a covenant by him, "as soon as the remainder should become vested in possession in him," to assure the same to the uses of the settlement. The settlement incorrectly recited the effect of the will, the interest of C. under it being that of an expectant heir in tail. The tenant in tail, however, barred the entail, and subsequently devised the property to the covenantor. On a bill to enforce the covenant:—Held, that C. having acquired the estate under a title aliunde, and not under the will of his grandfather, the covenant did not attach, and he was not therefore bound to convey the estate. Ib.

2. A covenant in a settlement to settle all the property of the wife of which she was possessed at the date thereof includes property to which she was entitled jointly with other persons in remainder after an estate in tail, though the covenant was in terms only the covenant of the husband and not of the wife, and though the recitals in the settlement specified property to which the wife was entitled in expectancy, but did not allude to this particular interest. Caldwell v. Fellowes, 39 L. J., Ch., 618.

3. A marriage settlement contained a covenant, that if the wife then was, or should at any time during the coverture become, entitled to any real or personal property of the value of 400*l.*, for any estate or interest whatsoever, it should be settled upon certain trusts. At the date of the settlement, the wife was entitled, on the death of her mother, to a share in stock in her own right, and a further share as one of the next of kin of a deceased brother. The value of the two shares taken together was above 400*l.*, but the value of the wife's reversionary interest in them at the date of the settlement was much less than 400*l.* On the death of the mother, the husband and wife presented a petition to have the two shares paid to the husband:—Held, first, that the share in the trust fund was included in the first part of the covenant, as property to which the wife was entitled at the time of her marriage. Re Mackenzie, 2 L. R., Ch., 345; 36 L. J., Ch., 320; 15 W. R. 662; 16 L. T., N. S., 138.

Held, secondly, that the covenant referred to the value of the property, not to the value of the wife's reversionary interest in it. Ib.

Held, thirdly, that, in estimating the value of the share, the aggregate value of the two sums must be taken, and not the value of each sum separately. Ib.

2. Lien of.

4. One agrees, before marriage, to settle certain lands on his wife for life, and afterwards devises these lands for payment of his debts; the covenant is a specific lien on the lands: secus, had it been only an agreement to settle so much per annum without mentioning any lands in certain. Fremoult v. Dedire, 1 P. W. 429.

5. A., on his marriage, gave a bond of 600*l.*, with a warrant of attorney to confess judgment thereon, defeasance on payment of 300*l.* to his wife, if she survived. Afterwards, she joined him in conveyance by fine of his real estate:—Held, that this extinguished her right, or any lien created by this judgment on the real estate. Goodrick v. Shotbolt, Pre. Ch. 333; Gilb. Eq. Rep. 18.

6. By a settlement A. is made tenant for life, remainder to the heirs of his body by his wife; and in the same deed A. covenants not to suffer a recovery, but that the lands shall be enjoyed according to those limitations; afterwards A. suffers a recovery, and devises the lands. On a bill brought for specific performance of the covenant, it was decreed that the lands devised were not affected, though the covenant was good to bind the assets; and such covenant being at first accepted, equity ought not to vary or alter it. Collins v. Plummer, 1 P. W. 104. See also Bovil v. Brander, id. 461.

7. A party entitled as equitable tenant in tail, under a settlement, in which is a covenant to convey lands to the uses of such settlement; afterwards, and upon his own marriage, covenants also to convey lands of less value. Though he obtains a decree for the execution of the first-mentioned covenant, the second covenant is no lien in equity upon the lands so decreed to be conveyed. Gardner v. Townshend (Marquis), Coop. 301.

8. On a bill filed to raise a sum of 2,000*l.*, which A. had on his marriage specifically charged not only on the real estates which he then had in his possession, but also on all his after-acquired real and personal estate, Lord Manners decreed that the same was a valid charge affecting the after-acquired property in the event of the lands specifically named in the settlement (which were declared to be the primary fund) not being sufficient, and was given a priority accordingly. Gubbins v. Gubbins, 1 Dr. & Wal. 160. n.

1. A. being entitled to a moiety of an estate covenanted to settle it on himself for life, with remainder to his wife and children. He afterwards acquired the other moiety, and mortgaged the entirety to B., who having no notice, obtained priority over the wife and children of A. By the will of B. the mortgage was given to C. for life, with remainder to A. absolutely. A. died, and C., by virtue of the mortgage, received the rents of the entirety to the disappointment of the wife and children of A. C. afterwards died:—Held, that the widow and children of A. had no equity as against the general creditors of A. to have a lien on the second moiety of the estate, to recoup the loss sustained by them by C.'s receiving the rents of the moiety of the estate bound by the settlement from the death of A. to the death of C., but that they must come in as specialty creditors under the covenant. Aldridge v. Westbrook, 5 Beav. 188.

2. Where the husband, having estates in the counties of O. and B., covenanted, on his marriage, to settle such part of them, of the value of —l., as should secure a jointure to the wife of 800*l*., to be charged thereon; but never having executed the settlement, he, by his will, confirmed the covenant, and devised his estates in O. and B. to his wife for life, but afterwards, by deed, revoked his will as to the estates in O., which descended, on his death, to the heir-at-law:—Held, that the covenant operated to charge, and that the estates both in O. and B. were liable to contribute ratably in satisfaction of the covenant, and that the jointress could not claim to be entitled to the estate in B., exempt therefrom, in the absence of any intention on the face of the will to benefit her to that extent. Eyre v. Green, 2 Colly. 527; 10 Jur. 184.

3. Where a bankrupt had an interest in a trust fund settled on his marriage, and was also under a covenant to pay a sum to the trustees of that fund upon the trusts of the settlement, the trustees may make his interest in the fund settled available in satisfaction of his covenant, and if that interest is contingent they may sell it. Exp. Gonne, Re March, 3 Mont. & A. 166; Dea. 278; 6 L. J., N. S., Bky., 57.

4. A., upon his marriage, executed to the trustees of his marriage settlement a bond, and also a mortgage of his estates at S.; for securing to them a sum of 15,000*l*., the trusts of which were declared to be for A. for life, and afterwards for the benefit of his wife and children. A., not having paid this sum at the time specified in the bond, without notice to the trustees assigned his life interest therein to B.; as a security for the repayment of a debt due from A. to B. A. having afterwards become bankrupt, B. filed his bill against the trustees and the assignees under the bankruptcy, to obtain the benefit of security; and a decree was made in that suit, directing the life interest of A. in the 15,000*l*. to be sold, and the produce to be paid to B. In the course of the proceedings in the bankruptcy, the assignees sold the S. estates, but the proceeds of the sale did not amount to 15,000*l*.:—Held, that the trustees were entitled, as against B., to retain the annual produce of the sum for which the S. estates were actually sold, until the whole of the 15,000*l*. should be reinstated. Smith v. Smith, 1 Y. & Coll. 338.

5. Immediately before a marriage the intended husband signed a memorandum agreeing that certain bonds (in the memorandum called stocks), which were part of the wife's property, should be transferred to her and her son by a former marriage in trust for her, "neither party having power to dispose of the stocks without consent of both parties to such disposal." After the marriage the husband obtained possession of part of these bonds without the consent of the son, and disposed of them:—Held, that the husband was liable to make good the amount of the bonds so disposed of by him, and that the wife and her trustee were entitled to a lien for the amount upon all her other property which remained in specie, and that the amount must be settled. Hastie v. Hastie, 2 L. R., Ch. D., 304; 34 L. T. 747; 24 W. R. 564. Affirming 24 W. R. 242.

3. Further Security by Husband.

6. One covenants on marriage articles to pay 1,000*l*. within six months after his death, and, after growing old and infirm, covenantee would have obliged him to have given security; but the Court held that it could not alter the agreement of the parties, or make it better than they themselves had; and though executors might be obliged to give better security for legacies payable in future, that is because they are in nature of trustees, and there is no agreement one way or another. Warrington v. Langham, Pre. Ch. 89.

7. Covenant by a trader, on his marriage, in case of death or failure in his circumstances, to repay the trustee 1,000*l*., which was his wife's fortune, which was paid to him, with the usual covenant for further assurance. Being applied to by the trustee before the event, he granted a mortgage to secure the 1,000*l*., and soon after a commission of bankruptcy issued against him:—Held, on petition in the matter, by the mortgagee, to take the account on foot of his mortgage, that the mortgage, even if not affected by contemplation of bankruptcy, was void as nudum pactum, the trustee having no right to sue, except in the two events, the covenant for further assurance not extending to a new security, but only to effectuate the actual agreement; and the deed not containing a provision that the trader should be at liberty, if so minded, to give a further security; but the petition was not dismissed: but to terminate the question, the order that petitioner should be at liberty to prove, and take a dividend ratably with the other creditors, was made, without requiring another petition to be presented. Exp. Robinson, 1 Moll. 291.

4. How Enforced.

8. Covenant in consideration of marriage, to settle lands of 350*l*. per annum on husband and wife, and issue male of the marriage, remainder to the brothers of the husband, equity will enforce specific performance, and not put party to an action of covenant in the trustees' name. Vernon v. Vernon, 2 P. W. 594.

1. Where obligee sues in equity for specific performance of bond to settle estates, defendant, obligor, cannot insist on his suing at law to recover the penalty merely. Hopson v. Trevor, 1 Stra. 533.

2. Feme gives a bond to her intended husband, that in case of their marriage, she will convey her lands to him in fee; they intermarry; the wife dies without issue, and then husband dies. The bond, though void in law, is yet good evidence of an agreement in equity, and the heir of the husband shall obtain specific performance against the heir of the wife. Cannel v. Buckle, 2 P. W. 243.

A feme infant seised in fee, on marriage with consent of her guardians, covenants in consideration of a settlement to convey her inheritance to her husband: if done in consideration of a competent settlement, equity will enforce it, though no action would lie at law to recover damages. Ib.

3. A man, on his marriage, covenants to purchase and settle lands of 400*l.* a year, to the use of himself for life, then to his wife for life, remainder to the heirs of their two bodies; and if he died before a settlement, the wife might elect either to have the 400*l.* a year, or 3,000*l.* in money, in lieu of dower and thirds. The husband dies before a settlement made. On a bill by the creditors, the wife, by answer, elects the 3,000*l.*, and the children insist on having a settlement made according to the articles expectant on their mother's death, by which means all the assets would be exhausted:—Decreed, a settlement to be made on the wife and children, notwithstanding the election. Hancock v. Hancock, 2 Vern. 605.

4. A., being indebted 700*l.*, agrees, on his marriage, to settle lands of 100*l.* a year on himself for life, remainder to his wife for her jointure, remainder in tail upon their issue:—Decreed, the land to be sold to pay the 700*l.*, and the surplus of the money to be laid out in the purchase of lands, to be settled on the wife and her children; but this decree was reversed on a bill for review, there being no provision made for the husband in the lands to be purchased. Carpenter v. Bennet, 1 Vern. 203.

5. A. covenanted, on marriage, that within a month he would surrender his copyhold to his wife for life, remainder over; and if he neglected, then that he would leave his wife 500*l.* at his death. The husband made no surrender, but died after the month without assets:—Decreed, the heir to surrender. Wood v. Pesey, 5 Vin. Abr. 547, pl. 36.

6. A. covenants for himself and his heirs, that he will purchase lands, and settle the same on himself for life; remainder to wife for life; remainder to himself in fee. Equity will compel the executor to lay out the money, though the heir is both debtor and creditor. Leohmere v. Carlisle, 3 P. W. 224.

7. A. covenants by marriage articles, that estate agreed to be settled is worth 500*l.* per annum, and to purchase other lands worth 300*l.* per annum, and settle them to the same uses. The new purchase was never made, and the estate settled was incumbered beyond its value:—Held, that, out of the purchase money of A.'s estate not settled, so much shall be paid to eldest son as is equivalent in value to 800*l.* per annum computed at twenty-two years' purchase. Barker v. Ivers, 5 Bro. P. C. 127.

8. In agreements, no relief in equity where an action at law would not lie by reason of a substantial defect, such as a contingency not happening. Husband covenants in marriage articles, in six months after the death of his mother, and that he should come to and be in possession of the estate in jointure, to settle, etc. He dies in mother's life, having no issue. The estate comes to his heir, who shall not be compelled by the wife to a specific performance. Whitmel v. Farrel, 1 Ves. 256.

9. A husband by a deed to which the wife was a party, covenants to assign a contingent portion of the wife's to the uses of the marriage. The husband dies without calling in the portion. The wife is bound by the covenant. Bush v. Dalway, 1 Ves. 19.

By settlement on the marriage of A. with C., in case there was no issue male, and there should be daughters living at the death of the father, who should attain twenty-one, or be married, then such daughters should have 2,000*l.* a piece. There were three daughters and no sons. Defendant, one of the daughters, married D., and previous to his marriage, he covenanted to assign (with the wife's consent) 500*l.* to trustees in trust, after the death of D. and the defendant to pay it amongst the children of the bodies of defendant and D., and that he should, after the marriage, assign to the trustees all the moneys and securities for it, then due and belonging to defendant. A. died in 1744. D. died in 1745 intestate, to whom defendant administered and received the 2,000*l.*:—Held, that the children, who were a son and daughter, have a right to the portion, which was decreed to be secured for their benefit, though under the articles the real estate was in the mother's power and vested in her in tail, yet in equity it is to be carried into strict settlement to the wife for life, then to the first, etc., sons in tail, and in default of issue male to daughters. S. C. nom. Bash v. Dalway, 3 Atk. 530.

10. The testator, in the settlement of an estate, reserved to himself an election as to parcels, and afterwards, by indenture, he was to have an option of paying a certain sum within twenty-four calendar months. Not having elected in his lifetime, and his personal estate being inadequate to payment of his debts, the estate covenanted shall be conveyed. Tyssen v. Benyon, 2 Bro. C. C. 5.

11. Defendant who had covenanted to pay a sum of money to trustees of his marriage settlement, but had omitted to do so, ordered on motion in suit for performance of trusts, to pay money into court. Rothwell v. Rothwell, 2 Sim. & S. 217.

12. One, upon his marriage, covenants to levy a fine of his freehold lands, and to surrender his copyhold to the use of himself and wife for their lives, remainder to the heirs male of his body, and dies, leaving issue a son and a daughter, before any fine levied, or surrender made. The son, for securing money, covenants to levy a fine of freehold, and to surrender copyhold, and by will devises his lands for payment of his debts, and dies without issue, having surrendered copyhold, but levied no fine of freehold. On a bill by daughter to have lands settled according to marriage agreement, decreed both freehold and copyhold to the daughter. White v. Thornburgh, 2 Vern. 702.

Upon a re-hearing before Lord Chancellor Cowper, he confirmed the decree as to the freehold, but for different reasons; and as to the copyhold, there appearing no particular custom within the manor for suffering a recovery, he was of opinion the surrender would bar the entail, in case the copyhold had been well settled, and dismissed the bill as to the copyhold. Id. 704.

1. Covenant by husband in consideration of —l. (the purchase money of an estate of his wife) within two years, to convey lands in the county of N., of the value of such purchase-money, by way of settlement. The husband having died without performing the covenant, performance of the same decreed against his representatives, by laying out, in the purchase of lands so to be settled, a sum equal to the present value of the estates in N., which (at the time when the covenant ought to have been performed) should have been worth the amount of the purchase money, with interest at 4 per cent. from the death of the covenantor. Sheffield (Lady) v. Sheffield (Lord), 3 Meriv. 699.

2. By an ante-nuptial settlement, reciting that the husband had agreed to secure to the wife, after his death, an annual sum or rent-charge of 300*l.* to be issuing out of the hereditaments thereinafter charged therewith, and of or to which he was entitled or seised in fee simple, the husband granted the annual sum or rent charge of 300*l.* to the wife in case she should survive him, to be issuing out of specified hereditaments and all other the hereditaments in specified parishes, of or to which he, or any persons in trust for him, was or were seised or entitled for any estate of inheritance at law or in equity; and he covenanted that it should be lawful for the grantee, when the rent charge was in arrear, to distrain on the premises. He also granted and demised the premises for a term to secure the annuity:—Held, that the terms of the deed amounted to a covenant, and created a debt payable out of the husband's personal assets. Monypenny v. Monypenny, 3 De G. & J. 572; 5 Jur., N. S., 253; 28 L. J., Ch., 303.

3. On an assignment by way of settlement of a reversionary interest in trust funds, the settlor covenanted that he and all persons claiming through him would, upon the request of the trustees of the settlement, do all acts necessary for further assuring the premises to the trustees. The settlor afterwards obtained possession of the premises, and died, after applying the same for his own use:—Held, that the trustees were entitled to prove for the amount of the settled funds, as for a specialty debt. Re Dickson, Blackburn v. Dickson, 40 L. J., Ch., 707; 12 L. R., Eq., 154; 25 L. T., N. S., 118.

4. By an ante-nuptial agreement, signed by the intended husband and wife and the parents of the wife, the parents agreed to appoint a share of real estate (which was subject to their life interest and to the appointment of them and the survivor of them) to the wife, and the husband agreed that he would settle his wife's reversionary share of the real estate upon the usual trusts for the husband and wife, and their children. The wife's father having survived her mother, released the power and granted the estate after his death, giving his daughter a share. The wife predeceased the husband, and left two children. The property being still reversionary, an action was brought by the husband and one of the children against the other child, the wife's heir-at-law, for specific performance of the agreement:—Held, that the agreement bound the wife, as having assented to her father's stipulation, and also her heir-at-law, and specific performance decreed accordingly. Lee v. Lee, 4 L. R., Ch. D., 175; 46 L. J., Ch., 81; 36 L. T. 138; 25 W. R. 225.

IV. COVENANTS BY PARENTS.

1. Lien of, 6191.
2. How Enforced, 6193.
3. Proof on in Bankruptcy. See BANKRUPTCY, XXIV. xxvii.

1. Lien of.

5. A father covenanted at his daughter's marriage to leave her at his death a full and equal share of his personal estate with his son; he began and continued for some years to sell real estates, and vested the produce in bank stock, together with the produce of his personal estate, the whole of which he transferred into his son's name, who verbally promised to pay the father the dividends for life. The son sold out the bank stock, and invested produce in India stock, which produced a greater interest, but paid his father only the amount of former interest. The father died, and left personalty to a small amount. The India stock held liable to the articles. Jones v. Martin, 6 Bro. P. C. 437.

6. A., on the marriage of his son, covenants for himself and his executors, without naming his heirs, to settle lands of 150*l.* a year on his son, and the issue of the marriage, but dies before any settlement made. The son enters on the rent estate as heir to his father, and settles it for the jointure of a second wife, who has no notice of the articles:—Decreed, the articles to be a lien upon the lands, whereof the father was then seised, though no particular lands are mentioned in the articles. Roundell v. Breary, 2 Vern. 482.

7. A father being seised of estates in tail and in fee, on his daughter's marriage covenanted with two trustees, one of whom was his son, to pay an annuity to his daughter out of the rents and income of his real and personal estates, and by deed or will to settle an estate of 200*l.* a year, or, at his own election, 4,000*l.* in lieu of it, on certain trusts for the benefit of his daughter, and her husband, and their issue. By a subsequent deed the father and son, no other person being a party, agreed to suffer a recovery of the entailed estates, and to sell them, and also the fee-simple estates, and that out of the proceeds the father's debts (for some of which the son was surety) should be paid, and that certain sums should be taken by the father and son for their own use; and that 4,000*l.* should be paid, and provision made for the annuity, pursuant to the covenant on the daughter's marriage. A recovery was accordingly suffered, and the estates were limited to the father and son in fee. The father and son afterwards agreed to abandon the last-mentioned agreement, and in consideration of the son covenanting to pay the father's debts, the estates were conveyed by them to the son in fee. The son afterwards mortgaged the estates comprised in the recovery:—Held, that the covenant for payment of the annuity created a charge on the estates, and that the mortgagee having had notice of that covenant, the premises were subject to the annuity, but that the covenant to settle the estate, or 4,000*l.* in lieu of it, created no lien or charge on any of the father's estates, and that the subsequent agreement between the father and son was merely voluntary, and was fairly abandoned by them. Ravenshaw v. Hollier, 7 Sim. 3. Affirmed Id. 16. n.; 4 L. J., N. S., Ch., 119.

1. Where a father, being entitled to a sum of money on mortgage, covenanted, on the marriage of his daughter, that a certain specific part of it should be transferred to the trustees of the marriage settlement within three months after his death, and covenanted to pay interest in the meantime, such covenant was held to amount to an actual assignment. Brownlow v. Meath (Earl), 2 Ir. Eq. R. 383; 2 Dr. & Wal. 674.

By a settlement executed on the marriage of A. with B., the daughter of W., trusts were declared of two several sums of 5,000*l.*, whereof one was secured by the bond of W., and the other by the covenant of A., and each was made payable to the trustees of the settlement within six months after the death of the settlor; and, as a further security for payment of the latter sum, A. assigned to the trustees certain policies of assurance which he had effected on his own life to the value of the principal money comprised in his covenant. The trusts declared of the former sum were for B. for life, for her separate use, and after her death for A. for life, and after the death of both, and in default of children of the marriage, for the benefit of B.'s estate. The trusts of the latter sum were for B. for life, and after her death, failing children of the marriage, for the executors, administrators, and assigns of A. After the marriage A. became bankrupt, having up to that time paid the premiums on the policies of assurance. Under his bankruptcy the trustees proved for the value of his covenant, and invested the dividends received under that proof in the purchase of 431*l.* consols. At the same time W. purchased of A.'s assignees all A.'s interest in the settlement, and took from them an assignment of that interest. A. afterwards died, whereupon the trustees received the produce of the policies, and invested it in 5,992*l.* consols. Ultimately W. became bankrupt and died:—Held, that notwithstanding that the interest of W. in the trust funds did not arise from the settlement, but by purchase and assignment from A.'s assignees, the assignees of W. could take no interest in the 5,992*l.* stock, without first satisfying to the trustees of the settlement what was due to them in respect of W.'s bond for 5,000*l.* And quære, whether, notwithstanding the assignment to W. of A.'s interest under the settlement, A.'s assignees had not a right to recall the dividend which produced the 431*l.* consols. Burridge v. Row, 1 Y. & Coll. C. C. 183, 583; 11 L. J., N. S., Ch., 369; 6 Jur. 121, 499. Affirmed 13 L. J., N. S., Ch., 173; 9 Jur. 299; but they afterwards disclaimed in court.

2. By a private Act a fund was directed to be raised for the conditional benefit and relief of widows, children, and other relatives of the officers and others employed in the department of customs in England; and that rules and regulations should be made for the formation of such fund, and directors and other officers appointed who were to have the management of the same. The code of rules in force at the time of the execution of the following instrument was dated the 28th July 1836. The rules provided, that the admission by the directors of a nominee of a subscriber should take place during the lifetime of such subscriber; and that the subscriber should have power to direct, by any instrument in writing, to be deposited with the directors, or by his will, that the whole capital money insured or forthcoming at his death should be paid, in any manner he might think proper, for the benefit of his widow, children, or relatives, or of his nominee who should have been duly admitted. P. was in July 1826 admitted as a subscriber to the fund for 1,200*l.* In March 1840 a letter was sent from the fund office to P., in which his attention was drawn to the rules of 1836, and acquainting him that if he gave directions by will as to the manner in which the sum insured was to be appropriated at his death, he must make specific mention of his insurance in the Customs Fund; that "relatives," used in the rules, included only relations by blood, and not sons-in-law or daughters-in-law; and if he had disposed of his insurance to a son-in-law, or to any other party who was not a relation by blood, the directors must, at his instance, during his lifetime, admit him his nominee, to entitle him to receive the sum set apart for his benefit. In October 1845, P., in pursuance of the rules, signed an instrument, in which he directed that the capital money forthcoming at his death should be invested in the purchase of 3*l.* per cent. stock, and the interest applied for the benefit of his wife during her life, if she should survive him, and at her death the stock should be divided between his two daughters, B. and C., in equal proportions; and in the event of either of them marrying and leaving issue, then her or their shares to her or their children respectively; and in case both his daughters should die without issue, then over to his son. P. directed, that if he survived his wife, the whole sum forthcoming should be paid to his daughters B. and C. or their children, or to his son. This instrument was in October 1845 deposited by P. with the directors of the fund, and he died in December 1855. In May 1852, P. by will bequeathed all his estate and effects unto his daughters B. and C., and appointed them executrixes, but he made no specific mention of the fund. The wife of P. died in 1847, and the son died intestate and unmarried in 1851. B. and C. applied to the directors for payment to them of the fund, but were informed that G., who in November 1826 intermarried with L., another daughter of P., had given notice to the directors not to pay it to them. G. alleged, that by an indenture of the 13th August 1832 (after reciting that on his marriage no settlement was made, but that upon the treaty for such marriage it was agreed that upon the decease of P., G. and L. his wife should take a share, equal with J. P.'s other daughters who should be living at his decease, of and in all his property), P. covenanted with G. and L. his wife, that they, or such of them as should be living at his decease, should immediately after his decease take a share equal to his other daughters of all the property which he might be seised or possessed of, or in any manner entitled unto or interested in, at the time of his death; and that he would forthwith make his last will, whereby he would give, devise, and bequeath all his property in such manner as to effectuate the intentions thereinbefore expressed, and would not revoke or alter such will. L., the wife of G., died in 1852. The capital money was, under the 10 & 11 Vict., c. 96, paid by the directors of the fund into court. On petition presented by B. and C.:—Held, first, that the covenant of P. did not affect the particular fund in question, as it was not a part of his general estate, and therefore the claim of G. must be rejected. Re Powell, 2 Jur., N. S., 799.

Held, secondly, that under the instrument of nomination B. and C. were, in the events which had happened, entitled to take the fund absolutely. Ib.

1. A fund was established under a special Act as a provision, upon the principle of a life insurance, by officers of the custom for their widows, children, and relatives. Under the Act, directors of the fund were appointed, with power to frame rules for the management of the fund, and with discretion to admit nominees of the subscribers, other than relatives, to the benefit arising out of any subscriptions. By the Act a restriction was placed on alienation of the benefit provided for them by the fund, by widows, children, and other claimants without consent of the directors. By the rules, each subscriber had power to direct how his portion of the fund should be applied for the benefit of his widow, children, or relatives, or his nominees, who should have been duly admitted by the directors. A subscriber, a widower, made, on the occasion of his daughter's marriage, an appointment of his share of the fund to the trustees of his daughter's settlement, the trusts being for his daughter for her life, remainder to her husband for life, remainder to the children of the marriage. The trustees were never formally admitted under the rules, though their names were sent in for that purpose by the settlor. The daughter predeceased her father. On his death, the directors paid his share into court, one moiety of it being claimed by the surviving son of the subscriber:—Held, that the settlement on the daughter's marriage was such a settlement for the benefit of his daughter as the subscriber had a right to make, and did not require the consent of the directors to complete the title of the trustees to the fund, and that therefore their formal admission by the directors as the nominees of the settlor was unnecessary, and, consequently, that the fund must be paid to them. Re Pocock's Policy, 40 L. J., Ch., 681; 6 L. R., Ch., 445; 19 W. R. 801; 25 L. T., N. S., 233.

2. How Enforced.

2. A., on the marriage of his daughter to B., covenants that B. should have his land, called C., for 1,500*l.* less than any other would give for it, and afterwards devises the premises to his grandson for life, with remainder over, and dies. Court refused to decree a specific performance of this agreement, by reason of the uncertainty and want of mutuality in it. Bromley v. Jefferies, 2 Vern. 415; Pre. Ch. 138.

3. Where a mother who was tenant for life, with remainder to her son in fee, who was under age, covenanted, on his marriage, that they would settle, within two years, an estate on the heirs male of the marriage; bill, for a specific performance by decreeing a strict settlement, dismissed; and even if it had appeared that there had been a sufficient covenant for that purpose, a great length of time having elapsed, and none of the parties having asserted their rights, the Court would not have interfered. Howarth v. Deem, 1 Eden 351.

4. A., on the marriage of his son, covenants to purchase lands, and settle them to the use of his son B. for life, remainder to the heirs male of the body of B. The son dies, leaving issue a son, who brings a bill against the executor of A., for the performance of the covenant. Bill dismissed in regard the plaintiff's father would have been tenant in tail, if the estate had been settled, and might have barred it. Cann v. Cann, 1 Vern. 480.

5. Where a father, being the heir of a lunatic, who might be induced to make a disposition of his estate injurious to him, was in embarrassed circumstances, and incapable of bearing the expenses of suing out a commission, agreed, in consideration of his son's prosecuting it, that in the event of the lunacy being established, and the estate descending upon him, he would execute a settlement in favour of his son and issue, the circumstances wholly repelling fraud or inadequacy of consideration, decree for specific performance of the settlement, reversing the judgment below. Persse v. Persse, 1 West 110; 7 Cl. & F. 279.

6. Before the marriage of G. his wife's father covenanted to pay 1,000*l.* on the marriage, and that his heirs, executors, etc., should pay G. 500*l.* six months after his death, and G., by same deed, contracted to give security by specialty, to pay 1,000*l.* six months after his death, to his wife if she survived. Accordingly, three days after marriage, he gave a bond, and then became bankrupt, but before bankruptcy, and after the father's death, he assigned the 500*l.* to plaintiff as a security for a debt. Upon a bill by plaintiff against the father's executors, and the husband's assignee, Lord Chancellor directed the executors to account to plaintiff for the 500*l.*, which was never the wife's money but the husband's, and said, if he were to stand neuter, the husband's assignees, who had the legal estate, and less equity than the plaintiff, might receive the money. Brett v. Forcer, 3 Atk. 403.

Where a wife has a demand in her own right, and the husband applies in her right, if there be no agreement on her behalf before marriage, the Court will take care of her. Ib.

If the husband had not been a bankrupt, and had brought a bill for performance of the father's covenant, he could only have been compelled were limited to the father and son in fee. The father and son afterwards agreed to abandon the last-mentioned agreement, and in consideration of the son covenanting to pay the father's debts, the estates were conveyed by them to the son in fee. The son afterwards mortgaged the estates comprised in the recovery:—Held, that the covenant for payment of the annuity created a charge on the estates, and that the mortgagee having had notice of that covenant, the premises were subject to the annuity, but that the covenant to settle the estate, or 4,000*l.* in lieu of it, created no lien or charge on any of the father's estates, and that the subsequent agreement between the father and son was merely voluntary, and was fairly abandoned by them. Ravenshaw v. Hollier, 7 Sim. 3. Affirmed Id. 16. n.; 4 L. J., N. S., Ch., 119.

1. Where a father, being entitled to a sum of money on mortgage, covenanted, on the marriage of his daughter, that a certain specific part of it should be transferred to the trustees of the marriage settlement within three months after his death, and covenanted to pay interest in the meantime, such covenant was held to amount to an actual assignment. Brownlow v. Meath (Earl), 2 Ir. Eq. R. 383; 2 Dr. & Wal. 674.

By a settlement executed on the marriage of A. with B., the daughter of W., trusts were declared of two several sums of 5,000*l.*, whereof one was secured by the bond of W., and the other by the covenant of A., and each was made payable to the trustees of the settlement within six months after the death of the settlor; and, as a further security for payment of the latter sum, A. assigned to the trustees certain policies of assurance which he had effected on his own life to the value of the principal money comprised in his covenant. The trusts declared of the former sum were for B. for life, for her separate use, and after her death for A. for life, and after the death of both, and in default of children of the marriage, for the benefit of B.'s estate. The trusts of the latter sum were for B. for life, and after her death, failing children of the marriage, for the executors, administrators, and assigns of A. After the marriage A. became bankrupt, having up to that time paid the premiums on the policies of assurance. Under his bankruptcy the trustees proved for the value of his covenant, and invested the dividends received under that proof in the purchase of 431*l.* consols. At the same time W. purchased of A.'s assignees all A.'s interest in the settlement, and took from them an assignment of that interest. A. afterwards died, whereupon the trustees received the produce of the policies, and invested it in 5,992*l.* consols. Ultimately W. became bankrupt and died:—Held, that notwithstanding that the interest of W. in the trust funds did not arise from the settlement, but by purchase and assignment from A.'s assignees, the assignees of W. could take no interest in the 5,992*l.* stock, without first satisfying to the trustees of the settlement what was due to them in respect of W.'s bond for 5,000*l.* And quære, whether, notwithstanding the assignment to W. of A.'s interest under the settlement, A.'s assignees had not a right to recall the dividend which produced the 431*l.* consols. Burridge v. Row, 1 Y. & Coll. C. C. 183, 583; 11 L. J., N. S., Ch., 369; 6 Jur. 121, 499. Affirmed 13 L. J., N. S., Ch., 173; 9 Jur. 299; but they afterwards disclaimed in court.

2. By a private Act a fund was directed to be raised for the conditional benefit and relief of widows, children, and other relatives of the officers and others employed in the department of customs in England; and that rules and regulations should be made for the formation of such fund, and directors and other officers appointed who were to have the management of the same. The code of rules in force at the time of the execution of the following instrument was dated the 28th July 1836. The rules provided, that the admission by the directors of a nominee of a subscriber should take place during the lifetime of such subscriber; and that the subscriber should have power to direct, by any instrument in writing, to be deposited with the directors, or by his will, that the whole capital money insured or forthcoming at his death should be paid, in any manner he might think proper, for the benefit of his widow, children, or relatives, or of his nominee who should have been duly admitted. P. was in July 1826 admitted as a subscriber to the fund for 1,200*l.* In March 1840 a letter was sent from the fund office to P., in which his attention was drawn to the rules of 1836, and acquainting him that if he gave directions by will as to the manner in which the sum insured was to be appropriated at his death, he must make specific mention of his insurance in the Customs Fund; that "relatives," used in the rules, included only relations by blood, and not sons-in-law or daughters-in-law; and if he had disposed of his insurance to a son-in-law, or to any other party who was not a relation by blood, the directors must, at his instance, during his lifetime, admit him his nominee, to entitle him to receive the sum set apart for his benefit. In October 1845, P., in pursuance of the rules, signed an instrument, in which he directed that the capital money forthcoming at his death should be invested in the purchase of 3*l.* per cent. stock, and the interest applied for the benefit of his wife during her life, if she should survive him, and at her death the stock should be divided between his two daughters, B. and C., in equal proportions; and in the event of either of them marrying and leaving issue, then her or their shares to her or their children respectively; and in case both his daughters should die without issue, then over to his son. P. directed, that if he survived his wife, the whole sum forthcoming should be paid to his daughters B. and C. or their children, or to his son. This instrument was in October 1845 deposited by P. with the directors of the fund, and he died in December 1855. In May 1852, P. by will bequeathed all his estate and effects unto his daughters B. and C., and appointed them executrixes, but he made no specific mention of the fund. The wife of P. died in 1847, and the son died intestate and unmarried in 1851. B. and C. applied to the directors for payment to them of the fund, but were informed that G., who in November 1826 intermarried with L., another daughter of P., had given notice to the directors not to pay it to them. G. alleged, that by an indenture of the 13th August 1832 (after reciting that on his marriage no settlement was made, but that upon the treaty for such marriage it was agreed that upon the decease of P., G. and L. his wife should take a share, equal with J. P.'s other daughters who should be living at his decease, of and in all his property), P. covenanted with G. and L. his wife, that they, or such of them as should be living at his decease, should immediately after his decease take a share equal to his other daughters of all the property which he might be seised or possessed of, or in any manner entitled unto or interested in, at the time of his death; and that he would forthwith make his last will, whereby he would give, devise, and bequeath all his property in such manner as to effectuate the intentions thereinbefore expressed, and would not revoke or alter such will. L., the wife of G., died in 1852. The capital money was, under the 10 & 11 Vict., c. 96, paid by the directors of the fund into court. On petition presented by B. and C.:—Held, first, that the covenant of P. did not affect the particular fund in question, as it was not a part of his general estate, and therefore the claim of G. must be rejected. Re Powell, 2 Jur., N. S., 799.

Held, secondly, that under the instrument of nomination B. and C. were, in the events which had happened, entitled to take the fund absolutely. Ib.

1. A fund was established under a special Act as a provision, upon the principle of a life insurance, by officers of the custom for their widows, children, and relatives. Under the Act, directors of the fund were appointed, with power to frame rules for the management of the fund, and with discretion to admit nominees of the subscribers, other than relatives, to the benefit arising out of any subscriptions. By the Act a restriction was placed on alienation of the benefit provided for them by the fund, by widows, children, and other claimants without consent of the directors. By the rules, each subscriber had power to direct how his portion of the fund should be applied for the benefit of his widow, children, or relatives, or his nominees, who should have been duly admitted by the directors. A subscriber, a widower, made, on the occasion of his daughter's marriage, an appointment of his share of the fund to the trustees of his daughter's settlement, the trusts being for his daughter for her life, remainder to her husband for life, remainder to the children of the marriage. The trustees were never formally admitted under the rules, though their names were sent in for that purpose by the settlor. The daughter predeceased her father. On his death, the directors paid his share into court, one moiety of it being claimed by the surviving son of the subscriber:—Held, that the settlement on the daughter's marriage was such a settlement for the benefit of his daughter as the subscriber had a right to make, and did not require the consent of the directors to complete the title of the trustees to the fund, and that therefore their formal admission by the directors as the nominees of the settlor was unnecessary, and, consequently, that the fund must be paid to them. Re Pocock's Policy, 40 L. 2. How Enforced.

2. A., on the marriage of his daughter to B., covenants that B. should have his land, called C., for 1,500*l.* less than any other would give for it, and afterwards devises the premises to his grandson for life, with remainder over, and dies. Court refused to decree a specific performance of this agreement, by reason of the uncertainty and want of mutuality in it. Bromley v. Jefferies, 2 Vern. 415; Pre. Ch. 138.

3. Where a mother who was tenant for life, with remainder to her son in fee, who was under age, covenanted, on his marriage, that they would settle, within two years, an estate on the heirs male of the marriage; bill, for a specific performance by decreeing a strict settlement, dismissed; and even if it had appeared that there had been a sufficient covenant for that purpose, a great length of time having elapsed, and none of the parties having asserted their rights, the Court would not have interfered. Howarth v. Deem, 1 Eden 351.

4. A., on the marriage of his son, covenants to purchase lands, and settle them to the use of his son B. for life, remainder to the heirs male of the body of B. The son dies, leaving issue a son, who brings a bill against the executor of A., for the performance of the covenant. Bill dismissed in regard the plaintiff's father would have been tenant in tail, if the estate had been settled, and might have barred it. Cann v. Cann, 1 Vern. 480.

5. Where a father, being the heir of a lunatic, who might be induced to make a disposition of his estate injurious to him, was in embarrassed circumstances, and incapable of bearing the expenses of suing out a commission, agreed, in consideration of his son's prosecuting it, that in the event of the lunacy being established, and the estate descending upon him, he would execute a settlement in favour of his son and issue, the circumstances wholly repelling fraud or inadequacy of consideration, decree for specific performance of the settlement, reversing the judgment below. Persse v. Persse, 1 West 110; 7 Cl. & F. 279.

6. Before the marriage of G. his wife's father covenanted to pay 1,000*l.* on the marriage, and that his heirs, executors, etc., should pay G. 500*l.* six months after his death, and G., by same deed, contracted to give security by specialty, to pay 1,000*l.* six months after his death, to his wife if she survived. Accordingly, three days after marriage, he gave a bond, and then became bankrupt, but before bankruptcy, and after the father's death, he assigned the 500*l.* to plaintiff as a security for a debt. Upon a bill by plaintiff against the father's executors, and the husband's assignee, Lord Chancellor directed the executors to account to plaintiff for the 500*l.*, which was never the wife's money but the husband's, and said, if he were to stand neuter, the husband's assignees, who had the legal estate, and less equity than the plaintiff, might receive the money. Brett v. Forcer, 3 Atk. 403.

Where a wife has a demand in her own right, and the husband applies in her right, if there be no agreement on her behalf before marriage, the Court will take care of her. Ib.

If the husband had not been a bankrupt, and had brought a bill for performance of the father's covenant, he could only have been compelled to give a bond, and the wife must have taken her chance, and an assignee shall not be in a worse condition than an assignor, but it has often been held he should be in a better. Ib.

1. A., in consideration of the intended marriage of his niece, entered into a bond, with a penalty conditioned to give by will or otherwise, unto or in trust for her, or the issue of the intended marriage, so much in money, or in valuable effects, as he should by his will give or bequeath to any one of his next of kin, or any other person whomsoever:—Held, that this condition was not to be satisfied by the penalty, but must be specifically performed. All voluntary assignments and transfers of personal property, and all conveyances of real estate purchased subsequently to the date of the bond, in which real estate or personal property the obligor retained a life interest, were declared to be in the nature of testamentary dispositions, to be considered in equity, for the purpose of giving effect to the true intent of the agreement in the bond, as if the said estates had been given or devised by the obligor's will. The persons entitled to the benefit of the bond were declared to be specialty creditors upon the obligor's estate for satisfaction of their claims under the bond. Logan v. Wienholt, 1 Cl. & F. 611.

2. Where funds came to the wife after marriage, the husband being in India, a contract of settlement of those and of other funds, by her father, was prepared and executed by the latter, and sent out for execution by the husband, who in the meantime had given instructions for a settlement in different terms:—Held, that the husband not being bound to execute the former, the father was not bound by it, although executed by him, and containing covenants for the benefit of an infant. Woodcock v. Monckton, 1 Colly. 273.

3. Marriage articles recited that L., the father of the intended husband, had agreed, in case the marriage should take effect, to pay 200*l.*, and also to settle the lands of T. in the manner, to the uses, and upon the trusts thereinafter mentioned; and that S., the father of the intended wife, who was an infant, had agreed to convey the lands of G., in the manner, at the time, to the uses, and upon the trusts thereinafter mentioned, and also to pay to the intended husband 100*l.* upon the marriage. It was then covenanted by L. that, in case the marriage should take effect, and S. should, as soon as the intended wife came of age, settle the lands of G. to the uses thereinafter expressed, he, L., would settle the lands of T. to his own use until the marriage, and, from and after the marriage, to his own use for life, with remainder, upon certain trusts, for the benefit of the husband and wife, and the issue of the marriage; and it was covenanted by S. that, in case the marriage should take effect, and L. should perform his covenant, he, S., would settle the lands of G. to the use of himself for life, with remainder, upon certain trusts, for the benefit of the husband and wife, and issue of the marriage. The marriage took effect, and the wife came of age, but S. failed to settle the lands of G.:—Held, nevertheless, that L. was bound to perform the covenant on his part. Lloyd v. Lloyd, 2 Myl. & C. 192; 5 L. J., N. S., Ch., 191; 6 L. J., N. S., Ch., 135.

4. Father on the marriage of his eldest son settled certain lands, and covenanted to pay all incumbrances affecting them. The Court will decree a specific performance without an inquiry whether any or what damage has been sustained, incumbrancers having actually instituted suits, and the lands being in danger of being sold. Vereker v. Gort (Lord), 1 Ir. Eq. R. 1.

5. A bond was given by the father of an illegitimate child to her intended husband, in contemplation of their intended marriage, in the penal sum of 2,000*l.* and interest. It was recited in the condition, that, in consideration of the intended marriage, the obligor had proposed to the obligee to surrender certain copyhold property, then let on lease at a rent of 50*l.* per annum, to the uses thereinafter mentioned; and if such surrender should not be so made within eighteen months after the marriage, the husband and wife, or the survivor, should receive, after the death of the obligor, 1,000*l.*; and he was, in the meantime, to pay the husband and wife 50*l.* a year for the interest thereof, until the said principal sum should be fully discharged. The condition was to the effect of the recital, and that if the estate should be so settled in substance, to the use of the husband and wife for life, remainder to the survivor, remainder to their issue; and if the 1,000*l.* and interest should be paid, or if the obligor should make such surrender in his lifetime, and pay the arrears of interest up to the time of the surrender, the obligation to be void. The obligor died without making the surrender, having regularly paid the 50*l.* per annum, and by his will he devised the copyhold estate to his daughter, the wife of the obligee:—Held, that the bond was not forfeited by reason of the breach of the condition; that it was merely an agreement to settle the land, and as such satisfied by the devise, although absolute to the wife; and that it was an agreement of which equity would enforce the specific performance; the penalty being only meant to secure the settlement recited in the condition. Time for the performance of the condition is not of the essence of the contract. The obligor held to have no power to elect either to pay the money, or settle the land. Roper v. Bartholomew, 12 Price 796.

6. A father, on his daughter's marriage, agreed by a memorandum in writing to charge his property with 1,000*l.* as her fortune to be settled in trustees for her benefit, she to receive the interest at 5 per cent. on her sole and separate receipt during the term of her natural life; but if she had a family, she was to have the power of disposing of it amongst her children as she and her husband might think proper; the father to have the power to lodge the 1,000*l.*, with her consent and that of her trustee, in any security they might agree upon. No settlement was executed, and the wife died without issue:—Held, that the husband, who survived and who took out letters of administration to his wife's effects, was entitled to the 1,000*l.*; and the Court directed specific performance against the father to effectuate payment of the 1,000*l.* to the husband as such administrator. Dennehy v. Delany, 10 Ir. R., Eq., 377.

7. A father, in contemplation of the marriage of his son, proposed, in writing, to settle an estate in a specified parish, "worth 200*l.* a year," free from incumbrances, on himself, for life, with successive remainders to his son and his intended wife, and the children, charged with 50*l.* a year to his own widow, for life. By a settlement, not referring to the proposal, the father conveyed an estate, held in fee, worth 57*l.* a year, and an estate of which he was tenant for life, with limitation to his son in tail, of the yearly value of 190*l.*, both in the specified parish, to the proposed uses, and absolutely covenanted that the conveyed hereditaments were of the annual value of 200*l.*, and that he was absolutely seised in fee of them. The marriage took effect, and both the son and his wife died, leaving an infant daughter; the son had married a second time, and left a son, who became tenant in tail of the hereditaments worth 190*l.* a year. In a suit by the infant daughter and the trustee of her settlement, against the representatives of her grandfather, the settlor, for damages for the breach of his covenant:—Held, that the proposals could not be looked to as defining the value of the property to be settled; and that the plaintiffs were entitled to damages to the full extent of the value of the settled land, though that would create a total income under the settlement of 247*l.* instead of only 200*l.* Wace v. Biokerton, 3 De G. & Sm. 751; 14 Jur. 784; 19 L. J., Ch., 254.

1. A settlement, to which A., B., and T. were parties, executed previously to the marriage of A. (B.'s daughter) with T., recited T.'s title to certain estates, and that B. agreed to give and appoint to A. a portion of 3,000*l.*, of which the sum of 1,000*l.* was to be paid in cash, and the remainder to be charged on the estates of B., and that T. had agreed to secure a jointure of 400*l.* a year for A., and to charge his estates with 3,000*l.* for the younger children of the intended marriage; and that, subject to such jointure and charge, T.'s estate should be settled on the first and other sons of the marriage, in tail; further, that B. had under a power charged his estates with 3,000*l.* portions for his younger children (of whom A. was one), and that it had been agreed that B. should pay 1,000*l.*, part of the marriage portion to A., immediately to T., and that B. should appoint 2,000*l.* the residue of the 3,000*l.*, a charge on his estates, the two sums to be in full for the marriage portion of A. B. appointed 2,000*l.* out of the 3,000*l.*, and directed it to be raised and paid to A. at his death, and T. charged his estates with a jointure of 400*l.* a year, and 3,000*l.* for younger children. By another deed, reciting the appointment of the 2,000*l.* by B., which with the 1,000*l.* was to be in full for the portion of A., A. and T. released B. and his heirs, and his property real and personal, from all claims in respect of certain provisions out of other funds provided for his younger children:—Held, that the deeds contained no personal covenant by B. to pay the 2,000*l.* even though it should turn out that the amount was not well charged on the estates by reason of a bad execution of the power by B. Borrowes v. Borrowes, 6 Ir. R., Eq., 368.

2. A. B. covenanted in the settlement, made in contemplation of his son's marriage, that upon certain events he would, by will or otherwise, in his lifetime settle out of all his real and personal estate, subject, to his wife's life estate, 3,000*l.* or property to that amount, so that the same should immediately after the death of the survivor of himself and his wife be well and effectually vested in trustees upon trusts for the benefit of his son's intended wife and the issue of the marriage:—Held, that the trustees were entitled to prove as specialty creditors in respect of the 3,000*l.* in the administration of A. B.'s estate. Eyre v. Monro, 5 W. R. 870; 3 Jur., N. S., 584; 3 Kay & J. 305; 26 L. J., Ch., 757.

3. Marriage articles entered into between an intended husband and the father of the wife, whereby each party covenanted to settle funds on the usual trusts, were enforced by the husband against the father's estate after death of the wife without issue, although the husband had always neglected and refused to fulfil his part of the agreement. Jeston v. Key, 40 L. J., Ch., 503; 6 L. R., Ch., 610; 25 L. T., N. S., 522; 19 W. R. 864. Affirming 24 L. T., N. S., 10; 19 W. R. 342.

V. COVENANTS BY BROTHER.

4. W. M., on the death of his father, became entitled to considerable estates, subject to a charge of 5,000*l.* for his eight brothers and sisters, who were also entitled to a share of the personal estate of their father. Their portions being small compared with his fortune, he entered into correspondence with a common friend, in which it was agreed that they should give up all their present rights, in lieu of which they should have a charge upon the estate for a sum of 4,000*l.* each. An arrangement having thus been effected, he actually paid interest on the amount agreed to be charged. The sister afterwards married, and, upon the treaty for the marriage, the intended husband was informed by the common friend that her fortune was 4,000*l.*, charged on W. M.'s estates. The marriage took effect:—Held, that this was an agreement of which a court of equity will decree specific performance as to all the younger children. Montgomery v. Reilly, 1 Bli. N. S. 383; 1 Dow & Cl. 62. Affirming Hay. & J. (App.) liv.

VI. DEFICIENCY OF FUND COVENANTED TO BE SETTLED.

5. A testator, upon the marriage of a daughter, entered into a bond conditioned for the transfer to the trustees of her settlement, during his life, or within twelve months after his decease, of 10,000*l.* 4 per cent. bank annuities; the only 4 per cent. bank annuities then existing, were afterwards reduced to 3½ per cents.; but there was existing at the time of his death a new 4 per cent. stock, which had been created two years after the reduction of the old 4 per cents. The bond is satisfied by a transfer of 10,000*l.* 3½ per cents. Sheffield v. Coventry (Earl), 2 Russ. & M. 317.

6. By a marriage settlement, the husband covenanted to secure to the wife for her life, if she survived him, the dividends of a sum of 4,000*l.* navy 5 per cent. annuities. The husband had no stock in the navy 5 per cents. at the date of the settlement, or at any subsequent period. By an Act of Parliament, the navy 5 per cents. were converted into new 4 per cents., and by another Act it was provided that all obligations for the transfer of the navy 5 per cents. should be satisfied by a transfer of 106*l.* in the new 4 per cents. for every 100*l.* in the navy 5 per cents. By a subsequent Act, the new 4 per cents. were converted into new 3½ per cent. annuities, and it was provided that all obligations to transfer the new 4 per cents. should be satisfied by transferring an equal sum of new 3½ per cents. The widow under her settlement is entitled only to a transfer of 105*l.* in the new 3½ per cents. for every 100*l.* of the navy 5 per cents. under her husband's covenants. Milward v. Milward, 3 Myl. & K. 311; 3 L. J., N. S., Ch., 141.

1. In a marriage contract the husband covenanted to secure to his wife the benefits of the pension or annuity payable to the widows of subscribers to a certain fund to which he was a subscriber, "and failing thereof, or in case the said pension or annuity, from whatever cause, shall not be available to her, saving and excepting only through her right to and possession of such separate funds as by the rules and regulations of the said fund would exclude her from all benefit thereby," to pay a yearly sum equal to the pension. At his death he had secured to her 365*l.* a year, on the Bombay Military Fund. A deduction from this was first made, and finally, on her second marriage, the allowance was stopped:—Held, that the first husband's estate was bound under his covenant to make good the deficiencies. Taylor v. Hosack, 5 Cl. & F. 380.

2. By a settlement reciting an agreement to provide a jointure for the intended wife, but not stating the amount, the intended husband covenanted with the trustees to convey to them certain lands, then held in trust for him, upon trust, after his death, to permit the intended wife, during her life, to take out of the land an annuity of 220*l.*, with power of distress and right of entry; and the settlor covenanted to do all such other acts as should be necessary for the further and better assuring the annuity, according to the true intent and meaning of the deed; the lands having proved, after the husband's death, insufficient to pay the annuity in full:—Held, that there was nothing in the settlement amounting to a covenant for or warranty of the adequacy of the lands for payment of the annuity in full, and that the personal assets of the settlor were not liable to make good the deficiency. Weldon v. Bradshaw, 7 Ir. R., Eq., 168.

3. A father, in consideration of 2,600*l.* to be paid him on his son's marriage, as the wife's portion, articles to settle 600*l.* a year on the marriage; and it being after discovered that she had only 1,600*l.*, the father was decreed to make a settlement for the 1,600*l.* only, in proportion to what he was to have made for the 2,600*l.*, and not to deduct out of the 600*l.* per annum 1,000*l.* worth of land, viz., 50*l.* per annum, as was urged he should. Baskerville v. Gore, Pre. Ch. 186; 2 Vern. 448.

4. Bill by husband to have wife's portion, part of which was invested in stock, made up money, on ground either of express contract or representation upon which the marriage took place, dismissed; the description by articles, though generally "the sum of 4,000*l.*" referring to that sum in settlement, and the representation under circumstances not amounting to warranty, and proceeding on a common mistake. Ainslie v. Medlycott, 9 Ves. 13.

5. Where a settlor intimated his wish to settle a certain sum, part of a particular share of property, which he specified, but that share did not prove of so much value as the sum he wished to settle, his general estate held not liable to make good the difference. Evans v. Wyatt, 10 W. R. 813; 7 L. T., N. S., 86; 10 W. R. 813; 8 Jur., N. S., 499; 31 Beav. 217.

6. By a marriage settlement executed in 1797, reciting that S., the intended husband, was entitled to real estate on the decease of his father, and to certain sums in the English funds, as residuary legatee of his grandmother, S. covenanted with the trustees that he would, as soon as he could after the execution of the settlement, transfer to them the money, and invest in such funds as should be thought most advisable, in the names of the trustees, such further sums, the interest of which should amount to 600*l.* a year, free from all deductions, in trust for S. for his life, and after his death upon trust to pay the interest to A., his intended wife, as a jointure, with a power to S. to revoke the trust of the fund so to be invested, on conveying to the trustees real estate of the value of 600*l.* a year, to be held on the same trusts. S. died in 1798, leaving one son, who died in 1812. In 1799 and 1801, his executors transferred to the trustees of the settlement 4*l.* per cent. stock, then producing 600*l.* a year, but which was, by successive Acts of Parliament, ultimately reduced to 3 per cent. stock, and became insufficient to pay the 600*l.* a year:—Held, that A. was not entitled to have the deficiency made good out of the assets of S., the covenant having been performed by the transfer of stock, which, in 1801, produced 600*l.* a year. Napier v. Staples, 10 Ir. Ch. R. 344.

I. CONSTRUCTION. GENERAL WORDS.

7. Covenant in an infant's marriage settlement, that whatever should come to the wife from the mother, or otherwise, should be bound by the settlement, restrained to what shall come from the mother, not to property coming unexpectedly from other quarters. Williams v. Williams, 1 Bro. C. C. 152.

8. Share of an unappointed fund over which A. had had power of appointment by will coming to B., held bound by covenant to settle whatever B. should take under or by virtue of the wills of A. and X., or either of them, or otherwise howsoever, the Court refusing to cut down these words by reference to the recital in which the expression was "under the wills or otherwise of the said two testators." Re Owen's Trust, 19 Jur., N. S., 1069.

1. A marriage settlement recited an agreement that all property which the wife or intended husband in her right should become entitled to under H.'s will, or should otherwise be derived from H., should be settled upon certain trusts, and contained a covenant by the husband to settle upon the same trusts all the property which should come to husband and wife, or either of them, under the will of H. or otherwise:—Held, that the covenant was restrained by the recital to property derived from H., so that a legacy bequeathed to the wife by another person was not subject to the covenant. Re Neal's Trusts, 4 Jur., N. S., 6.

2. Upon the marriage of one of several residuary legatees under her father's will, the intended husband and wife assigned to trustees all and every the sum and sums of money, legacy and legacies, and other personal property then due and payable, or belonging to or to become due and payable to the intended wife, under or by virtue of her father's will, "or otherwise howsoever," upon trusts for her separate use for her life, without power of anticipation, with trusts in remainder in favour of the children of the marriage. By the next witnessing part of the same settlement, it was agreed that in case any real or personal property should during the coverture be given or bequeathed to the wife, the husband should settle it upon trust, so that the wife should have sole power of disposing of the same:—Held, that a legacy bequeathed by another will to the wife after the marriage was not subject to the trusts for the children, the latter witnessing part of the settlement showing that the former must be read in a restricted sense. Exp. Stephenson, 3 De G. M. & G. 969.

3. A settlement on marriage was made of A.'s one-fifth share in stock, and all her interest, "by survivorship or otherwise," in the same. A. was one of five children, and in an event, which had become impossible when the settlement was made, there might have been survivorship among the children as to each other's shares. On the death of one of A.'s brothers, A. became entitled, as one of his next of kin, to a share in his one-fifth part of the stock:—Held, that the interest which A. thus took in the stock was not bound by the settlement. Edwards v. Broughton, 11 W. R. 1038; 2 N. R. 476; 32 Beav. 667.

1. Property Vested in Interest or Possession at Date of Marriage.

4. Personal property vested at the marriage of a lady in trustees, upon trust for her and her mother during their lives, in equal shares, and after the death of either of them upon trust for the survivor for her life; and after the death of the survivor (in the events which happened), upon her trust for executors, administrators, or assigns; was held to be bound by a covenant by the husband, that if his wife, or he in her right, should, during the coverture, succeed to the possession of or acquire any property, real or personal, such property should be settled, though the settlement did not refer to it. Grafftey v. Humpage, 1 Beav. 46; 8 L. J., N. S., Ch., 98; 3 Jur. 622.

5. Where the settlement noticed only funded property of the wife, and recited an agreement that the same and all other personal estate which she then had, or at any time during the marriage should become entitled to, exceeding 200*l.*, should be settled, with a covenant by the husband that he would well and effectually assign any money or personal estate which he should thereafter become possessed of or interested in her right, exceeding the amount of 200*l.*, unto the trustees, upon the same trusts as those declared of the funded property: it appearing that the wife was at the time of the marriage also possessed of shares in waterworks, exceeding 200*l.* in value:—Held, that they became subject to the trusts of the settlement. James v. Durant, 2 Beav. 177.

6. A covenant in a marriage settlement, that in case, at any time "thereafter" during the coverture, any real or personal estate should "descend, come to, or vest in" the wife (who was then an infant), it should be settled:—Held, to include the proceeds of real estate taken by a public company, to which the wife, at the execution of the settlement, was entitled in remainder. Exp. Blake, 16 Beav. 463.

7. By a marriage settlement 1,500*l.* and 2,700*l.* stock, of which the lady was possessed, were settled in trust for her separate use for life, remainder in trust for her intended husband for life, and after his death as the wife should appoint by will; and the intended husband covenanted that if the marriage should take effect he would, as often as occasion should require, join with his wife in doing all necessary acts for assigning to the trustees all the property to which his wife should become entitled during the coverture upon the trusts declared of the 1,500*l.* and 2,700*l.* stock. At the date of the settlement the wife had an absolute vested interest in 1,935*l.* stock expectant on her father's death, but it was not mentioned in the settlement. During the marriage, the husband became bankrupt, and then the wife's father died:—Held, that the 1,935*l.* stock did not belong to the husband's assignee as part of his estate, but was bound by his covenant, as being property to which the wife would become entitled during the coverture. Blythe v. Granville, 13 Sim. 190; 12 L. J., N. S., Ch., 82; 6 Jur. 961.

8. By a marriage settlement property was assigned to trustees, and the husband covenanted that all the estate and effects to which the wife at any time during the coverture should become seised, possessed of, or entitled to should be settled and assured as therein mentioned. The wife at the time of the marriage was entitled to a moiety of a leasehold house, and to a third part of the proceeds of the sale of real estate, which real estate was not sold or distributed for many years after the marriage:—Held, that the settlement contemplated future acquired title; that these were present titles, and not included in the covenant to settle. Wilton v. Colvin, 3 Drew. 617; 2 Jur., N. S., 867; 25 L. J., Ch., 850; 42 W. R. 759.

The cases of Blythe v. Granville (13 Sim. 190), and Exp. Blake (16 Beav. 463), observed upon. Ib.

1. Certain personal property, which a lady had at the time of her marriage, but which was not noticed in her settlement, was held to be bound by a covenant with A. by her husband B., that in case he in her right should at any time thereafter, during their joint lives, become possessed of or interested in any sum or sums of money or other personal property, estate, or effects, exceeding in value 200*l.* at any one time, then the same should be assigned, upon the trusts of the settlement. James v. James, 9 L. J., N. S., Ch., 85.

2. A covenant in an ante-nuptial settlement, that all the personal estate "to which the wife shall become entitled" should be subject to the trusts of the settlement:—Held, not to extend to property to which, without the knowledge of the intended husband or the trustees, she was then absolutely and immediately entitled. Otter v. Melville, 2 De G. & Sm. 257; 17 L. J., N. S., Ch., 345; 12 Jur. 845.

In a marriage settlement, reciting that it had been agreed that all such personal estate as the intended wife might at any time during her coverture with the intended husband become entitled to should be settled as therein mentioned, the intended husband and wife covenanted with the trustees that all and singular the personal estate to which the intended wife should at any time or times during her coverture become entitled should be settled upon certain trusts. At the time of the marriage, the lady, unknown to the husband and trustees, was entitled to a sum of money absolutely. The marriage took effect, and the husband filed a bill against the trustees, to whom the money had been paid, praying a declaration that it was not subject to the trusts of the settlement. The trustees demurred for want of equity; but the demurrer was overruled. Ib.

3. By a marriage settlement sums amounting to 10,000*l.* were settled to the separate use of the wife for life. A share in 3,333*l.* 9*s.* 8*d.* Consols, to which she was entitled, was not mentioned in the settlement. The husband covenanted to settle on the wife her future acquired property, "except such as she is now entitled to, in possession, reversion, remainder, or contingency." Subsequently the husband became unable to support her, and treated her with harshness; and the only income she received was 120*l.*:—Held, that her share in the Consols was purposely omitted, and that she was not entitled to a settlement thereout against the mortgages thereof. Brooke v. Hickes, 12 W. R. 703; 10 L. T., N. S., 404.

4. When an interest in property existing at the date of a marriage is increased in value by the death of other persons, such increment is not after-acquired property within the meaning of a covenant in a marriage settlement. Re Browne, 38 L. J., Ch., 316; 7 L. R., Eq., 231.

A marriage settlement contained a recital of an agreement to settle all personal property which the wife should at any time during the marriage become entitled to, and a covenant by the husband and the wife for the settlement of all personal property which the wife, or the husband in her right, at any time or times during the marriage should become possessed of or entitled to by transmission, gift, or otherwise, and whether in possession or expectancy. Another marriage settlement contained no recital of any agreement as to the settlement of future property, but a covenant by the husband and wife to settle any personal property of the value of 200*l.* or upwards which should at any time or times during the coverture be given or bequeathed to, or in any manner vest in, the wife. In each case the wife was, under the will of her mother, entitled at the date of the settlement to the beneficial interest in an undivided share of four Irish tontine debentures. The holder of one of these debentures was entitled during the life of a person therein named to an annuity of 7*l.* 10*s.* Irish currency, and also to a proportionate share of all other annuities under similar debentures which might cease to become payable to the holders thereof by reason of the death of the cestuis que vient therein named. At the dates of the settlements the debentures were of small value; but ultimately large sums became payable thereunder. No mention was made of them in the settlements:—Held, that no part of the annuities payable thereunder was included in either of the covenants. Ib.

5. A testator made two wills, one of his English, the other of his American property. Neither of the wills referred to the other. His daughter, who was entitled to personal property under both wills, executed previously to her marriage a settlement of various descriptions of personal property, including specifically her property under the English will, but not mentioning or referring to her property under the American will. The settlement contained a clause providing that such further personal estate (if any) as should during her life become vested in, or accrue to, or be assignable by her and her husband, should be assigned upon the trusts of the settlement:—Held, that this clause did not affect her American property. Hoare v. Hornby, 2 Y. & Coll. C. C. 121; 12 L. J., N. S., Ch., 151; 7 Jur. 424.

6. By a settlement made in June 1842, property of the wife was settled, and the husband covenanted that if, during the coverture, any real or personal estate should "descend or devolve to or vest" in his wife, or in him in her right, he would settle it. In August 1842, a sum, part of the distributive share of the wife in the estate of her father, who died in 1821, and which had been overlooked, was recovered and paid to the trustees of the settlement, and the husband received the income for twelve years:—Held, that it was not within the covenant to settle, and that the husband had not so acquiesced as to make it subject to the trusts of the settlement. Churchill v. Shepherd, 33 Beav. 107.

1. A marriage settlement contained an agreement that if the wife then was, or if during the coverture she or her husband in her right, at one and the same time, should, under a certain settlement therein mentioned, or under the will of the wife's father, become seised or possessed of or entitled to any real or personal property of the value of 300*l.* or upwards, for any estate or interest whatsoever in possession, reversion, remainder, or expectancy, then the husband and wife and all other necessary parties would, as soon as circumstances would admit, convey the said real or personal property to, or otherwise cause the same to be vested in, the trustees. The wife's father was dead at the date of the settlement, having by his will devised certain real estate upon trust for his said daughter and the heirs of her body, with a gift over in default or on failure of her issue:—Held, that the estate tail was not within the agreement contained in the settlement. Hilbers v. Parkinson, 25 L. R., Ch. D., 200; 53 L. J., Ch., 194; 49 L. T. 502; 32 W. R. 315.

2. By an ante-nuptial settlement, the intended husband and wife covenanted with the trustees that all personal estate (save certain expected particulars) to which the wife or the husband in her right should become entitled during the coverture should be vested in the trustees upon the trusts of the settlement. A sum of money not mentioned in the settlement was handed by the wife to the husband before the marriage took place, and the evidence, in the opinion of the Court, established that the transaction was simply a loan:—Held, that the sum of money was caught by the settlement, and was subject to the trusts thereof. Hamilton v. James, 11 Ir. R., Eq., 223.

2. Reversionary Interests in Personalty.

3. By a settlement made before marriage, part of the wife's fortune was settled for the use of the husband and wife, and then the children of the marriage; and it was stipulated, "that all other the personal estate to which the wife was, or might be or become, entitled, should be permitted to vest absolutely in the husband by right of marriage": the wife survived the husband:—Held, that a contingent reversionary interest, which was in the wife at the date of the settlement, and which continued reversionary and contingent during the whole period of coverture, belonged to the wife, and not to the executors of the husband. Farrer v. Grant, 7 L. J., Ch., 95.

4. A. being entitled to a reversionary interest in property for her separate use, both she and her intended husband separately covenanted to settle any property which she, or her husband in her right, was or might become entitled to. The above interest having fallen into possession:—Held, that it was subject to the trusts of the settlement. Tawney v. Ward, 1 Beav. 563; 8 L. J., N. S., Ch., 319.

5. Upon the marriage of a ward, the intended husband proposed to settle the whole of her fortune. The Master, in ascertaining her fortune, omitted to state a reversionary interest. Her property was settled, omitting the reversionary interest, and the husband covenanted to settle any property to which the wife, or he in her right, "should at any time during the marriage" become entitled:—Held, that the reversionary interest ought to be settled. Bute (Marquis) v. Harman, 9 Beav. 320.

6. A reversion of a moiety of a farm was settled on a marriage, and the trustees were empowered to sell it when in possession; and the intended husband and wife covenanted, if they should thereafter acquire any other share or interest in the farm, they would immediately thereupon convey the same so that it might become vested in the trustees upon the trusts and subject to the powers declared of the settled moiety. After that moiety had fallen into possession, a moiety of the other moiety descended to the wife, not in possession, but subject to a life interest:—Held, nevertheless, that it, as well as the settled moiety, were salable under the power. Giles v. Homes, 15 Sim. 359.

7. By an ante-nuptial settlement, the intended husband and wife covenanted with the trustees that if the intended husband and wife, or either of them in her right, should at any time during the coverture "be or become entitled to any personal property of the value of 100*l.* or upwards, the same should be settled." At the time of executing the settlement the wife was interested in a legacy, which had been bequeathed in trust for all the daughters of her father living at the time of his death, who should attain twenty-one or marry, in equal shares. The marriage was solemnised, and the wife's father survived her husband:—Held, first, that the interest of the wife in the legacy during the coverture was contingent. Atcherley v. Du Moulin, 2 Kay & J. 186.

Held, secondly, that it was not within the covenant in the settlement. Ib.

8. A covenant on a marriage settlement to settle all property to which the wife, or the husband in her right, should, during the coverture, become entitled, includes property to which the wife was at the time of the marriage entitled in reversion, but not property to which she was entitled in possession. Archer v. Kelly, 6 Jur., N. S., 814; 29 L. J., Ch., 911; 8 W. R. 684; 1 Dr. & Sm. 300.

Where there is a covenant to settle after-acquired property of the husband and wife, or either of them, in her right, that does not apply to the property of the husband acquired at the moment of the marriage, jure mariti; but only to property of the wife which comes to her after the marriage. Ib.

The words "during coverture" apply to the time which elapses after coverture commences and before it terminates. Ib.

Where a lady, at the date of her marriage, was entitled to a contingent interest in remainder in real estate, and was also entitled in possession to stock, and in the settlement executed on her marriage no mention was made of her interest either in the real estate or in the stock, but the settlement contained a covenant to settle upon the trusts declared by the settlement any real or personal property to which the husband, wife, or either of them in right of the wife should, "by gift, descent, succession, or otherwise howsoever become entitled" during the coverture; and the wife's contingent interest in remainder in the real estate fell into possession during the cover-the wife at any time during the coverture should become seised, possessed of, or entitled to should be settled and assured as therein mentioned. The wife at the time of the marriage was entitled to a moiety of a leasehold house, and to a third part of the proceeds of the sale of real estate, which real estate was not sold or distributed for many years after the marriage:—Held, that the settlement contemplated future acquired title; that these were present titles, and not included in the covenant to settle. Wilton v. Colvin, 3 Drew. 617; 2 Jur., N. S., 867; 25 L. J., Ch., 850; 42 W. R. 759.

The cases of Blythe v. Granville (13 Sim. 190), and Exp. Blake (16 Beav. 463), observed upon. Ib.

1. Certain personal property, which a lady had at the time of her marriage, but which was not noticed in her settlement, was held to be bound by a covenant with A. by her husband B., that in case he in her right should at any time thereafter, during their joint lives, become possessed of or interested in any sum or sums of money or other personal property, estate, or effects, exceeding in value 200*l.* at any one time, then the same should be assigned, upon the trusts of the settlement. James v. James, 9 L. J., N. S., Ch., 85.

2. A covenant in an ante-nuptial settlement, that all the personal estate "to which the wife shall become entitled" should be subject to the trusts of the settlement:—Held, not to extend to property to which, without the knowledge of the intended husband or the trustees, she was then absolutely and immediately entitled. Otter v. Melville, 2 De G. & Sm. 257; 17 L. J., N. S., Ch., 345; 12 Jur. 845.

In a marriage settlement, reciting that it had been agreed that all such personal estate as the intended wife might at any time during her coverture with the intended husband become entitled to should be settled as therein mentioned, the intended husband and wife covenanted with the trustees that all and singular the personal estate to which the intended wife should at any time or times during her coverture become entitled should be settled upon certain trusts. At the time of the marriage, the lady, unknown to the husband and trustees, was entitled to a sum of money absolutely. The marriage took effect, and the husband filed a bill against the trustees, to whom the money had been paid, praying a declaration that it was not subject to the trusts of the settlement. The trustees demurred for want of equity; but the demurrer was overruled. Ib.

3. By a marriage settlement sums amounting to 10,000*l.* were settled to the separate use of the wife for life. A share in 3,333*l.* 9*s.* 8*d.* Consols, to which she was entitled, was not mentioned in the settlement. The husband covenanted to settle on the wife her future acquired property, "except such as she is now entitled to, in possession, reversion, remainder, or contingency." Subsequently the husband became unable to support her, and treated her with harshness; and the only income she received was 120*l.*:—Held, that her share in the Consols was purposely omitted, and that she was not entitled to a settlement thereout against the mortgages thereof. Brooke v. Hickes, 12 W. R. 703; 10 L. T., N. S., 404.

4. When an interest in property existing at the date of a marriage is increased in value by the death of other persons, such increment is not after-acquired property within the meaning of a covenant in a marriage settlement. Re Browne, 38 L. J., Ch., 316; 7 L. R., Eq., 231.

A marriage settlement contained a recital of an agreement to settle all personal property which the wife should at any time during the marriage become entitled to, and a covenant by the husband and the wife for the settlement of all personal property which the wife, or the husband in her right, at any time or times during the marriage should become possessed of or entitled to by transmission, gift, or otherwise, and whether in possession or expectancy. Another marriage settlement contained no recital of any agreement as to the settlement of future property, but a covenant by the husband and wife to settle any personal property of the value of 200*l.* or upwards which should at any time or times during the coverture be given or bequeathed to, or in any manner vest in, the wife. In each case the wife was, under the will of her mother, entitled at the date of the settlement to the beneficial interest in an undivided share of four Irish tontine debentures. The holder of one of these debentures was entitled during the life of a person therein named to an annuity of 7*l.* 10*s.* Irish currency, and also to a proportionate share of all other annuities under similar debentures which might cease to become payable to the holders thereof by reason of the death of the cestuis que vient therein named. At the dates of the settlements the debentures were of small value; but ultimately large sums became payable thereunder. No mention was made of them in the settlements:—Held, that no part of the annuities payable thereunder was included in either of the covenants. Ib.

5. A testator made two wills, one of his English, the other of his American property. Neither of the wills referred to the other. His daughter, who was entitled to personal property under both wills, executed previously to her marriage a settlement of various descriptions of personal property, including specifically her property under the English will, but not mentioning or referring to her property under the American will. The settlement contained a clause providing that such further personal estate (if any) as should during her life become vested in, or accrue to, or be assignable by her and her husband, should be assigned upon the trusts of the settlement:—Held, that this clause did not affect her American property. Hoare v. Hornby, 2 Y. & Coll. C. C. 121; 12 L. J., N. S., Ch., 151; 7 Jur. 424.

6. By a settlement made in June 1842, property of the wife was settled, and the husband covenanted that if, during the coverture, any real or personal estate should "descend or devolve to or vest" in his wife, or in him in her right, he would settle it. In August 1842, a sum, part of the distributive share of the wife in the estate of her father, who died in 1821, and which had been overlooked, was recovered and paid to the trustees of the settlement, and the husband received the income for twelve years:—Held, that it was not within the covenant to settle, and that the husband had not so acquiesced as to make it subject to the trusts of the settlement. Churchill v. Shepherd, 33 Beav. 107.

1. A marriage settlement contained an agreement that if the wife then was, or if during the coverture she or her husband in her right, at one and the same time, should, under a certain settlement therein mentioned, or under the will of the wife's father, become seised or possessed of or entitled to any real or personal property of the value of 300*l.* or upwards, for any estate or interest whatsoever in possession, reversion, remainder, or expectancy, then the husband and wife and all other necessary parties would, as soon as circumstances would admit, convey the said real or personal property to, or otherwise cause the same to be vested in, the trustees. The wife's father was dead at the date of the settlement, having by his will devised certain real estate upon trust for his said daughter and the heirs of her body, with a gift over in default or on failure of her issue:—Held, that the estate tail was not within the agreement contained in the settlement. Hilbers v. Parkinson, 25 L. R., Ch. D., 200; 53 L. J., Ch., 194; 49 L. T. 502; 32 W. R. 315.

2. By an ante-nuptial settlement, the intended husband and wife covenanted with the trustees that all personal estate (save certain expected particulars) to which the wife or the husband in her right should become entitled during the coverture should be vested in the trustees upon the trusts of the settlement. A sum of money not mentioned in the settlement was handed by the wife to the husband before the marriage took place, and the evidence, in the opinion of the Court, established that the transaction was simply a loan:—Held, that the sum of money was caught by the settlement, and was subject to the trusts thereof. Hamilton v. James, 11 Ir. R., Eq., 223.

2. Reversionary Interests in Personalty.

3. By a settlement made before marriage, part of the wife's fortune was settled for the use of the husband and wife, and then the children of the marriage; and it was stipulated, "that all other the personal estate to which the wife was, or might be or become, entitled, should be permitted to vest absolutely in the husband by right of marriage": the wife survived the husband:—Held, that a contingent reversionary interest, which was in the wife at the date of the settlement, and which continued reversionary and contingent during the whole period of coverture, belonged to the wife, and not to the executors of the husband. Farrer v. Grant, 7 L. J., Ch., 95.

4. A. being entitled to a reversionary interest in property for her separate use, both she and her intended husband separately covenanted to settle any property which she, or her husband in her right, was or might become entitled to. The above interest having fallen into possession:—Held, that it was subject to the trusts of the settlement. Tawney v. Ward, 1 Beav. 563; 8 L. J., N. S., Ch., 319.

5. Upon the marriage of a ward, the intended husband proposed to settle the whole of her fortune. The Master, in ascertaining her fortune, omitted to state a reversionary interest. Her property was settled, omitting the reversionary interest, and the husband covenanted to settle any property to which the wife, or he in her right, "should at any time during the marriage" become entitled:—Held, that the reversionary interest ought to be settled. Bute (Marquis) v. Harman, 9 Beav. 320.

6. A reversion of a moiety of a farm was settled on a marriage, and the trustees were empowered to sell it when in possession; and the intended husband and wife covenanted, if they should thereafter acquire any other share or interest in the farm, they would immediately thereupon convey the same so that it might become vested in the trustees upon the trusts and subject to the powers declared of the settled moiety. After that moiety had fallen into possession, a moiety of the other moiety descended to the wife, not in possession, but subject to a life interest:—Held, nevertheless, that it, as well as the settled moiety, were salable under the power. Giles v. Homes, 15 Sim. 359.

7. By an ante-nuptial settlement, the intended husband and wife covenanted with the trustees that if the intended husband and wife, or either of them in her right, should at any time during the coverture "be or become entitled to any personal property of the value of 100*l.* or upwards, the same should be settled." At the time of executing the settlement the wife was interested in a legacy, which had been bequeathed in trust for all the daughters of her father living at the time of his death, who should attain twenty-one or marry, in equal shares. The marriage was solemnised, and the wife's father survived her husband:—Held, first, that the interest of the wife in the legacy during the coverture was contingent. Atcherley v. Du Moulin, 2 Kay & J. 186.

Held, secondly, that it was not within the covenant in the settlement. Ib.

8. A covenant on a marriage settlement to settle all property to which the wife, or the husband in her right, should, during the coverture, become entitled, includes property to which the wife was at the time of the marriage entitled in reversion, but not property to which she was entitled in possession. Archer v. Kelly, 6 Jur., N. S., 814; 29 L. J., Ch., 911; 8 W. R. 684; 1 Dr. & Sm. 300.

Where there is a covenant to settle after-acquired property of the husband and wife, or either of them, in her right, that does not apply to the property of the husband acquired at the moment of the marriage, jure mariti; but only to property of the wife which comes to her after the marriage. Ib.

The words "during coverture" apply to the time which elapses after coverture commences and before it terminates. Ib.

Where a lady, at the date of her marriage, was entitled to a contingent interest in remainder in real estate, and was also entitled in possession to stock, and in the settlement executed on her marriage no mention was made of her interest either in the real estate or in the stock, but the settlement contained a covenant to settle upon the trusts declared by the settlement any real or personal property to which the husband, wife, or either of them in right of the wife should, "by gift, descent, succession, or otherwise howsoever become entitled" during the coverture; and the wife's contingent interest in remainder in the real estate fell into possession during the cover-ture:—Held, that the words "become entitled" imported a change of condition in the property, and that the parties contemplated the wife's becoming entitled during the coverture, and did not intend to include property to which she was entitled at the time of the coverture; and therefore that the wife's interest in the real estate having changed during the coverture, it fell within the covenant; but that the wife having been absolutely entitled to the stock at the date of the marriage, and there having been no subsequent change in her interest, the stock did not come within the terms of the covenant. Ib.

1. Where a covenant to settle after acquired property was contained in a settlement executed on the marriage of a lady, who at the time was entitled to a contingent interest liable to be divested, and which afterwards fell into possession; and who afterwards became entitled to property to her separate use, as to part of which there was a proviso against alienation:—Held, that the property to which the lady was contingently entitled at the time of her marriage came within the terms of the covenant, but that the property settled to her separate use, and as to which there was a proviso against alienation, was not included in it. Brooks v. Keith, 1 Dr. & Sm. 462; 7 Jur., N. S., 482; 9 W. R. 565; 4 L. T., N. S., 541.

2. By a marriage settlement, it was expressed to be agreed between the parties thereto, and the husband covenanted, that if any personal property should, during coverture, come to or vest in the wife, or in him in her right, the same should be transferred, by all proper parties, upon the trusts of the settlement. The wife became entitled to a reversionary interest in a chose in action, which did not fall into possession until after the death of the husband:—Held, that the wife was bound to settle it. Butcher v. Butcher, 14 Beav. 222.

3. In a marriage settlement the parties agreed, and the husband covenanted for assignment to the trustees, upon the usual trusts, of any property which the husband in right of the wife, or the wife, should become possessed of:—Held, that this covenant did not apply to property over which the wife had a general power of appointment, or to property in which she had a life interest to her separate use, but did apply to her reversionary chose in action, in the event of the husband surviving her. Townshend v. Harrowby, 4 Jur., N. S., 353; 27 L. J., Ch., 553.

4. A husband covenanted by his marriage settlement to settle future acquired property on the trusts of the settlement, which were for the husband for life, and after his death for his wife for life. He became entitled to a sum of money as next of kin, and his wife acquiesced in his receiving such sum, and signed a memorandum, by which she undertook not to take proceedings against the intestate's administrator. No notice was given to the trustee of the settlement. After the death of the husband, the wife and the trustee filed a bill against the devisee of the administrator, whose assets had been administered:—Held, that the wife being under coverture could not bind her reversionary interest, and that the real estate of the administrator in the hands of his devisee must make good the breach of trust. Cresswell v. Dewell, 12 W. R. 123.

5. A testator gave and bequeathed all his personal estate and effects to his daughter, the same to be always considered as vested in her, upon her attaining twenty-one, and to be subject to her disposition thereof; and the testator further directed that in case his daughter should happen to depart this life without attaining twenty-one, or without disposing by her will of the property bequeathed to her, then the same to be subject to the disposition by will of his wife. The testator's daughter married under twenty-one, and by articles previously to her marriage the husband covenanted to settle all the property left her by the testator upon his wife and himself for life, and then for the benefit of the children of the marriage:—Held, that the daughter took the property not absolutely but for life only, with power to dispose of it by will, and that her husband not having reduced it into possession, the articles were not binding upon the wife. Borton v. Borton, 16 Sim. 552; 18 L. J., N. S., Ch., 219; 13 Jur. 247.

6. Where for valuable consideration the wife by ante-nuptial settlement assigned to her husband an interest at the time reversionary, the Court, when the interest was reduced into possession, ordered payment to the husband without the wife's consent. Chalmers v. Macleod, 1 Jur., N. S., 724.

7. W. C., the intended husband, by articles of agreement before marriage, covenanted with the intended wife and her trustee that he would, on demand in writing by either of them, settle any property to which she should become entitled, upon trust, during her life, as she should appoint; and in default, to her separate use; and after her decease, to the use of W. C. for life, if he should survive; and after the decease of both, upon trust, as to one moiety, as she should by will appoint; and in default, to her next of kin. During the lives of W. C. and his wife certain reversionary property of the wife fell into possession, one moiety of which was realised by W. C., and the other moiety was invested by the former trustees, who took a release as to the moiety from the husband. W. C. died in the lifetime of his wife, without leaving issue of the marriage:—Held, that the widow was absolutely entitled to the moiety in the hands of the trustee, freed from the trusts of the marriage articles:—Held, that as the covenant was only the covenant of the husband, and not of the wife, and merely executory, he never having executed any assignment, the wife was not bound. Cramer v. Moore, 3 Sm. & G. 141; 1 Jur., N. S., 915; 3 W. R. 347.

8. By a marriage settlement, the sum of 3,000*l.* was assigned by the father of the intended wife to trustees, to be held after his decease as to 2,000*l.*, part for the wife, her husband, and children, and as to the residue, for her husband absolutely; and it was covenanted that all the property which the wife, or the husband in her right, should during her coverture become seised or possessed of or entitled to, should be settled upon the trusts therein declared of the premises thereby settled:—Held, first, that property to which the wife became absolutely entitled in reversion during the coverture, was bound by the covenant. Hughes v. Young, 9 Jur., N. S., 376; 32 L. J., Ch., 137; 1 N. R. 166.

Held, secondly, that the sum given by the settlement in trust for the husband absolutely was not "settled" within the meaning of that word as used in the covenant. Ib.

1. A marriage settlement recited that it was agreed that if any property should descend or devolve to the wife, it should be settled upon the trusts of the settlement. The indenture contained a covenant to the same effect as the recital, but entered into by the husband only. The husband died, and subsequently reversionary personal property of the wife fell into possession:—Held, that it was not subject to the trusts of the settlement. Young v. Smith, 11 Jur., N. S., 963; 35 Beav. 87.

2. Covenant by husband and wife to settle "all real or personal estate, property, or effects to which the wife or the husband in her right shall by gift, descent, succession, or otherwise become entitled":—Held, to include reversionary interests in consols, which fell in by the death of a tenant for life, after the decease of both husband and wife. Re Hughes, 4 Giff. 432.

3. Where a woman in an ante-nuptial settlement joins in a covenant with her future husband to settle after acquired property to which she or he in her right shall become entitled in possession, reversion, remainder, or expectancy, that covenant does not apply to a general power, of appointment and a life interest given to her under a will, but does apply to a reversionary interest to which she is entitled under the same will so far as her husband, in the event of his surviving her, would be entitled in her right. A power of appointment, a life interest, and a reversion given to a married woman by one will are as distinct as if given by three separate instruments. Townsend (Marchioness) v. Harrowby (Earl), 4 W. R. 413; 4 Jur., N. S., 353.

4. By a marriage settlement made between R. the intended husband, K. the intended wife, and C. and D. the trustees, certain property therein mentioned was settled on the usual trusts. The settlement then contained the following clause: "And it is hereby declared and agreed by and between the parties hereto, and R. doth hereby, for himself, his heirs, executors, and administrators, covenant, promise, and agree to and with the said C. and D., their executors and administrators, that if the said K., or the said R. in right of the said K., shall at or upon the said marriage, or at any time thereafter, become interested in or entitled to any sum or sums of money, or real or personal estate, etc., which already hath or have been, or shall or may at any time or times hereafter be, given or bequeathed, or which shall descend to K., that then the same shall be and remain, etc., upon the same trusts, etc., as are hereinbefore mentioned, etc., of and concerning the said trust moneys, stocks, and premises hereinbefore assigned; and for the better effecting this purpose, R., his heirs, etc., will, upon request, pay, etc., and join with K. in assigning, etc., all such sums, etc., to C. and D." R. died, and after his death certain sums of money, to which his wife during his life had a reversionary interest, fell into possession:—Held, that this covenant applied to the property only to which the marital right attached, and that the property to which K. became entitled after the death of her husband was not bound by it. Reid v. Kenrick, 1 Jur., N. S., 897; 24 L. J., Ch., 503; 3 Eq. Rep. 1031; 3 W. R. 530.

5. H. was entitled to a reversionary interest in personal property. In a settlement made on her marriage, it was recited, that it was agreed that any property to which the husband and H., or either of them in her right, "should by any means become absolutely entitled," should be settled, and that the husband and H. should enter into the covenant thereinafter contained. The husband and H. jointly and severally covenanted with the trustees, that if at any time during the marriage the husband and H., or either of them in her right, should, by gift, "descent, succession, or otherwise howsoever, become entitled to any real or personal property" to the amount of 100*l.* and upwards, the same should be assigned to the trustees, "so far as the estates or interests in such future property would extend." H. died in 1859, and her husband in August 1862; and in December 1862 several sums exceeding 100*l.* became payable under the deeds of 1812 and 1822:—Held, that they were included within the terms of the covenant. Re Hill, 9 Jur., N. S., 942; 11 W. R. 930; 8 L. T., N. S., 825.

6. A feme sole, being entitled to property under a will, if she attained twenty-one, married, and by a settlement made immediately previously to the marriage, the intended husband covenanted with the trustees that all the estate, property, and effects, real and personal, which he and his intended wife, or either in her right, should at any time during the coverture become seised or possessed of or entitled to, at law or in equity, of the value of 200*l.* or upwards under any gift, devise, or bequest, or by descent, representation, or any other means whatsoever, should be settled:—Held, that the contingent interest to which the wife was entitled was within the covenant. Re Worsley, 16 L. T., N. S., 826.

7. A marriage settlement contained a covenant to settle any property which should come to or devolve upon the intended wife, or her husband in her right, "at any time or times after the solemnisation of the said intended marriage and during the continuance thereof." At the date of the settlement, the intended wife was entitled to a reversionary interest in personalty, subject to the life interest of her mother. The wife died before the tenant for life, leaving the husband surviving:—Held, that the wife's reversionary interest was bound by the covenant. Rose v. Cornish, 16 L. T., N. S., 786.

8. A covenant, by husband and wife, to settle property to which the wife or the husband in her right "shall become entitled" during the coverture, held to include property vested in reversion before the coverture, and falling into possession during the coverture, but not to include property to which they are entitled only in reversion during the coverture, and which fell into possession after the coverture. Re Clinton, Exp. Holloway, Exp. Weare, 41 L. J., Ch., 191; 20 W. R. 326; 13 L. R., Eq., 295; 26 L. T., N. S., 159.

9. By a marriage settlement the intended husband and wife severally covenanted with the trustees that all the real and personal property (if any) not thereinbefore settled, to which the wife, or the husband in her right, "shall at any time or times during the intended coverture become beneficially entitled in possession or reversion, or in any manner whatever, derivable directly or indirectly from" J., should be settled as therein mentioned. At the date of the settlement and of the marriage the wife was entitled to a fund bequeathed by J., subject to the life interest of a person who outlived the wife:—Held, that the fund was not subject to the covenant. Re Jones, 2 L. R., Ch. D., 362; 45 L. J., Ch., 428; 24 W. R. 697; 35 L. T., N. S., 25.

1. Covenant in marriage settlement to settle property to which the wife then was or she or her husband in her right should during the coverture become entitled. At the date of the settlement a trust fund stood so limited that on the death of the wife without issue one moiety thereof would belong to her, subject to the life interest therein of her husband, as her share of an intestate's estate:—Held, that the wife's contingent reversionary interest in this fund was bound by the covenant. Cornmell v. Keith, 3 L. R., Ch. D., 767; 45 L. J., Ch., 689; 24 W. R. 633; 35 L. T., N. S., 29.

2. A marriage settlement to which the wife was a party recited that it had been agreed that all moneys should be settled to which she then was or thereafter during the coverture, or to which her husband in her right might become entitled, and that the husband should enter into the covenant to that effect thereinafter contained. The covenant was by the husband that he would settle all such moneys and execute all deeds for carrying out such settlement:—Held, that the wife was not bound by the covenant, and was entitled after her husband's death to receive a sum which, although vested in her at the marriage, had not been reduced into possession during the coverture. Re Webb, 46 L. J., Ch., 769.

3. A marriage settlement which recited an agreement to settle certain specified property upon the trusts thereinafter declared, and that it had been agreed that the husband should enter into the covenant thereinafter contained for settling upon the same trusts any future property to which the wife might become entitled after the solemnisation of the marriage, contained a covenant by the husband that if at any time during the joint lives of the husband and wife any future portion, or real or personal estate, should come to or devolve upon the wife, or upon the husband in her right, and whether in possession, reversion, remainder, contingency, or expectancy, the husband would settle, or concur with the wife in settling, such future portion, real or personal estate, upon the trusts declared by the settlement concerning the settled funds. At the time of the marriage the wife was entitled under a will to a contingent reversionary interest in personal estate which, during the coverture, became vested, but did not come into possession until after the coverture had determined by the death of the wife:—Held, that it was not within the covenant. Re Michell, 9 L. R., Ch. D., 5; 38 L. T., N. S., 462; 26 W. R. 762. Reversing 47 L. J., Ch., 12; 6 L. R., Ch. D., 618; 36 L. T., N. S., 915.

4. A mother had an exclusive power of appointment over a fund in favour of her children, and which, in default, was divisible equally, the share of the daughters to vest at twenty-one or marriage. She had a son and a daughter, and she appointed 10,000*l.* to her son on his marriage. His marriage settlement recited that he was entitled to the 10,000*l.*, and was also contingently entitled to the other moiety in the event of his sister dying unmarried under twenty-one, and it recited an agreement to settle the 10,000*l.* and "all other his part, share, and interest, as well vested as contingent," in the trust funds. He then assigned his interest in the same terms. The daughter attained twenty-one, and died, and the mother afterwards appointed the residue of the fund to her son:—Held, that such residue did not pass under his settlement. Childers v. Eardley, 28 Beav. 648.

5. By an ante-nuptial settlement the husband and wife, after settling certain trust funds belonging to the wife, covenanted with the trustees "that if at the time of the solemnisation of the intending marriage the wife shall be, or if at any time thereafter, and during the joint lives of the husband and wife, she, or her husband in her right, shall become beneficially entitled to any real or personal property, estate, or effects, for any estate or interest whatsoever, then and in every such case the husband and wife and all other necessary parties shall, as soon as circumstances will permit," assure such property and effects to the trustees in trust for sale, and to hold the proceeds upon the trusts thereinbefore declared of the wife's trust funds, "or as near thereto in all respects as the deaths of parties and other circumstances will admit":—Held, that a reversionary interest in personalty vested in the wife at the date of the marriage, but liable to be divested by the exercise of a power of appointment, was included in the covenant. Re Jackson's Will, 13 L. R., Ch. D., 189; 49 L. J., Ch., 82; 28 W. R. 209; 41 L. T. 499.

6. By a post-nuptual settlement a husband covenanted to settle any property to which the wife, or he in her right, either then was or at any time during the coverture should become entitled:—Held, that a contingent interest in a fund standing in court to the credit of a cause, which fell into possession after the termination of the coverture, was bound by the covenant. Agar v. George, 2 L. R., Ch. D., 706; 24 W. R. 696; 34 L. T., N. S., 487.

7. A marriage settlement, made in 1828, contained a joint covenant by the husband and wife to concur and join in conveying and settling upon the trusts of the settlement, all property, real or personal, which the wife, or the husband in her right, might thereafter become entitled to or interested in, under the will or intestacy of, or by gift from, the wife's father, or under the will or intestacy of, or by gift from, any other person or persons whomsoever. The wife's father died in 1836, and under his will she became entitled, in reversion, to 100*l.*, which did not, however, fall into possession until after the husband's death:—Held, notwithstanding, that this was subject to the covenant. Dickinson v. Dillwyn, 39 L.J., Ch., 266; 22 L. T. 647; 8 L. R., Eq., 546; 17 W. R. 1122.

8. By post-nuptial settlement in 1848, in consideration of natural love and affection, and divers other good causes and considerations, W. covenanted that if at any time he should by gift, descent, succession, or otherwise from or through M. become entitled to any real or personal estate or effects to the amount of 2,000*l.* or upwards, the same should be conveyed, transferred, and assigned to the trustees of the settlement upon the same trusts as were thereinbefore expressed of the proceeds of a certain policy thereby settled. W. was entitled to various interests in remainder subject to the life interest of M., who died in 1857, and to property under the will greatly exceeding 2,000*l.* in value:—Held, that the covenant did not amount to a declaration of trust, or to an assignment so as to render the property derived by the settlor from M. liable to the trusts of the settlement. Wilkinson v. Wilkinson, 4 Jur., N. S., 47.

3. Remainders and Contingent Interests in Real Estate.

1. The intended wife being seised of a remainder in fee, which would vest in her immediately upon her father's decease, if he died without having had other issue, it was settled upon the intended husband for life upon the death of the wife "if she ever became entitled thereto, but not otherwise":—Held, that the husband's life estate vested in him, although the wife did not survive her father. Wallace v. Wallace, 1 Con. & L. 491; 2 Dr. & War. 452.

2. A. being, under the marriage settlement of her father and mother, tenant in tail in remainder of certain lands, expectant on the failure of male issue of her only brother, there is made on her marriage a settlement, containing a covenant, by which, after reciting that it was possible that she might, under and by virtue of the limitations contained in the former settlement, eventually become entitled to a certain estate, or a part of certain lands, it is agreed that in case she shall in her lifetime become entitled to any such estate as aforesaid, the same shall be conveyed to the uses, and for the trusts therein mentioned; the brother afterwards suffers a recovery, and dies intestate, without issue; whereupon the fee simple of one part of the lands comprised and referred to in the settlements, descends upon her as one of his co-heiresses:—Held, that the covenant does not affect the fee-simple so coming to her by descent. Tayleur v. Dickenson, 1 Russ. 521.

3. By a marriage settlement, a husband covenanted, that if any real or personal estate should be given or devised, descend or devolve, be bequeathed or come, to the wife or to the husband in her right, he would execute such deeds as would be necessary for vesting it in trustees, upon certain trusts, including a power of appointment after the end of the coverture. The wife was at that time entitled to a reversion. Some time after the marriage a new trustee of the settlement was appointed, and on the same day the wife sold and appointed the reversion to the old trustee:—Held, that the reversion was included in the settlement, and that the sale must be set aside. Spring v. Pride, 10 Jur., N. S., 646; 12 W. R. 892; 10 L. T., N. S., 473.

4. Where a lady, at the date of her marriage, was entitled to a contingent interest in remainder in real estate, and was also entitled in possession to stock, and in the settlement executed on her marriage no mention was made of her interest either in the real estate or in the stock, but the settlement contained a covenant to settle upon the trusts declared by the settlement any real or personal property to which the husband and wife, or either of them in right of the wife, should "by gift, descent, succession, or otherwise howsoever become entitled" during the coverture; and the wife's contingent interest in remainder in the real estate fell into possession during the coverture:—Held, that the words "become entitled," imported a change of condition in the property, and that the parties contemplated the wife's becoming entitled during the coverture, and did not intend to include property to which she was entitled at the time of coverture; and therefore that the wife's interest in the real estate having changed during the coverture, it fell within the covenant; but that the wife having been absolutely entitled to the stock at the date of the marriage, and there having been no subsequent change in her interest, the stock did not come within the terms of the covenant. Archer v. Kelley, 1 Dr. & Sm. 300; 6 Jur., N. S., 814; 29 L. J., Ch., 911; 8 W. R. 684,

5. A covenant in a marriage settlement by husband and wife to settle all the estate, property, and effects whatever which they or either of them in the right of the wife were or was at the date of the settlement, or should during the coverture become, seised or possessed of or entitled to at law or in equity, for all the estate and interest of them or either of them upon the trusts of the settlement, only includes indefeasibly vested interests, and therefore does not include the wife's interest in real estate which, at the date of the settlement, stood limited to A., the wife's father, for life, with remainder to his sons successively in tail male, with remainder to B. for life, with remainder to his sons successively in tail male, with remainder to the daughters of A. as tenants in common in tail, A., B., and two sons of A. having been alive at the date of the settlement, the two sons having died bachelors during the coverture, and A. and B. having survived the husband, and died without issue in the wife's lifetime. Dering v. Kynaston, 6 L. R., Eq., 210; 18 L. T., N. S., 346; 16 W. R. 819.

6. By a marriage settlement, the intended wife and husband severally covenanted with the trustees that, in case the marriage should be solemnised, all the estate, property, and effects, both real and personal, which the husband and wife, or either of them in right of the wife, "shall at any time or times during the intended coverture become seised or possessed of, or entitled to," should be settled. At the date of the settlement and of the marriage the wife was entitled to a vested remainder in land, expectant on the death of a tenant for life, who outlived the coverture:—Held, that the land was not subject to the trusts of the settlement. Re Pedder, 10 L. R., Eq., 585; 40 L. J., Ch., 77.

7. A covenant in a settlement to settle all the property of the wife of which she was possessed at the date thereof includes property to which she was entitled jointly with other persons in remainder after an estate in tail, though the covenant was in terms only the

which the wife, or the husband in her right, "shall at any time or times during the intended coverture become beneficially entitled in possession or reversion, or in any manner whatever, derivable directly or indirectly from" J., should be settled as therein mentioned. At the date of the settlement and of the marriage the wife was entitled to a fund bequeathed by J., subject to the life interest of a person who outlived the wife:—Held, that the fund was not subject to the covenant. Re Jones, 2 L. R., Ch. D., 362; 45 L. J., Ch., 428; 24 W. R. 697; 35 L. T., N. S., 25.

1. Covenant in marriage settlement to settle property to which the wife then was or she or her husband in her right should during the coverture become entitled. At the date of the settlement a trust fund stood so limited that on the death of the wife without issue one moiety thereof would belong to her, subject to the life interest therein of her husband, as her share of an intestate's estate:—Held, that the wife's contingent reversionary interest in this fund was bound by the covenant. Cornmell v. Keith, 3 L. R., Ch. D., 767; 45 L. J., Ch., 689; 24 W. R. 633; 35 L. T., N. S., 29.

2. A marriage settlement to which the wife was a party recited that it had been agreed that all moneys should be settled to which she then was or thereafter during the coverture, or to which her husband in her right might become entitled, and that the husband should enter into the covenant to that effect thereinafter contained. The covenant was by the husband that he would settle all such moneys and execute all deeds for carrying out such settlement:—Held, that the wife was not bound by the covenant, and was entitled after her husband's death to receive a sum which, although vested in her at the marriage, had not been reduced into possession during the coverture. Re Webb, 46 L. J., Ch., 769.

3. A marriage settlement which recited an agreement to settle certain specified property upon the trusts thereinafter declared, and that it had been agreed that the husband should enter into the covenant thereinafter contained for settling upon the same trusts any future property to which the wife might become entitled after the solemnisation of the marriage, contained a covenant by the husband that if at any time during the joint lives of the husband and wife any future portion, or real or personal estate, should come to or devolve upon the wife, or upon the husband in her right, and whether in possession, reversion, remainder, contingency, or expectancy, the husband would settle, or concur with the wife in settling, such future portion, real or personal estate, upon the trusts declared by the settlement concerning the settled funds. At the time of the marriage the wife was entitled under a will to a contingent reversionary interest in personal estate which, during the coverture, became vested, but did not come into possession until after the coverture had determined by the death of the wife:—Held, that it was not within the covenant. Re Michell, 9 L. R., Ch. D., 5; 38 L. T., N. S., 462; 26 W. R. 762. Reversing 47 L. J., Ch., 12; 6 L. R., Ch. D., 618; 36 L. T., N. S., 915.

4. A mother had an exclusive power of appointment over a fund in favour of her children, and which, in default, was divisible equally, the share of the daughters to vest at twenty-one or marriage. She had a son and a daughter, and she appointed 10,000*l.* to her son on his marriage. His marriage settlement recited that he was entitled to the 10,000*l.*, and was also contingently entitled to the other moiety in the event of his sister dying unmarried under twenty-one, and it recited an agreement to settle the 10,000*l.* and "all other his part, share, and interest, as well vested as contingent," in the trust funds. He then assigned his interest in the same terms. The daughter attained twenty-one, and died, and the mother afterwards appointed the residue of the fund to her son:—Held, that such residue did not pass under his settlement. Childers v. Eardley, 28 Beav. 648.

5. By an ante-nuptial settlement the husband and wife, after settling certain trust funds belonging to the wife, covenanted with the trustees "that if at the time of the solemnisation of the intending marriage the wife shall be, or if at any time thereafter, and during the joint lives of the husband and wife, she, or her husband in her right, shall become beneficially entitled to any real or personal property, estate, or effects, for any estate or interest whatsoever, then and in every such case the husband and wife and all other necessary parties shall, as soon as circumstances will permit," assure such property and effects to the trustees in trust for sale, and to hold the proceeds upon the trusts thereinbefore declared of the wife's trust funds, "or as near thereto in all respects as the deaths of parties and other circumstances will admit":—Held, that a reversionary interest in personalty vested in the wife at the date of the marriage, but liable to be divested by the exercise of a power of appointment, was included in the covenant. Re Jackson's Will, 13 L. R., Ch. D., 189; 49 L. J., Ch., 82; 28 W. R. 209; 41 L. T. 499.

6. By a post-nuptual settlement a husband covenanted to settle any property to which the wife, or he in her right, either then was or at any time during the coverture should become entitled:—Held, that a contingent interest in a fund standing in court to the credit of a cause, which fell into possession after the termination of the coverture, was bound by the covenant. Agar v. George, 2 L. R., Ch. D., 706; 24 W. R. 696; 34 L. T., N. S., 487.

7. A marriage settlement, made in 1828, contained a joint covenant by the husband and wife to concur and join in conveying and settling upon the trusts of the settlement, all property, real or personal, which the wife, or the husband in her right, might thereafter become entitled to or interested in, under the will or intestacy of, or by gift from, the wife's father, or under the will or intestacy of, or by gift from, any other person or persons whomsoever. The wife's father died in 1836, and under his will she became entitled, in reversion, to 100*l.*, which did not, however, fall into possession until after the husband's death:—Held, notwithstanding, that this was subject to the covenant. Dickinson v. Dillwyn, 39 L. J., Ch., 266; 22 L. T. 647; 8 L. R., Eq., 546; 17 W. R. 1122.

8. By post-nuptial settlement in 1848, in consideration of natural love and affection, and divers other good causes and considerations, W. covenanted that if at any time he should by gift, descent, succession, or otherwise from or through M. become entitled to any real or personal estate or effects to the amount of 2,000*l.* or upwards, the same should be conveyed, transferred, and assigned to the trustees of the settlement upon the same trusts as were thereinbefore expressed of the proceeds of a certain policy thereby settled. W. was entitled to various interests in remainder subject to the life interest of M., who died in 1857, and to property under the will greatly exceeding 2,000*l.* in value:—Held, that the covenant did not amount to a declaration of trust, or to an assignment so as to render the property derived by the settlor from M. liable to the trusts of the settlement. Wilkinson v. Wilkinson, 4 Jur., N. S., 47.

3. Remainders and Contingent Interests in Real Estate.

1. The intended wife being seised of a remainder in fee, which would vest in her immediately upon her father's decease, if he died without having had other issue, it was settled upon the intended husband for life upon the death of the wife "if she ever became entitled thereto, but not otherwise":—Held, that the husband's life estate vested in him, although the wife did not survive her father. Wallace v. Wallace, 1 Con. & L. 491; 2 Dr. & War. 452.

2. A. being, under the marriage settlement of her father and mother, tenant in tail in remainder of certain lands, expectant on the failure of male issue of her only brother, there is made on her marriage a settlement, containing a covenant, by which, after reciting that it was possible that she might, under and by virtue of the limitations contained in the former settlement, eventually become entitled to a certain estate, or a part of certain lands, it is agreed that in case she shall in her lifetime become entitled to any such estate as aforesaid, the same shall be conveyed to the uses, and for the trusts therein mentioned; the brother afterwards suffers a recovery, and dies intestate, without issue; whereupon the fee simple of one part of the lands comprised and referred to in the settlements, descends upon her as one of his co-heiresses:—Held, that the covenant does not affect the fee-simple so coming to her by descent. Tayleur v. Dickenson, 1 Russ. 521.

3. By a marriage settlement, a husband covenanted, that if any real or personal estate should be given or devised, descend or devolve, be bequeathed or come, to the wife or to the husband in her right, he would execute such deeds as would be necessary for vesting it in trustees, upon certain trusts, including a power of appointment after the end of the coverture. The wife was at that time entitled to a reversion. Some time after the marriage a new trustee of the settlement was appointed, and on the same day the wife sold and appointed the reversion to the old trustee:—Held, that the reversion was included in the settlement, and that the sale must be set aside. Spring v. Pride, 10 Jur., N. S., 646; 12 W. R. 892; 10 L. T., N. S., 473.

4. Where a lady, at the date of her marriage, was entitled to a contingent interest in remainder in real estate, and was also entitled in possession to stock, and in the settlement executed on her marriage no mention was made of her interest either in the real estate or in the stock, but the settlement contained a covenant to settle upon the trusts declared by the settlement any real or personal property to which the husband and wife, or either of them in right of the wife, should "by gift, descent, succession, or otherwise howsoever become entitled" during the coverture; and the wife's contingent interest in remainder in the real estate fell into possession during the coverture:—Held, that the words "become entitled," imported a change of condition in the property, and that the parties contemplated the wife's becoming entitled during the coverture, and did not intend to include property to which she was entitled at the time of coverture; and therefore that the wife's interest in the real estate having changed during the coverture, it fell within the covenant; but that the wife having been absolutely entitled to the stock at the date of the marriage, and there having been no subsequent change in her interest, the stock did not come within the terms of the covenant. Archer v. Kelley, 1 Dr. & Sm. 300; 6 Jur., N. S., 814; 29 L. J., Ch., 911; 8 W. R. 684,

5. A covenant in a marriage settlement by husband and wife to settle all the estate, property, and effects whatever which they or either of them in the right of the wife were or was at the date of the settlement, or should during the coverture become, seised or possessed of or entitled to at law or in equity, for all the estate and interest of them or either of them upon the trusts of the settlement, only includes indefeasibly vested interests, and therefore does not include the wife's interest in real estate which, at the date of the settlement, stood limited to A., the wife's father, for life, with remainder to his sons successively in tail male, with remainder to B. for life, with remainder to his sons successively in tail male, with remainder to the daughters of A. as tenants in common in tail, A., B., and two sons of A. having been alive at the date of the settlement, the two sons having died bachelors during the coverture, and A. and B. having survived the husband, and died without issue in the wife's lifetime. Dering v. Kynaston, 6 L. R., Eq., 210; 18 L. T., N. S., 346; 16 W. R. 819.

6. By a marriage settlement, the intended wife and husband severally covenanted with the trustees that, in case the marriage should be solemnised, all the estate, property, and effects, both real and personal, which the husband and wife, or either of them in right of the wife, "shall at any time or times during the intended coverture become seised or possessed of, or entitled to," should be settled. At the date of the settlement and of the marriage the wife was entitled to a vested remainder in land, expectant on the death of a tenant for life, who outlived the coverture:—Held, that the land was not subject to the trusts of the settlement. Re Pedder, 10 L. R., Eq., 585; 40 L. J., Ch., 77.

7. A covenant in a settlement to settle all the property of the wife of which she was possessed at the date thereof includes property to which she was entitled jointly with other persons in remainder after an estate in tail, though the covenant was in terms only the covenant of the husband and not of the wife, and though the recitals in the settlement specified property to which the wife was entitled in expectancy, but did not allude to this particular interest. Caldwell v. Fellowes, 39 L. J., Ch., 618; 9 L. R., Eq., 410; 22 L. T. 205; 18 W. R. 485.

1. By an ante-nuptial agreement, signed by the intended husband and wife and the parents of the wife, the parents agreed to appoint a share of real estate (which was subject to their life interest and to the appointment of them and the survivor of them) to the wife, and the husband agreed that he would settle his wife's reversionary share of the real estate upon the usual trusts for the husband and wife, and their children. The wife's father having survived her mother, released the power and granted the estate after his death, giving his daughter a share. The wife predeceased the husband and left two children. The property being still reversionary, an action was brought by the husband and one of the children against the other child, the wife's heir-at-law, for specific performance of the agreement:—Held, that the agreement bound the wife as having assented to her father's stipulation, and also her heir-at-law, and specific performance decreed accordingly. Lee v. Lee, 4 L. R., Ch. D., 175; 46 L. J., Ch., 81; 25 W. R. 225; 36 L. T., N. S., 138.

4. Property acquired after Termination of Coverture.

2. Covenant in marriage settlement by husband and wife to settle all property of the value of 200*l.* which the husband and wife, or either of them in her right, should during the coverture become entitled to other than separate property or life interests of the wife:—Held, that property devised and bequeathed to the husband and wife as joint tenants was not within the covenant. Edye v. Addison, 1 Hem. & M. 781; 33 L. J., Ch., 132; 3 N. R. 66. S. C. nom. Edge v. Addison, 9 Jur., N. S., 320; 12 W. R. 97.

Semble, that property which does not vest in possession during the coverture is not within a covenant so framed. Ib.

3. The words "during coverture" apply to the time which elapses after coverture commences and before it terminates. Archer v. Kelly, 6 Jur., N. S., 814; 29 L. J., Ch., 911; 8 W. R. 684; 1 Dr. & Sm. 300.

4. Covenant to settle after acquired property of the wife:—Held, to extend to property acquired after the death of the husband. Stevens v. Van Voorst, 17 Beav. 305.

5. A testator, by will, dated since 7 Will. 4 & 1 Vict., c. 26, gave a legacy to his daughter, a married woman, who predeceased him, leaving issue, and also her husband, her surviving. The settlement made on her marriage contained a covenant, that all property coming to her or to her husband in her right during the coverture should be settled:—Held, that notwithstanding the fictitious survivorship created by s. 33 for the purpose of preventing a lapse, the legacy was not acquired during the coverture, within the meaning of the covenant, and was therefore not bound by the settlement. Pearce v. Graham, 9 Jur., N. S., 568; 32 L. J., Ch., 359; 11 W. R. 415; 8 L. T., N. S., 378; 1 N. R. 507.

6. By a post-nuptial settlement, a husband and wife covenanted with trustees to settle all the property which the wife might become entitled to during the coverture on themselves for life, with remainder to their children. During the coverture, part of such property was allowed by the husband to be paid over to the trustees; the other part was not reduced into possession at the husband's death:—Held, first, that originally the settlement was binding on neither party. Anderson v. Abbott, 23 Beav. 457; 3 Jur., N. S., 833.

Held, secondly, that the part paid over had been effectually made subject to the trusts by the husband. Ib.

Held, thirdly, that the wife refusing, after the death of her husband, to perform her covenant, was not entitled to a life interest in the portion settled, which was applicable to recoup the children. Ib.

7. In a marriage settlement a covenant to settle the wife's after acquired property will be construed as applying only to property acquired during the coverture, although the words "during the coverture" are not inserted. Carter v. Carter, 8 L. R., Eq., 551; 21 L. T., N. S., 194; 39 L. J., Ch., 268.

A joint and several covenant by an intended husband and wife, that if the wife, her executors or administrators, or the husband, his executors or administrators, in her right, should "at any one time thereafter" become absolutely entitled to any real or personal estate, the husband and wife respectively, or their respective executors or administrators, would bring it into settlement, does not apply to real and personal estate coming to the wife under the husband's will. Ib.

8. A marriage settlement, made in 1828, contained a joint covenant by the husband and wife to concur and join in conveying and settling upon the trusts of the settlement, all property, real or personal, which the wife, or the husband in her right, might thereafter become entitled to or interested in, under the will or intestacy of, or by gift from, the wife's father, or under the will or intestacy of, or by gift from, any other person or persons whomsoever. The husband died in 1843, having by his will, made in 1841, left all his property to his wife absolutely:—Held, that the covenant did not apply to the property acquired by the wife under the husband's will. Dickinson v. Dillwyn, 39 L. J., Ch., 266; 22 L. T., N. S., 647; 8 L. R., Eq., 546; 17 W. R. 1122.

The wife's father died in 1836, and under his will she became entitled, in reversion, to 100*l.*, which did not, however, fall into possession until after the husband's death:—Held, notwithstanding, that this was subject to the covenant. Ib.

9. A husband and wife, by their marriage settlement, covenanted to assign to the trustees of the settlement upon the trusts thereof, any property which the wife, or the husband in her right, should at any time become possessed of or entitled to during the coverture. A decree nisi for the dissolution of the marriage was pronounced; but pending the decree being made absolute, the husband and wife appointed a new trustee of the settlement, and property fell into possession of the wife. Subsequently the wife married again:—Held, that the property was not bound by the covenant.

the covenant. Hughes v. Young, 9 Jur., N. S., 376; 32 L. J., Ch., 137; 1 N. R. 166.

Held, secondly, that the sum given by the settlement in trust for the husband absolutely was not "settled" within the meaning of that word as used in the covenant. Ib.

1. A marriage settlement recited that it was agreed that if any property should descend or devolve to the wife, it should be settled upon the trusts of the settlement. The indenture contained a covenant to the same effect as the recital, but entered into by the husband only. The husband died, and subsequently reversionary personal property of the wife fell into possession:—Held, that it was not subject to the trusts of the settlement. Young v. Smith, 11 Jur., N. S., 963; 35 Beav. 87.

2. Covenant by husband and wife to settle "all real or personal estate, property, or effects to which the wife or the husband in her right shall by gift, descent, succession, or otherwise become entitled":—Held, to include reversionary interests in consols, which fell in by the death of a tenant for life, after the decease of both husband and wife. Re Hughes, 4 Giff. 432.

3. Where a woman in an ante-nuptial settlement joins in a covenant with her future husband to settle after acquired property to which she or he in her right shall become entitled in possession, reversion, remainder, or expectancy, that covenant does not apply to a general power, of appointment and a life interest given to her under a will, but does apply to a reversionary interest to which she is entitled under the same will so far as her husband, in the event of his surviving her, would be entitled in her right. A power of appointment, a life interest, and a reversion given to a married woman by one will are as distinct as if given by three separate instruments. Townsend (Marchioness) v. Harrowby (Earl), 4 W. R. 413; 4 Jur., N. S., 353.

4. By a marriage settlement made between R. the intended husband, K. the intended wife, and C. and D. the trustees, certain property therein mentioned was settled on the usual trusts. The settlement then contained the following clause: "And it is hereby declared and agreed by and between the parties hereto, and R. doth hereby, for himself, his heirs, executors, and administrators, covenant, promise, and agree to and with the said C. and D., their executors and administrators, that if the said K., or the said R. in right of the said K., shall at or upon the said marriage, or at any time thereafter, become interested in or entitled to any sum or sums of money, or real or personal estate, etc., which already hath or have been, or shall or may at any time or times hereafter be, given or bequeathed, or which shall descend to K., that then the same shall be and remain, etc., upon the same trusts, etc., as are hereinbefore mentioned, etc., of and concerning the said trust moneys, stocks, and premises hereinbefore assigned; and for the better effecting this purpose, R., his heirs, etc., will, upon request, pay, etc., and join with K. in assigning, etc., all such sums, etc., to C. and D." R. died, and after his death certain sums of money, to which his wife during his life had a reversionary interest, fell into possession:—Held, that this covenant applied to the property only to which the marital right attached, and that the property to which K. became entitled after the death of her husband was not bound by it. Reid v. Kenrick, 1 Jur., N. S., 897; 24 L. J., Ch., 503; 3 Eq. Rep. 1031; 3 W. R. 530.

5. H. was entitled to a reversionary interest in personal property. In a settlement made on her marriage, it was recited, that it was agreed that any property to which the husband and H., or either of them in her right, "should by any means become absolutely entitled," should be settled, and that the husband and H. should enter into the covenant thereinafter contained. The husband and H. jointly and severally covenanted with the trustees, that if at any time during the marriage the husband and H., or either of them in her right, should, by gift, "descent, succession, or otherwise howsoever, become entitled to any real or personal property" to the amount of 100*l.* and upwards, the same should be assigned to the trustees, "so far as the estates or interests in such future property would extend." H. died in 1859, and her husband in August 1862; and in December 1862 several sums exceeding 100*l.* became payable under the deeds of 1812 and 1822:—Held, that they were included within the terms of the covenant. Re Hill, 9 Jur., N. S., 942; 11 W. R. 930; 8 L. T., N. S., 825.

6. A feme sole, being entitled to property under a will, if she attained twenty-one, married, and by a settlement made immediately previously to the marriage, the intended husband covenanted with the trustees that all the estate, property, and effects, real and personal, which he and his intended wife, or either in her right, should at any time during the coverture become seised or possessed of or entitled to, at law or in equity, of the value of 200*l.* or upwards under any gift, devise, or bequest, or by descent, representation, or any other means whatsoever, should be settled:—Held, that the contingent interest to which the wife was entitled was within the covenant. Re Worsley, 16 L. T., N. S., 826.

7. A marriage settlement contained a covenant to settle any property which should come to or devolve upon the intended wife, or her husband in her right, "at any time or times after the solemnisation of the said intended marriage and during the continuance thereof." At the date of the settlement, the intended wife was entitled to a reversionary interest in personalty, subject to the life interest of her mother. The wife died before the tenant for life, leaving the husband surviving:—Held, that the wife's reversionary interest was bound by the covenant. Rose v. Cornish, 16 L. T., N. S., 786.

8. A covenant, by husband and wife, to settle property to which the wife or the husband in her right "shall become entitled" during the coverture, held to include property vested in reversion before the coverture, and falling into possession during the coverture, but not to include property to which they are entitled only in reversion during the coverture, and which fell into possession after the coverture. Re Clinton, Exp. Holloway, Exp. Weare, 41 L. J., Ch., 191; 20 W. R. 326; 13 L. R., Eq., 295; 26 L. T., N. S., 159.

9. By a marriage settlement the intended husband and wife severally covenanted with the trustees that all the real and personal property (if any) not thereinbefore settled, to

1. Husband and wife covenanted to vest in the trustees of their settlement, upon the trusts thereof, "all property which should come to her absolutely, and not bound by any trust or provision otherwise than for her absolute use":—Held, that property bequeathed to her "for her separate use absolutely" was bound by the covenant; and, secondly, that leaseholds and chattels bound by the covenant were to be enjoyed in specie and unconverted. Milford v. Peile, 17 Beav. 602; 2 W. R. 181.

2. A marriage settlement recited an agreement that the future property of the wife should be settled, but the covenant to settle was on the part of the husband alone, to execute all necessary deeds, as that such property should (so far as he was concerned) be vested in the trustees, on the trusts of the settlement:—Held, that the property afterwards given to the separate use of the wife was not liable to be settled. Hammond v. Hammond, 19 Beav. 29; 3 Eq. Rep. 119.

3. Assignment of property to be acquired by wife will not make property over which she acquires a power only, subject to the settlement, unless she exercise the power in favour of herself absolutely. Ewart v. Ewart, 1 W. R. 466; 1 Eq. Rep. 536.

In a marriage settlement an intended wife assigned all the property to which she then was, or to which she or her intended husband in her right should, during the coverture, become entitled, to trustees upon the trusts thereby declared, for herself, the husband, and the children of the marriage. After the marriage her father died, having by his will given her a general power of appointment over his residuary estate. The wife, during the coverture, in exercise of the power contained in the will, appointed to herself, for her separate use, a gross sum of 1,000*l.*, and an annuity of 100*l.* for her life, and amongst her family the residue, upon trusts differing from those of the marriage settlement, reserving a power of revocation:—Held, that the terms of the assignment by the wife in the marriage settlement did not amount to a covenant to exercise a general power of appointment in favour of the objects and in conformity with the trusts of such settlement, and that property over which the wife afterwards acquired a general power of appointment was not by that circumstance brought within the operation of the settlement. S. C. 11 Hare 276.

Held, also, that upon the appointment by the wife of the 1,000*l.* for her own absolute use, that sum became bound by the trusts of the settlement, and the power of revocation was ineffectual. Ib.

Held, lastly, that the interest on the annuity of 100*l.* for her own life, for her separate use, which the wife took under her appointment (an interest which was in conformity with that which she would have taken under the trusts of the settlement if the annuity had been otherwise acquired), was not disturbed by the effect of the settlement, inasmuch as it was not the intention of the contract expressed therein that any after-acquired property should be converted or taken otherwise than in the state in which it should be so acquired. Ib.

4. By an ante-nuptial settlement real estate was vested in trustees for 500 years, on trusts after mentioned, and as to all the real estate, to pay a jointure to the wife, and subject thereto to such one or more of the children as the father should by deed or will appoint: and in default to the trustees for 1,000 years, to raise 5,000*l.* for portions for younger children, with remainder, subject to both terms, to the sons and daughters in tail with cross-remainders, with remainder to the right heirs of the settlor. Then followed the trusts of the 500 years' term; viz., to raise 4,000*l.*, and pay the interest to the wife for life with remainder to the children: sons at twenty-one, daughters at twenty-one, or on marriage equally. The father covenanted with the trustees, that in case his wife at any time during the coverture became entitled to any personal estate, he would do all necessary acts to vest the same in the trustees upon the trusts as were expressed of the 4,000*l.* to be raised by virtue of the 500 years' term. The marriage took place, and there was issue, and the wife became entitled to two sums of 3,000*l.*; one under a will to her separate use, and which she settled on her husband for life, and afterwards upon the trusts declared by their settlement of the 4,000*l.* to be raised under the 500 years' term; the other, not to her separate use, from other sources. The wife died, and on the question whether the 3,000*l.* so last settled was within the terms of the covenant:—Held, that it was not; but that the other 3,000*l.* was, and belonged to the children. Gataker v. Reynardson, 13 W. R. 417; 12 L. T., N. S., 134.

5. A covenant by a husband in marriage articles, to join his wife in assuring to the trustees all property, real or personal, to which the wife should become entitled or interested in, during the marriage:—Held, not to bring within the settlement a legacy subsequently given to the wife to be at her own disposal and control, and not to be subject to the jus mariti, or liable to be affected by his debts or deeds. Grey v. Stuart, 2 Giff. 398; 7 Jur., N. S., 989; 30 L. J., Ch., 884; 5 L. T., N. S., 200.

6. A married woman having, by her marriage settlement, executed when a minor, covenanted to confirm the settlement, and also to settle future property; and having acquired, by bequest, personal property to her separate use:—Held, bound to elect either to bring the bequest into settlement, or to make compensation out of reversionary personalty, and other property to which she would be entitled under the settlement, for her separate use, with a restraint on anticipation. Willoughby v. Middleton, 2 John. & H. 344; 8 Jur., N. S., 1055; 31 L. J., Ch., 683; 10 W. R. 460; 6 L. T., N. S., 814.

The covenant being to settle "any real or personal estate or effects," on trusts for sale and investment:—Held, that no exception could be implied as to specific jewels. Ib.

The mere omission of a recital of an intention that the wife should covenant:—Held, not to narrow the construction. Ib.

7. A covenant, by a husband alone, to settle the after acquired property of the wife does not bind her separate property, but such a covenant of the husband and wife does. Such a covenant to settle does not bind property over which a wife is deprived of the power of

by gift, descent, succession, or otherwise from or through M. become entitled to any real or personal estate or effects to the amount of 2,000*l.* or upwards, the same should be conveyed, transferred, and assigned to the trustees of the settlement upon the same trusts as were thereinbefore expressed of the proceeds of a certain policy thereby settled. W. was entitled to various interests in remainder subject to the life interest of M., who died in 1857, and to property under the will greatly exceeding 2,000*l.* in value:—Held, that the covenant did not amount to a declaration of trust, or to an assignment so as to render the property derived by the settlor from M. liable to the trusts of the settlement. Wilkinson v. Wilkinson, 4 Jur., N. S., 47.

3. Remainders and Contingent Interests in Real Estate.

1. The intended wife being seised of a remainder in fee, which would vest in her immediately upon her father's decease, if he died without having had other issue, it was settled upon the intended husband for life upon the death of the wife "if she ever became entitled thereto, but not otherwise":—Held, that the husband's life estate vested in him, although the wife did not survive her father. Wallace v. Wallace, 1 Con. & L. 491; 2 Dr. & War. 452.

2. A. being, under the marriage settlement of her father and mother, tenant in tail in remainder of certain lands, expectant on the failure of male issue of her only brother, there is made on her marriage a settlement, containing a covenant, by which, after reciting that it was possible that she might, under and by virtue of the limitations contained in the former settlement, eventually become entitled to a certain estate, or a part of certain lands, it is agreed that in case she shall in her lifetime become entitled to any such estate as aforesaid, the same shall be conveyed to the uses, and for the trusts therein mentioned; the brother afterwards suffers a recovery, and dies intestate, without issue; whereupon the fee simple of one part of the lands comprised and referred to in the settlements, descends upon her as one of his co-heiresses:—Held, that the covenant does not affect the fee-simple so coming to her by descent. Taylour v. Dickenson, 1 Russ. 521.

3. By a marriage settlement, a husband covenanted, that if any real or personal estate should be given or devised, descend or devolve, be bequeathed or come, to the wife or to the husband in her right, he would execute such deeds as would be necessary for vesting it in trustees, upon certain trusts, including a power of appointment after the end of the coverture. The wife was at that time entitled to a reversion. Some time after the marriage a new trustee of the settlement was appointed, and on the same day the wife sold and appointed the reversion to the old trustee:—Held, that the reversion was included in the settlement, and that the sale must be set aside. Spring v. Pride, 10 Jur., N. S., 646; 12 W. R. 892; 10 L. T., N. S., 473.

4. Where a lady, at the date of her marriage, was entitled to a contingent interest in remainder in real estate, and was also entitled in possession to stock, and in the settlement executed on her marriage no mention was made of her interest either in the real estate or in the stock, but the settlement contained a covenant to settle upon the trusts declared by the settlement any real or personal property to which the husband and wife, or either of them in right of the wife, should "by gift, descent, succession, or otherwise howsoever become entitled" during the coverture; and the wife's contingent interest in remainder in the real estate fell into possession during the coverture:—Held, that the words "become entitled," imported a change of condition in the property, and that the parties contemplated the wife's becoming entitled during the coverture, and did not intend to include property to which she was entitled at the time of coverture; and therefore that the wife's interest in the real estate having changed during the coverture, it fell within the covenant; but that the wife having been absolutely entitled to the stock at the date of the marriage, and there having been no subsequent change in her interest, the stock did not come within the terms of the covenant. Archer v. Kelley, 1 Dr. & Sm. 300; 6 Jur., N. S., 814; 29 L. J., Ch., 911; 8 W. R. 684,

5. A covenant in a marriage settlement by husband and wife to settle all the estate, property, and effects whatever which they or either of them in the right of the wife were or was at the date of the settlement, or should during the coverture become, seised or possessed of or entitled to at law or in equity, for all the estate and interest of them or either of them upon the trusts of the settlement, only includes indefeasibly vested interests, and therefore does not include the wife's interest in real estate which, at the date of the settlement, stood limited to A., the wife's father, for life, with remainder to his sons successively in tail male, with remainder to B. for life, with remainder to his sons successively in tail male, with remainder to the daughters of A. as tenants in common in tail, A., B., and two sons of A. having been alive at the date of the settlement, the two sons having died bachelors during the coverture, and A. and B. having survived the husband, and died without issue in the wife's lifetime. Dering v. Kynaston, 6 L. R., Eq., 210; 18 L. T., N. S., 346; 16 W. R. 819.

6. By a marriage settlement, the intended wife and husband severally covenanted with the trustees that, in case the marriage should be solemnised, all the estate, property, and effects, both real and personal, which the husband and wife, or either of them in right of the wife, "shall at any time or times during the intended coverture become seised or possessed of, or entitled to," should be settled. At the date of the settlement and of the marriage the wife was entitled to a vested remainder in land, expectant on the death of a tenant for life, who outlived the coverture:—Held, that the land was not subject to the trusts of the settlement. Re Peddor, 10 L. R., Eq., 585; 40 L. J., Ch., 77.

7. A covenant in a settlement to settle all the property of the wife of which she was possessed at the date thereof includes property to which she was entitled jointly with other persons in remainder after an estate in tail, though the covenant was in terms only the

1. Husband and wife covenanted to vest in the trustees of their settlement, upon the trusts thereof, "all property which should come to her absolutely, and not bound by any trust or provision otherwise than for her absolute use":—Held, that property bequeathed to her "for her separate use absolutely" was bound by the covenant; and, secondly, that leaseholds and chattels bound by the covenant were to be enjoyed in specie and unconverted. Milford v. Peile, 17 Beav. 602; 2 W. R. 181.

2. A marriage settlement recited an agreement that the future property of the wife should be settled, but the covenant to settle was on the part of the husband alone, to execute all necessary deeds, as that such property should (so far as he was concerned) be vested in the trustees, on the trusts of the settlement:—Held, that the property afterwards given to the separate use of the wife was not liable to be settled. Hammond v. Hammond, 19 Beav. 29; 3 Eq. Rep. 119.

3. Assignment of property to be acquired by wife will not make property over which she acquires a power only, subject to the settlement, unless she exercise the power in favour of herself absolutely. Ewart v. Ewart, 1 W. R. 466; 1 Eq. Rep. 536.

In a marriage settlement an intended wife assigned all the property to which she then was, or to which she or her intended husband in her right should, during the coverture, become entitled, to trustees upon the trusts thereby declared, for herself, the husband, and the children of the marriage. After the marriage her father died, having by his will given her a general power of appointment over his residuary estate. The wife, during the coverture, in exercise of the power contained in the will, appointed to herself, for her separate use, a gross sum of 1,000*l.*, and an annuity of 100*l.* for her life, and amongst her family the residue, upon trusts differing from those of the marriage settlement, reserving a power of revocation:—Held, that the terms of the assignment by the wife in the marriage settlement did not amount to a covenant to exercise a general power of appointment in favour of the objects and in conformity with the trusts of such settlement, and that property over which the wife afterwards acquired a general power of appointment was not by that circumstance brought within the operation of the settlement. S. C. 11 Hare 276.

Held, also, that upon the appointment by the wife of the 1,000*l.* for her own absolute use, that sum became bound by the trusts of the settlement, and the power of revocation was ineffectual. Ib.

Held, lastly, that the interest on the annuity of 100*l.* for her own life, for her separate use, which the wife took under her appointment (an interest which was in conformity with that which she would have taken under the trusts of the settlement if the annuity had been otherwise acquired), was not disturbed by the effect of the settlement, inasmuch as it was not the intention of the contract expressed therein that any after-acquired property should be converted or taken otherwise than in the state in which it should be so acquired. Ib.

4. By an ante-nuptial settlement real estate was vested in trustees for 500 years, on trusts after mentioned, and as to all the real estate, to pay a jointure to the wife, and subject thereto to such one or more of the children as the father should by deed or will appoint: and in default to the trustees for 1,000 years, to raise 5,000*l.* for portions for younger children, with remainder, subject to both terms, to the sons and daughters in tail with cross-remainders, with remainder to the right heirs of the settlor. Then followed the trusts of the 500 years' term; viz., to raise 4,000*l.*, and pay the interest to the wife for life with remainder to the children: sons at twenty-one, daughters at twenty-one, or on marriage equally. The father covenanted with the trustees, that in case his wife at any time during the coverture became entitled to any personal estate, he would do all necessary acts to vest the same in the trustees upon the trusts as were expressed of the 4,000*l.* to be raised by virtue of the 500 years' term. The marriage took place, and there was issue, and the wife became entitled to two sums of 3,000*l.*; one under a will to her separate use, and which she settled on her husband for life, and afterwards upon the trusts declared by their settlement of the 4,000*l.* to be raised under the 500 years' term; the other, not to her separate use, from other sources. The wife died, and on the question whether the 3,000*l.* so last settled was within the terms of the covenant:—Held, that it was not; but that the other 3,000*l.* was, and belonged to the children. Gataker v. Reynardson, 13 W. R. 417; 12 L. T., N. S., 134.

5. A covenant by a husband in marriage articles, to join his wife in assuring to the trustees all property, real or personal, to which the wife should become entitled or interested in, during the marriage:—Held, not to bring within the settlement a legacy subsequently given to the wife to be at her own disposal and control, and not to be subject to the jus mariti, or liable to be affected by his debts or deeds. Grey v. Stuart, 2 Giff. 398; 7 Jur., N. S., 989; 30 L. J., Ch., 884; 5 L. T., N. S., 200.

6. A married woman having, by her marriage settlement, executed when a minor, covenanted to confirm the settlement, and also to settle future property; and having acquired, by bequest, personal property to her separate use:—Held, bound to elect either to bring the bequest into settlement, or to make compensation out of reversionary personalty, and other property to which she would be entitled under the settlement, for her separate use, with a restraint on anticipation. Willoughby v. Middleton, 2 John. & H. 344; 8 Jur., N. S., 1055; 31 L. J., Ch., 683; 10 W. R. 460; 6 L. T., N. S., 814.

The covenant being to settle "any real or personal estate or effects," on trusts for sale and investment:—Held, that no exception could be implied as to specific jewels. Ib.

The mere omission of a recital of an intention that the wife should covenant:—Held, not to narrow the construction. Ib.

7. A covenant, by a husband alone, to settle the after acquired property of the wife does not bind her separate property, but such a covenant of the husband and wife does. Such a covenant to settle does not bind property over which a wife is deprived of the power of in the settlement. Re Pearson, 20 W. R. 522; 26 L. T., N. S., 393.

1. A widow entitled to a life interest in a fund, and also to a moiety of the capital, subject to her own life interest, married again. By the settlement on the second marriage her life interest was settled, and she and her intended husband covenanted to settle property to which she or he in her right should, during the coverture, become entitled:—Held, that the words of futurity were satisfied in respect of the husband's interest, and that the moiety of the fund was subject to the covenant. Re Viant, 18 L. R., Eq., 436; 43 L. J., Ch., 832; 22 W. R. 686; 30 L. T., N. S., 544.

2. By a covenant in a marriage settlement it was provided that in case the wife, or the husband in her right, "should at any time thereafter, by descent, devise, bequest, or under the Statute of Distributions, acquire, succeed to, or become possessed of or entitled to any property, real or personal, which would at any time be of the value of 100*l.*," the same should be conveyed or assigned to the trustees of the settlement. The wife survived her husband:—Held, that this covenant only applied to such property of the wife as she became entitled to during the coverture, and that she had a right to have paid over to her a sum of money in court exceeding 100*l.*, to which she became entitled after the death of her husband. Alleyne v. Hussey, 22 W. R. 203.

3. A covenant to settle after acquired property will, in the absence of indications of a contrary intention, be read as limited to the duration of the coverture, and this though the covenant relates only to property from a specified source. Re Campbell, 6 L. R., Ch. D., 686; 46 L. J., Ch., 142; 25 W. R. 268.

4. In a marriage settlement a covenant to settle the wife's after acquired property will, in the absence of expressions showing a contrary intention, be construed as applying only to property acquired during the coverture, although the words "during the said intended coverture" are omitted. Re Edwards, 9 L. R., Ch., 97; 43 L. J., Ch., 265; 22 W. R. 144; 29 L. T., N. S., 712.

A marriage settlement contained a covenant by the husband and wife with the trustees that if, after the marriage, she, or the husband in her right, should become entitled to any property, real or personal, by any means whatever, then all such property should be vested in the trustees on the trusts of the settlement. The wife survived the husband, and after his death she became entitled, as one of the coheirs of a lunatic brother who had died intestate, to part of a fund in court, which represented the purchase money of land taken by a railway company:—Held, that the covenant must be construed to extend only to property acquired by the wife during the coverture, and that her share of the fund in question was not bound by the covenant. S. C. 22 W. R. 144.

5. The rule laid down in Re Edwards (9 L. R., Ch., 97; 22 W. R. 144), that in a marriage settlement a covenant to settle after acquired property applies only to property acquired during the coverture, governs those cases in which the settlement contains an assignment of after acquired property. Holloway v. Holloway, 25 W. R. 575.

6. By an ante-nuptial settlement, the intended husband and wife covenanted with the trustees that all personal estate (save certain excepted particulars) to which the wife or the husband in her right should become entitled during the coverture should be vested in the trustees upon the trusts of the settlement. A sum of money not mentioned in the settlement was handed by the wife to the husband before the marriage took place, and the evidence, in the opinion of the Court, established that the transaction was simply a loan:—Held, that the sum of money was caught by the settlement, and was subject to the trusts thereof. Hamilton v. James, 11 Ir. R., Eq., 223.

5. Property Settled to Separate Use of Wife.

7. Where by marriage articles it was agreed by the intended husband, that any money which might devolve by will or otherwise to the intended wife, should be settled on her and his children by her, he drawing the interest, and the wife's father afterwards bequeathed to her a legacy for her separate use, as to which the wife died intestate in the lifetime of her husband:—Held, that the legacy was not subject to the trusts of the articles, but that the husband took it jure mariti, and that a settlement which had been prepared at his instance, by which the interest of the legacy was settled upon himself for life, and the principal upon the children of the marriage at the age of twenty-one, should be carried into execution. Drury v. Scott, 4 Y. & Coll. 264; 5 Jur. 405.

8. In a marriage settlement the husband alone covenanted to settle any property which his wife, or he in her right, might thereafter acquire:—Held, that property, which was afterwards given to the wife for her separate use, was not affected by the covenant. Travers v. Travers, 2 Beav. 179.

9. A feme being entitled to a reversionary interest in property for her separate use, both she and her intended husband separately covenanted to settle any property which she, or her husband in her right, was or might become entitled to, upon certain trusts: the above interest having fallen into possession:—Held, that it was subject to the trusts of the settlement. Tawney v. Ward, 1 Beav. 563.

10. A marriage settlement contained a clause by which it was agreed, and the husband covenanted, that if any real or personal estate should descend or devolve to, or vest in the wife or in any person in trust for her, the husband should make, do, and execute, or cause or procure to be made, done, or executed, or join or concur with the wife in making, doing, or executing all such acts, deeds, etc., as should be necessary for settling such property on the trusts of the settlement. A legacy was left to the wife for her separate use:—Held, that it did not come within the agreement and covenant to settle, contained in the settlement. Ramsden v. Smith, 2 Drew. 298; 18 Jur. 566; 23 L. J., Ch., 757; 2 W. R. 435; 2 Eq. Rep. 660.

affect the reversionary interest so far as her husband, in the event of his surviving his wife, would be entitled to the property in her right, or as her executor or administrator. Townshend v. Harrowby, 4 Jur., N. S., 353; 27 L. J., Ch., 553.

1. Where a covenant to settle after acquired property was contained in a settlement executed on the marriage of a lady, who at the time was entitled to a contingent interest liable to be divested, and which afterwards fell into possession; and who afterwards became entitled to property to her separate use, as to part of which there was a proviso against alienation:—Held, that the property to which the lady was contingently entitled at the time of her marriage came within the terms of the covenant, but that the property settled to her separate use, and as to which there was a proviso against alienation, was not included in it. Brookes v. Keith, 1 Dr. & Sm. 462; 7 Jur., N. S., 482; 9 W. R. 565; 4 L. T., N. S., 541.

2. A covenant in a marriage settlement by the intended wife to settle property which shall afterwards devolve upon her, binds all property to which she may subsequently become entitled to her separate use for an interest exceeding an estate for her own life, and not subject to restraints on anticipation. Re Portadown, Dungannon, & Omagh Junction Railway Co., 1 Ir. R., Eq., 293.

By a marriage settlement the husband and wife covenanted that, in case any estate, moneys, or property of any description whatsoever should descend to or devolve on either of them at any time during the coverture, they would convey or assign the same to the trustees upon the trusts of the settlement, viz., for the wife's separate use for her life; after her death, for the husband for life; and after the decease of both, for the children of the marriage. The wife's mother, by a will made in execution of a power of which her children were the sole object, appointed a sum of stock to the wife for her separate use, with a request that she would leave it to her children, and a direction, that she should not alienate the same during her life:—Held, that the stock was bound by the covenant, and subject to the trusts of the settlement. Ib.

3. Property settled to the separate use of a married woman will not be bound by a covenant by her in her marriage settlement to settle after acquired property if there are directions showing the donor's intention that it should not be so bound. Exp. Young, 15 W. R. 975.

4. In a marriage settlement it was declared, and the husband covenanted, that in case at any time during the coverture any real, personal, or mixed estate of the value of 500*l.* should come to or vest in the wife, or the husband in her right, at law or in equity, by devise, descent, gift, or otherwise, it should be conveyed and assigned from time to time without delay by the husband, his executors and administrators, and the wife upon the trusts of the settlement:—Held, that a legacy given to the separate use of the wife was within the covenant. Campbell v. Bainbridge, 6 L. R., Eq., 269; 37 L. J., Ch., 634; 17 W. R. 5; 19 L. T., N. S., 254.

5. A marriage settlement contained a covenant that if, during the coverture, the wife should become entitled to any property of the value of 500*l.* or upwards, it should be vested in the trustees upon the trusts of the settlement. After the marriage a sum of 5,499*l.* 19*s.* 1*d.* was bequeathed upon such trusts as the wife should appoint. She executed eleven successive deeds, several of them on the same day, by each of which she appointed 499*l.* 19*s.* 11*d.* for her own separate use:—Held, that the money was not bound by the covenant in the settlement, and that the wife was entitled to the whole. Bower v. Smith, 11 L. R., Eq., 279; 40 L. J., Ch., 194; 24 L. T., N. S., 118; 19 W. R. 399.

6. A marriage settlement recited that it had been agreed that the intended husband and wife should covenant for the settlement of such property as should devolve upon the wife or the husband in her right through C; and the husband and wife severally covenanted that if they or the husband in right of the wife should become possessed of or entitled to any such property, except interests given to the wife for her life, and which, as was thereby stated, should, unless settled to her separate use, be so settled, then such property should be settled upon the trusts of the settlement:—Held, that the terms of the covenant did not include property bequeathed by C. to the wife absolutely for her separate use, and that the construction was not altered by the recital or the words of exception. Burn-Murdoch v. Charlesworth, 23 W. R. 743.

7. By a marriage settlement, after a recital that on the treaty for the marriage it was agreed that all real and personal property which during the coverture should devolve upon or vest in the wife or the husband in her right to the value of 200*l.* at any one time should be settled upon the trusts thereinafter declared, it was witnessed that it was thereby agreed and declared between and by the parties thereto, and the husband thereby covenanted with the trustees, that if at any time during the coverture any real or personal estate should devolve on or vest in the wife or the husband in her right to the amount in value of 200*l.* at any one time, the husband would make, do, and execute, or cause and procure to be made, done, and executed, and join and concur in making, doing, and executing all such conveyances, etc., as would effectually vest such real and personal estate in the trustees upon the trusts therein declared. After the marriage a deed was executed by the wife's mother, under which, during the coverture, a sum exceeding 200*l.* became payable to the wife for her separate use:—Held, by Fry, J., that this sum was within the covenant, and must be settled. But held, by the Court of Appeal, that as the operative part of the deed was clear, the recital could not control it—that as the operative part of the deed only related to acts to be done by the husband, the agreement and declaration between and by the parties that those acts should be done did not import a covenant by any other party that they should be done, and that there was, therefore, no covenant by any one but the husband—that the covenant by him could not be held to relate to property over which he had no power and in which he had no interest—and that the wife, therefore, was not bound to bring into settlement property given to her separate use. Dawes v. Tredwell, 18 L. R., Ch. D., 354; 45 disposition. Coventry v. Coventry, 32 Beav. 612; 9 Jur., N. S., 613; 11 W. R. 868; 8 L. T., N. S., 819; 2 N. R. 349.

Covenant by husband and wife to settle all after acquired property, "not being already settled for her separate use":—Held, not to bind property subsequently bequeathed to the wife for her separate use. Ib.

1. F., at the time of her marriage with D., was entitled, as the only child of her father and mother, subject to their life interests and to a power of appointment in favour of children, grandchildren, or other issue given to them or the survivor of them, to 7,500*l.* In the settlement made on the marriage of F. with D. was a covenant by D. and F. to assure to the trustees all real and personal estate vested in F., or which should become vested in D. in her right, and all real and personal estate which F. or D., in her right during the coverture, might become entitled to. D. died, leaving two children; then F.'s father died, without ever having exercised the power. F.'s mother then died, having by her will appointed the whole fund to F. absolutely for her separate use. Afterwards F. married H., and no settlement was made on that marriage:—Held, that the fund was subject to the covenant, and must be paid to the trustees of the marriage settlement of F. and D. Re Frowd, 10 L. T., N. S., 367; 4 N. R. 54.

2. By a Scotch marriage settlement all the property which the wife might acquire during the coverture was settled upon the husband for life, with remainder to the wife absolutely. A legacy of 2,000*l.* was afterwards bequeathed upon trust for the wife for her separate use for life, without power of anticipation, with trusts over in favour of the husband and the children of the marriage. The husband having become bankrupt:—Held, that his assignees had no interest in the dividends on the 2,000*l.* which were ordered to be paid to the wife during her life. Duncan v. Cannan, 4 W. R. 2.

3. By a marriage settlement in 1838, real estate was conveyed to such uses as M. (the intended wife) should by deed or will appoint, and in default of appointment, to certain uses for the benefit of the children of the marriage, with an ultimate remainder to the use of M. in fee; and it was provided that all property which during the coverture should come to or vest in the husband in right of M., or in M. by descent, devise, limitation, gift, or otherwise, should be settled to the same uses. M., by will, made shortly after the settlement, devised and bequeathed all the residue of her property, "except such real and personal estate as might remain subject to the trusts of her marriage settlement, by reason of no specific disposition thereof having been made by her under the power therein contained." In 1854 M. purchased real estate out of the savings of her separate property, and it was conveyed to the same uses and trusts as those declared by the settlement of 1838, omitting only the uses in favour of children:—Held, that the exception in the will referred only to the property subject to the trusts of the marriage settlement at the date of the will, and that the real estate subsequently purchased by M. passed under her will. Hughes v. Jones, 32 L. J., Ch., 487; 11 W. R. 898; 9 L. T., N. S., 143; 2 N. R. 417.

4. Covenant in a marriage settlement to settle the wife's after acquired property (save and except "any estate or effects already settled to her separate use"):—Held, that a legacy afterwards bequeathed to her for her separate use was not included in the covenant. Whitgreave v. Whitgreave, 33 Beav. 533.

5. An assignment by an intended wife of her future property, followed by a covenant by the intended husband to settle the after acquired property of the wife, will not extend to property given to the wife in terms which are inconsistent with the trusts of the settlement. Re Mainwaring's Settlement, 2 L. R., Eq., 487; 14 W. R. 887.

Therefore, where an intended wife, by an ante-nuptial settlement, assigned all the personal estate to which she might at any time thereafter become entitled, in any way howsoever, upon the trusts of the settlement; and the deed contained a covenant by the intended husband to settle any real or personal estate whatsoever that should descend to, devolve upon, or vest in the wife; and where a legacy was, after the marriage, bequeathed to the wife, with a direction to the executors to pay such part of the legacy to the wife as she might require for her separate use, independent of her husband, and to be free in all respects from his debts and engagements:—Held, that the settlement had no operation upon such part of the legacy as was required by the wife to be paid to her upon her separate receipt. Ib.

6. By an ante-nuptial settlement the husband and wife covenanted with the trustees to settle all property to which the wife then was or during the coverture she or her husband in her right should become entitled by devise, bequest, or otherwise "for any estate or interest whatsoever." During the coverture the wife's father died, having by his will devised and bequeathed a moiety of his residuary real personal estate to her "for her separate use, and independently of any husband":—Held, that the moiety was bound by the covenant. Re Mainwaring's Settlement (2 L. R., Eq., 487), not followed. Re Allnutt, Pott v. Brassey, 22 L. R., Ch. D., 275; 52 L. J., Ch., 299; 48 L. T. 155; 31 W. R. 469.

7. By a marriage settlement it was declared and agreed between the parties, and the husband covenanted with the trustees, that in case the wife, or the husband in her right, should at any time during his life become possessed of, interested in, or entitled to any personal estate, moneys, effects, or other property in possession, reversion, remainder, or expectancy, by gift, bequest, or under the Statute of Distributions, the husband and wife would, within six months, transfer, assure, assign, and make over all such property to the trustees upon the trusts of the settlement. Subsequently to the marriage, the father of the wife, by his will, vested 5,000*l.* in trustees, to hold the same upon such trusts as the wife should, by deed or will, appoint; and in default of such appointment to pay the dividends and interest to the wife, for her separate use, and after her death upon trust for her executors or administrators:—Held, that the covenant in the settlement did not affect or control the general power of appointment given to the wife over the 5,000*l.* by her father's will; and that it did not affect her life interest to her separate use, but that it did

Beav. 184; 17 L. J., N. S., Ch., 466; 12 Jur. 762.

1. P., on his marriage with T., executed a bond in the penalty of 2,000*l.*, with condition to be void, if, in the event of T. surviving P., his executors, etc., should, within three months after his decease, pay to trustees 1,000*l.* in trust for T., and if in the event of P. surviving T., and there being any child or children of the marriage living at the decease of P., his executors, etc., should, within three months after his decease, pay to trustees 1,000*l.* in trust for such child or children: "and further, if P. should at any time during his natural life become seised of any messuages, etc., in possession, and should settle the same upon T. and the issue of the said intended marriage, by such good conveyances in the law as counsel should advise, in such parts and proportions, and to such use and uses, as should be thought requisite, the better to make a provision for T., in case she should happen to survive P." After the death of T., P. having married again, and then, and not before, become seised of real estates, and having at his death left issue by both marriages, all the real estates of which he became seised during his life were subject to the obligation, and settled on the issue of the first marriage, as tenants in common in fee. Preble v. Boghurst, 1 Swan. 309; 1 Wils. 161.

2. A covenant by a husband to settle all future-acquired property on himself, his wife and children, does not include his life interest in property bequeathed to him, with a direction to settle it on himself and his family. White v. Briggs, 22 Beav. 176.

3. Settlement by a husband of all his personal estate to which he was then or might thereafter become entitled, in trust for himself for life, with remainder absolutely to his wife:—Held, not to comprise his interest in a fund bequeathed to him for life, with remainder to his children. St. Aubyn v. Humphrey, 22 Beav. 175.

4. In a marriage settlement an intended wife assigned all the property to which she then was, or to which she or her intended husband in her right should, during coverture, become entitled, to trustees upon the trusts thereby declared, for herself, the husband, and the children of the marriage. After the marriage her father died, having by his will given her a general power of appointment over his residuary estate. The wife, during coverture, in exercise of the power contained in the will, appointed to herself, for her separate use, a gross sum of 1,000*l.*, and an annuity of 100*l.* for her life, and amongst her family the residue, upon trusts differing from those of the marriage settlement, reserving a power of revocation:—Held, that the terms of the assignment by the wife in the marriage settlement did not amount to a covenant to exercise a general power of appointment in favour of the objects and in conformity with the trusts of such settlement, and that property over which she afterwards acquired a general power of appointment was not by that circumstance brought within the operation of the settlement. Ewart v. Ewart, 11 Hare 276; 1 W. R. 466; 1 Eq. Rep. 536; 17 Jur. 1022.

Held, also, that upon the appointment by the wife of the 1,000*l.* for her own absolute use, that sum became bound by the trusts of the settlement, and the power of revocation was ineffectual. Ib.

5. On the marriage of J. B. I. with E. B., neither party being possessed of any property, articles were entered into providing for the settlement of all the property which E. B. was then or thereafter might become entitled to, upon trust, as the wife should appoint; and in default of appointment, to her for her separate use for life, and then for the husband for life, and then for children; and that the settlement should contain a covenant by the husband that all the property which he or the wife should thereafter become entitled to should be settled upon the like trusts. The husband was largely indebted at the time of the marriage, and a few months afterwards he took the benefit of the Insolvent Debtors Act, and after that he became entitled, as heir-at-law and next of kin, to real and personal estate from a deceased brother:—Held, in a suit to enforce the articles against the assignee under the husband's insolvency, that the property which came to him from his brother was subject to the trusts of the articles, and was not liable, in the hands of the assignee, to pay the husband's creditors. Hardey v. Green, 11 Beav. 182; 18 L. J., N. S., Ch., 480; 13 Jur. 777.

6. In the year 1817, A., who was not then a trader, on his marriage covenanted that all his property, real and personal, as well that in possession as that after acquired, should be charged and chargeable with the sum of 3,000*l.* as a provision for his wife and the issue of the marriage. Some months after his marriage he became a trader, and in the year 1835 was declared a bankrupt:—Held, on bill filed by the wife and children, that the covenant to charge after acquired property created a valid charge on all the freehold estates of A. purchased subsequently to his marriage, and should be carried specifically into execution against the assignees of the bankrupt A. Lyster v. Burroughs, 1 Dr. & Wal. 149. And see Gubbins v. Gubbins, id. 160. n.

7. A trader by a settlement made before his marriage assigned a policy and some furniture to trustees for the benefit of his wife and the children of the marriage, and also covenanted that all other real or personal estate of which he should become seised, possessed, or entitled during the coverture, should be transferred to the trustees upon trusts thereby declared. No trusts of the after-acquired property were declared in the settlement. After the marriage, and when he was still solvent, he purchased some shares; the shares were registered in his name and he held the certificates. Subsequently he filed a petition for liquidation, and the trustee in the liquidation claimed these shares, as against the trustees of the settlement:—Held, that he could not be allowed in this way to withdraw the whole of his property from his creditors, and that the shares must be handed to the trustee in the liquidation. Exp. Bolland, Re Clint, 43 L. J., Bky., 16; 17 L. R., Eq., 115; 29 L. T., N. S., 543; 22 W. R. 152.

8. The five children of a testator were absolutely entitled to his residue. One of them, on her marriage, settled her fifth of such

L. T. 119; 29 W. R. 793. Reversing 44 L. T. 740; 29 W. R. 714.

1. A marriage settlement, in which the wife's property was vested in trustees for her separate use, without power of anticipation, contained a covenant by the husband and wife that if at any time during the joint lives of them any further portion, fortune, or estate should come to or devolve upon either of them, by or under any will, or otherwise, they would effectually settle the same (except such future portion, fortune, or estate as should be otherwise settled previously to the same devolving as aforesaid) upon the trusts of the settlement:—Held, that a gift of a legacy to the wife for her own sole and separate use, free from the debts, control, and engagements of her husband, was excluded from the operation of the covenant. Kane v. Kane, 16 L. R., Ch. D., 207; 50 L. J., Ch., 72; 43 L. T. 667; 29 W. R. 212.

2. An agreement by husband and wife, in an ante-nuptial settlement, for the settlement by the husband and wife of the wife's after-acquired property, is a covenant by the wife as well as by the husband, whether the wife is a minor or of full age. Smith v. Lucas, 18 L. R., Ch. D., 531; 45 L. T. 460; 30 W. R. 451.

If the wife is a minor, and the covenant is for her benefit, it is voidable only and not void, and is binding upon all property coming to her during the coverture for her separate use, without a restraint on anticipation, until she avoids or disaffirms the covenant as to such property; for she may, after attaining twenty-one, and during the coverture, elect whether the covenant shall be binding on her separate estate or not, such right of election being a necessary consequence of a married woman's power to dispose of, without her husband's consent, property settled to her separate use: but—inasmuch as a contract by a married woman, while under coverture, affecting her separate property, binds only her then existing separate property, and not separate property which she may thereafter acquire (Pike v. Fitzgibbon, 17 L. R., Ch. D., 454)—the wife, in electing to confirm the covenant, thereby binds only that separate property to which she is entitled at the date of the confirmation, and not that to which she may subsequently become entitled during the coverture. Semble, the doctrine of election or compensation does not apply in the case of a married woman entitled for her separate use with a restraint on anticipation. Willoughby v. Middleton (2 John. & H. 344) questioned on this point. Ib.

By an ante-nuptial settlement, dated in 1856, the lady being then a minor, after reciting that she would be entitled on attaining twenty-one to a share of her deceased father's estate, and the intention to settle the same, it was agreed and declared between the parties thereto, and the husband covenanted with the trustees, that the husband and wife and all other necessary parties would, as soon as the wife attained twenty-one, convey the share to the trustees upon trust for the wife during her life for her separate use without power of anticipation, and after her death for the husband till bankruptcy or alienation, with remainder for the issue of the marriage. And it was further agreed and declared that if the wife then was, or if at any time or times during the coverture she or her husband in her right should become seised or possessed of or entitled to any real or personal property for any estate or interest whatsoever, then and in every such case the husband and wife and all other necessary parties should assure the same to the trustees upon the trusts thereinbefore declared. The settlement contained a power for the trustees, at the request of the wife, to lend any of the trust funds to the husband on his personal security. The wife attained twenty-one in 1857, and in 1858 she and her husband, in pursuance of the covenant in that behalf in the settlement, conveyed her share of her father's estate to the trustees of the settlement. In 1863, upon the death of a brother, the wife became entitled under his will to certain funds thereby bequeathed to her for her separate use. These funds, and also funds arising from her share of her father's estate, were, with the assent of the wife, paid to the trustees of the settlement and by them lent, at her request, to the husband on his personal security. In 1880 the wife became entitled under the will of her mother to a sum of 4,000*l.* and a share of her residuary estate thereby bequeathed respectively to her for her separate use:—Held, that the wife could elect to retain the 4,000*l.* and share of residue for her separate use unbound by the covenant for the settlement of her after-acquired property. Ib.

3. A marriage settlement made in 1862 contained an agreement for the settlement of any future-acquired property of the wife to a specified amount (except interests settled and limited to her separate use). The wife, after the commencement of the Married Women's Property Act 1882, become entitled absolutely to a bequest above the specified amount, without any limitation as to separate use:—Held, that by the 19th section of the above Act the marriage settlement was exempted from the 5th and other sections; and that the bequest to the wife came within the covenant to settle future-acquired property, and must be dealt with as if the Act had never been passed. Re Stoner's Trusts, 24 L. R., Ch. D., 195; 52 L. J., Ch., 776; 48 L. T. 963; 32 W. R. 413.

6. Other Property.

4. By the settlement made on the marriage of an English lady with a foreigner, her bank annuities were settled in trust for her, her husband, and their children; and her real estates were directed to be sold and the produce held on similar trusts. And it was agreed between all the parties, and the husband covenanted, that in case any real or personal estate should vest in the wife, or in him in her right, he, as far as he lawfully could, would, either alone or in concurrence with his wife, settle the same upon the trusts, and subject to the powers, etc., therein expressed concerning the bank annuities. Real estates descended on the wife. The husband and some of the children were aliens:—Held, that the lands descended were bound by the covenant, and that they ought to be sold and the produce invested on the same trusts as the bank annuities. Master v. De Croismar, 11 fore it was included in the expression "of any person or persons whomsoever," was subject to the effect of the covenant, and was bound, as to one moiety, by the trusts in the settlement. Maclurcan v. Lane, Melhuish v. Maclurcan, 5 Jur., N. S., 56.

1. D., by his marriage settlement, agreed that if he then was, or should during the intended coverture, at one time and from one source, become entitled to any real or personal property of the value of 100*l.* or upwards from any estate or interest whatsoever, he and all necessary parties should execute and do such assurances and things as should be necessary for vesting the same in the trustees of the settlement. He was at the time of his marriage in receipt of half-pay (as lieutenant in the navy), which he subsequently commuted, under 34 & 35 Vict., c. 36, for 2,175*l.*:—Held, that the commutation money was not bound by the agreement in the settlement. Churchill v. Denny, 20 L. R., Eq., 534; 44 L. J., Ch., 578; 23 W. R. 825.

2. A testatrix, dying in 1883, bequeathed the residue of her personal estate to her daughter, a married woman, absolutely. The daughter, by her marriage settlement in 1862, covenanted to settle after-acquired property (except interests limited to her separate use), upon the trusts of the settlement:—Held, that s. 19 of the Married Women's Property Act 1882 exempted the marriage settlement from the operation of s. 5, and that the fund representing the residuary personalty was payable to the trustees of the settlement. Re Stoner's Trusts, 32 W. R. 413; 24 L. R., Ch. D., 195; 52 L. J., Ch., 776; 48 L. T. 963.

3. A husband and wife, by their marriage settlement, covenanted to assign to the trustees of the settlement upon the trusts thereof, any property which the wife or the husband in her right should at any time become possessed of or entitled to during the coverture. A decree nisi for the dissolution of the marriage was pronounced; but pending the decree being made absolute, the husband and wife appointed a new trustee of the settlement, and property fell into possession of the wife. Subsequently the wife married again:—Held, that the property was not bound by the covenant in the settlement. Re Pearson, 20 W. R. 522; 26 L. T., N. S., 393.

4. Where a lady had, by an ante-nuptial settlement, assigned and conveyed to trustees whatever she might "conquest or acquire" during the marriage:—Held, that the words "conquest" and "acquire," so used, were sufficient to pass to the trustees property of every kind which during the marriage had come to her by succession. Diggens v. Gordon, 1 L. R., H. L. (Sc.), 136.

7. Amount.

5. A marriage settlement contained a covenant by a husband and wife to settle all after-acquired property of the wife, of the value of 500*l.* and upwards. The wife's mother subsequently bequeathed to her some specific chattels, and to the trustees of the settlement the residue of her estate, upon the trusts of that settlement, being trusts for the separate use of the wife for life:—Held, that that residuary bequest could not be taken into account when computing the value of the specific chattels. Forster v. Davies, 8 Jur., N. S., 65; 31 L. J., Ch., 276; 10 W. R. 180; 4 De G. F. & J. 133.

6. Covenant in marriage articles, from the husband, "inasmuch as he was to be absolutely entitled to all the wife's personal estate," to settle "in respect of any sum that might come to her afterwards, after the rate of 100*l.* per annum, on her for life, for every 1,000*l.*, and upon certain contingencies that she should be paid back a moiety of all that he should receive as her portion." The husband obtained a decree for 400*l.* of the wife's money, but did not receive it:—Held, she was entitled to a settlement according to that proportion, and, the contingencies having happened, to the moiety likewise of all sums received, including the 400*l.*; since the husband might have received it. Prime v. Stebbing, 2 Ves. 409.

7. In a marriage settlement it was agreed to settle the property which the intended wife should at any time during the coverture become entitled to. At the date of the marriage the wife was entitled in reversion, on the death of her mother, to 212*l.*, and she became entitled by her mother's will to another sum of more than 500*l.*:—Held, that the words "at any time" meant "from one and the same source," and that the sum of 212*l.* was not bound by the covenant. Re Hooper, 11 Jur., N. S., 478; 13 W. R. 710; 12 L. T., N. S., 137; 5 N. R. 462.

8. When a covenant to settle after acquired property is limited to funds of a specified amount which shall at any time be acquired, a condition is implied that the amount shall be made up of funds derived from the same source. Hood v. Franklin, 16 L. R., Eq., 496; 21 W. R. 724.

When a party, having entered into such a covenant, becomes entitled in possession to property which would be subject to the settlement if sufficient in amount, and which has been reduced below the specified amount by the exercise of powers of advancement, the amount received by anticipation must be included for the purpose of determining whether the fund is large enough to be brought into settlement. Ib.

9. By a marriage settlement it was agreed that all property which, during the joint lives of the husband and wife, should devolve upon the wife or the husband in her right, and which should, at the time when the same should respectively so devolve, exceed the value of 500*l.*, should be settled upon the trusts of the settlement. By a subsequently executed will a legacy of 200*l.* was left to the wife, and a share of the residuary estate of the testator was also given to her for her separate use, such share being declared to be in addition to the legacy of 200*l.* The share of the residue exceeded 500*l.*, and was paid to the trustees of the settlement:—Held, that the legacy of 200*l.* need not be settled. Re Middleton, 16 W. R. 1107.

10. By a marriage settlement it was provided that all such further or other portion or personal estate (if any) as should during the life of the intended wife become vested in or accrue to her, or as should or might be assignable in law or equity either for a vested or contingent interest, should be assigned to the residue, and all other her share by survivorship or otherwise, and all her right, contingent, reversionary, or otherwise, possibility, etc., therein. She afterwards became entitled to a further share, by the death of a brother intestate:—Held, that it was not included in the settlement. Edwards v. Broughton, 32 Beav. 667; 11 W. R. 1038; 2 N. R. 476.

1. By a marriage settlement, of 1794, A. conveyed certain specified lands, of which he was seised in tail in remainder, together with all other the lands which he was then or thereafter might be possessed of or entitled to, in reversion, remainder, or otherwise howsoever, to trustees, to the use of himself for life, remainder, as he should appoint, among the issue male of the marriage, remainder over; and covenanted to do any act or execute any conveyance, if required, of and concerning the specified lands, or any other lands and premises which he should, at any time thereafter, be possessed of or entitled unto, for the further, better, more perfect, and absolute carrying out the settlement, and the true intent and meaning of the parties thereto, into full, legal, and perfect execution. In 1819 a judgment was recovered against A.; and, in 1839, he became entitled, as heir-at-law of his brother, to other lands not specified in the settlement. In 1859 A. died:—Held, that the trusts of the deed of 1794 attached to the latter lands on their acquisition by A., without any further act by him, and that his eldest son, claiming under that deed, was entitled to hold them discharged of the judgment. Stack v. Royse, 12 Ir. Ch. R. 246.

2. By an ante-nuptial settlement real estate was vested in trustees for 500 years, on trusts after mentioned, and as to all the real estate, to pay a jointure to the wife, and subject thereto to such one or more of the children as the father should by deed or will appoint; and in default to the trustees for 1,000 years, to raise 5,000*l.* for portions for younger children, with remainder, subject to both terms, to the sons and daughters in tail with cross-remainders, with remainder to the right heirs of the settlor. Then followed the trusts of the 500 years' term; viz., to raise 4,000*l.*, and pay the interest to the wife for life, with remainder to the children: sons at twenty-one, daughters at twenty-one or on marriage, equally. The father covenanted with the trustees, that in case his wife, at any time during the coverture, became entitled to any personal estate, he would do all necessary acts to vest the same in the trustees upon the trusts as were expressed of the 4,000*l.* to be raised by virtue of the 500 years' term. The marriage took place, and there was issue, and the wife became entitled to two sums of 3,000*l.*; one under a will to her separate use, and which she settled on her husband for life, and afterwards upon the trusts declared by their settlement of the 4,000*l.* to be raised under the 500 years' term; the other, not to her separate use, from other sources. The wife died, and on the question whether the 3,000*l.* so last settled was within the terms of the covenant:—Held, that it was not; but that the other 3,000*l.* was, and belonged to the children. Gataker v. Renyardson, 13 W. R. 487; 12 L. T., N. S., 134.

3. A marriage settlement contained a covenant by husband and wife jointly, and each of them separately, to settle property which they or either of them in her right should become entitled to during the coverture, except the wife's life interests, and property settled to her separate use. The wife's brother gave all his real and personal estate to the wife and her husband, their heirs, executors, etc., as joint tenants:—Held, that the property was within neither the letter nor the spirit of the covenant. Edye v. Addison, 3 N. R. 66. S. C. nom. Edge v. Addison, 9 Jur., N. S., 1320; 12 W. R. 17; 1 Hem. & M. 781; 33 L. J., Ch., 132.

4. A covenant by husband and wife in an ante-nuptial settlement to settle after acquired property to which she or he in her right shall become entitled in possession, reversion, remainder, or expectancy, does not apply to a general power of appointment and a life interest given to her under a will. Townshend (Marchioness) v. Harrowby (Earl), 4 W. R. 413; 4 Jur., N. S., 353.

5. A covenant in a marriage settlement to settle property to be acquired "under or by virtue of" the will of the wife's father:—Held, not to comprise property over which the father had by will exercised a power of appointment amongst his children, given to him by an earlier settlement. Evans v. Jennings, 1 N. R. 178.

6. A marriage settlement made in 1819 recited an agreement that "one moiety of all such property and effects as A., the settlor, should or might at any time during the intended coverture be or become seised or possessed of, or interested in, or entitled unto (except certain arrears of tithes), should be settled as therein mentioned." The indenture contained a covenant by A. for himself, his heirs, executors, and administrators, whereby he covenanted to and with the trustees, their heirs, etc., "that in case any lands, tenements, hereditaments, legacy, sum of money, or other real or personal estate, over and above certain personal estate mentioned and intended to be thereby assigned, should at any time during the intended coverture accrue unto or vest in him, A., upon the death, or by the settlement, devise, or bequest, gift, or disposition of any of the relations of A., or of any person or persons whomsoever, he, A., should and would from time to time, at the request of the trustees, or the survivor of them, convey, settle, and assign . . . one full and equal undivided moiety of all such lands, so and in such manner as that the inheritance of such moiety might be vested in the trustees." The settlor's father, and an elder brother, were living. The elder brother died intestate in 1825, and the father died in 1828. Thereupon A. became his heir-at-law, and certain lands and tenements, of which he had a vested remainder in tail expectant on the death of his father, and defeasible under the father's power of appointment (which was not exercised), fell into possession. A disentailing deed was afterwards executed by A.:—Held, that, upon the true construction of the settlement (reading the covenant with the assistance of the recital), the estate, which became vested in fee in the settlor, was an estate which accrued to him for the first time, and became an indefeasible estate in possession upon the death of his father, and that there-

IV. LIMITATIONS IN, AND OBJECTS OF, SETTLEMENT, IN PURSUANCE OF.

2. In a marriage settlement, which comprised only the property of the wife, it was agreed between the intended husband and wife, and each of them covenanted with the trustees, that any property to which the wife might become entitled during the coverture should be conveyed to such uses as she should by deed or will appoint, and in default of appointment to the use of herself for life; remainder to the use of the husband for his life; remainder to the use of the wife's children, and, in default of such children, to the use of A. B., her niece, and her heirs. After the death of the wife without children, and without having exercised her power of appointment, the husband filed a bill against her heir-at-law, praying that a real estate to which she had become entitled during her lifetime might be conveyed to the uses of the settlement. On the question, whether the decree for specific performance should be confined to the life estate of the husband, or should extend to the limitation to the niece, who was also dead:—Held, that it should extend to the latter, on the ground that the right of the husband to a specific performance of part of the covenant drew with it the right to a specific performance of the whole, at least as against the heir of the settlor, whatever it might have done as against a purchaser for value. Davenport v. Bishopp, 1 Ph. 698. Affirming 2 Y. & Coll. C. C. 451; 12 L. J., N. S., Ch., 492; 7 Jur. 1077.

3. On agreement before marriage, that everything which should come to the wife by her father's death, should go to the husband and wife for their respective lives, and after the death of the survivor to the heirs of the body of the wife by the husband begotten:—Held, that 6,000*l.*, to which the wife was entitled under the settlement of her father and mother, vested in her only, and, the husband consenting, the 6,000*l.* was decreed to be settled on the younger children. Green v. Ekins, 2 Atk. 474.

4. A sum of 865*l.* stock, partly belonging to the husband and partly to the wife, was settled (subject to the interests given to the husband, wife, and children) as to the husband's part on the husband's executors, and as to the wife's to her next of kin. The settlement contained a covenant, that the after-acquired property of the wife should be settled on like trusts:—Held, that the husband and wife's representatives were, under the ultimate limitation, entitled to the wife's after-acquired property in proportion to their interests in the 865*l.* Stevens v. Van Voorst, 17 Beav. 305.

Covenant to settle after-acquired property of the wife:—Held, to extend to property acquired after the death of the husband. Ib.

5. A settlement contained the usual covenant by the husband and wife to assign after-acquired property of the wife to trustees, with a proviso that it should be lawful for the trustees, at the request of the husband and wife during their joint lives, and of the survivor during his or her life, and afterwards, at the discretion of the trustees, to sell and dispose of such property, and invest the proceeds upon the trusts of the settlement. The wife afterwards became entitled to leaseholds and specific personal chattels:—Held, that the trustees were not for the present to convert these things without the request in writing of the husband and wife. Hope v. Hope, 1 Jur., N. S., 770; 3 W. R. 617.

6. By a marriage settlement of B. and A. 7,500*l.*, 4*l.* per cent. bank annuities, were settled upon trust for B. for his life, then for A. for her life, and after the death of the survivor for the children equally; the shares of sons to vest at twenty-one, or dying under that age leaving issue then living. The settlement contained a covenant to settle after-acquired property of A. on her for life, and after her death "for all and every the issue of the then intended marriage, upon the same or the like trusts, and subject to the powers and provisoes as were thereinbefore expressed and declared of and concerning the 7500*l.*, 4*l.* per cent. bank annuities." A. died, leaving two sons, the only children of the marriage, both of whom had attained twenty-one, married, and had issue each three children, all infants. On a bill to obtain a declaration as to the construction of the covenant to settle the after-acquired property:—Held, that the word "issue" in the covenant must be restricted to children, and that the two sons, having survived their mother, and attained twenty-one, were entitled to her after-acquired property absolutely between them. Marshall v. Baker, 11 W. R. 78; 7 L. T., N. S., 303.

7. A. having, in his marriage settlement, conveyed leasehold estates, of which he was possessed, to trustees, to hold to his own use during his life, and after his decease to the use that his intended wife should receive thereout a jointure, covenants to charge all the lands of which he was seised at the time of his execution of the settlement, or of which he should at any time thereafter become seised, with the payment of the jointure, the settlement proceeded: "And, further, that the said land, after the decease of the survivor," should be to the use of the children of the marriage:—Held, that the words "the said lands" referred to the lands then conveyed to the trustees, and that the children of the marriage did not, under the settlement, acquire any interest in the after-acquired property. Re Hammersly, Exp. Smith, 12 Ir. Ch. R. 319.

8. An order was, in 1855, on the application of the father as next friend, made, directing a trustee to pay certain dividends to the father for the maintenance and education of an infant daughter during her minority, or while unmarried. Previously to the marriage of the daughter, the draft of a proposed settlement, which contained a covenant by the intended husband to settle after-acquired property of the wife, but no provision as to the children by a future husband, was sent to the intended husband, and returned by him without any trustees of the settlement, and it was also provided that this proviso should not extend to any chattel or interest which the intended wife might from time to time become entitled to either in possession or in reversion unless every such legacy or interest should at each time amount to 500*l.* The wife became entitled under the will of her mother to 1,000*l.*, and also to 350*l.* on the death of one of her sisters as one of her next of kin. The property of which the sum of 350*l.* was a part was also derived from the will of the mother, by which it was bequeathed to the sister for life with remainder to her (the sister's) next of kin:—Held, that the sum of 350*l.* was not subject to the covenant. Buller v. Hornby, 20 W. R. 198; 25 L. T., N. S., 901.

1. By a marriage settlement it was agreed that if the wife, at the date of the settlement, or if during the coverture she or her husband in her right, should become seised, possessed of, or entitled to any real or personal property of the value of 500*l.*, or upwards, the same should, as soon as circumstances would admit, be conveyed to the trustees of the settlement. Under a will, which came into operation prior to the date of the settlement, an annuity was given to trustees to be applied wholly or in part for the benefit of a widow, as the trustees should in their discretion think fit, the unapplied balance to be accumulated, and the accumulation remaining at the death of the widow to be divided among a class of persons, of whom the wife, party to the marriage settlement, was one. The period for division happened after the determination of the coverture, and the share of each person participating then amounted to over 500*l.*, but neither at the date of the settlement, nor at any time during the coverture, did such share amount to 500*l.*:—Held, that the share was not subject to the covenant contained in the settlement. Re Welstead, Welstead v. Leeds, 47 L. T. 331.

2. A marriage settlement contained a covenant, that if the wife then was, or should at any time during the coverture become, entitled to any real or personal property of the value of 400*l.*, for any estate or interest whatsoever, it should be settled upon certain trusts. At the date of the settlement, the wife was entitled, on the death of her mother, to a share in stock in her own right, and a further share as one of the next of kin of a deceased brother. The value of the two shares taken together was above 400*l.*, but the value of the wife's reversionary interest in them at the date of the settlement was much less than 400*l.* On the death of the mother, the husband and wife presented a petition to have the two shares paid to the husband:—Held, first, that the share in the trust fund was included in the first part of the covenant, as property to which the wife was entitled at the time of her marriage. Re Mackenzie, 2 L. R., Ch., 345; 36 L. J., Ch., 320; 15 W. R. 662; 16 L. T., N. S., 138.

Held, secondly, that the covenant referred to the value of the property, not to the value of the wife's reversionary interest in it. Ib.

Held, thirdly, that, in estimating the value of the share, the aggregate value of the two sums must be taken, and not the value of each sum separately. Ib.

3. When an interest in property existing at the date of a marriage is increased in value by the death of other persons, such increment is not after-acquired property within the meaning of a covenant in a marriage settlement. Re Browne, 38 L. J., Ch., 316; 7 L. R., Eq., 231.

A marriage settlement contained a recital of an agreement to settle all personal property which the wife should at any time during the marriage become entitled to, and a covenant by the husband and the wife for the settlement of all personal property which the wife, or the husband in her right, at any time or times during the marriage should become possessed of or entitled to by transmission, gift, or otherwise, and whether in possession or expectancy. Another marriage settlement contained no recital of any agreement as to the settlement of future property, but a covenant by the husband and wife to settle any personal property of the value of 200*l.* or upwards which should at any time or times during the coverture be given or bequeathed to, or in any manner vest in, the wife. In each case the wife was, under the will of her mother, entitled at the date of the settlement to the beneficial interest in an undivided share of four Irish tontine debentures. The holder of one of these debentures was entitled during the life of a person therein named to an annuity of 7*l.* 10*s.* Irish currency, and also to a proportionate share of all other annuities under similar debentures which might cease to become payable to the holders thereof by reason of the death of the cestuis que vient therein named. At the dates of the settlements the debentures were of small value; but ultimately large sums became payable thereunder. No mention was made of them in the settlements:—Held, that no part of the annuities payable thereunder was included in either of the covenants. Ib.

III. CONSENT OF WIFE.

4. By articles made in contemplation of the marriage between E. S. and M. P., who was then an infant, after reciting "that it had been agreed that all the freehold, copyhold, leasehold, and other personal estate and property, or share or accruing shares therein of or to which the said M. P. was or might become seised or possessed, etc.," "should be conveyed, assigned, and settled," E. S. covenanted that "in case the said M. P. would voluntary consent thereto, but not otherwise," he and she would settle the same. Mrs. S. having become entitled to certain personal estate, stated in writing her wish that the money should not be put in settlement. The fund having been paid into court under the Trustee Relief Act, and E. S. having presented a petition for payment of it to him:—Held, that the personal estate in question must be settled, although the wife refused her consent, and that the consent of the wife was only applicable to real estate, which could not be settled without the consent of the wife to be taken in the ordinary way; but that as to the personal estate the wife's consent was not required, and the husband's covenant was absolute. Re Daniel's Trusts, 18 Beav. 309.

1. Where for valuable consideration the wife by ante-nuptial settlement assigned to her husband an interest at the time reversionary the Court, when the interest was reduced into possession, ordered payment to the husband without the wife's consent. Chalmers v. Macleod, 1 Jur., N. S., 724.

IV. LIMITATIONS IN, AND OBJECTS OF, SETTLEMENT, IN PURSUANCE OF.

2. In a marriage settlement, which comprised only the property of the wife, it was agreed between the intended husband and wife, and each of them covenanted with the trustees, that any property to which the wife might become entitled during the coverture should be conveyed to such uses as she should by deed or will appoint, and in default of appointment to the use of herself for life; remainder to the use of the husband for his life; remainder to the use of the wife's children, and, in default of such children, to the use of A. B., her niece, and her heirs. After the death of the wife without children, and without having exercised her power of appointment, the husband filed a bill against her heir-at-law, praying that a real estate to which she had become entitled during her lifetime might be conveyed to the uses of the settlement. On the question, whether the decree for specific performance should be confined to the life estate of the husband, or should extend to the limitation to the niece, who was also dead:—Held, that it should extend to the latter, on the ground that the right of the husband to a specific performance of part of the covenant drew with it the right to a specific performance of the whole, at least as against the heir of the settlor, whatever it might have done as against a purchaser for value. Davenport v. Bishopp, 1 Ph. 698. Affirming 2 Y. & Coll. C. C. 451; 12 L. J., N. S., Ch., 492; 7 Jur. 1077.

3. On agreement before marriage, that everything which should come to the wife by her father's death, should go to the husband and wife for their respective lives, and after the death of the survivor to the heirs of the body of the wife by the husband begotten:—Held, that 6,000*l.*, to which the wife was entitled under the settlement of her father and mother, vested in her only, and, the husband consenting, the 6,000*l.* was decreed to be settled on the younger children. Green v. Ekins, 2 Atk. 474.

4. A sum of 865*l.* stock, partly belonging to the husband and partly to the wife, was settled (subject to the interests given to the husband, wife, and children) as to the husband's part on the husband's executors, and as to the wife's to her next of kin. The settlement contained a covenant, that the after-acquired property of the wife should be settled on like trusts:—Held, that the husband and wife's representatives were, under the ultimate limitation, entitled to the wife's after-acquired property in proportion to their interests in the 865*l.* Stevens v. Van Voorst, 17 Beav. 305.

Covenant to settle after-acquired property of the wife:—Held, to extend to property acquired after the death of the husband. Ib.

5. A settlement contained the usual covenant by the husband and wife to assign after-acquired property of the wife to trustees, with a proviso that it should be lawful for the trustees, at the request of the husband and wife during their joint lives, and of the survivor during his or her life, and afterwards, at the discretion of the trustees, to sell and dispose of such property, and invest the proceeds upon the trusts of the settlement. The wife afterwards became entitled to leaseholds and specific personal chattels:—Held, that the trustees were not for the present to convert these things without the request in writing of the husband and wife. Hope v. Hope, 1 Jur., N. S., 770; 3 W. R. 617.

6. By a marriage settlement of B. and A. 7,500*l.*, 4*l.* per cent. bank annuities, were settled upon trust for B. for his life, then for A. for her life, and after the death of the survivor for the children equally; the shares of sons to vest at twenty-one, or dying under that age leaving issue then living. The settlement contained a covenant to settle after-acquired property of A. on her for life, and after her death "for all and every the issue of the then intended marriage, upon the same or the like trusts, and subject to the powers and provisoes as were thereinbefore expressed and declared of and concerning the 7500*l.*, 4*l.* per cent. bank annuities." A. died, leaving two sons, the only children of the marriage, both of whom had attained twenty-one, married, and had issue each three children, all infants. On a bill to obtain a declaration as to the construction of the covenant to settle the after-acquired property:—Held, that the word "issue" in the covenant must be restricted to children, and that the two sons, having survived their mother, and attained twenty-one, were entitled to her after-acquired property absolutely between them. Marshall v. Baker, 11 W. R. 78; 7 L. T., N. S., 303.

7. A. having, in his marriage settlement, conveyed leasehold estates, of which he was possessed, to trustees, to hold to his own use during his life, and after his decease to the use that his intended wife should receive thereout a jointure, covenants to charge all the lands of which he was seised at the time of his execution of the settlement, or of which he should at any time thereafter become seised, with the payment of the jointure, the settlement proceeded: "And, further, that the said land, after the decease of the survivor," should be to the use of the children of the marriage:—Held, that the words "the said lands" referred to the lands then conveyed to the trustees, and that the children of the marriage did not, under the settlement, acquire any interest in the after-acquired property. Re Hammersly, Exp. Smith, 12 Ir. Ch. R. 319.

8. An order was, in 1855, on the application of the father as next friend, made, directing a trustee to pay certain dividends to the father for the maintenance and education of an infant daughter during her minority, or while unmarried. Previously to the marriage of the daughter, the draft of a proposed settlement, which contained a covenant by the intended husband to settle after-acquired property of the wife, but no provision as to the children by a future husband, was sent to the intended husband, and returned by him without any objection thereto. The marriage took place before the draft was ingrossed. A post-nuptial settlement, which contained no covenant to settle after-acquired property, and no provision for children of the wife by a future husband, was executed. Trustees subsequently paid funds of the wife, who was still a minor, into court. The husband and wife presented a petition for a transfer of the funds to them, and certain inquiries were directed. The chief clerk certified that the settlement ought to contain both provisions. The Court directed only that the after-acquired property of the wife should be made subject to the trusts of the settlement. Re Hoare, 9 Jur., N. S., 167.

1. A settlement of personal estate contained a power to alter and vary, and a covenant to settle future acquired real and personal estate on similar trusts:—Held, that a power of sale might be introduced into a settlement of subsequently acquired real estate. Elton v. Elton, 27 Beav. 634.

2. On the marriage of S. and his wife, in 1870, three deeds were executed. By the first, freeholds were settled for the benefit of husband and wife during their joint lives, in moieties; the wife's moiety for separate use with restraint on anticipation. By the second, husband and wife covenanted that personal property coming to the wife during coverture should be settled on trust for husband and wife during their joint lives in moieties, the wife's moiety for her separate use with restraint on anticipation. By the third, the wife's father covenanted to pay an annuity to the trustees on trust for the husband and wife during their joint lives, in moieties, the wife's moiety for her separate use with restraint on anticipation. In 1874 S., for value received from the wife's father, and by his direction, assigned his interest in the annuity to the same persons who were trustees of the settlements, on trust for the wife, for her separate use for life, and after her decease on the trusts of the settlements. In this deed the two settlements were recited, but not the deed of covenant as to after-acquired property, and there was no clause restraining anticipation. In 1878 the wife, with the concurrence of the husband, purported to assign to a mortgagee all her interest in the annuity under the deed of 1874:—Held, that the intention of the deed of 1874 was that the husband's interest in the annuity thereby assigned should be treated as if it was property originally settled, and that therefore the wife was restrained from anticipation, and no part of the annuity passed by the mortgage deed. Scholfield v. Spooner, 48 L. T. 159.

V. OTHER MATTERS.

3. Effect of an agreement to settle present and future property. Coke v. Bishop, 3 Swan. 401.

4. Validity of covenant to settle all future acquired property. Hardey v. Green, 12 Beav. 182; 18 L. J., N. S., Ch., 480; 13 Jur. 777.

5. Execution decreed of a contract on marriage by bond, with condition to settle all the personal estate that the husband should at any time, during the coverture, be possessed of. Lewis v. Madocks, 8 Ves. 150. See this case further, 17 Ves. 48.

6. A marriage settlement recited an agreement that the after-acquired property of the wife should be settled, but the covenant to settle was on the part of the husband only:—Held, that the wife was not bound by it. Young v. Smith, 35 Beav. 87; 11 Jur., N. S., 963.

7. An agreement by husband and wife, in an ante-nuptial settlement, for the settlement by the husband and wife of the wife's after acquired property, is a covenant by the wife as well as by the husband, whether the wife is a minor or of full age. Smith v. Lucas, 18 L. R., Ch. D., 531; 45 L. T. 460; 30 W. R. 451.

8. By their marriage settlement the intended husband and wife each covenanted to assign and settle any personal estate which should, during the coverture, vest in the wife or in the husband in her right. At that time the wife was entitled, as one of two joint tenants, to personal estate in expectancy on the death of a person who died during the coverture:—Held, that the marriage and the covenant to settle each operated to sever the joint tenancy. Baillie v. Treharne, 17 L. R., Ch. D., 388; 50 L. J., Ch., 295; 44 L. T. 247; 29 W. R. 729.

9. A husband and wife, under an erroneous idea that they were performing a covenant to settle the after acquired property of the wife, directed a sum of money, to which she had become entitled, to be paid to the trustees of their marriage settlement upon the trusts thereof. They executed a release, which recited these facts. After the decease of the husband, and the subsequent marriage of the wife:—Held, that the money was appropriated to the trusts of the settlement; that the direction to pay to the trustees was, in effect, a declaration of trust; and that the transaction must be supported against the second husband, who claimed the money by virtue of his marital right. Spicer v. Dawson, 3 Jur., N. S., 1161; 26 L. J., Ch., 704.

10. By a post-nuptial and voluntary settlement, a husband and his wife assigned to trustees all their present or future acquired property, in trust for the wife for life, with remainder to the husband for life, with remainder over. A bequest was afterwards made to the wife. The Court refused to compel the husband to perform the trusts of this voluntary settlement. Ellis v. Nimmo (Ll. & G. temp. Sugd. 333) observed on. Holloway v. Headington, 8 Sim. 324; 6 L. J., N. S., Ch., 199.

11. In contemplation of a marriage between an alien and an English lady, certain real estates were conveyed to trustees in trust for sale, and to stand possessed of the sale moneys in trust for the mother of the lady for her life, and after her death upon the trusts expressed in the deed of settlement executed before the marriage, by which the dividends of certain stocks were declared to be held by the trustees in trusts for the husband and wife, and the survivor for life, and then in trust for the children of the marriage absolutely; and by the deed of settlement the husband covenanted that, in case any property should during the intended coverture vest in the wife, he would do all acts necessary for settling the same upon the trusts of the marriage settlement. The marriage took effect, and there were issue six children, of whom the eldest had attained twenty-one years. The two eldest were born in France, and were aliens, the others were born in England and were English subjects. After the marriage the lady became entitled to certain real estates:—Held that the clause in which the covenant was contained was executory, that the parties had one common object in view, and that the Court would imply that all lawful means necessary for the complete accomplishment of the common object were intended to be done by the parties to the deed; and that the subsequently acquired real estates ought to be sold, and the proceeds invested upon the trusts contained in the settlement and declared of the stocks. Master v. De Croismar, 11 Beav. 184; 17 L. J., N. S., Ch., 466; 12 Jur. 762.

1. The trusts of a post-nuptial settlement of a wife's present and future property were declared to be for the husband and wife for life, with remainder to the issue of the marriage. Some property came into possession during the marriage, which the husband paid over to the trustees upon the trusts of the settlement. After his death other property belonging to the wife fell into possession, which she refused to settle:—Held, that the widow was not bound to perform the covenants of the settlement, but that, electing to take against the settlement, she must recoup, for the benefit of the children, the moneys which she had received under the settlement. Anderson v. Abbott, 3 Jur., N. S., 833; 23 Beav. 457.

2. By an ante-nuptial settlement a trader covenanted with the trustees of it to pay them 3,000*l.* out of the first capital moneys, or real or capital personal estate, or capitalised income, of or to which he should be or become possessed or in any wise entitled after the solemnisation of the marriage, within six months after he should "have become" so possessed or entitled. The trader was at the time possessed of stock in trade and effects exceeding in value 3,000*l.*, and so continued for more than six months after the date of the settlement, but did not after the marriage acquire additional property to that amount. He became bankrupt after the expiration of the six months:—Held, that the event contemplated by the covenant had happened before the bankruptcy, and that there was a breach of the covenant entitling the trustees to prove. Exp. Evans, 2 De G. M. & G. 948; 22 L. J., Bky., 5.

3. In a settlement made between persons severally entitled to interests under a will, the settlor, who took a life interest under the settlement, covenanted that if he became entitled to any property exceeding in value the sum of ——, he would assign the same to the trustees. He afterwards became entitled to a reversionary interest, and filed a bill to have the settlement rectified, or that it might be declared that the covenant was void. Stuart, V.-Ch., dismissed the bill without costs:—Held, on appeal, that this decision was correct, as the Court would not make a declaration of right beforehand, and that the covenant could not be considered insensible, as it must apply to capital, and not income. Fyfe v. Arbuthnot, 3 Jur., N. S., 651; 26 L. J., Ch., 646.

I. IN GENERAL.

4. Principles on which the Court proceeds in putting a construction upon inconsistent clauses in a settlement. Bush v. Watkins, 14 Beav. 425.

By the terms of a marriage settlement, 1,000*l.*, secured by policy of insurance on the life of the intended wife's father, was to be paid to the intended husband, provided he had previously effected an insurance on his own life for a similar amount; if not, it was to be paid to the wife. It then directed that, if the insurance should not have been effected, or if the husband and wife should be both dead when the 1,000*l.* should be received by the trustees, it should be paid to the issue of the marriage. The husband covenanted to effect an insurance within six months after the decease of the wife's father, to secure the payment of the said sum of 1,000*l.* at his decease. By a clause at the end of the settlement, it was directed that in default of the husband effecting the insurance, the 1,000*l.* should be invested and the interest paid to the husband until he effected it, and then he was to receive the principal. The insurance was not effected within the time mentioned:—Held, that the husband might effect the insurance at any time during his life; that the trusts in favour of the wife did not arise till the close of the life of the survivor of her father and husband, and that the trusts in favour of the children did not arise till after the death of all three—viz., the father, the husband, and the wife. Ib.

The dividends of the 1,000*l.* were therefore directed to be paid, during the life of the husband, to his mortgagees, or until he should effect the insurance; and if he effected an insurance, the principal was to be applied in payment of the mortgage debt, and the residue to be paid to the husband, or the parties claiming under him. Ib.

5. A husband covenanted to insure his life for 1,200*l.* and assign the policy to trustees, and confessed a judgment to them to same amount, which was to be called in if policy not kept up. Another sum of 800*l.* in the same settlement was lent by the trustees to the husband on the security of a policy to that amount on husband's life. No other policy was assigned, and no steps taken to enforce the judgment and covenant:—Held, that the proceeds of the policy were not necessarily to be considered as obtained in pursuance of the husband's obligation, and that the trustees' liability in not compelling payment depended on the husband's ability Ball v. Ball, 11 Ir. Eq. R. 370.

6. In a suit against trustees by a husband, who covenanted to effect a policy of insurance with a respectable insurance company and to assign the same to trustees, but who insured father gave 15,000*l.* to trustees to pay 200*l.* per annum, for the maintenance of the son till twenty-five, and then to pay him the principal; and if he should marry between twenty-two and twenty-five, and die, to pay the whole to the issue; but if he died unmarried before twenty-five, the whole over; the devise is not a satisfaction of the bond. Peacock v. Falkener, 1 Bro. C. C. 295.

1. Bond upon marriage to secure 300*l.*, the wife's fortune, to the wife within one month after husband's decease; by will the husband gave her 500*l.* payable within six months after his decease, together with other legacies; the bequest of 500*l.* is not a satisfaction for the 300*l.* secured by the bond. Haynes v. Mico, 1 Bro. C. C. 129. Semble, overruled; see 1 M'Clel. & Y. 41. See also Romilly's Notes of Cases, 41.

2. Gift of a residue by will, is a satisfaction for money secured to be paid by marriage articles. Pearson v. Morgan, 2 Bro. C. C. 388.

3. W. 614.

By will he gave all real and personal estate he then had, or might die possessed of, upon trust, to pay her the rents and interest for life, then the whole equally to the children; if none, over; and revoked all former settlements and wills. There were no children:—Held, the widow entitled to both. Forsight v. Grant, 1 Ves. J. 298; 3 Bro. C. C. 242.

5. Gift of an equal sum by will is a clear performance of a covenant in the settlement. The provision in the settlement is not a debt, in the ordinary sense of the word, so as to come under direction in will to pay debts. Wathen v. Smith, 4 Madd. 236. S. C. id. 325.

Covenant in settlement to leave by will, satisfied by legacy to amount: though followed by general direction for payment of debts. Ib.

6. A. agrees to settle 100*l.* per annum on intended wife; falling sick, devises 100*l.* per annum to her; recovering, marries her, and the settlement is carried into execution: she can take but 100*l.*, and parol evidence admitted to prove the intent. Mascal v. Mascal, 1 Ves. 323.

7. An annuity of 40*l.* per annum devised to wife is no satisfaction of bond for 1,000*l.* settled on her at marriage; but held she was entitled to both. Jobson v. Pelly, 9 Mod. 437.

8. Lands settled in jointure are covenanted to be of the yearly value of 1,000*l.*; the husband by his will gives his wife 1,000*l.*, and other legacies. The jointure lands prove deficient 300*l.* per annum:—Held, that the legacies, which were admitted to be of greater value than the defect of jointure, ought to be taken in satisfaction of such deficiency. Mountague v. Maxwell, 4 Bro. P. C. 598.

9. E. K., by marriage articles, agreed to settle 50*l.* a year upon his wife in the event of her becoming a widow, payable out of the lands of C. E. K. subsequently made his will, in which was the following passage: "I bequeath to my wife during her life the sum of 50*l.* yearly (50*l.* yearly being settled on her by me in our intermarriage), payable out of the lands of C.":—Held, that the widow took only one annuity of 50*l.* Re Power, Fl. & K. 282.

10. Covenant in marriage articles by the husband, to pay his wife, if she should survive, 200*l.* as jointure, and 50*l.* to provide herself with a house, yearly for life; afterwards by will, he gave her for life an estate and house, above the yearly value of 100*l.* a year, with the household goods, etc., and an annuity of 100*l.*, commencing and payable at different times from those in the articles:—Held, not a performance, nor intended as a satisfaction, no such intent being expressed. Richardson v. Elphinstone, 2 Ves. J. 462.

12. One, on the marriage of his daughter, gives a bond to the husband for the daughter's portion, and afterwards, by will, devises land of much greater value to the husband and the wife, and their heirs. 13. Bond by husband to pay to trustees in his lifetime or immediately after his death, 500*l.* in trust (subject to their own charges, etc.) for his wife for life, and after her death to issue, and in default of issue for wife absolutely. 14. By a marriage settlement, a rent charge of 200*l.* a year was secured to the wife for life, payable quarterly, with powers of distress, etc. To enable the husband to mortgage, the wife relieved her rent charge to the mortgagee. The equity of redemption was reserved to the husband, who covenanted to convey other land on the trusts of the settlement. The husband by his will gave his real and personal estate to his brother, on condition that he would allow his wife 300*l.* a year for life:—Held, that the 200*l.* a year remained a valid charge on the equity of redemption; and, secondly, that it was not satisfied by the 300*l.* a year. Wood v. Wood, 7 Beav. 183.

15. A testator on his marriage covenanted that his representatives should, within three months after his decease, pay 2,000*l.* to trustees to be held for his wife, for life. S., 988.

16. A testator, by his marriage settlement, covenanted to secure his wife a life annuity of 100*l.* a year if she survived him. By his will, he gave her a life annuity of 100*l.* a year:—Held, that this was in addition, and not in satisfaction, on three grounds; first,

1. A husband covenanted to insure his life for 1,200*l.*, and assign the policy to trustees, and confessed a judgment to them for that amount to be called in if the policy was not so assigned and kept up. Another sum of 800*l.* vested in them by same settlement on similar trusts, was lent by trustees to husband on security of assignment of a policy for 800*l.* on his life. No other policy was assigned to them, and no steps taken to enforce judgment or covenant:—Held, that proceeds of policy might be applied to purpose for which policy was really assigned, and that liability of trustees for not compelling husband to insure depended on his ability. Ball v. Ball, 11 Ir. Eq. R. 370.

2. A trustee, having a duty to keep up a policy, and the means of procuring funds for that purpose, can himself acquire no lien on the policy for premiums paid out of his own moneys, nor can he give any lien thereon to a third party who advances money for that purpose, and which is so applied. Clack v. Holland, 19 Beav. 262; 18 Jur. 1007; 24 L. J., Ch., 13.

If a trustee has no funds properly applicable for keeping up a trust policy, he may advance or borrow money to pay the premiums, and the amount will be a lien on the policies. Ib.

A policy was held on trust; the trustee assigned it to A. B. to secure some premiums. It being held that A. B., under the circumstances, had no lien on the policy, it was also held that he had obtained no priority over the cestui que trust, by first giving notice of the assignment to the assurance office. Ib.

Where it is the duty of a trustee or executor to obtain payment of a sum of money, he is exonerated, and never required to make good any loss if he has done all he could to obtain payment, but his efforts have not proved successful; nay, more, if he has taken no steps at all to obtain payment, but it appears that if he had done so they would have been, or there is reasonable ground for believing they would have been, ineffectual, he is exonerated from all liability. Ib.

In the case of a chose in action, which is not assignable at law, the transferee, taking only an equitable interest, can obtain no greater benefit in it than the transferor himself possessed. Ib.

Trust funds were lent to A. B. (the tenant for life), with the assent of his wife and children, who were entitled in remainder. A. B. secured the repayment to the trustees by a life policy and a charge on his living. The trustees for seventeen years, with the assent and concurrence of A. B., paid over the surplus proceeds of the living to A. B.'s family, from whom he was living separate:—Held, that the debt was not thereby satisfied. Ib.

4. Where a husband, by settlement before marriage, was obliged to do a particular act for his wife's benefit, and he does a thing equally satisfactory, the Court will presume a satisfaction by implication. Weyland v. Weyland, 2 Atk. 632.

14. By a marriage settlement, a rent charge of 200*l.* a year was secured to the wife for life, payable quarterly, with powers of distress, etc. To enable the husband to mortgage, the wife relieved her rent charge to the mortgagee. 1. By a settlement in contemplation of marriage, made at the Mauritius, where the laws of France were in force, drawn up in the French language, and executed according to the French form, it was agreed, that there should be no community of goods between the husband and wife; and it was stated to be the intention of the parties to marry according to the laws and customs of England, the benefit of which they reserved to themselves the right to claim. The husband then acknowledged the receipt of 4,000*l.* belonging to the wife, which he covenanted to invest for her benefit, and for her separate use during the marriage, either in land or in the French funds, or other securities which the wife should approve. The 4,000*l.* was never paid to the husband, nor did he invest such a sum during the marriage. His domicil was in England:—Held, that upon his death intestate, the wife was entitled to receive 4,000*l.* out of his estate, and also a distributive share of his personal estate remaining after payment of that sum. Lang v. Lang, 8 Sim. 451; 6 L. J., N. S., Ch., 324; 1 Jur. 472.

J., Ch., 480; 12 Jur. 671.

4. When a husband covenanted on his marriage that, for the purpose of making a further provision for his intended wife, in case she should survive him, a trustee should stand possessed of all his personal property at the time of his death, in trust for the use and benefit of the intended wife and the issue of the marriage, with power to her to distribute the same as she might think proper among such issue, and the husband died before her intestate, and there was no issue:—Held, that the wife, besides taking a life interest in such personalty, was, in the absence of express words to the contrary, entitled to her share of the corpus under the Statute of Distributions. Young v. Young, 5 Ir. R., Eq., 615.

5. Personal estate belonging to an intended husband was settled in trust for him for life, with successive trusts for the wife durante viduitate and the children (if any) of the marriage, in the usual form, with an ultimate limitation to the husband, his executors, administrators, or assigns, for his and their own use and benefit. The wife survived and married again. The first husband died intestate, and on the ultimate limitation taking effect, the wife claimed her share in his assets under the Statute of Distributions:—Held, though she had by her second marriage forfeited her life estate, she had not forfeited her claim to a distributive share in the husband's assets, and that his personal representatives took in trust for his next of kin under the statute, and not beneficially. O'Brien v. Hearn, 18 W. R. 514.

6. Real estate was settled, on marriage, upon trust to sell, with the consent of the husband and wife, or the survivor of them, and hold the proceeds on the trusts of an indenture of even date. The trustees had power to lease, to concur in a partition of the lands of which the settled estate formed part, and to let or work the minerals, it being declared that all royalties should be considered as income, and all moneys received from working minerals as capital. The trusts of the deed of even date were for the benefit of the husband and wife during their lives, and after their death for the issue of the marriage. This deed also contained a covenant by the husband that he or his representatives would, during his lifetime, or within twelve months after his death, pay to the trustees 1,200*l.* to be held upon the trusts of the settlement. There was no issue of the marriage; the husband died intestate without having paid the 1,200*l.*, and the widow's net distributive share considerably exceeded that sum:—Held, that the real estate had been converted out and out by the settlement; and that the husband's covenant to pay the 1,200*l.* was not satisfied by his intestacy. James v. Castle, 33 L. T., N. S., 665.

8. S. had an estate in B. by his first wife, by whom also he had a daughter, M. By the marriage articles it was agreed that S. should leave his daughter M. 2,500*l.*, if the trustees demanded it within one year after his death. A., the father of S., was then living. S. married again, and had several daughters. By deed in his lifetime, he gave the estate in B. to M. and her heirs; and by deed also, he charged his reversionary lands in D. with 5,000*l.* to each of his daughters, and died. M. demanded the 2,500*l.* interest. Harcourt, Ld. K., decreed that M. should have the 2,500*l.*, with interest from the death of S.; that the estate in B. could not be an equivalent, because it moved from the mother of M., and was the condition of the marriage agreement; and that the reversion of the lands in D. could not be so, because they were not then in being, and the father of S. was then living, and to make it an equivalent, it ought to be in being and in view at the time of giving the equivalent. Anon., 5 Vin. Abr. 292, pl. 38.

1. One, on marriage, gives bond to settle an estate of inheritance of clear 100*l.* a year to the use of himself for life, remainder to his wife for life, remainder to the heirs of their bodies, remainder to his own right heirs; he afterwards settled a rent-charge, which he was entitled to, payable out of the customs at Hull:—Held, a performance of the agreement. Middleton v. Pryor, Ambl. 391.

2. A. being indebted, as his father's executor, to the trustees of his sister's marriage settlement, settled on her and her children a sum to a large amount, in consideration of the natural love and affection he bore them:—Held, that this was not a satisfaction of the debt. Drewe v. Bidgood, 2 Sim. & S. 424; 4 L. J., Ch., 33.

3. A bond for the performance of a covenant to pay an annuity, until a person should be in the enjoyment of a benefice, which he might hold during his life, of the yearly value of 600*l.*:—Held, to be satisfied by his induction to a living of that value, accompanied by a bond to resign in favour of either of two sons of the patron, when qualified to take it; but liberty was given to take the opinion of a court of law. Exp. Rainer, 1 Jac. & Walk. 280.

4. By a marriage settlement the husband covenanted with the trustees that he would forthwith effect a policy of assurance upon his life with some respectable assurance company, for the sum of 1,000*l.*, and assign the same to the trustees. A policy of assurance effected with a friendly society, if it be not assignable, or if it be less beneficial than a policy effected with an ordinary insurance company, is not within the meaning of the covenant, and a reference was directed on the subject. Courtenay v. Courtenay, 3 J. & L. 519; 9 Ir. Eq. R. 329.

A friendly society is not an assurance company within the meaning of such a covenant; and that, if the covenantor rely upon an assurance with a recently established friendly society (supposing such to be an assurance company within the covenant), as a performance of his covenant, he ought to show that the society is possessed of capital, and is solvent. Ib.

5. J., in 1810, by his marriage settlement, covenanted with the trustees of that settlement, that all the property of which he should die seised or possessed should be charged with 1,300*l.* for the issue of the marriage. There was but one child, E., issue of that marriage. On the marriage of E., in 1847, J. conveyed certain freehold property to trustees, for the benefit of E., and the children of her marriage, and covenanted to make up the amount of the produce of that property to 300*l.* per annum. J., by will, dated in 1852, devised real estate to the separate use of E., for life, with remainder for her children, and declared that devise to be in satisfaction of the covenant in the deed of 1847. In 1852, J., by deed, assigned railway shares upon trust for E., for life, for her separate use, in case she should survive him, with remainder for her chil

1. Bond having been cancelled by obligor, lands settled according to bond by decree. Arnold v. Barrington, Dick. 5.

2. A. covenanted by articles to convey lands, but did not covenant for his heirs; yet the heirs shall be bound. Gell v. Vermeden, 2 Freem. 199.

3. The specific execution of articles being the most adequate justice in general, the Court will not leave it to an action at law. Jenkins v. Keymis, 1 Lev. 150, 237, 238; 1 Ch. Ca. 103.

4. Specific performance of marriage articles decreed after marriage. Haymer v. Haymer, 2 Vent. 343.

5. Specific performance of marriage articles refused, on the ground of their being inconsistent, uncertain, and unintelligible. Franks v. Martin, 1 Eden 309.

6. Equity will not decree specific execution of an article which is contrary to the powers in a settlement. Stratford v. Aldborough, 1 Ridgw. P. C. 281.

7. Agreement on marriage to settle stock and other property of the wife, to the use of the wife, husband having by fraud made her transfer the stock to him; decreed upon a bill for performance, to transfer the stock and assign the rest, under the direction of the Master, to trustees for her use, who should receive the dividends due and to become due till the transfer and assignment: costs on account of fraud. Lampert v. Lampert, 1 Ves. J. 21.

8. Where marriage articles limited a joint estate to the intended husband and wife, and, after the death of the survivor, to the use of the heirs of the body of the husband, begotten on the wife, and the settlement after marriage pursued the words of the articles, husband and wife levy a fine, and first mortgage, and then agree to sell; the articles not being produced, the Court would not decree them to be carried into execution by strict settlement against the purchaser, who had notice of them. Cordwell v. Mackrill, Ambl. 515; 2 Eden 344.

9. The breach of covenant in articles for a settlement was held not to deprive the covenantor of the estate he was to take under them. Wallace v. Wallace, 2 Dr. & War. 452; 1 Con. & L. 491.

10. In executory articles, a provision made for a class of persons, shall not merge while any one person of the class remains. Hynes v. Redington, Ll. & G. temp. Plunk. 41.

11. A., before marriage, covenants to settle lands, in consideration of 2,000*l.* portion, on himself for life, remainder to the first and other sons in tail, remainder to the daughters in tail, remainder to himself in fee, with a power of revocation reserved to the wife's father, then beyond sea. The marriage is had and a daughter born, and the husband, being taken sick, devises 1,500*l.* to his daughter, and, if his wife (being enciente), should have a posthumous daughter, she to have 500*l.* of the 1,500*l.*, and if either should die before twenty-one, or marriage, the survivor to have the whole; and gives all his lands to his wife and her heirs, and the surplus of his personal estate, after debts paid, to his wife, her executors, etc., and makes his wife executrix; then another daughter is born, and the husband dies without any alteration of his will, or any settlement made:—Decreed, that a settlement be made, with a power of revocation to the father, and the legacies be likewise paid the children, the youngest daughter being a posthumous child, within the intent of the will. Jaggard v. Jaggard, Pre. Ch. 175.

12. In articles, there was to be a covenant in the conveyance, that certain lands were free from incumbrances. Lord Chancellor said this is not a covenant that the lands are free, and if any incumbrance is discovered between the execution of the articles and sealing the conveyance, whereof the party had no notice, that incumbrance shall be discharged before the sealing of the conveyance; as the concealment of it would be a fraud; though against all incumbrances discovered afterwards, there is only the party's own covenant to protect a purchaser. Vane v. Bernard (Lord), Gilb. Eq. Rep. 6.

13. Where the parents of the intended husband and wife by marriage articles unskilfully drawn covenanted to settle estates respectively in terms expressed to be dependent, but the whole instrument taken together, and also the covenant for title, tended to show the intention of the parties that the covenants were not dependent:—Held, in favour of the issue of the marriage, to be independent, and decreed to be conveyed accordingly. Lloyd v. Lloyd, 8 Sim. 7; 2 Myl. & C. 192; 6 L. J., N. S., Ch., 135; 1 Jur. 69. Affirming 8 Sim. 7; 5 L. J., N. S., Ch., 191.

Marriage articles recited that L., the father of the intended husband, had agreed, in case the marriage should take effect, to pay 200*l.*, and also to settle the lands of T. upon the trusts thereinafter mentioned; and that S., the father of the intended wife, who was an infant, had agreed to convey the lands of G., in the like manner, and also to pay to the intended husband 100*l.* upon the marriage. It was then covenanted by L. that, in case the marriage should take effect, and S. should, as soon as the intended wife came of age, settle the lands of G. to the uses thereinafter expressed, he, L., would settle the lands of T. to his own use for life, with remainder upon certain trusts for the benefit of the husband and wife, and the issue of the marriage; and it was covenanted by S., that, in case the marriage should take effect, and L. should perform his covenant, he, S., would settle the lands of G. to the use of himself for life, with remainder upon certain trusts for the benefit of the husband and wife, and issue of the marriage. The marriage took effect, and the wife came of age, but S. failed to settle the lands of G.:—Held, nevertheless, that L. was bound to perform the covenant on his part. Ib.

14. A pre-nuptial agreement to settle property on a wife will be enforced even though the letters which constituted such agreement have been lost, if the loss can be proved to have occurred through an unforeseen and an inevitable accident, and if the existence and substance of the letters can be clearly established by the evidence. Gilchrist v. Herbert, 26 L. T. 381; 20 W. R. 348.

A wife who in ignorance of her right in equity to enforce a pre-nuptial agreement for a settlement, accepted a settlement of a far inferior sum, is not by doing so debarred from enforcing her claim to the full amount of property agreed to be settled upon her. Ib.

1. Marriage articles entered into between an intended husband and the father of the wife, whereby each party covenanted to settle funds on the usual trusts, were enforced by the husband against the father's estate after death of the wife without issue, although the husband had always neglected and refused to fulfil his part of the agreement. Jeston v. Key, 6 L. R., Ch., 610; 40 L. J., Ch., 503; 25 L. T. 522; 19 W. R. 864. Affirming 24 L. T. 10; 19 W. R. 342.

2. Immediately before a marriage the intended husband signed a memorandum agreeing that certain bonds (in the memorandum called stocks), which were part of the wife's property, should be transferred to her and her son by a former marriage in trust for her, "neither party having power to dispose of the stocks without consent of both parties to such disposal." After the marriage the husband obtained possession of part of these bonds without the consent of the son, and disposed of them:—Held, that the husband was liable to make good the amount of the bonds so disposed of by him, and that the wife and her trustee were entitled to a lien for the amount upon all her other property which remained in specie, and that the amount must be settled. Hastie v. Hastie, 2 L. R., Ch. D., 304; 24 W. R. 564; 34 L. T., N. S., 747. Affirming 24 W. R. 242.

4. A post-nuptial settlement was made by A. and his wife of a share of real and personal estate of the wife, in the hands of trustees. No notice was given to the trustees, and no fine was levied. The deed recited the ante-nuptial agreement, but it was proved that there never was any. The effect of the settlement was to give the husband a life estate, with remainder absolutely to the survivor, and there was no provision for children:—Held, both husband and wife desiring it, that this deed was a nullity; that as against the husband it was voluntary; and that it was not such a settlement as the Court would enforce against the wife. The property was therefore treated as if it had never been settled. Hogarth v. Phillip

1. Marriage within Prohibited Degrees of Affinity.

1. A deed, executed in consideration of a future cohabitation between two persons who are incapable of contracting a legal marriage, is invalid. Ford v. De Pontès, 30 Beav. 572.

In July 1853, A., a widow, married N., the widower of her deceased sister. By a deed in October purporting to be a post-nuptial settlement, and to be made between N. and A. his wife, of the one part, and a trustee of the other part, they, N. and A. (described as his wife), assigned to the trustee real and personal estate belonging to A., in trust for N. absolutely. A. and N. lived together until 1859, when A. left N.'s house, and from that time ceased to reside with him. Shortly after A. assigned the property to her brother C. for value. N. having threatened to sell the property, C. and A. filed a bill for the purpose of having the deed of October 1853 set aside. A. deposed that it was not until 1859 that she became fully aware of the invalidity of her marriage. The Court declared that the deed ought to be set aside, and ordered the same to be delivered up to be cancelled, on the ground that the benefit of the relation of husband and wife, to obtain which the deed had been executed by A., had failed. Ib.

2. Where a widower married a sister of his deceased wife:—Held, that the relation thus constituted imposed upon the widower claiming the benefit of a settlement made on him by his wife's sister the onus of showing, that at the time of entering into the transaction she was fully, fairly, and truly informed of its character, and of her legal status. Coulson v. Allison, 2 De G. F. & J. 521; 3 L. T., N. S., 763; 2 Giff. 279.

Such a marriage, and consequent cohabitation, held not a sufficient consideration to support a conveyance by the wife's sister of her property to the widower absolutely. Ib.

3. A domiciled Englishman, a widower with six children, went through the ceremony of marriage with his deceased wife's niece in Neufchâtel, in Switzerland, where such a marriage is valid. The parties were under the impression that the marriage, being good in Switzerland, would also be good here. On this occasion a settlement of reversionary personal estate belonging to the husband was executed by him and the lady, the consideration for which was expressed to be the intended marriage, the natural love and affection which the settlor bore for his children by his late wife, and divers other good considerations, and under which the trustees were to hold the property in trust for the settlor, his executors, administrators, or assigns, until the intended marriage should be solemnized, and afterwards upon trusts for the settlor and his intended wife for their lives, or as to the latter her widowhood, with remainder in trust for such of the settlor's children, whether by his former marriage or by the intended marriage, as being sons should attain twenty-one, or being daughters should attain that age or marry:—Held, that the word "solemnized," as used in the settlement, meant "validly and effectually solemnized," and that inasmuch as there never had been a valid and effectual solemnization according to English law of the intended marriage, and the settlor was dead, without having changed his domicil, the whole beneficial interest in the property comprised in the settlement was vested in him at the time of his death, and that neither the second wife nor any child of the settlor or of the second wife acquired any interest in such property. Chapman v. Bradley, 4 De G. J. & S. 71; 12 W. R. 140; 9 L. T., N. S., 495; 10 Jur., N. S., 5; 33 L. J., Ch., 139; 3 N. R. 1 Varying 9 Jur., N. S., 1046; 12 W. R. 14; 33 Beav. 61; 2 N. R. 477.

4. In 1854 A. went through the marriage ceremony, in Prussia, with C., his deceased wife's sister. After the marriage, and in consideration thereof, C. settled property upon certain trusts, reserving to herself, however, a power of appointment. Subsequently by her will C. confirmed the trusts of the settlement. On the death of C. both the will and settlement were admitted to probate:—Held, that the settlement was valid. Seale v. Lowndes, 17 L. T., N. S., 555.

5. H. transferred shares into the names of trustees, and by a deed, which, on the face of it, was voluntary, declared trusts of the shares for the immediate and absolute benefit of the sister of his deceased wife, with whom he shortly afterwards went through the form of marriage. Upon a bill filed ten years after the death of H. by his legal personal representative against the lady, a husband whom she subsequently married, and the surviving trustee, praying for a re-transfer of the shares:—Held, that the transfer having been complete, a court of equity would not have interfered on behalf of the settlor, who was a particeps criminis, and that his personal representative stood in no better position. Ayerst v. Jenkins, 42 L. J., Ch., 690; 21 W. R. 878; 29 L. T., N. S., 126.

A court of equity will not at the instance of a settlor or his legal personal representative, adversely set aside a settlement by which the settlor confers on a stranger the absolute beneficial interest in property legally vested in trustees, although such settlement may have been made for an illegal consideration not appearing on the face of the instrument. S. C. 16 L. R., Eq., 275.

1. A trader lived with his deceased wife's sister as her husband. In 1858 she received a legacy of 3,000*l.*, which she handed over to him upon an agreement that the money should be advanced to and used by him in his business, but that as to 2,000*l.* he should be a trustee for her, and a settlement should be executed to carry out that agreement. The money was accordingly used by him in his business, but no settlement was ever executed. The trader having gone into liquidation in 1876:—Held, that inasmuch as by its primary destination under the agreement the fund was to be and was used in the business, no trust could be imposed upon it to the disadvantage of the creditors, and the wife could not prove in the liquidation for any part of it. Exp. Corbidge, Re Beale, 46 L. J., Bky., 17; 4 L. R., Ch. D., 246; 35 L. T., N. S., 768; 25 W. R. 324.

2. J. P., previously to going through the ceremony of marriage with his deceased wife's sister, executed a settlement reciting the intended marriage, by which certain property was assigned to trustees in trust for the settlor until the solemnization of the marriage, and after the solemnization thereof, and after the decease of J. P., to pay the interest to the intended wife for life, and then for the benefit of his two children by his former wife and such children as he should have by his intended marriage; but if there should be no such child or children, then for J. P., his executors, administrators, and assigns:—Held, that as no valid marriage could take place between J. P. and his deceased wife's sister, the trust in favour of himself until the solemnisation of such marriage continued, and the subsequent trusts never having arisen, the property remained in J. P., and formed part of his general estate. Pawson v. Brown, 13 L. R., Ch. D., 202; 49 L. J., Ch., 193; 41 L. T. 339; 28 W. R. 652.

3. B., by his first wife C., who died in 1847, had one son and one daughter. In 1851, he, being then a domiciled English subject, intermarried in Denmark with E., the sister of his deceased wife (such marriage being valid according to the lex loci contractûs), by whom he had one son and two daughters. By his will, dated in 1855, he gave all his real and personal estate among the children of his two marriages in certain proportions. Both B. and E. died in 1855, and the son of their marriage in 1857. Upon the question as to whether the share of the latter in B.'s estate went, as to the realty, to B.'s son by his first marriage, and as to the personalty, among all B.'s children equally; or whether such share, both of realty and personalty, passed to the Crown by reason of the invalidity of B.'s second marriage, and consequent illegitimacy of the issue:—Held, that the second marriage was invalid, and the issue consequently illegitimate, and the real and personal estate vested

1. Semble, the mutual concurrence of a husband and wife in the levying of a fine of land in which they were jointly interested, and in the declaration of the uses for the benefit of their issue, constitutes a valuable consideration to support the deed declaring such uses. Parker v. Carter, 4 Hare 409.

4. A charge created by C. S. upon his estates, to secure the payment of a sum of money borrowed for S. H. S., is a good consideration, not only for a collateral charge upon the estates of S. H. 1. In General.

5. In marriage settlements, etc., on good or valuable consideration, as between the immediate "parties," such considerations will run through all the limitations for the benefit of the remotest persons, even of those in respect of whom the deeds would otherwise have been voluntary. Ithell v. Beane, 1 Ves. 215; Dick. 213.

6. In marriage articles, and settlements on good and valuable consideration, such consideration will run through all the limitations in favour of the remotest remainderman—Stephens v. Truman, 1 Ves. 73.

7. Husband and wife are purchasers by the marriage for their children. Parkes v. White, 11 Ves. 228.

8. Husband, by making settlement on wife after marriage, considered as purchaser of mortgage of wife, though he did not reduce it into possession. Sykes v. Meynal, Dick. 368.

9. Marriage agreements differ from all others, for as soon as the marriage is had the principal contract is executed, and the state and capacity of the parties are altered; the children are purchasers under both parents, and may compel a performance of the agreement from the relations of either; therefore, if the marriage contract could be rescinded, it would affect their interest. Harvey v. Ashley, 3 Atk. 610.

10. By a marriage settlement, lands were conveyed to trustees to the separate use of A., the wife, for life, and in case B. should survive her, to him for life, and after the death of the survivor of A. and B., in trust to convey to the child or children of the marriage, as A. and B. should by deed or will appoint, and, in default of appointment, to the children equally, and in default of issue, to the survivor of A. and B. There was issue; and, by deed, reciting that A., in order to further the prospects in life of the children, had consented to assign her life estate for the benefit of the children, and that B., for the like purpose, agreed to assign his reversion, in case he should survive his wife A., for the considerations aforesaid and ten shillings, conveyed her life interest to trustees to receive the rents during the life of A. and B., and apply them for the benefit and maintenance of the children in such manner as the trustees might deem sufficient. And it was agreed that the trustees should have full power and control over the property during the life of A. and B., free from the control or intermeddling or debts which at any time might have affected the estate of A. and B., and B. covenanted that if he should survive his wife he would be called on by the trustees to assign his estate and interest to the trustees on the same trusts:—Held, that the children were not within the consideration, and could not enforce a specific performance of B.'s covenant to assign his interest. Joyce v. Hutton, 11 Ir. Ch. R. 123.

11. A bond before marriage to settle a jointure, and afterwards a settlement, is made which settles the estate on the wife, and the issue of the marriage. This settlement is good as to the jointure, but fraudulent as to the children in respect of a purchaser. Jason v. Jervis, 1 Vern. 286.

Where parents did not make so beneficial a bargain for a daughter as they might have done, that is no reason to set aside the marriage agreement; for the law has entrusted them with the marriage of their children, and there are many proper considerations that may induce a parent to agree to a match, besides a strict equality of fortune. There never yet has been an objection to a father's disposing of his daughter in marriage, on what terms he pleases; and though most portions arise under settlements, the daughter is as much a purchaser as if her portion came from a collateral relation. Ib.

1. Consideration of marriage runs through the whole settlement, and especially supports every provision with regard to the husband and wife; she is interested in the provision for husband, enabling him to provide for her and children, and it is not affected by subsequent events, as death of wife without children. Nairn v. Prowse, 6 Beav. 752.

2. In an ordinary marriage settlement, where the lands settled are the property of the husband, the latter cannot be considered a purchaser, for valuable consideration, of the life estate in those lands limited to him by the settlement. Re Brown, 13 Ir. Ch. R. 283.

Therefore, where A., by a settlement, executed in contemplation of his marriage, settled lands, of which he was owner in fee, to himself for life, remainder to provide a jointure for his widow, remainder to the children of the marriage:—Held, that a judgment which was, previously to the execution of the settlement, a charge on the lands, was still a subsisting charge upon the husband's life estate, notwithstanding that the judgment had not been registered pursuant to 7 & 8 Vict., c. 90, within the time (viz., five years) required by 13 & 14 Vict., c. 29, s. 3, for keeping it in force against purchasers under the settlement. Ib.

3. A father, tenant for life, with remainders to his son, joined with the son in executing a post-nuptial settlement, by which the father and the son assigned the lands to a trustee in trust for the father for life, subject to an annuity for the son; and after the father's death in trust for the son, subject to a jointure (charged by the pre-existing deed), and charged with a sum for portions of the younger children of the father. The father and son afterwards joined in a mortgage which did not notice this settlement: it contained covenants for title, but not against incumbrances:—Held, that the settlement as regarded the provisions for the younger children was not voluntary or void as against the mortgagee, nor revocable by the father and son; and, even if it was revocable, was not revoked by the mortgage. Bennett v. Bernard, 10 Ir. Eq. R. 584.

4. If in consideration of marriage, an estate be limited in fee to A., by his father, or other persons interested in making provision for the marriage: A. is a purchaser for valuable consideration in respect of the marriage. O'Gorman v. Comyn, 2 Sch. & Lef. 147.

5. Parties entitled to an estate confirming a jointress's settlement, are purchasers of her interest in incumbrances paid off by her fortune, which had been assigned for the better securing her rights under the settlement. Portsmouth (Earl) v. Suffolk (Lady), 1 Ves. 31.

6. On the treaty of marriage between A. and B., the father and mother of B., in consideration of the settlement to be made by A., join in conveying a small estate (out of which the mother was dowable) to A. in fee (but no fine was levied); and they settling another estate of wh was seised in fee on the fat mainder to the mother for lif the uses of the marriage. At settlement the father was indeb This being a fair and reasonab ment, and not made with any creditors, the limitation to life is not fraudulent as ag within the stat. 13 Eliz., mo she had joined in conveying in fee to the husband. Jone Cox 288.

1. A testator devised freehold estates to his son in fee, and also bequeathed to him certain leasehold property, subject to the payment of certain legacies. The son married shortly after the testator's death, and, on that occasion, conveyed and assigned the freehold and leasehold property, devised under the will (together with other estates), to trustees, in trust, in the first place, to pay the legacies charged by the will, and subject thereto in trust for the settlor and his intended wife, and the issue of the marriage; and the father of the intended wife covenanted to settle a sum of money on the lady and her children. The remaining assets of the testator were insufficient for the payment of all his debts:—Held, that the wife and the issue of the marriage were entitled to the benefits given them by the settlement, in preference to the creditors of the testator. Spackman v. Timbrill, 8 Sim. 253; 6 L. J., N. S., Ch., 147.

2. Children. Of what Marriage.

2. Husband, on second marriage, contracts to pay money in trust for the wife for life, and afterwards for the issue of that marriage, and a son by a former wife. His creditors cannot come upon this, against the son, as being a voluntary disposition as to him. Ithell v. Beane, 1 Ves. 216; Dick. 132.

3. A widow before her marriage with A., her second husband, conveys her estate to trustees in order to make settlements upon the issue of her first marriage. Afterwards A. and his wife mortgage the settled estates to persons who had notice of the settlement. Here it was declared, that the settlement is no voluntary agreement, but a binding one, and no instance where such a limitation had been held fraudulent and void against subsequent purchasers or creditors: for if it should, no widow on her subsequent marriage could make any certain provision for the issue of a former. Newstead v. Searles, 1 Atk. 265; Cotton v. King, 2 P. W. 358, 674.

4. Limitation in favour of issue of second marriage was held good. Clayton v. Wilton (Earl) cited, 3 Madd 302.

5. A marriage settlement contained a limitation of the husband's estate to his daughters, as tenants in common in fee simple:—Held, that such limitation, so far as it extended to the daughters of a future marriage, did not come within the doctrine of Clayton v. Wilton (Earl) (cited 3 Madd. 302), because its avoidance, as to such daughters, could not prejudice its validity, so far as it affected the daughters of the marriage; and that, as regards the former class, it could not, in the absence of special reasons, be deemed to have been stipulated for by the husband, whose estate was being settled, nor by the wife: held, therefore, that, as to those daughters, it was voluntary, and would therefore be void as against a purchaser for valuable consideration. Re Cullin, 14 Ir. Ch. R. 506.

6. Trusts in a marriage settlement in favour of the children of a future marriage and of collaterals are purely voluntary. Wollaston v. Tribe, 9 L. R., Eq., 44; 18 W. R. 83; 21 L. T., N. S., 449.

7. A second marriage, in contemplation of which a father executes a deed providing for children by a former marriage, is not a valuable consideration. Re Greer, 11 Ir. R., Eq., 502.

8. The performance of a covenant by a widow on her second marriage to convey property for the benefit of her children by a former marriage, if made in pursuance of an agreement between her and her intended husband, will be enforced at the suit of those children, and is an exception to the general rule that the performance of a covenant cannot be enforced by volunteers. Gale v. Gale, 6 L. R., Ch. D., 144; 46 L. J., Ch., 809; 25 W. R. 772; 36 L. T., N. S., 690.

9. By a post-nuptial settlement a settlor in 1837 granted lands to trustees, after the death of the survivor of the settlor and his wife, to such persons and for such uses as the settlor should by will appoint, and in default of appointment for all the children of the settlor. The deed contained an ultimate limitation, if there should not be any child of the existing marriage, for the settlor absolutely. In 1841 the wife died, leaving four children of the marriage. By a re-settlement in 1848, to which the same trustees were parties, after reciting that it had been proposed that the settlor should give up his life estate in the premises, and forego the power given to him of appointing by will, the settlor granted the rents and profits during his life to the trustees for the benefit of his four children. He also covenanted with the trustees that he would not make any will whereby the trusts thereby declared should be impeached or defeated, and released the trustees from all the trusts of the former settlement. Shortly afterwards he married again, and had seven children by the second marriage. He died in 1866, having devised and bequeathed all his real and personal estate upon trust for his wife for life, and after her death upon trust to sell, and divide the proceeds among the children of the second marriage:—Held, that the ultimate limitation in the deed of 1837 did not cut down the meaning of the word "children" of the settlor to children of the first marriage; and that the children of both marriages were entitled to the benefit of the deed of 1837. Isaac v. Hughes, 9 L. R., Eq., 191.

3. Collaterals.

10. Limitations in marriage settlement to collateral relations, are voluntary. Reeves v. Reeves, 9 Mod. 132.

11. Covenant in marriage settlement, that settlor would surrender certain copyholds, which were intermixed with freeholds, to be settled upon issue of marriage, with limitations to collateral branches; his eldest son, upon marriage, covenants to suffer a recovery of freehold (which was done), and to settle the copyhold (to which he was admitted in fee). Upon a bill brought by a nephew of first settlor, on failure of issue of that marriage, for specific performance of the covenant, to surrender in favour of collaterals:—Held, that though consideration of marriage extended to collaterals, yet that son by covenants on his marriage, and by his admission in fee, had taken copyholds discharged of

1. A limitation to a second son in remainder in tail, on a settlement made on the marriage of the first son, and in consideration of the wife's portion, makes not the second son a purchaser. Webster v. Bishop, Pre. Ch. 224.

2. Trusts in a marriage settlement in favour of the children of a future marriage and of collaterals are purely voluntary. Woollaston v. Tribe, 9 L. R., Eq., 44.

The trusts of a marriage settlement of property of the wife were such that upon the death of the husband in her lifetime, without leaving issue of the marriage, she had a mere life interest in the property, the subsequent trusts being in favour of her nephews and nieces, and being irrevocable. She had no power to control the investment of the property or the appointment of trustees:—Held, that as the position in which she was had not been fully explained to her before she executed the settlement, she was entitled to a decree for rectification, and as the marriage consideration had failed, and did not support any of the existing trusts, the existing trusts must be declared void as in the case of a purely voluntary deed. S. C. 18 W. R. 83; 21 L. T., N. S., 449.

4. Limitations to Next of Kin.

3. By a marriage settlement, some property, to the principal part of which the intended wife was entitled for life, was conveyed to trustees for her separate use; and it was agreed that the trustees should effect an insurance on her life, and pay the premium out of the trust money, and should invest the amount assured when received, and pay the dividends to the intended husband for life; and after his decease, pay as the wife should appoint, and, in default, to the persons entitled under the Statute of Distribution of Intestates' Estate. The wife survived her husband:—Held, that she had then a right to refuse to keep up the policy; and that this Court would not consider her bound to perform the agreement for the benefit of mere volunteers. Godsal v. Webb, 2 Keen 99; 7 L. J., N. S., Ch., 103.

4. In a marriage settlement (the intended wife being an infant) the husband covenanted that one-half of the wife's personal and of the proceeds of her real property, when sold, should be settled upon trust for himself for life, then for her for her life, and then, in default of issue, upon trust for her next of kin. The property was duly vested in the trustees. The husband died, and there was no issue of the marriage:—Held, that the trust for the next of kin was not binding against the wife, and that she had absolute power to deal with the trust funds. Gibbs v. Grady, 41 L. J., Ch., 163; 20 W. R. 257.

5. By a marriage settlement of the wife's property, consisting of money in the funds, a general power of appointment by will was given to the wife, in the event of her dying before her husband without children, and in default of appointment there was a trust for the next of kin of the wife excluding the husband. But if the wife survived, then, in default of children, in trust for the wife absolutely. The father of the wife joined in the settlement, and covenanted to pay an annuity to his daughter. During the life of the husband and wife debts were contracted by the wife. There were no children, and the impossibility of there being any was not questioned:—Held, upon the application of the wife, and with the approbation of the husband, that the next of kin being mere volunteers, and not within the marriage consideration, the corpus of the trust funds might be applied in payment of debts. Paul v. Paul (No. 1), 15 L. R., Ch. D., 580; 50 L. J., Ch., 14; 43 L. T. 239; 29 W. R. 281.

6. By a marriage settlement the wife's property was settled, after life estates in the husband and wife and in default of children, in the event of the wife surviving, on her, and in the event of the husband surviving, as the wife should by will appoint, and in default, on her next of kin, excluding the husband:—Held, that the trust in favour of the next of kin could not be revoked, and that although there was no possibility of issue, the husband and wife together were not entitled to the corpus of the settled fund. Paul v. Paul (No. 1), (15 L. R., Ch. D., 580) overruled. Paul v. Paul, 20 L. R., Ch. D., 742; 51 L. J., Ch., 839; 47 L. T. 210; 30 W. R. 801. Affirming 19 L. R., Ch. D., 47; 51 L. J., Ch., 5; 45 L. T. 437; 30 W. R. 314.

5. Strangers.

7. Covenant in marriage articles in favour of a stranger, held merely voluntary, and not to be supported by the marriage consideration. Sutton v. Chetwynd, 3 Meriv. 249.

8. If two parties for a valuable consideration enter into a contract, of which one of the stipulations is for the benefit of a third person, who is a stranger to the consideration, the Court will not enforce the contract without securing his interest under it. Davenport v. Bishopp, 2 Y. & Coll. C. C. 451; 12 L. J., N. S., Ch., 492; 7 Jur. 1077. Affirmed 1 Ph. 98.

6. Purchase by Husband of Wife's Portion.

11. Settlement by husband in consideration of portion of fortune which he would have or receive on his marriage, limited to the portion received upon the marriage, not extending to make him a purchaser of future accession, unless clearly the intention. Carr v. Taylor, 10 Ves. 574.

3. Where there was an agreement on marriage to settle a jointure in consideration of 50*l.* portion, and the husband dies before portion paid or jointure settled, and the wife takes administration to her husband:—Held, she shall not have the portion as administratrix, and the jointure also. Sed quære. Meredith v. Jones, 1 Vern. 463.

4. Where the wife's portion is charged by will on certain lands, pursuant to a power in settlement, it shall go to the administrator of the husband, and not to the administrator of the wife, though the husband and wife are both dead, and the portion not raised. Meredith v. Wynn, Pre. The husband became a bankrupt before the death of the tenant for life, whom he survived, but he died before the wife's share was actually paid. Semble, the husband's covenant did not operate as a purchase of the wife's reversionary share under the will, but:—Held, that at all events the husband's assignees were not entitled to receive the share ing the covenant. Corsbie 64; 5 Jur. 790.

1. The existence and execution of a settlement by indentures of lease and release, presumed from circumstances, principally the existence of the drafts; a statement in an abtract of the title, and the existence of the lease, for a year, of other estates, appearing to have been included in the same plan of settlement. Ward v. Garnons, 17 Ves. 134.

2. A settled estate is sold, but no part of the money is laid out in the purchase of other lands; yet this Court will, under certain circumstances, presume an agreement between the parties interested, that it should be so laid out; and, upon such presumption, will decree the money to that person who would have been entitled to the land if any purchase had been made. Newton v. Newton, 6 Bro. P. C. 408.

3. A suit was instituted for the appointment of new trustees of a marriage settlement. The settlement was lost, but the husband and wife swore directly to the circumstances under which it was executed; to the execution of it by them; and to the contents of it. The solicitor who prepared the settlement was dead, but, in addition to the evidence of the husband and wife, there was the indirect testimony of several other parties to the same effect:—Held, that there was sufficient evidence for the Court to assume that the settlement was actually executed and to the effect contended for. Hall v. Dawson, 7 L. T., N. S., 519.

The husband had become insolvent after the marriage, and his assignee subsequently objected that no sufficient notice of the settlement had been given to the proper party. That party was the trustee of the husband's father's settlement, and the family solicitor; but he was dead. The husband made an affidavit, stating that certain verbal communications had passed, both before and after his marriage, between him, his father, and the solicitor, as to the settlement:—Held, sufficient evidence of due notice had been given. Ib.

4. In 1860 a husband, through the intervention of his wife, obtained possession of their marriage settlement from the trustee. The husband, in order to raise money upon the property comprised in it, destroyed the settlement, mortgaged part of the settled property, and was proceeding to sell other parts of it. In 1864 the trustee filed a bill to restrain the intended sale, and prayed a declaration that the cancelled settlement should be established, and the trusts of it carried into effect. The husband did not deny the fact of his having destroyed the settlement; but the trustee and the wife denied many of his allegations, especially those with respect both to the circumstances under which the settlement was obtained by her from the trustee, and the precise contents of it. No draft or other copy of the settlement was produced to the Court; but there was the evidence of the trustee and the wife on the one side, and that of the husband and other persons who were not parties to the settlement, but who had subsequently read it, on the other. There was also the evidence of the solicitor who had prepared the settlement, and who had acted as solicitor to the husband in the mortgage transaction, and in the proposed sale of part of the settled property:—Held, that, upon a full consideration of all the evidence in the case, the trustee was entitled to the relief which he sought. Brandon v. Barlow, 13 L. By the operative part of the deed she assigned to the trustees of the settlement all the one-sixth part or share, and all other the parts or shares, vested or contingent, to which she was then or might become entitled, by accruer, survivorship, "or otherwise," in such trust funds, and also all the shares and interest, whether vested or contingent, or in expectancy, and which she was then or might become entitled to, in any property whatsoever under the will of S.:—Held, that the words "or otherwise" must be construed as relating to a mode of acquisition ejusdem generis with accruer and survivorship, and did not include a share in the trust funds which the wife derived under the will, or as one of the next of kin of her father, who became entitled thereto. Parkinson v. Dashwood, 7 Jur., N. A marriage settlement recited that, by virtue of certain specified instruments, certain specified hereditaments, "and all other the freehold hereditaments in the county of York thereinafter expressed to be appointed and released," were limited as the settlor should appoint, and, subject thereto, to him in fee. The settlement then recited that, upon the treaty for the marriage, it was agreed that the several hereditaments and estates in the county of York, thereinafter mentioned and intended to be thereby conveyed," should be assured to the uses thereinafter mentioned. The deed then contained an appointment and a conveyance by the settlor of the specified hereditaments mentioned in the recital, and of "all other the freehold hereditaments, if any, in the county of York, of or to which the grantor was seised or entitled for an estate of inheritance." The settlor, at the date of the conveyance, was seised of a fee-simple estate in Yorkshire, called the L. estate, which was not comprised in the above specified instruments, and was not recited nor mentioned in the conveyance:—Held, that the general words must be restricted by the recital, and that the L. estate did not pass. Ib.

II. WHAT PROPERTY INCLUDED.

1. Every deed is to be taken most strongly against the grantor; but where an owner of an estate, on his marriage, settles it upon himself for life, with remainders over, and is, therefore, in one sense, both grantor and grantee, his interest under the deed is to be construed as if a stranger had been the grantor. Vincent v. Spicer, 22 Beav. 380; 2 Jur., N. S., 654; 25 L. J., Ch., 589.

2. A deed purporting to settle a sum of money, "portion of moneys to which the settlor was entitled under the Statute of Distributions," passes chattels real coming to the settlor in the manner described. Newitt v. Robinson, 15 W. R. 77.

3. A marriage settlement recited an agreement to convey a certain estate, save and except the lands of Ballyhenry, and its subdenominations; but the operative part of the deed purported to convey by name, as a separate denomination, the lands of Kilahan, which it was proved were reputed a subdenomination of Ballyhenry:—Held, that there was not sufficient evidence of mistake to justify the Court in striking Kilahan out of the settlement. Alexander v. Crosbie, Ll. & G. temp. Sugd. 145.

4. Primâ facie, when a person conveys or settles an estate, he means to include in the conveyance every interest which he can part with and which he does not except. Johnson v. Webster, 4 De G. M. & G. 474; 1 Jur., N. S., 145; 24 L. J., Ch., 300.

When the owner of an estate has also a charge upon it, and there is some intermediate charge or estate between his own charge and his ownership in fee, it may be reasonable to say, that without some special act, no presumption can be made of merge the charge in the fee, against the interest of the o the intermediate estate; bu mediate estate is created owner himself, this reasoni tion. Ib.

1. The sole proprietor of a recipe for a medicine assigned it, on marriage of his daughter, to trustees for her and her husband for their lives, and then to their children. The mother destroyed the recipe, but verbally communicated contents to A., the eldest, for the benefit of B. and C., the younger children. Upon bill filed against A. by B. and C., A. was declared to hold the secret on trusts of the settlement, and was decreed to account for profits since the mother's death; and as a sale was impracticable, an issue was directed to ascertain value of secret. Green v. Folgham, 1 Sim. & S. 398. S. C. nom. Green v. Church, 1 L. J., Ch., 203.

2. By a marriage settlement, after reciting that the lady was entitled to real and personal property, and that it had been agreed that she should settle it, and also all other property to which she might become entitled during the coverture, upon the trusts thereinafter mentioned, all her then property was vested in trustees in trust, during her life, to pay and apply the income to such person or persons as she from time to time, by any writing or writings signed by her, should appoint; and, in default of such appointment, to her for her separate use; and, after her death, to pay 500*l.* a year to her husband for his life; and the settlement declared that, subject to those trusts, all the trust property, and all the annual produce of it which might remain unapplied at her death, should remain upon the trusts thereinafter mentioned, none of which were for the benefit of her husband. The trustees received the income of the settled property, and, with the lady's privity and acquiescence, paid it into a bank in their own names, and made remittances to her from time to time as she required money. She and her husband separated soon after their marriage, and she died in his lifetime; at her death 888*l.* were in her house, and a balance of 2,049*l.*, arisen from the income of the settled property received by the trustees, was standing to their credit in the books of the bank:—Held, that the husband was entitled to the 888*l.*, but that the 2,049*l.* were subject to the ultimate trusts of the settlement, as being annual produce remaining unapplied at the wife's death. Johnstone v. Lumb, 15 Sim. 308; 15 L. J., N. S., Ch., 386; 10 Jur. 699.

3. By a marriage settlement the personal estates of the husband and wife were assigned to trustees, to permit the husband and wife to enjoy the use during their joint lives, and the whole to go to the survivor. The husband had farming stock, and the wife had money. Soon after the marriage the husband took a lease for lives of a piece of land, and built houses on it. The husband died first:—Held, that the presumption was that these houses were built out of capital, and not out of income, and that the representatives of the wife were entitled to a charge on them for the amount of personal estate which had been expended on them. Williams v. Thomas, 2 Dr. & Sm. 29; 8 Jur., N. S., 250; 31 L. J., Ch., 674; 10 W. R. 417; 7 L. T., N. S., 184.

4. By a marriage settlement, after reciting that the husband was absolutely entitled, by virtue of an appointment made under the marriage settlement of his father and mother, to 10,000*l.*, a moiety of the trust funds comprised therein; and reciting also that he was contingently entitled, in the event of his sister dying under twenty-one and unmarried, to the other moiety of the trust funds; and reciting that upon the contract of marriage it was agreed that he should settle as well the moiety as also all other his part, share, and interest, as well vested as contingent, of and in the trust funds; it was witnessed that the husband assigned the 10,000*l.*, and all other the part, share, and interest, as well vested as contingent, in the trust property, upon certain trusts therein declared; and it was provided that if the moiety of the trust funds, to which he was contingently entitled as aforesaid, should by the death of his sister under the age of twenty-one, without having been married, or otherwise, devolve upon or vest in him, 2,000*l.*, part thereof, should belong to the plaintiff for his own benefit. The sister attained twenty-one, but died without having been married. The mother, in pursuance of a power in the settlement in that behalf contained, appointed the sister's share in trust for the plaintiff absolutely:—Held, that the share so appointed did not pass to the trustees of the plaintiff's marriage settlement. Childers v. Eardley, 6 Jur., N. S., 690; 8 W. R. 1698.

5. A marriage settlement recited an intention that 3,000*l.* should be settled in the testatum; it was agreed that 1,000*l.* should be paid to the husband, and the remaining 2,000*l.* was settled in the usual way:—Held, that the 2,000*l.* only could be treated as settled. Hughes v. Young, 1 N. R. 166; 9 Jur., N. S., 276; 32 L. J., Ch., 137.

6. By marriage settlement in 1842, T., being seised of the equity of redemption in fee of lands subject to a mortgage for 4,000*l.*, 2,000*l.* of which had been paid off, but kept alive for the benefit of the persons who paid off the same, and having also become entitled to the benefit of such last-mentioned charge, and contemplating the possibility of paying off the balance, conveyed the lands in question, and assigned the charge as to the 2,000*l.* already existing, "and also all sum or sums of money which he or any person in trust for him then was or should at any time thereafter be entitled to receive, whether principal or interest, as a mortgagee, or by purchase or assignment from the said then existing mortgagee, of all the lands in question." The trusts were substantially for T. for life, remainder to the children of former marriages absolutely. In 1846 T. paid off the remaining 2,000*l.*, and took a conveyance of the debt and mortgaged securities to a trustee for himself. In 1849 T. became insolvent:—Held, as between the assignees in insolvency and the trustees of the marriage settlement of 1842, that the 2,000*l.* thus paid in 1846 was bound by the settlement. Cochrane v. St. Clair, 1 Jur., N. S., 302.

7. B., previously to marriage, agreed to settle after marriage all of his household furniture on his wife for her sole use and benefit. At the time of the marriage he had some furniture, his wife had some, and some was purchased subsequently. Three years after the marriage he, when in debt, settled on his wife and children all of the furniture then in his possession. Shortly afterwards he became bankrupt, and on the assignee in bankruptcy claiming the furniture on behalf of the creditors, a suit was instituted by the trustees of the settlement for a declaration that the furniture had been validly settled on the wife and children:—Held, that the whole of the furniture was subject to the trusts of the settlement, and that the trustees were entitled to a declaration to that effect with costs. Brasher v. Wyatt, 16 L. T., N. S., 275.

1. By the testator's first marriage settlement a sum of 14,000*l.* was settled upon the testator for life, remainder to the first wife for life, remainder to the children of that marriage who should attain twenty-one. There were four children who lived to attain twenty-one. The first wife died, and the testator made his will, giving all his property to his children equally. The testator then married again, on which occasion 5,000*l.* was settled, after his decease, to the second wife for her life, remainder to the children of that marriage. There was but one child. After the birth of that child the testator executed a codicil giving certain annuities to his second wife, and in other respects confirming his will, except that he directed that previous to the equal division among his children the trustees were to take into consideration what each class of children would be entitled to under the marriage settlements of their respective mothers; and whichever family should be individually least provided for, they should, in the first place, be severally entitled to receive out of the general estate so much as would make his or her share equal in amount to what each child of the other family would be entitled to under his or her mother's marriage settlement. The testator died, leaving his second wife surviving, and one child of of the second marriage:—Held, that the subject of the settlement being nothing but money, the reversionary nature of the provision for the child of the second marriage was not to be regarded, although the provision for the children of the first marriage took effect in possession immediately on the testator's decease; but, semble, that this might be otherwise in case the subject-matter had been anything else than money. Williamson v. Jeffreys, 18 Jur. 1071.

2. By a marriage settlement, after reciting that the lady was entitled to 10,000*l.* in possession, the sum was settled on herself, her intended husband, and the children of the marriage. There was also a covenant to settle all her after-acquired property. At the date of the settlement she was not entitled to any money in possession, but was entitled to a contingent interest in trust funds under the marriage settlement of her father and mother, and the 1,000*l.* was, in fact, advanced by the father out of his own moneys. After his death a bill was filed by his representatives to have it declared that his estate was entitled to be recouped the 10,000*l.* advanced by him on his daughter's marriage, to the extent of her portion in the trust funds:—Held, that the settlement did not show that the 10,000*l.* was meant to be an accelerated advance of the daughter's share in the trust fur

5. By a post-nuptial settle settled savings of her separate trusts for herself and her husban for life, with remainder to their a proviso that in the event of either under twenty-five, with share should go to the survivo also a proviso that the husband be at liberty to add any part of to the sum invested, and that t so added should be subject to as the original fund. The wife i names of the trustees, but without ing the fact to them, various sums arising partly from accumulations of the dividends and partly from funds derived from other sources, and after the death of the husband and of both of the sons without issue, the executor of the survivor of the sons instituted a suit to have the trusts of the settlement executed:—Held, that it was not a sufficient defence on the part of the settlor as to the additions to the fund that she had invested them under a misapprehension as to the effect of the settlement. Muggeridge v. Stanton, 1 De G. F. & J. 107.

Held, also, that all the additions were subject to the trusts of it, and there not appearing sufficient probability of establishing in a cross-suit a case of mistake, the Court refused to give an opportunity to institute such a suit. Ib.

1. Consols were vested in the trustees of a marriage settlement for the husband and wife successively for life, with remainder for the benefit of the children. The husband directed the bankers who received the dividends and paid them to him under a power of attorney from the trustees, to invest an additional sum of 2,000*l.* consols in the names of the same trustees, so that they might receive the dividends as before. The bankers invested the sum as directed, and paid the dividends of the aggregate fund to the husband during his life. No notice was given to the trustees of the fresh investment:—Held, that there was no resulting trust of the 2,000*l.* for the husband, but that it became subject to the trusts of the settlement, as an augmentation of the trust fund. Re Curteis, 14 L. R., Eq., 217; 26 L. T., N. S., 863.

A fund was vested in trustees on the usual trusts of a marriage settlement. The husband added a further sum as an augmentation of the trust fund. Four years afterwards the husband and wife, under a power in the settlement, appointed the original fund, "or the trust fund and property representing the same," to two of their children:—Held, that the appointment passed only the original fund, and not the augmentation. Ib.

2. Settlement by husband in consideration of portion of fortune which he would have, or receive on his marriage, limited to the portion received upon the marriage, not extending to make him a purchaser of future accessions, unless clearly the intention. Carr v. Taylor, 10 Ves. 574.

3. Where A. B. invested some of the funds, subject to the trusts of his settlement, in the purchase of real estate, and added some money of his own:—Held, that it was an advancement to the parties entitled under the settlement. Ouseley v. Anstruther, 10 Beav. 461.

4. By a settlement, trustees were directed to be possessed of 1,760*l.* in trust for a daughter, and her sons at twenty-one, and daughters at twenty-one or marriage. Like trusts of two other sums of 1,760*l.* were declared for two other daughters and their children. Benefit of survivorship and accruer between the three daughters and their children, in default of children, was declared, with a declaration, that the provisions applicable to the original shares should apply to such surviving or accrued shares; and it was provided, that if either of the three daughters should die without having or leaving any child who should attain a vested interest, she might dispose of any part of "her share," not exceeding one-third, by deed or will. On the death of one of the three daughters, her share accrued among the survivors. One of the survivors then died without a child, and appointed, by will, "one-third of her share or shares, as well accrued as original, in the said sum of 5,280*l.*" The trustees paid so much of the share of the testatrix as had accrued into Court, under the Trustee Relief Act:—Held, that the previous provisions of the settlement consolidated the accrued with the original shares, and that the power to appoint overrode the whole share thus consolidated. Re Hutchinson's Settlement, 5 De G. & Sm. 681; 17 Jur. 59.

2. Bonuses on Insurance Policies.

5. Where by his marriage settlement the husband covenanted to insure his life for 3,000*l.*, and "that the said 3,000*l.* under the policy should be settled, etc., and that the trustees should stand possessed of the policy and of the said sum of 3,000*l.* upon certain trusts for the benefit of the wife and children of the marriage:—Held, after the bankruptcy and death of the husband, that the bonuses payable on the policy belonged to the trustees and not to the assignees. Parkes v. Bott, 9 Sim. 388; 8 L. J., N. S., Ch., 14.

6. A policy of insurance for 3,000*l.* on A.'s life was assigned to trustees, and by a deed of even date trusts were declared of it by the description of "the sum of 3,000*l.* for which A.'s life was insured," and power was given to B. to dispose of it by will. B., after reciting the settlement, bequeathed 1,000*l.*, part of the sum of 3,000*l.*, to A., and the remaining sum of 2,000*l.* to C. At A.'s death 9,000*l.* was received under the policy:—Held, that the whole fruits of the policy were subject to the trusts of the settlement, and passed by the bequests to A. and C. in proportion to their legacies. Courtney v. Ferrers, 1 Sim. 137; 5 L. J., Ch., 107.

7. The trustees of a marriage settlement were directed to keep up the premiums of a policy "to be taken out from some office in England or Ireland" on the life and in the name of W., the husband, out of the annual income of the property in the settlement. They were then directed to stand possessed of the policy, and a sum of 4,000*l.* thereby to be raised or secured upon certain trusts, after the decease of W., for the wife and the children of the marriage. W. covenanted to execute a regular assignment of the policy, "together with the said sum of 4,000*l.* sterling, to be insured upon the trusts and for the purposes aforesaid." W. did actually assign to the trustees an Irish policy for 4,000*l.*, Irish currency, which he had effected before the date of the settlement. Some time after, the trustees allowed the policy so assigned to drop, and effected an English policy on the life of W., but in their own names, for 3,666*l.* 13*s.* 4*d.*, which sum of English currency they were advised was equivalent to 4,000*l.* Irish currency. This policy they purported to hold on the trusts of the settlement in substitution for the Irish policy of 4,000*l.*, and they paid the premiums out of W.'s life income, as directed by the settlement. He afterwards died, having bequeathed the bonuses, which, with the 3,666*l.* 13*s.* 4*d.*, amounted to nearly 5,000*l.*, on certain trusts:—Held, that the bonuses belonged to the trustees of the settlement, and did not pass by the will of W. Warren v. Wybault, 12 Jur., N. S., 639; 15 L. T., N. S., 155.

1. A life policy of assurance was settled on the marriage of A. and B. on B., the wife, for life, with remainder to A., the husband, for life, with remainder to the children of the marriage at twenty-one, with remainder, in default of children, as B. should appoint. B. appointed her interest to A., and died, leaving one child. After B.'s death a bonus became payable on the policy. A petition was presented by the trustees and A., stating that A. was unable to support his child, and was going to emigrate, and praying that the sum receivable in respect of the bonus might be paid to the trustee, and applied for the maintenance of the child. The prayer of the petition was granted, on condition that A. gave up his life interest under the settlement. Exp. Hays, 18 L. J., N. S., Ch., 441; 13 Jur. 762.

2. A marriage settlement recited that the settlor, the husband, had in pursuance of agreement effected insurances on his life for the sums of 2,000*l.* and 5,000*l.*, and had given a bonus to secure the sum of 7,000*l.*, and provided that the trustees should stand possessed of the said sums of 2,000*l.* and 5,000*l.*, so assured on the trusts of the settlement:—Held, that the bonuses did not pass. Domville v. Lamb, 1 W. R. 246; 9 Hare (App.) xxxii.

3. Bonuses on a policy held to be subject to the trusts of a marriage settlement. Gilly v. Burley, 22 Beav. 619; 2 Jur., N. S., 897.

Upon the construction of a settlement:—Held, that the policy effected in the names of trustees was itself settled; but that, under the covenant of the husband and the rules of the company, the husband was entitled to an option to have any bonus applied in reduction of the premiums. Ib.

Bonuses having been declared, the husband continued to pay the full premiums:—Held, on his death, that the bonuses were accretions to the trust, and did not belong to his executors. Ib.

By a marriage settlement the husband covenanted to effect a policy of insurance on his life, in the names of trustees, for the sum of 2,500*l.*, and to settle "the said sum of 2,500*l.*" upon certain trusts:—Held, that the trustees were entitled to the bonuses which accrued upon the policy. S. C. 2 Jur., N. S., 897.

4. A policy of assurance on the life of H. was taken in the names of trustees, and a settlement was executed by virtue of which the bonuses payable on the policy were to be held upon trust for H., and the money assured, on the trusts of the settlement. H. obtained possession of and misappropriated a portion of the trust funds:—Held, that the trustees were not entitled as against H.'s executrix to impound or retain the bonuses to make good the trust funds misappropriated by H., not as being settled property, because there was a prior resulting trust of them for H., not by way of set-off, because they were not payable till after H.'s death. Hallett v. Hallett, 13 L. R., Ch. D., 232; 49 L. J., Ch 723; 28 W. R. 321.

A. did not possess himself of the bonus, but allowed the same to be added to the capital, and received the dividends on the whole. On his death:—Held, that the wife, as survivor, was entitled to receive the bonus. Ib.

1. On the marriage of H. and D. sixteen shares in a company were vested in trustees to pay the interest, dividends, and yearly proceeds to D., the wife, for her life, or such persons as she should appoint, for her separate use, and there was a proviso, that if any bonus should be declared in respect of the shares, they should be invested in augmentation of the settlement. The company, being their own insurers, carried over 5*l.* per cent. on their floating stock to the insurance fund, and declared a dividend out of the surplus, if any, year by year among the shareholders, and carried forward small sums left out of such surplus to the following year, and so on de anno in annum:—Held, that these additional payments were not bonuses, and that the wife was entitled to them for her life. Hollis v. Allan, 12 Jur., N. S., 638; 14 W. R. 980.

2. Five shares in a company were settled upon trust for J. for life, with remainder to her children. During the life of J., in pursuance of resolutions passed by general meetings of the company, the capital of the company was on several occasions increased by converting into shares a portion of the half-yearly profits of the company, and distributing such shares among the shareholders ratably according to the number of their shares. In this manner several new shares were allotted to the trustees of the settlement. After J.'s death, these new shares were claimed by her personal representative:—Held, that the new shares formed part of the capital of the settlement fund. Re Burton, 37 L. J., Ch., 194; 5 L. R., Eq., 238; 16 W. R. 392; 17 L. T., N. S., 594.

3. A., on her marriage, assigned 1,000*l.* in trust to pay all interest, dividends, and other profits to M., her intended husband, for life or until bankruptcy, and, after his death or bankruptcy, to permit A. to receive them; and, after the death of A. and M., principal and all interest to go amongst the children of the marriage; but in case there should be no children living at A.'s death, then as she should appoint, and, in default of appointment, for the persons entitled as her next-of-kin, as if she had died intestate and unmarried. M. became bankrupt in A.'s lifetime; she died in 1865, and M. in 1871; there were no children of the marriage, and A. executed no appointment; the trustees retained the dividends after her death, and, on the death of M., paid the accretions into court:—Held, that the dividends which had accrued between the death of A. and the death of M. were undisposed of by the settlement; that they did not follow the corpus as accessory; and that the administrator of A. was entitled to receive them in trust for the personal representative of M. Frank v. Mackay, 7 Ir. I. GENERAL PRINCIPLES.

4. The intention of parties appearing in a deed always governs the Court in constructions. Hodgson v. Bussey, 2 Atk. 91.

The Court will make a favourable exposition in words in marriage settlements to support the intention of the parties; the same as to voluntary settlements. Ib.

5. Articles previous to settlement cannot, in general, be read to construe the settlement, unless the bill is brought to rectify the settlement, or the settlement refers to them. Pritchard v. Quinchant, Ambl. 147.

6. The Court will, from the general frame of a settlement, collect the intent, contrary to the express words of a particular clause. Northumberland (Earl) v. Egremont (Earl), 1 Eden 435.

7. In the construction of marriage settlements, courts of equity will not act upon any views of expediency or inexpediency of their provisions. Smyth v. Foley, 3 Y. & Coll. 142; 7 L. J., N. S., Exch. Eq., 34.

8. Where parties to a deed of settlement contemplate several states of circumstances, and there is found on the face of the instrument a clear and distinct expression of intention to provide for one event which has precisely happened, the terms of gift so expressed are not to be superseded, nor their effect destroyed, by any ambiguity of terms used solely in reference to other events or states of circumstances which have not happened. Dill v. Haddington (Earl), 8 Cl. & F. 168.

1. Though there may not be any different rule of construction applicable to wills and settlements, yet the different character of the instrument is a circumstance to be weighed in determining the effect of the disposition it contains: shares under a settlement being held not to be vested, might create a resulting trust for the settlor, whilst in a will the residuary legatee might take. Farrer v. Barker, 9 Hare 744.

2. Of the intention which is necessary for the efficacy of a deed. Hughes v. Wells, 16 Jur. 927.

3. Principles on which the Court proceeds in putting a construction upon inconsistent clauses in a settlement. Bush v. Watkins, 14 Beav. 425.

II. PARTICULAR WORDS.

"Then living."] 4. By a marriage settlement trustees were to stand possessed of 2,000*l.* in trust for T. E. for life or until he should become bankrupt; remainder to his wife for life; remainder "if she should survive T. E., or in case of her dying in his lifetime, then from and immediately after his decease, or sooner, becoming bankrupt" to the children "then living":—Held, that all the children living at the death of the wife were entitled. Re Edgington's Trusts, 3 Drew. 202.

"Entitled."] 5. "Entitled" means entitled in possession. A gift over the shares of children in a settlement on death "before they become entitled," does not prevent the shares from vesting at birth. Jopp v. Wood, 28 Beav. 53. Affirmed sub. nom Jopp v. Wood, Smith v. Jopp, 6 N. R. 359.

6. By a post-nuptial settlement—reciting that A. had a large family, and was anxious to make a provision for it in the case of his death or of the death of his wife, and, for that purpose, had determined to execute the settlement—leaseholds were assigned to trustees upon trust, in case the wife should survive A., to permit her to take one-third of the profit rents, the other two-thirds to go to the maintenance, etc., of such of their children as should require it; and after the death or second marriage of the wife the entirety to be expended on the education and putting to trade or business of such of the children as should require it; and in case A. should survive his wife, upon trust to permit him to receive the entirety of the rents during his life, one-half to be expended on the maintenance, etc., of such of the children as should require it; and in case A. should neglect so to apply the one-half of the rents, the trustees should receive it and so apply it, and after the death of A. the property to go and become the property of the children of A. and B. as A. shall appoint; and in case of the death of any of the children before they should become entitled to

1. By a marriage settlement, certain stocks, the property of the lady, are assigned to trustees, upon certain trusts, for the benefit of the intended wife and husband, during their joint lives; and if the wife should survive the husband, having children by him, upon trust for her during her life; and after the death both of her and her husband, upon trust for all her children by her then intended or any future husband, as she should appoint; and, in default of appointment, upon trust for the children of the then intended marriage; and it was provided, that, if the lady should survive her intended husband, and there should be no children of that marriage who should acquire a vested interest in the property, the stocks should be upon trust for her, and assigned to her: the lady having outlived her husband, and there being no child of that marriage who had acquired a vested interest, it was held that the lady was entitled to the stocks absolutely, without regard to the possibility of there being children of a future marriage. Hanson v. Cook, 4 L. J., Ch., 45.

2. Children to be Begotten.

2. Provisions for daughters to be born shall extend to daughters then begotten. Hewet v. Ireland, 1 P. W. 426; Gilb. Eq. Rep. 145.

3. The words "begotten" and "to be begotten" are the same, as well on constructions of wills as settlements. Cook v. Cook, 2 Vern. 545.

4. A settlement of money to be paid to such children "as shall be begotten, etc.," but "that if the husband shall die without any children, then the said money shall be paid to A.," extends to a child in esse at the time the settlement was made. Slingsby v. ——, 10 Mod. 398.

5. The third section of the 33 Geo. 2, c. 14 (Bankers Act), applies to a conveyance made in favour of a child or grandchild unborn, as well as to a conveyance made in favour of a child or grandchild in existence at the time of its execution. Spearing v. Delacour, 1 Dr. & Wal. 591.

3. Afterborn Illegitimate Children.

6. Where there was a settlement of personalty in trust for afterborn illegitimate children, the property was, on the bill of the settlor, ordered to be re-transferred to him. Wilkinson v. Wilkinson, 1 Y. & Coll. C. C. 657; 6 Jur. 921.

7. The objection to the validity of a limitation to unborn illegitimate children, is not founded exclusively on the uncertainty of description, nor semble, is there any distinction between the validity of a limitation in favour of such persons, whether described as the children of a man or the children of a woman. Dover v. Alexander, 2 Hare 275; 12 L. J., N. S., Ch., 175; 7 Jur. 124.

8. Where a married woman, having legitimate children, and one illegitimate child, separated from her husband, and being enceinte with a second illegitimate child, appointed a fund in favour of her first illegitimate child, reserving a power of revocation as to a moiety in favour of any afterborn children of her body:—Held, that the latter clause was to be construed in its legal sense, and was applicable only to legitimate children, and that afterborn illegitimate children could not take under a subsequent appointment as to the moiety in favour of both the illegitimate children. Ib.

9. Where by deed an estate was limited to an afterborn illegimate son in fee, and if he should die before he attained twenty-one, then in fee to a living illegimate child, who died an infant, and an afterborn illegitimate son attained the age of twenty-one, it was held that the last limitation failed, and that the devised estate resulted to the heir of the grantor. Lomas v. Wright, 2 Myl. & K. 769; 3 L. J., N. S., Ch., 68.

10. The ultimate limitation in a settlement was to all the children, as well those already born as hereafter to be born of A. and B. his wife. B. was the settlor's sister, who had been married to A. five years before the date of the settlement. They never had any legitimate children, but before their marriage, B. had several children still living, who were reputed to be children by A.:—Held, that these children were entitled to the property under the limitation. Gabb v. Prendergast, 1 Kay & J. 439; 1 Jur., N. S., 900; 24 L. J., Ch., 431; 3 W. R. 395; 3 Eq. Rep. 648.

Semble, the construction of these words in a will would exclude illegitimate children born at the date of the will, because of the possibility that legitimate children might have been born before the testator's death. Ib.

11. A husband by his will gave his property in trust for the use of his wife for life, with power to dispose of it by will at her death "among our children," and if she died intestate the property to be divided equally between "my children by her." The testator was twice married. By his first wife he had two children, both of whom died in his life, one of them leaving an only child. By his second wife he had two children, both born before the marriage:—Held, that the two illegitimate children did not take. Dorin v. Dorin, 7 L. R., H. L., 568; 45 L. J., Ch., 652; 33 L. T. 281; 23 W. R. 570. Reversing 17 L. R., Eq., 463; 43 L. J., Ch., 462; 29 L. T. 731; 22 W. R. 217.

As Objects of Special Powers.] See POWER, XVII. III.

IV. FOR EXECUTORS AND ADMINISTRATORS.

12. The effect of a settlement by deed, limiting property to the executor or administrator of the settlor, is to make such property subject to the disposition of the settlor by will, or to be dealt with under the Statute of Distributions. Mackenzie v. Mackenzie, 3 Macn. & G. 559; 21 L. J., N. S., Ch., 465; 15 Jur. 1091.

13. Limitation in a deed of personal property to the executors, administrators, and assigns of A., after the death of B. and C., does not fail by the death of B. and C. in the lifetime of A. Horseman v. Abbey, 1 Jac. & Walk. 381.

1. By a marriage settlement, stock was assigned to trustees, upon trust to pay the interest and dividends to the husband for life, and, in case he should survive the wife, upon trust to transfer the said stock to the husband, "his executors, administrators, or assigns, to and for his or their own use and benefit," but in case the wife should survive the husband upon trust, during her life, to pay the interest and dividends as she should appoint, and, after her decease, upon trust to transfer the stock "unto the executors or administrators of the said G. M. (the husband) to and for their own use and benefit." The wife survived the husband, and took out administration of his effects, and claimed an absolute interest in the whole corpus of the stock:—Held, that she was not entitled. Semble, that a limitation in a settlement "to the executors and administrators of A. for their own use and benefit," unconnected with any other limitation showing more specifically who are to take, is void for uncertainty. Marshall v. Collett, 1 Y. & Coll. 232.

2. Construction on settlement; ultimate limitation "to use of executors or administrators for their lives, and assigns for ever," as to what benefit they take. Wellman v. Bowring, 1 Sim. & S. 24. Affirming 2 Russ. 374; 1 L. J., Ch., 27.

3. By a marriage settlement, the ultimate trust declared of a copyhold estate (the property of the husband) was for his executors or administrators, and a similar trust was declared with respect to the executors or administrators of the wife, as to a copyhold estate, which was her property. The wife survived, and took out administration to her husband:—Held, that she was not entitled to hold the former estate for her own exclusive benefit, but for the benefit of herself and her husband's next of kin. Wellman v. Bowring, 3 Sim. 328.

4. By a marriage settlement, stock, the property of the husband, was settled on trust for the separate use of the wife during her life, and after her death for the husband, if he survived her; but if he died in her lifetime, then for such persons as he should, by deed or will, appoint; and in default of appointment, for his executors and administrators. The husband died in the wife's lifetime, having appointed her executrix, but without exercising his power:—Held, that the executrix was not entitled to the stock beneficially, but that it was to be administered by her as part of his general personal estate. Collier v. Squire, 3 Russ. 467.

5. Trust in a marriage settlement to raise a sum of money charged on the settled estate at the end of twelve months from the decease of the survivor of the husband and wife, and to pay the same to the executors or administrators of the wife:—Held, upon the whole scope and context of the instrument, a trust for the next of kin of the wife, although she died in the husband's lifetime. Bulmer v. Jay, 3 Myl. & K. 197. Affirming 4 Sim. 48.

6. The ultimate trust in a settlement of a fund, in default of and subject to the appointment by will of the lady, was "for her executors and administrators." The lady, having survived her husband, assigned the fund; it was:—Held, that the assignee had a good title, and the fund was ordered to be transferred to him. Bulmer v. Ja 197) not followed. Page v. 518; 1 Eq. Rep. 540.

7. A sum of money was beq for several tenants for life in reversion to such person or p them, who was a married wo will appoint, and in default ment, "to and for the benefit or administrators." There w ment:—Held, that the husban jure mariti. Att.-Gen. v. Ma 10 Jur. 955.

B. to and for his and their own use and benefit." The wife survived:—Held, that, subject to her life interest, the fund belonged to the next of kin of A. B. and not to his administrator. Meryon v. Collett, 8 Beav. 386; 14 L. J., N. S., Ch., 369; 9 Jur. 459.

1. By a marriage settlement the reversion in real estate was conveyed to trustees in trust, at the request of the husband and wife, or of the survivor, to sell, and the proceeds were settled on the husband and wife for life, with remainder to the children, and in default thereof to such person as the wife should appoint, and in case of no appointment to the use of the heirs, executors, and administrators of the wife, according to the nature and property of the premises. The wife died without issue, and without having exercised the power. The husband took out administration to his wife, and required the trustees to sell the reversion:—Held, that he was entitled to have it sold, and to have the proceeds as administrator to his wife. Warburton v. Hadfield, 6 L. J., N. S., Ch., 203; 1 Jur. 164.

The ultimate trust in a marriage settlement of a fund belonging to the wife was to her executors or administrators:—Held, first, that the surviving husband, who was her administrator, and not her next of kin, was entitled; and, secondly, that if by those words her next of kin were intended, then that the next of kin at the death of the wife, and not of the husband (who was tenant for life), were entitled. By marriage settlement, a fund belonging to the wife was settled on the husband and wife for their respective lives, with remainder to the children of the marriage, to be vested at twenty-one or marriage; and in case no children should attain vested interests (which happened), then as the wife should appoint; and in default, unto the executors or administrators of the wife. The wife predeceased the husband, and made no appointment. There was one child only of the marriage, who survived her mother, but died without attaining a vested interest:—Held, that the ultimate limitation was in favour of the wife's administrator, and not of her next of kin. Allen v. Thorp, 7 Beav. 72; 13 L. J., N. S., Ch., 5.

3. By an ante-nuptial settlement, money, the property of the wife, was settled in trust for her separate use for life, for her husband for life, and for the children of the marriage, equally subject to her appointment by deed or will, and in default of children, for such persons as she should appoint by deed or will, and in default of appointment, that the trustees should pay and transfer the same to her executors or administrators; and the husband covenanted, that in case he should die without issue in his life, and make no appointment, the same should remain for the use and benefit of her executors, administrators, and assigns:—Held, that by the "executors or administrators" of the wife, her next of kin were meant. This case was appealed, and the appeal was heard, but before judgment was given it was compromised, the Lord Chancellor having expressed his dissent from the decree below. Daniel v. Dudley, 11 Sim. 163. See S. C. on appeal 1 Ph. 1.

4. J. by settlement assigned an annuity to trustees upon trust to pay the same to his wife during their joint lives for her separate use, and after her decease to sell and invest and stand possessed of the proceeds upon trusts for children, in default as he should by deed or will appoint, and in default of appointment upon trust to pay, assign, and transfer the same to the executors or administrators of J. to and for their own use and benefit. J. by his will gave the whole residue of his property to trustees upon trust to convert and invest and to pay the interest to his wife for life, with remainders over. The wife died, and her personal representative claimed to have the reversion of the annuity sold, and the executors of J. claimed for their own benefit under the limitation in the settlement:—Held, that they took only in their representative character, and that the reversion of the annuity must be sold. Johnson v. Routh, 6 W. R. 6; 27 L. J., Ch., 305; 3 Jur., N. S., 1048.

The wife survived the husband, and took out administration of his effects, and claimed an absolute interest in the whole corpus of the stock:—Held, that she was not entitled. Semble, that a limitation in a settlement "to the executors and administrators of A. for their own use and benefit," unconnected with any other limitation showing more specifically who are to take, is void for uncertainty. Marshall v. Collett, 1 Y. & Coll. 232.

The only issue of the marriage was a daughter, who survived the settlor, but died in the lifetime of the widow, her mother. The widow continued in possession of the premises till her death. It being admitted that the widow was, according to the custom, the heir of the settlor, at the time of his death, and that his youngest sister was such heir at the time of the widow's death, it was held, that by virtue of the ultimate limitation in the articles, the youngest sister was entitled to call for a conveyance of the customary premises, from a party in whom the legal estate had become vested, and who also claimed the equitable interest through the widow and the daughter. Locke v. Southwood, 1 Myl. & C. 411. B. to and for his and their own use and benefit." The wife survived:—Held, that, subject to her life interest, the fund belonged to the next of kin of A. B. and not to his administrator. Meryon v. Collett, 8 Beav. 386; 14 L. J., N. S., Ch., 369; 9 Jur. 459.

1. By a marriage settlement the reversion in real estate was conveyed to trustees in trust, at the request of the husband and wife, or of the survivor, to sell, and the proceeds were settled on the husband and wife for life, with remainder to the children, and in default thereof to such person as the wife should appoint, and in case of no appointment to the use of the heirs, executors, and administrators of the wife, according to the nature and property of the premises. The wife died without issue, and without having exercised the power. The husband took out administration to his wife, and required the trustees to sell the reversion:—Held, that he was entitled to have it sold, and to have the proceeds as administrator to his wife. Warburton v. Hadfield, 6 L. J., N. S., Ch., 203; 1 Jur. 164.

2. The ultimate trust in a marriage settlement of a fund belonging to the wife was to her executors or administrators:—Held, first, that the surviving husband, who was her administrator, and not her next of kin, was entitled; and, secondly, that if by those words her next of kin were intended, then that the next of kin at the death of the wife, and not of the husband (who was tenant for life), were entitled. By marriage settlement, a fund belonging to the wife was settled on the husband and wife for their respective lives, with remainder to the children of the marriage, to be vested at twenty-one or marriage; and in case no children should attain vested interests (which happened), then as the wife should appoint; and in default, unto the executors or administrators of the wife. The wife predeceased the husband, and made no appointment. There was one child only of the marriage, who survived her mother, but died without attaining a vested interest:—Held, that the ultimate limitation was in favour of the wife's administrator, and not of her next of kin. Allen v. Thorp, 7 Beav. 72; 13 L. J., N. S., Ch., 5.

3. By an ante-nuptial settlement, money, the property of the wife, was settled in trust for her separate use for life, for her husband for life, and for the children of the marriage, equally subject to her appointment by deed or will, and in default of children, for such persons as she should appoint by deed or will, and in default of appointment, that the trustees should pay and transfer the same to her executors or administrators; and the husband covenanted, that in case he should die without issue in his life, and make no appointment, the same should remain for the use and benefit of her executors, administrators, and assigns:—Held, that by the "executors or administrators" of the wife, her next of kin were meant. This case was appealed, and the appeal was heard, but before judgment was given it was compromised, the Lord Chancellor having expressed his dissent from the decree below. Daniel v. Dudley, 11 Sim. 163. See S. C. on appeal 1 Ph. 1.

4. J. by settlement assigned an annuity to trustees upon trust to pay the same to his wife during their joint lives for her separate use, and after her decease to sell and invest and stand possessed of the proceeds upon trusts for children, in default as he should by deed or will appoint, and in default of appointment upon trust to pay, assign, and transfer the same to the executors or administrators of J. to and for their own use and benefit. J. by his will gave the whole residue of his property to trustees upon trust to convert and invest and to pay the interest to his wife for life, with remainders over. The wife died, and her personal representative claimed to have the reversion of the annuity sold, and the executors of J. claimed for their own benefit under the limitation in the settlement:—Held, that they took only in their representative character, and that the reversion of the annuity mus be sold. Johnson v. Routh, 6 W. R. 6; 27 L. J., Ch., 305; 3 Jur., N. S., 1048.

Therefore, where by a deed of settlement after marriage certain premises were conveyed to trustees to the use of A. the husband for life, remainder to trustees to preserve contingent remainders, remainder to the use of B. 9. Personal estate was settled on a husband and wife successively for life, with remainder

1. Courts will avoid a construction leading to a perpetuity and void devise, if possible. So they will, in marriage settlements, consider the general intent as in favour of the issue described, and not let property revert or go to a father as the representative of one child to the prejudice of the rest, if no positive reason for it be clearly inferred. Exel v. Wallace, 2 Ves. 118.

2. In a marriage settlement, "issue" is construed "children." Marshall v. Baker, 9 Jur., N. S., 396; 11 W. R. 78; 7 L. T., N. S., 303.

The word "issue" in a deed construed "children," in regard to personalty. S. C. 31 Beav. 608.

3. "Issue" in a deed is always a word of purchase. Bagshaw v. Spencer, 2 Atk. 582.

4. F., in order to make some provision for his daughter M., the wife of T. S., and for her issue, by deeds, in 1799 and 1802, assigned premises to trustees, upon trust, after keeping the premises in repair, etc., to pay to or otherwise permit or suffer M. to receive and take the residue of the rents for life; and upon her decease, leaving issue of her body by T. S., upon trust to stand possessed of the premises for such issue, to be a vested interest as they should attain twenty-one. M. survived F., and died in 1854, leaving by T. S. seven children, one of whom intermarried with R. S., and died leaving three children, two of whom who survived claimed to be entitled to a share of, and in the premises comprised in the deeds of 1799 and 1802:—Held, that the word "issue" was not confined to the children of M., but included grandchildren. South v. Searle, 2 Jur., N. S., 390; 4 W. R. 470.

5. Estates were vested in trustees for sale, and after the death of W. to pay the proceeds amongst the twelve children of W., as described in the settlement, or such of them as should be living at the time of the decease of D. and J., and the issue of such as might be then dead, to be equally divided between them, the issue to take the parent's share; but if any of such twelve children should die in the lifetime of D. and J., or the survivor of them, without leaving issue living at the decease of such survivor, then in trust to pay the share of the child who should die without such issue unto the survivors and survivor of them, and the issue of such as should be dead. Ten of the children survived D., but died in the lifetime of J. G.; one of the ten children left six children, one of whom, by bill, prayed that the trusts might be carried into execution. B., another of the ten children, left two children, one of whom died four months previously to J., leaving four children, and the question was, whether these four children were entitled to the share of their deceased parent:—Held, that the word issue being used in conjunction with that of parent, more remote descendants than children were not included in the word issue, and therefore the grandchildren were not entitled to their parent's share. Anderson v. St. Vincent (Viscount), 2 Jur., N. S., 607; 4 W. R. 304.

6. By marriage settlement a fund was settled upon trust after the death of the survivor of husband and wife, for their child or children then living, to be paid at his or their respective ages of twenty-one; and in case both husband and wife should die without leaving any lawful issue, then according to the husband's appointment; and in default, in case there should be no such child or children, as aforesaid, then over. The wife survived her husband, and all her children, two of whom attained twenty-one, left issue surviving the wife:—Held, that "lawful issue" was to be restricted to children, and that the gift over took effect. Re Heath's Settlement, 23 Beav. 193.

7. The word "issue" includes all remote descendants of the person whose issue is referred to, and the burden of proof lies upon him who contends the contrary; but when the word "parent" is used in reference to his "issue," it is confined to his "children." The word "issue" in reference to the word "parent" in a substitutional gift:—Held, from the context of the will, not limited to "children." Ross v. Ross, 20 Beav. 645.

8. Settlement in trust for children living at death of survivor of husband and wife; but if any child should die in the lifetime of the husband and wife, leaving issue, the share of the child should go equally between his issue:—Held (following Ross v. Ross, 20 Beav. 645), that although issue is nomen generallissimum, yet that on a quasi representative principle the children only of a child whose share fails take that child's share, the grandchildren not being admitted to take in competition with the children. Robinson v. Sykes, 2 Jur., N. S., 895; 23 Beav. 40; 26 L. J., Ch., 782.

9. Limitation of the trust fund in a marriage settlement, to the husband for life, and after his decease for the wife for life, and after the decease of the survivor the fund to go to the issue of the marriage, in case there should be any living at the death of the husband and wife, in such manner as the father should appoint, and in default of appointment then to such issue in equal shares, and if but one then the whole to go to such only child; and in case there should not be any issue of the marriage living at the death of the survivor, then to go to such person as the husband should appoint:—Held, that the word "issue" was to be construed "child," and that an appointment made by the father, upon the death of the only child of the marriage, in his lifetime, although leaving a child, was valid. Swift v. Swift, 8 Sim. 168; 5 L. J., N. S., Ch., 376.

10. By a marriage settlement, a sum of money was settled upon trusts for the husband for life, then for the wife for life, and, after the death of the survivor, upon trust to pay the principal among all the children and issue of the intended husband, to be by him begotten on the body of the intended wife; and if there should be no child or issue of the marriage, or, being such, they should all die in the lifetime of the survivor of the husband and wife, upon other trusts:—Held, that the children of the marriage, including those dying in the lifetime of the survivor of the husband and wife, took the fund, and that no other issue were entitled. Gordon v. Hope, 3 De G. & Sm. 351; 18 L. J., N. S., Ch., 228; 13 Jur. 382.

11. Plate was limited by settlement to trustees for R. E. of C. for life, and then for T., his eldest son, for life, and after his death for the first son of his body and the executors, administrators, and assigns of such son; and if the eldest son of T. should die under twenty-one without leaving issue male of his body living, at his death in trust for the second, third, and other sons of T. Then followed similar limitations to the second, third, and other sons of R. E. of C.; and there was a gift over "if there shall not be any son of R. E. of C. or of T. who shall live to attain twenty-one, or shall die under that age leaving issue male of his body living at his death":—Held, that the word "issue" in the gift over meant "such issue," and there was no implied gift to T., and that, on the death of T. without issue, there being no other son of R. E. of C., the gift over took effect. Cardigan v. Curzon Howe, 18 W. R. 878; 9 L. R., Eq., 358; 22 L. T. 640.

1. By a post-nuptial instrument executed in pursuance of a marriage contract, a fund was directed to be vested in trustees, in trust to pay the interest to the wife for life to her separate use; after her death to the husband for life, and after the death of the survivor to pay the principal to the issue of the marriage in such proportions as the wife might appoint, and failing such appointment, to and among the child or children of the marriage equally among them, and to the issue of any of them who might have died leaving lawful issue, per stirpes. There were five children of the marriage. In 1853 the wife appointed the fund among them. In 1861, after her death, the husband appointed the fund among the same five children. One of these children, a girl, had married, and was, at the time of her father's death, enceinte of a child, which was subsequently born:—Held, that issue in the agreement was used in its extended sense, and therefore, as the power did not authorise an exclusive appointment, both appointments were invalid, and the fund was divisible among the five children in default of appointment. Donoghue v. Brooke, 9 Ir. R., Eq., 489.

2. The words "issue of the intended marriage," uniformly used in a settlement made on the occasion of a marriage, in the absence of any indication in the context of an intention that they should include all descendants, are to be construed to mean "children." Re Denis, 10 Ir. R., Eq., 81.

By a marriage settlement, reciting an agreement to make a provision for the issue of the intended marriage, property of the wife was vested in trustees after the deaths of the husband and wife, in case there should be issue of the intended marriage, for the use and benefit of such issue, as the husband should appoint, and in default of appointment among such issue share and share alike; but, in case there should be no issue of the intended marriage, or, if issue, in case all such issue should die before attaining the age of twenty-one, or days of marriage, in trust for the use and benefit of the survivor of the husband and wife. Property real and personal of the husband was limited upon precisely similar uses and trusts, save that the ultimate trust was for the husband, his heirs, executors, etc.:—Held, that the word "issue" was to be construed "children." Ib.

3. By a deed of 1828, B., on the marriage of his son E. with V., in order to provide for their "issue," conveyed a chattel real upon trust for E. for life; and after his death, if there should be no issue then living, for V. for life; but if there should be "children" living at E.'s death, as to one-half or one-third of the premises, acc

1. By a voluntary settlement personal property was assigned to trustees upon trust to pay the interest to T. during his life, and on his decease to pay the principal to his lawful issue, if then of age or married, share and share alike, if more than one, and if only one the whole to be paid to such only child, or in case such child or children should be an infant or infants on the death of the said T., then the principal was to be paid to him, her, or them as aforesaid on their attaining twenty-one if sons, or if daughters on their marriage, respectively. By his will the settlor bequeathed certain other funds to the same trustees upon similar trusts. T. died, leaving an infant daughter his sole surviving child:—Held, that the daughter would become absolutely entitled to the bonds in question, either on her attaining twenty-one or on her marriage under that age. Lang v. Pugh, 1 Y. & Coll. C. C. 718; 6 Jur. 939.

2. By settlement, personal estate was limited, after the death of the husband and wife, on trust for all the children as tenants in common, and the several issue of the body of such children; and failing issue of any such children, their shares to the use of the surviving children, as tenants in common, and the issue of their bodies. There was a gift over, in case there should be no issue of the marriage, or any issue of such issue, or, being such, all should die before their shares should become payable:—Held, that the children of the marriage took absolute interest, and that the representatives of a child who died an infant, without issue, in the life of his parents, were entitled to a share. Mount v. Mount, 13 Beav. 333.

6. J. S. M. being entitled to the dividends of 4,300*l.* for life, with a power to appoint by any deed or writing the principal after his death, and in default of appointment to his next of kin, and being in prison for debt, and in great distress, is prevailed upon by H. C. to enter into an agreement for sale of the principal after his death, in consideration of 1,000*l.* and other sums therein stated to have been previously lent and advanced to him by H. C. By a subsequent deed, in consideration of 1,854*l.* therein stated to be due from J. S. M. to H. C., and of 1,000*l.* paid by J. S. M. and others, J. S. M., by the direction of H. C., appointed that the principal should, on his death, be transferred to J. S. M. and others, with a proviso that they should assign the same to H. C. on payment of 1,000*l.* and interest, and all further advances. The 1,854*l.* or any part of it, had not, in fact, been advanced by H. C.:—Held, that this was a clear fraud. Held, that the appointment was well executed; that the next of kin of J. S. M. had no claim; that H. C. was a trustee for the personal representatives of J. S. M., for the excess beyond the money received by J. S. M. Miller v. Minet, Taml. 481.

7. By an ante-nuptial settlement moneys, the property of the wife, were settled in trust to pay the interest to her during her life, and in the event of her death in the lifetime of her husband, then as to the principal as she should appoint; and in the event of her dying without appointing and without issue surviving her, then "in trust for the persons legally entitled thereto as the next of kin of the wife," free from the control or debts of her husband. The wife died in the lifetime of her husband, without leaving any issue her surviving. She was survived by a brother, a sister, and niece (the only child of a deceased brother):—Held, that the niece was entitled to one-third part of the moneys. Kidd v. Frasier, 1 Ir. Ch. R. 518.

8. By a marriage settlement, a fund, the property of the wife, was settled on her, and her husband and their issue, and in default of issue on the wife's next of kin. The wife, who was illegitimate, died without issue, and her husband administered to her:—Held, that the Crown was not entitled to the fund, but that it belonged to the husband as administrator to his wife. Hawkins v. Hawkins, 7 Sim. 173.

9. By the settlement made on the marriage of E. M., the ultimate limitation of personal property was, "to such person or persons as at the time of the death of E. M. should be her next of kin." E. M. died, leaving a father, mother, and a child:—Held, that, under this limitation, the father, mother, and child took as her next of kin in joint tenancy. Withy v. Mangles, 10 Cl. & F. 215; 8 Jur. 69. Affirming 4 Beav. 358; 10 L. J., N. S., Ch., 391; 5 Jur. 717.

By a marriage settlement, the wife's portion was limited to the wife for life, with remainder to the husband for life, with remainder to the children of the marriage, to be vested at twenty-one or marriage; and in case none should attain that age or marry, then in trust for the brothers and sisters of the wife or their issue, as she should appoint, and in default of appointment in trust for her next of kin:—Held, that the children of the marriage were not excluded from taking under the ultimate limitation. Ib.

1. In a marriage settlement, the ultimate limitation of a fund provided by the husband was, "for his next of kin or personal representatives in a due course of administration according to the Statute of Distributions." There was a similar limitation, mutatis mutandis, of the fund provided by the wife. The Court, rejecting the claims of the husband's executors and of his residuary legatee, and excluding his widow:—Held, that the next of kin were entitled to the fund provided by the husband. Kilner v. Leech, 10 Beav. 362; 16 L. J., N. S., Ch., 503; 11 Jur. 859.

2. A. assigned a fund to trustees, upon trust to pay the interest to B. for his life, and after his decease to pay, transfer, and assign the same among B.'s children; and if no child of B. from and immediately after the decease of B., upon trust to pay, transfer, and assign the same as A. should appoint; and in default of appointment, to pay, transfer, and assign the same to such person or persons as should at the time of the decease of A. be A.'s next of kin. A. died in the lifetime of B., without having made any appointment, and B. died without issue. B. is not excluded from the benefit of the limitation to A.'s next of kin. Elmsley v. Young, 2 Myl. & K. 780; 4 L. J., N. S., Ch., 200. And see S. C. 2 Myl. & K. 82; 3 L. J., N. S., Ch., 57.

B. was the only surviving brother of A., and there were children of a deceased brother of A.:—Held, by the Lords Commissioners (overruling Phillips v. Garth, 3 Bro. C. C. 64; Hinckley v. Maclarens, 1 Myl. & K. 27, and the decision in the present case at the Rolls), that the words "next of kin," used simpliciter, are to be taken to mean "nearest of kin," and that, consequently, B.'s personal representatives were entitled to the whole fund. Ib.

3. Trust, under marriage settlement, for the next of kin of the wife, subject to her appointment by will, with two witnesses, appointment in favour of the husband by an unattested will being void; the children are entitled, not the husband, who is next of kin to his wife, and whose claim to her personal property is not, in that character, under the statute, but jure mariti, and in this case, according to the plan of the settlement, he was not intended. Watt v. Watt, 3 Ves. 244.

4. Proposals for a settlement of a lady's property, to be executed before marriage, were prepared in England, and sent out to the parties abroad. Before they reached their destination the parties married. The husband and wife then signed the proposals. The proposals were for a settlement on the wife for life, remainder to the husband for life, remainder to the children of the marriage; in default of children, as the wife should dispose by will; in default of such disposition, to the wife's next of kin. Part of the property (which was all personalty) was standing in her own name and right at the time of her marriage; part consisted of her share of a fund vested in the names of trustees of her mother's marriage settlement, and in which the lady had only a reversionary interest, her mother being still alive. The wife shortly after the marriage died intestate, and without issue. The husband took out letters of administration to her estate:—Held, that he was personal estate for his own to any trust. Pownall v. N. S., 857.

5. An ultimate limitati settlement was "for the wife, as if she had not bee including the husbands o her sisters":—Held, that t her next of kin, took as joi v. Brandreth, 28 Beav. 274.

The daughter made a testamentary appointment under the general power in favour of her husband, reciting, as the fact was, that she had then no children. She afterwards had children, but died without revoking the appointment:—Held, first, that there was an implied gift to the objects of the first power in default of appointment. Re Jeffrey, 14 L. R., Eq., 136; 42 L. J., Ch., 17; 26 L. T. 821; 20 W. R. 667.

Held, secondly, that if not, the appointment was conditional on there being no children, and they took as nearest of kin as in default of appointment. Ib.

2. Time for Ascertaining.

1. By a marriage settlement a fund was settled on the wife, if she should survive her husband, for her life, remainder to her children, who, being sons, should attain twenty-one, or being daughters should attain that age or marry; and the trustees were directed to apply a portion of the income of the children's expectant shares for their maintenance, and to accumulate the surplus for the benefit of such person or persons as should be entitled thereto, by virtue of the settlement: provided that, if no son should attain twenty-one, nor any daughter should attain that age or marry, then the fund should be in trust for such person or persons as the husband should by deed or will appoint: and, in default of appointment, in trust for his next of kin, according to the Statute of Distributions, and as if he had died intestate. There was issue of the marriage one son only. The husband died first, without having exercised the power reserved to him; then the son died under twenty-one; and lastly, the wife died:—Held, that the fund vested in the son, as his father's next of kin at the father's death, and not in the persons who were the father's next of kin at the son's death. Smith v. Smith, 12 Sim. 317.

2. By a marriage settlement, personal estate of the wife was settled in trust for the husband and wife for their lives, and afterwards for the children of the marriage, and in default, for the wife, if she survived her husband, but if she predeceased him, then (subject to his life interest) for such person as, at the death of the wife, would, under the statute, have been entitled to her personal estate, as her next of kin, in case she had survived her husband and had afterwards died intestate. The husband survived the wife:—Held, that her next of kin, ascertained at the husband's death, were entitled. Chalmers v. North, 28 Beav. 175; 6 Jur., N. S., 490; 8 W. R. 426.

3. By a marriage settlement certain personal property was settled upon trust for the husband and wife for their respective lives, and after their death for the issue of the marriage, and in case of failure of issue, and of the wife dying in the lifetime of the husband (which events happened), upon trust for such person or persons, other than and except the husband, as should then be the next of kin of the wife, and would have been entitled thereto under the Statute of Distributions:—Held, that the next of kin of the wife living at her death were entitled. Wheeler v. Addams, 1 W. R. 473; 17 Beav. 417.

In a limitation in a deed, on a particular event, to the "then" next of kin of A., the word "then" was held to refer to the event, and not to the time of its happening. Ib.

4. A limitation to the next of kin of a wife, after the death of the surviving husband and failure of children:—Held, to be an exception to the general rule, and to mean not the wife's next of kin at her death, but at the death of the surviving husband. Pinder v. Pinder, 28 Beav. 44; 29 L. J., Ch., 539.

By a marriage settlement, moneys belonging to the wife were limited to the husband and wife successively for life, with remainder to the issue of the marriage; but if there should be no issue of the marriage who should acquire a vested interest, then, in case the husband died in the lifetime of the wife, in trust for the wife absolutely; but if the wife should die in the lifetime of the husband, then, after the decease of the husband (in default of appointment by the wife), in trust for the persons who, under the Statutes for the Distribution of Intestates' Effects, would then be entitled to the personal estate of the wife, in case she had survived her husband, and had died possessed of the same intestate. The husband survived the wife:—Held, that the period when the class of next of kin was to be ascertained was the death of the husband, and not the death of the wife. S. C. 6 Jur., N. S., 489.

5. By a marriage settlement a sum of 500*l.* was settled upon trust to pay W. the interest for her life, and in the event of there being no issue of the marriage, and of H. dying in her lifetime without having executed the power of appointment reserved to him, "then upon trust immediately upon the death of W. without leaving H., or any child or children, grandchild or grandchildren, her surviving, to, pay the principal and all interest which may be then due thereon to such person or persons as, under the Statute of Distributions, would then be entitled to the same as the next of kin of H. in case H. shall have died intestate":—Held, that the next of kin of H. at the time of his death were the parties entitled to the fund, and not his next of kin at the death of W. Day v. Day, 18 W. R. 417; 4 Ir. R., Eq., 385.

VIII. FOR PERSONAL REPRESENTATIVES.

6. The words "legal representatives" used in a deed cannot be acted upon by the Court unless some context be found in the deed to explain them. Tipping v. Howard, 15 Jur. 911.

7. By an incorrectly framed settlement, a sum of money was settled on trusts for A. for life, with trusts in remainder for her children; and if she should die without issue, in trust to pay a portion of the fund to B. or her legal representatives:—Held, that the words legal representatives were either words of limitation, so as to give B. an absolute interest, or were intended to provide for her being dead at the date of the settlement, or were void for uncertainty. Topping v. Howard, 4 De G. & Sm. 268.

1. Under a limitation in a marriage settlement of the wife's property, in default of her appointment, for her next of kin or personal representative, the husband, taking a prior partial interest, is not entitled. Bailey v. Wright, 1 Swan. 39; 1 Wils. 15; 18 Ves. 49.

2. In a settlement the words "to pay to legal representatives in a due course of administration," amount to a direction to pay to next of kin, and not to executors or administrators. Briggs v. Upton, 7 L. R., Ch., 376; 41 L. J., Ch., 519; 21 W. R. 30; 27 L. T., N. S., 62. Affirming 20 W. R. 89; 25 L. T., N. S., 626.

By an ante-nuptial settlement real and personal estate was vested in trustees, for sale and investment of the proceeds; and after the marriage, for payment of the income to the husband and wife during their joint lives, and the life of the survivor, and then for the benefit of the children and issue of the wife, as she should by deed appoint, and in default for her children and issue. If there were no children of the marriage, the whole of the trust moneys and premises were to be held by the trustees for such person and persons as the wife should, notwithstanding any coverture by deed or will, appoint; and in default of appointment, then "to pay or transfer the trust moneys and premises unto the legal representatives of the wife in a due course of administration":—Held, that the words "legal representatives in a due course of administration," denoted the next of kin of the wife according to the statutes, and not the husband. Ib.

3. A fund was settled on A. for life, then on any husband she might leave for life, then on her children, and in default of children on the person or persons who should happen to be her legal personal representative or representatives at the time of her death:—Held, that legal personal representatives meant next of kin according to the Statute of Distributions. Robinson v. Evans, 43 L. J., Ch., 82; 22 W. R. 199; 29 L. T. 715.

4. By a marriage settlement, the wife's real and personal estate was assigned to trustees on trust to pay the annual income to the husband for life, remainder to the wife for life, remainder as she should by deed or will appoint; and in default for her personal representatives. The wife predeceased her husband, intestate and without issue. After the husband's death, his executors took out administration of the wife's estates:—Held, that they were entitled to the fund. Re Best, 18 L. R., Eq., 686; 43 L. J., Ch., 545; 22 W. R. 599.

IX. FOR SURVIVORS.

5. A post-nuptial settlement, executed when at least one child of the marriage was alive, recited an intention to provide for the present and future issue of the marriage, and directed that, after the death of the wife, the trustees should pay and apply the interest of a certain sum of money amongst the present and future issue according to appointment, and in default of appointment share and share alike, with benefit of survivorship; proviso, that if the husband survived the wife, and that the issue of the marriage died unmarried, or, being married, died without leaving issue, in the lifetime of the husband, the sum should be paid to him, his executors, etc. The wife survived her husband:—Held, that the words "with benefit of survivorship" referred to the date at which the fund became distributable, and that that date was the death of the wife. Re Dixon, 3 Ir. X. ON DYING UNMARRIED.

2. Where there is a gift over in the event of a person, who is not married at the time, dying "unmarried," it means without even having been married. Heywood v. Heywood, 29 Beav. 9; 7 Jur., N. S., 228; 30 L. J., Ch., 155; 3 L. T., N. S., 429.

In a limitation in a marriage settlement, giving the whole fund, after the death of the parents, to an only child, if but one should have died "unmarried and without issue," the word "unmarried" was construed "without having been married," and one having married:—Held, that the clause became inoperative. Ib.

Trust funds were directed to be paid, after the death of the survivor of husband and wife, in the event of there being only one child of the marriage, or, there being more than one, if all but one should have died unmarried and without issue, to such only child; but if there should be more than one child, in default of appointment by the husband and wife, to all the children equally, the shares to be vested at twenty-one or marriage. There were several children of the marriage; some had attained twenty-one, and two of them were married, of whom one had issue:—Held, that the contingency contemplated by the settlement could not happen, and that an appointment in favour of one of the children was valid. Ib.

3. The 3 & 4 Will. 4, c. 106, s. 3, does not apply to the ultimate limitation in a marriage settlement by a woman to the persons who would have been entitled if she had died intestate, and without having been married. Heywood v. Heywood, 5 N. R. 441.

By a marriage settlement real estate, of which the lady was seised as heir to her maternal grandfather, was conveyed to trustees, upon trust for the lady and her heirs until the marriage, and after the marriage upon trust for the lady for life; with remainder, in default of issue of the marriage, in trust for the lady and her heirs, if she survived her husband; but if she predeceased him, then in trust for the person or persons who would at her death have become entitled to the property if she had died intestate, and without having been married. The lady died without issue in her husband's lifetime:—Held, that the ultimate trust being for the benefit neither of the settlor nor of the heirs of the settlor, was unaffected by 3 & 4 Will. 4, c. 106, s. 3, and that the persons intended to take thereunder were those who would have been entitled if the settlement had never been executed; and, consequently, that the heir ex parte maternâ took the property, by purchase, under the settlement. S. C. 11 Jur., N. S., 633; 34 L. J., Ch., 317; 13 W. R. 514.

Limitations to Next of Kin.] 4. Upon the construction of a covenant in a marriage settlement, whereby the lady's personal estate was to be limited in the events which happened, in trust for her next of kin, by force of the Statute for Distribution of Intestates' Estates, in case she had died a feme sole and unmarried; her next of kin (excluding the husband) were held entitled. Grafftey v. Humpage, 1 Beav. 46; 8 L. J., N. S., Ch., 98; 3 Jur. 622.

5. A widow, as such, cannot take under a limitation to the next of kin of her husband, according to the Statute of Distributions. In a marriage settlement, the ultimate limitation of a fund was to such persons "as would, at the decease of the husband, be entitled to his personal estate, as his next of kin, according to the Statute of Distributions of personal estate of persons dying intestate, if the husband had died intestate without having been married to A." his wife. The wife died, and the husband married again and died:—Held, that his widow took nothing under this limitation. Cholmondeley v. Ashburton (Lord), 6 Beav. 86; 12 L. J., N. S., Ch., 337.

6. By marriage articles, the personal property of the intended wife was agreed to be settled for her separate use for life; and after her death, in case she died before her husband, in trust for such persons as would be entitled as her next of kin, in case she had died intestate and unmarried:—Held, that the children of the marriage, and not the persons who would have been her next of kin if she had died without having ever been married, were entitled. Maugham v. Vincent, 9 L. J., N. S., Ch., 329; 4 Jur. 452.

7. In a marriage settlement a sum of stock was given to trustees, after the death of husband and wife, upon trust, in case the wife died first, "for such person or persons as at the time of the death of the husband should be the next of kin of the wife and would be entitled to her personal estate and effects, his, her, and their executors, administrators, and assigns, as if she had died sole and unmarried." On the death of the husband only one brother was living, but there were children of the other brothers:—Held, that the brother surviving at the death of the husband took the whole fund as the next of kin designated in the settlement. Re Webber's Settlement, 19 L. J., N. S., Ch., 445; 17 Sim. 221.

The rule that the estate of the cestuis que trustent is commensurate with that given to the trustees, is inapplicable to limitations in a deed; therefore, where an estate was limited to trustees in fee, but the trust in favour of the cestuis que trustent wanted the ordinary words of inheritance:— Held, that they took life estates only. Ib.

A marriage settlement vested freehold leases in trustees "to hold to the use of A. and his heirs and assigns, from the perfection of these presents, for and during the term of his natural life, without impeachment of waste," with a power to lease, remainder to the trustees to preserve, and from the decease of A. to secure a jointure to B. (A.'s wife). Then followed a covenant by A., charging the jointure on after-acquired estate, with power of distress; "and further that the lands, after the decease of the survivor of A. and B., in case there should be but one child of the marriage, to the use of such only child, and the heirs of his or her body lawfully issuing; and in case there should be more than one such child, then to such children in such shares and proportions as A. shall by deed or will appoint; and in default of such appointment, then to the use of all the children, as tenants in common, share and share alike":—Held, that the words "and his heirs" should be rejected, and that A. took a life estate. Re Hammersley, 11 Ir. Ch. R. 229.

Held also, that the clause beginning "and further," is a limitation in continuation of, and direct sequence upon, the limitations to trustees to preserve. Ib.

2. Under a limitation of real estate in a marriage settlement, after the death and failure of issue of the husband and wife, "in trust for nephews and nieces then living, and the several and respective heirs of nephews and nieces then dead, having left lawful issue living at the time of the failure of issue of the marriage, as tenants in common":—Held, that nephews and nieces took life estates, and that the eldest son of a nephew deceased at the time of such failure of issue took in fee. Marshall v. Peacock, 2 John. & H. 73.

3. Real estate was conveyed to trustees upon an ultimate trust to convey and divide the trust estate to and among all the children of the settlor, and the issue of such children who should be living at the death of the wife of the settlor, as tenants in common:—Held, that the children took life estates only. Tatham v. Vernon, 7 Jur., N. S., 814; 9 W. R. 822.

4. By a marriage settlement, real estates were conveyed to trustees "and their heirs," upon trusts for the parents for life, and afterwards for the children; and in default, as the wife should appoint; and in default, for her next of kin. She died, leaving her husband and one child surviving:—Held, that the trust funds went to the child. Re Ball's Trust, 11 L. R., Ch. D., 270; 48 L. J., Ch., 279; 27 W. R. 409; 40 L. T. 880.

2. By a settlement made on the second marriage of a widow of her property, a life estate for her separate use was given to the wife, followed by an estate to the husband for his life or until his bankruptcy. Provisions were then made for the children of the marriage and a son of the wife's former marriage. And it was declared that, if the son of the former marriage should die under twenty-one, and if there should be no child of the marriage who should attain twenty-one or marry under that age, then, subject and without prejudice to the trusts before declared, and after the death of the husband, and of the son of the former marriage under twenty-one, and the default or failure of children of the marriage, "which shall last happen," the trustees should hold the property, if the wife should survive the husband, in trust for her absolutely, but, if the husband should have survived the wife, in trust for such persons as the wife should by will appoint, and, subject thereto, in trust for her next of kin as if she had died intestate and "without having been married." The wife died first, without having exercised the power of appointment. There was no issue of the marriage. The son of the former marriage survived his mother, but died under twenty-one. Before the wife's death the husband had filed a liquidation petition:—Held, that the infant son was entitled, as sole next of kin of his mother, to the trust fund. But held, that the trust for the next of kin did not arise until after the death of the husband, and that consequently he was entitled to the income of the trust fund for his life, and that this interest had vested in the trustee under his liquidation. Upton v. Brown, 12 L. R., Ch. D., 872; 48 L. J., Ch., 756; 41 L. T. 340; 28 W. R. 38.

3. She died leaving the said children surviving:—Held, that the property went to the persons who would have been entitled thereto, if she had died a spinster. Emmins v. Bradford, Johnson v. Emmins, 13 L. 4. Personal estate brought into settlement by B. stood limited on trust for the person or persons (exclusively of A. and his representatives) who under the Statute of Distributions would have become entitled, if B. had died possessed thereof, a feme sole and intestate. A. was B.'s brother. At B.'s death her statutory next of kin included three daughters of A.:—Held, that the term representatives meant those who represented A. as statutory next of kin of B.; and that A.'s daughters were therefore excluded from taking under the settlement. Lindsay v. Ellicott, 46 L. J., Ch., 878.

XI. LIFE ESTATES IN REALTY.

5. Remainder in a settlement, after successive estates tail in the sons to the daughters as tenants in common, and not as joint tenants, and in default of such issue to the right heirs of the father, admitted, without argument, an estate for life only in the daughters. Snell v. Silcock, 5 Ves. 469.

This gives an estate for life only to the wife, with remainder in fee to the children, as tenants in common. These marriage articles so far tied up the property of the settlor, that a real estate purchased by him in his lifetime with part of his personal estate, shall be considered as personal estate, and be disposed of accordingly. Lowther v. Westmoreland, 1 Cox 64.

8. By a marriage settlement estates were limited to the wife and the husband for their lives, with remainder to the heirs of the body of the husband on the body of the wife and their heirs; and if more children than one, equally to be divided among them as tenants in common; and, for default of such issue, to the wife and her heirs:—Held, that the husband did not take an estate in tail special, but for life only, and that the children took by purchase as tenants in common in fee in remainder. North v. Martin, 6 Sim. 266.

9. Lands were limited by deed to the use of the settlor for life; remainder to the use of his wife for life; remainder to the use of the heir female of the body of the settlor, on the body of his wife already begotten and now living, or which may be begotten hereafter; and in default of such issue, to the use of the heir male of the body of the settlor on the body of his wife to be begotten; remainder to the right heirs of the settlor. At the time when this deed was executed, the settlor and his wife had issue four daughters, and no issue male; but at his death the same four daughters, and also several sons of the marriage survived him:—Held, that under the limitation to the "heir female," the daughters took a life estate in the lands as purchasers. Chambers v. Taylor, 2 Myl. & C. 376; 6 L. J., N. S., Ch., 193.

10. By a settlement made on the marriage of a widow, having children, real estate was conveyed by her to a trustee and his heirs upon

B. died in the lifetime of A., leaving no son, but three daughters, who are all unmarried: C. took an estate tail under this settlement, and the portions may be raised for the daughters in the lifetime of A. their father. Hebblethwaite v. Cartwright, Forrest 30.

1. By a marriage settlement, estates were limited to the wife and the husband, for their lives, with remainder to the heirs of the body of the husband on the body of the wife, and their heirs, and, if more children than one, equally to be divided among them as tenants in common; and, for default of such issue, to the wife and her heirs:—Held, that the husband did not take an estate in tail special, but for life only, and that the children took, by purchase, as tenants in common in fee in remainder. North v. Martin, 6 Sim. 266.

The estates were sold, and the proceeds invested in other estates, which were conveyed to such of the uses of the will as were then existing, etc.:—Held, that B. did not take an estate tail in the purchased estates. Wortham v. Mackinnon, 4 Sim. 483.

daughter should not be under coverture (which event happened), the money should be held in trust for her, her executors, administrators and assigns. Then followed a clause, that if any interest in the fund would, but for that proviso, be held in trust for the Crown, or belong to the trustees of the settlement, then this money was to be held upon trusts in favour of the settlor and his widow:—Held, that the gift over after the absolute gift was void for repugnancy, and that the Crown took. Re Wilcocks, 33 L. T., N. S., 719; 45 L. J., Ch., 163; 24 W. R. 290.

1. By the testator's first marriage settlement a sum of 14,000*l.* was settled upon the testator for life, remainder to the first wife for life, remainder to the children of that marriage who should attain twenty-one. There were four children who lived to attain twenty-one. The first wife died, and the testator made his will, giving all his property to his children equally. The testator then married again, on which occasion 5,000*l.* was settled, after his decease, to the second wife for her life, remainder to the children of that marriage. There was but one child. After the birth of that child the testator executed a codicil giving certain annuities to his second wife, and in other respects confirming his will, except that he directed that previous to the equal division among his children the trustees were to take into consideration what each class of children would be entitled to under the marriage settlements of their respective mothers; and whichever family should be individually least provided for, they should, in the first place, be severally entitled to receive out of the general estate so much as would make his or her share equal in amount to what each child of the other family would be entitled to under his or her mother's marriage settlement. The testator died leaving his second wife surviving, and one child of the second marriage:—Held, that the subject of the settlement being nothing but money, the reversionary nature of the provision for the child of the second marriage was not to be regarded, although the provision for the children of the first marriage took effect in possession immediately on the testator's decease. But, semble, that this might be otherwise in case the subject matter had been anything else than money. Williamson v. Jeffreys, 18 Jur. 1071.

2. When either in a settlement or a will there is an absolute gift to children followed by a direction that the daughters' shares shall be settled on themselves for life, with remainder to their children, the daughters' interests are only cut down for the sake of the children, and any daughter who dies without issue takes her share absolutely. Re Sidway Hall Estate, 37 L. T., N. S., 457.

3. By a marriage settlement a fund was settled by the husband in favour of the husband and wife during their respective lives, and after the decease of the survivor for the children. Another fund was settled by the husband's mother for herself for life, and after her decease upon such of the trusts thereinbefore declared concerning the first fund in favour of the children as should be then subsisting or capable of taking effect:—Held, that the trust of the second fund in favour of the children arose at once upon the death of the tenant for life in the lifetime of the husband and wife. Hare v. Hare, 24 W. R. 575.

A general reference in a gift to the terms of a former disposition does not determine the time when the gift is to take effect. Ib.

4. Property was assigned to trustees, upon trust, after the death of the settlor, in the meantime, and until his eldest son should attain twenty-one, to pay the rents to the settlor's wife, to be applied by her for and towards the maintenance of herself and all the then present and future born children of the settlor; and the settlor declared, that if and when his eldest son should attain twenty-one, the trust property should be in trust for such eldest son, but so that the wish and desire of the settlor thereby declared, that the then present and future born children of the settlor and his wife should participate with him in the same, should be particularly observed:—Held, that a valid trust was created in favour of the younger children to participate, and that it was not void for uncertainty. Liddard v. Liddard, 6 Jur., N. S., 439; 29 L. J., Ch., 619.

5. A settlement directed the trustees, immediately after the decease of the survivor of the husband and wife, to transfer a fund unto and amongst all and every the son and sons, daughter and daughters, of the husband and wife, and the children of such son and sons, daughter and daughters, in case any of them should be dead leaving issue, share and share alike; but the child or children of such of the said sons and daughters as should be then dead were to be entitled only to a parent's share; and in case there should be no child or children of the husband and wife living at the death of the survivor of them, then in trust to transfer the fund to the survivor, his or her executors, etc. There were three children of the marriage, but they all died before either of their parents; two of them left children, some of whom survived both their grandfather and grandmother:—Held, that the surviving grandchildren were entitled to the fund. Green v. Bailey, 14 Sim. 635; 9 Jur. 636.

6. A trader, on his marriage, received a fortune of 5,000*l.* with his wife, and settled a sum of stock in trust for himself for life, with limitations over for the benefit of his wife and children, in the event of his becoming bankrupt or insolvent. And it was provided that if he should survive his wife, and the issue of the marriage should fail, and he should then be or have been a bankrupt, fifteen sixty-sixths of the stock should belong to the wife's next of kin in blood. No part of the 5,000*l.* was settled, but the whole of the settled fund was the husband's property, and it did not appear from any of the expressions in the settlement what was the consideration for the provision as to fifteen sixty-sixths of the stock:—Held, that the limitations over in the event of the bankruptcy of the husband were good as to fifteen sixty-sixths of the trust fund, that being the proportion of the trust fund which the wife's fortune would have purchased, but were void as to the remainder. Lester v. Garland, 5 Sim. 205.

A. and B. were dead at the date of the settlement, the former leaving issue, the latter without issue:—Held, that the gifts over of the shares of A. and B. did not fail by reason of their being dead at the date of the settlement. Barnes v. Jennings, 2 L. R., Eq., 448; 35 L. J., Ch., 675; 14 W. R. 831.

But if Thomas should die without leaving any child living at the time of his decease, then in trust to assign to Philip:—Held, that the death referred to was not confined to a death in the life of the tenant for life, and that Thomas did not, upon the death of the settlor, become absolutely entitled to the leaseholds. Milner v. Milner, 34 Beav. 276.

2. By a marriage settlement, property belonging to the intended wife was conveyed to trustees, upon trust (after the death of the husband and wife) for the children of the marriage. And the sons of all and every the persons last above named, and the heirs, etc., to take before the daughters and their heirs:—Held, that the daughters of A. took in priority of the sons of B. Randall v. Daniel, 24 Beav. 193.

1. Lands are settled to the use of the husband and wife for their lives, remainder to the heirs of both their bodies. The children of this marriage are joint tenants, and if any one dies before severance, his share shall survive to the others. There is nothing hard, severe, or unreasonable in the law of joint tenancy, there being always an equal chance of survivorship in all the joint tenants. If any of them have a bad opinion of their own lives, they may sever; but if the joint tenancy be not severed, it is an evidence of intention in the party to submit to the chance of survivorship, or of that supineness and neglect to which the law affords no assistance. Staples v. Maurice, 4 Bro. P. C. 580.

2. A sum of money was remitted to England to be secured for the benefit of a married woman and her children, so that the same might not come to the hands of her husband:—Held, that they took as joint tenants. Bustard v. Saunders, 7 Beav. 92; 7 Jur. 986.

By marriage articles agreed that 500*l.* the wife's portion should be invested in a purchase of lands to be settled on husband and wife for their lives, remainder to the heirs of their two bodies, remainder to the heirs of the body of the wife, remainder to the plaintiff, the wife's brother, in fee. The wife dies without issue and then the husband dies; the 500*l.* not to be laid out. Whether this money is to be taken as land and go to the plaintiff, to whom the fee is limited, or as money, and go to the executor of the husband. Symons v. Rutter, 2 Vern. 227; Pre. Ch. 23.

7. Money, part of which is the husband's, and other part the wife's, is on marriage to be laid out in land, and settled to the husband for life; remainder for the wife for life; remainder to the heirs of their two bodies, and the uses go no further. The heir of the husband shall have the whole. Lechmere v. Carlisle, 3 P. W. 217.

8. A father, on the marriage of his daughter M., covenanted with the intended husband to pay a sum of 500*l.*, "the marriage portion of his daughter," to be vested in trustees upon trust to pay the said M. 30*l.* a year (the interest thereof) during her life, and, after her death and that of her husband, to hold the same to the use of the issue of the marriage. The husband died in the lifetime of his wife, and there was no issue of the marriage:—Held, that as to so much of the 500*l.* as was not exhausted by the uses of the settlement, there was a resulting trust for M. Ward v. Dyas, Ll. & G. temp. Sugd. 177.

9. In 1773 A. married B., who was seised in fee of estates in Denbighshire. By their marriage articles they covenanted that M. and N. should stand seised of B.'s estates (which were mentioned by their names), to the use of A. and B. for their lives, and the life of the longer liver of them, remainder to the use of their first and other sons in tail. B. had an estate in Denbighshire called Plas Madoc, which was not mentioned in the articles. A. and B. had two sons. In 1802 they and their eldest son conveyed all their estates, including Plas Madoc, to a tenant to the præcipe, and afterwards suffered recoveries of them for the purpose of barring all estates tail, reversions, and remainders in the estates, and resettling them to such uses as A. and B. and their elder son should appoint, and in default to A. B. for their lives, and the life of the longer liver of them, remainder to such uses as the elder son should appoint, and in default, to such uses as the said estates were and stood limited to by the articles:—Held, that the ultimate limitation was wholly inoperative at law, and that it had no effect in equity upon Plas Madoc, and that, subject to the powers and life estates, there was a resulting use as to it for B. in fee. Youde v. Jones, 14 Sim. 131. S. C. 8 Jur. 547. And see S. C. at law, 13 Mees. & Welsb. 534.

10. Though there may not be any different rule of construction applicable to wills and settlements, yet the different character of the instrument is a circumstance to be weighed in determining the effect of the disposition it contains. Shares under a settlement being held not to be vested, might create a resulting trust for the settlor; whilst in a will the residuary legatee might take. Farrer v. Barker, 9 Hare 744.

See also Rochford v. Hackman, 9 Hare 475; 16 Jur. 212; 21 L. J., Ch., 511.

11. A. is entitled in remainder, under the marriage settlement of her father and mother in 1767, to a share of certain real estates as tenant in common in tail. A settlement is executed upon her first marriage in 1790, she being then an infant. A second marriage is contracted by her while still an infant. A fine is levied in 1808, and the settled property conveyed to a purchaser. A deed is executed declaring the trusts of the purchase-money, which as to A.'s share is to be held upon the trusts of the settlement in 1790. A. and her husband, though named as parties, do not execute this deed, nor is there any evidence of their assent to it:—Held, that A.'s interest was unaffected by this deed of 1808, and remained upon the trusts of the original settlement of 1767, so that she was entitled absolutely to her share of the purchase-money. Re Fozard's Trusts, 3 W. R. 219; 1 Kay & J. 233. And see S. C. on appeal, 3 W. R. 341; 24 L. J., Ch., 441.

1. By the marriage settlement of A. and the daughter of B., to which B. was a party, after reciting that B. had agreed to "give" 3,000*l.* "as a marriage portion or fortune with his daughter," and that it had been agreed that 500*l.* should be paid to the husband for his own use and the residue invested, it was declared that the 2,500*l.* should be held in trust for the husband for life, remainder to the wife for life, remainder to children of the marriage according to appointment, and in default of children attaining twenty-five or marrying, to the representatives of the wife as therein mentioned. The father died. The husband survived the wife and died. No appointment was made, and the remainders in default being void for remoteness, the husband's executors claimed the 2,500*l.* on the ground that the settlement showed an absolute gift to the wife:—Held, that there was a gift by the father for the purposes of the settlement only, and that the trusts having failed, his representatives were entitled. Re Nash's Settlement, 51 L. J., Ch., 511; 46 L. T. 97; 30 W. R. 406.

2. A., by a settlement, covenanted with the trustees that, in the event of his dying in the lifetime of his daughter, C., before she should have attained twenty-one or married, his heirs, executors, or administrators should, within six months after his death, pay to the trustees 10,000*l.*, with interest thereon, from the day of his death; and it was declared that, in the event of C. having no child who should attain twenty-one or marry, then the fund, after her death, should form part of A.'s personal estate. By the same deed, A. charged all his real estate with this sum. A. afterwards, in consequence of a requisition made by persons who were advancing him money on mortgage, paid the 10,000*l.* to the trustees, who released the estate from it. The trustees subsequently lent part of this sum to A. himself, on mortgage of part of the estates originally subject to the charge, and the rest of it to other persons. A. died, leaving a will, by which he bequeathed his personal estate to B., and his real estate to D. C. died an infant, and unmarried, within five months after his death:—Held, that no part of the 10,000*l.* belonged to the devisees of the real estate, but that the whole belonged to the legatees of the personalty. Tucker v. Loveridge, 2 De G. & J. 650; 6 W. R. 786; 4 Jur., N. S., 939; 27 L. J., Ch., 231. Affirming 1 Giff. 377.

4. 1. A., seised of an undivided moiety of Whiteacre, conveyed it on his marriage in 1775, to the use of his first and other sons, reserving to himself a power of leasing for three lives. A. having subsequently purchased the other undivided moiety of Whiteacre, in 1785 leased the entire of Whiteacre to B. for lives renewable for ever. In 1797, on the marriage of G., A.'s eldest son, Whiteacre was conveyed by A., to the use of A. for life, remainder to the use of G. for life, remainder to the use of such of the sons of G. as G. should appoint to; and A. in his covenant against incumbrances excepted leases bonâ fide made by him. G. having appointed Whiteacre to his son, W., died in the lifetime of A., leaving W. his eldest son him surviving. On the death of A., W. filed his bill to set aside the lease of that moiety of Whiteacre comprised within the settlement of 1775, as contrary to A.'s leasing power:—Held, that W., as claiming under the settlement of 1797, was bound by the lease of 1785, and could not set it aside. Steele v. Mitchell, 2 Dr. & Wal. 568; 3 Ir. XI. Executed Settlements. How Enforced.

2. No party to a marriage settlement can take anything under its provisions, who is himself a contracting party, and has failed to fulfil his part of the contract. Houston v. Barry, 5 Ir. Eq. R. 294.

3. The rule of equity which prevents a party from receiving any interest under a settlement until he has discharged more obligations or covenants, to which he is liable under it, applied to the case of a policy of assurance assigned to the trustees as a security for the payment of the sum which the husband had covenanted that his representative should pay after his death, and against a purchaser of the husband's interest under the settlement from his assignees under a fiat in bankruptcy. Burridge v. Row, 1 Y. & Coll. C. C. 183, 583; 11 L. J., N. S., Ch., 369; 6 Jur. 121, 499. Affirmed 13 L. J., N. S., Ch., 173; 9 Jur. 299.

4. Default of payment of the consideration on one part does not vitiate a marriage contract. But the defaulting party cannot enforce the contract against the party injured by his default. Compton v. Ormsby, 2 Sch. & Lef. 602.

5. Trusts of marriage settlement decreed to be carried into execution. Clarendon (Earl) v. De Clifford (Lady), 6 Jur. 962.

6. Where the plaintiff in his original bill made out title to an estate, and prayed relief as heir-at-law; but afterwards, and after all the defendants had answered, discovered a marriage settlement, by which the estate stood limited to a trustee for the use of the plaintiff, his brother, and sister, in equal shares; and it being doubtful, upon the construction of the settlement, whether the plaintiff, his brother, and sister, were entitled to vested or merely to contingent interests:—Held, that the estate being limited to the heir of the settlor in case the supposed contingency should never arise, and the trustees having refused to become plaintiffs, the plaintiff might, in the character of heir-at-law, maintain a suit for the purpose of protecting the property. Reed v. Cussen, Sau. & Sc. 161.

7. By a proviso in a marriage settlement, the deed was to be void if the marriage was not had in ten months. The heir cannot set up this settlement to defeat a mortgage made by his father, after his father had sworn that he was not married within the ten months. Jones v. Purefoy, 1 Vern. 45.

8. Where several estates are settled upon children, the children may recover part of those estates without showing title to the rest of the settled property. Thompson v. Simpson, 1 Dr. & War. 459.

But when estates and other property forming a mixed fund are settled, subject to a power of appointment, there the Court, where the parties entitled to this mixed fund are numerous, will not, as against a purchaser of part of the mixed fund in which purchase one of its objects acquiesced, act as against that purchaser without knowing all the dispositions of that mixed fund. Ib.

9. The assignees of a bankrupt who had covenanted for the payment, after his death, of 4,000*l.* to the trustees of his marriage settlement, were held not entitled to a share in a sum to which his wife was entitled in reversion at her marriage, without performing the covenant, notwithstanding a proviso in the settlement that the heirs, executors, or administrators of the husband should pay all other debts which the husband should owe at his death in preference to the 4,000*l.*, and that they should not be bound to pay it unless his assets should be more than sufficient to pay all his other debts. Corsbie v. Free, Cr. & Ph. 64; 5 Jur. 790.

Semble, the husband's covenant did not operate as a purchase of the wife's reversionary share under the will, but:—Held, that at all events the husband's assignees were not entitled to receive the share without performing the covenant. Ib.

10. A wife has a lien upon the estate of her husband and his father, where they are parties to the marriage contract, and the wife's fortune is paid to the son; so if the fortune is paid to the father, or to clear incumbrances. Probert v. Morgan, 1 Atk. 440; Ambl. 6; 2 P. W. 544.

11. No means of enforcing a settlement on marriage of an adult, unless the husband seeks to obtain her property in court; but, if the marriage is contempt, the Court, vindicating its jurisdiction by imprisonment, compels a settlement. Ball v. Coutts, 1 Ves. & B. 300.

12. A. assigned choses in action and other personal chattels to a trustee in trust for himself for life, and after his death for his nephew and niece. Some years afterwards he made a will, bequeathing the settled property to other persons. After his death the trustee and cestuis que trustent filed a bill against the executors and the legatees, praying that the deed might be established, and an account might be taken of A.'s personal estate, and praying that the executors might deliver over the residue to the trustee. The bill was dismissed. But semble, if the bill had been filed by the trustee alone for indemnity against conflicting claims, or by the cestuis que trustent alone to have the benefit of the deed, the Court would have granted relief. Ward v. Audland, 8 Sim. 571; C. P. C. 146; 2 Jur. 652.

1. Semble, the Court of Chancery will not assist persons claiming under parties to a marriage settlement, where the effect of such interference will be to defeat the scope and object of the settlement. Duberly v. Day, 16 Jur. 581.

3. A., on marriage, settled lands to himself for life, remainder to wife for jointure, remainder to first, etc., sons in tail male, reserving power of charging with 3,000*l.* for younger children, on payment of debts, and covenanted to lay out 6,000*l.*, part of wife's portion, in lands to same uses; the 6,000*l.* is not laid out. After eldest son came of age, it was agreed, in consideration of his advancing 3,000*l.* for purchase of commission in army, to make a new settlement more beneficial for younger children, by which lands were limited to former uses, but A. was empowered to charge 3,000*l.* for each of younger children, and covenant to lay out 6,000*l.* was released; Court refused to set aside last settlement. Kerry (Earl) v. Fitzmaurice (Lord), 2 Bro. P. C. 384.

4. Upon a marriage contemplated between A. and B., the lady's fortune, vested in C. her former guardian, was on the 14th March, after treaty and agreement with C., vested in trustees for the lady, "her executors and administrators and assigns," until the marriage, and afterwards for her, her husband and children. On the 27th March, and before the marriage, the husband and wife, without the intervention of C., revoked the settlement, and married the next day. A bill by the husband, claiming the fund unaffected by the trusts of the settlement, was dismissed with costs, the Court holding that a revocation, under such circumstances, could not be maintained. Page v. Horne, 11 Beav. 227; 17 L. The marriage performed and the parties liv husband and wife; but after th than a year, and before the p children, the marriage was di void, and they executed deeds revoke the former settlement afterwards, a new settlement, in of marriage, was made, inclu property as the former, but diff former in the interest given as well as in other provisions then intermarried, and there wa marriage:—Held, that the fi being founded on mistake and misapprehension, was not binding on the parties, and that the rights of the issue, both as to the real estate and the personalty, were regulated by the second settlement. Robinson v. Dickenson, 3 Russ. 399; 7 L. J., Ch., 70.

1 A post-nuptial settlement was made by A. and his wife of a share of real and personal estate of the wife, in the hands of the trustees. No notice was given to the trustees, and no fine was levied. The deed recited the ante-nuptial agreement, but it was proved that there never was any. The effect of the settlement was to give the husband a life estate, with remainder absolutely to the survivor, and there was no provision for children:—Held, both husband and wife desiring it, that this deed was a nullity; that as against the husband it was voluntary; and that it was not such a settlement as the Court would enforce against the wife. The property was therefore treated as if it had never been settled. Hogarth v. Phillips, 4 Drew. 360; 27 L. J., Ch., 195; 4 Jur., N. S., 1093.

4. Settlement, in contemplation of marriage, of an annuity, secured by bond to N. (the intended wife), together with arrears then due, upon trust for her separate use, the receipt of N., her appointees or assigns, to be good discharges for the annuity, and all arrears, and all future and growing payments; and after her decease, upon trust to pay the trust moneys, or such of them as should be unpaid or undisposed of at the time of her decease (in the events which happened), to her children, nominatim, with provisions for their maintenance, education, and advancement. Subsequently, the annuity being in arrear to an amount exceeding 3,000*l*., N. and her trustee released the annuity and all arrears and future payments, and in consideration of such release the obligor conveyed hereditaments to trustees, upon trust to sell, and out of the proceeds to pay 3,000*l*. to N., her executors or administrators, and the surplus to himself, N. being a party to such conveyance:—Held, that upon N.'s death the 3,000*l*. passed to her husband, and was not impressed with any trust for the benefit of her children. Calvert v. Johnston, 3 Kay & J. 556.

5. Estates are settled on A. and B. on their marriage, in strict settlement; provided, that if the wife should, when requested by her husband, refuse to settle her estates in a particular manner, the settlement of the other estate should be void; the husband and wife join in a different settlement of her estate, proceeding, however, on the foot of the former covenant, as if it had been performed; this is no avoidance of the settlement. Mathews v. Jones, 2 Anstr. 506.

7. A court of equity will not, at the instance of a settlor or his legal personal representative, adversely set aside a settlement by which the settlor confers on a stranger the absolute beneficial interest in property legally vested in trustees, although such settlement may have been made for an illegal consideration not appearing on the face of the instrument. Ayerst v. Jenkins, 16 L. R., Eq., 275; 42 L. J., Ch., 690; 21 W. R. 878; 29 L. T., N. S., 126.

Where Marriage does not take Place.] 8. By an indenture, made in contemplation of the marriage of A. and B., certain leasehold property belonging to B., the intended wife, was conveyed to trustees on certain trusts; and the trusts of a sum of stock, also belonging to B., which had been transferred into the names of the trustees, were declared. The marriage did not take effect, and soon after the date of the indenture B. married C. In a suit instituted by C. and B. against the trustees, it was ordered that the leasehold property should be conveyed to C., and the stock transferred into his name. Thomas v. Brennan, 11 Jur. 95.

9. A feme sole, in contemplation of marriage with A. B., conveyed a certain fund to trustees, upon trust for herself, her executors, administrators, and assigns, until her marriage (if any) should be solemnised, or in case no such marriage should be solemnised; and from and after the solemnisation (if any) of the same marriage, upon trust for herself for her life, for her separate use, exclusive of the said A. B., or any other husband whom she might happen to marry; and after her death, upon certain trusts for her children. The fund was duly transferred to the trustees, but the intended marriage never took place, and the woman subsequently married another man. In the meantime the trustees, at her request, sold out and paid to her 200*l*., part of the trust fund:—Held, that the settlement applied to her marriage with any husband, and not merely to the intended marriage with A. B., and that the trustees committed a breach of trust in selling out any part of the fund which had been transferred to them. M'Donnell v. Hesilrige, 16 Jur. 1148; 16 Beav. 346; 1 W. R. 71; 22 L. 1. The Court being satisfied, upon the evidence, that a general description of property had been inserted inadvertently in a settlement, and not for the purpose of passing an estate, which the general description would in terms comprise, made a declaration that the general description had been inserted by mistake, so far as regarded the estate in question, and gave the parties liberty to apply as they might be advised. Exeter (Marquis) v. Exeter (Marchioness), 3 Myl. & C. 321; 7 L. 2. By a marriage settlement certain lands were conveyed to A. (the intended husband), his heirs and assigns; and in case A. should die, leaving one or more son or sons on the body of his intended wife to be begotten, the elder of such sons, and the heirs male of his body, being always preferred to take place before the younger, with full liberty for A. "to make such reasonable provision as he should think fit for such "younger child or children;" and, in case A. should die leaving no son, and there should be one or more daughters, then to such daughter or daughters (if more than one) on their attaining their respective ages of twenty-one years, their heirs and assigns, share and share alike. There was issue of the marriage eight children, four sons and four daughters; and A., by his last will and testament, in pursuance of the power contained in the marriage settlement, charged the lands with the sum of 1,500*l.* to be divided amongst the younger children of the marriage, in manner therein mentioned. The first taker having disputed the right to charge in favour of daughters, on a bill filed by one of the daughters to raise a portion of the 1,500*l.*:—Held, that the power was well exercised, and as the intention of the settlement was evidently to provide for all the children as well daughters as sons, that the Court would effect that intention, and support the appointment by transposing the clause creating the power, and that containing the limitations to the daughters in the event of there being no son, whereby the words "such younger children" would include both sons and daughters. Fenton v. Fenton, 1 Dr. & Wal. 66.

5. By a marriage settlement the father of the intended wife covenanted with the intended husband to pay to him, his executors, administrators, and assigns, during the life of the father, an annuity of 200*l.* The husband died insolvent, and his assignees claimed the annuity. The Court, being satisfied that it was the intention of the parties that it should be paid as a provision for the wife and her children, ordered the settlement to be amended, and decreed that the assignees of the husband had no claim to any part of it. Pearce v. Verbeke, 2 Beav. 333; 9 L. J., N. S., Ch., 203; 4 Jur. 117.

6. A settlement of stock, which proceeded on a clear mistake as to the party in whom the property vested:—Held, not to affect the rights of the party really interested, no attention appearing on his part, although joining in the deed, to deal otherwise with the property than on the footing of the mistaken statement of the title contained in the recitals. Ashurst v. Mill, 12 Jur. 1035. The will of A. contained the limitations mentioned in the settlement, but bore a later date, which was written upon an erasure not to be accounted for:—Held that, inasmuch as, under the circumstances of the case, the variance between the real date of the will and that mentioned in the settlement did not affect the substantial intention of the parties, the arrangement between them could, in equity, be carried into execution, notwithstanding such variance. Honywood v. Honywood, 2 Y. & Coll. C. C. 471.

10. By a marriage settlement, after the death of the husband and wife, the trustees were to pay, assign, and transfer the capital to the children of the wife equally, the shares to be paid at twenty-one. There was a subsequent proviso, that if there should be no such child living at the decease of the survivor of the parents, then the fund was to go over to S. C. There was only one child of the marriage:—Held, that though she had attained twenty-one, her interest was defeasible by her death before the survivor of her parents:—Held, also, that the settlement could not, on the evidence, be reformed. Lloyd v. Cocker, 19 Beav. 140; 1 Jur., N. 1. A woman's fortune was settled on her marriage to her separate use, except a sum of 10,000*l*., which had been settled on her marriage with a former husband, and which the woman understood to be still standing upon trust for her separate use. This was, however, a mistake, as the trusts of the former settlement did not extend to future covertures. Shortly after the marriage the parties separated, and were ultimately divorced on the ground of the husband's adultery:—Held, that whether the wife was or was not entitled to a rectification of the settlement, she was entitled in equity to a settlement; and the Court settled the whole fund upon her, although she had other property sufficient for her support. The husband's conduct ought to be taken into account in considering the question of the wife's equity to a settlement. The omission in the settlement having arisen from the mistake of the lady's solicitor who prepared the deed, and who was also a trustee under it, the Court refused to allow him his costs in the suit. Barrow v. Barrow, 19 Beav. 529. 2. A female ward of court being entitled to funded property carried to her account in certain suits, in possession and reversion, a marriage is proposed, and certain proposals for a settlement taken in before the Master, not on a reference: the Master objects, as the intended husband is to settle nothing, and the ward's property is not to be settled so that children of a second marriage by her can take. The ward being on the eve of attaining twenty-one, the marriage is postponed, and a settlement according to the former proposals, with the addition of a provision that in the event of there being no children all the property settled and all after-acquired property shall go over absolutely to her brothers and sisters, is executed a few days after she attains twenty-one, and the marriage takes place. A few months after, a petition to transfer the funds to the trustees is presented, stating the settlement, and an order is taken by consent upon it without discussion. Thirty-one years elapse, and the husband dies, and there is no issue of the marriage. Eight years after she became a widow, a bill is filed by the lady, alleging that she had only then discovered the true nature of the settlement, and praying that it might be set aside or reformed, and such a settlement made as ought to have been made upon her marriage. It is contended for the plaintiff that, the settlement being executed so immediately after she was of age, she was still under the protection of the Court; and that, as she distinctly swore that although the matter was discussed she knew nothing before the period alleged of its true nature, she was entitled to such a settlement as the Court would have insisted upon at the time of the marriage, she being then under the influence of her mother, who managed the whole matter. The defendant's contention was, that lapse of time was a complete bar to the relief asked, even if the settlement was inequitable, which it was not, inasmuch as it was natural that the mother should wish to provide for —Held, that the settleme formed so as to give the lad in the events which had reference to chambers as t arising. 3. On clear evidence of mistake, a marriage settlement of a lady's fortune reformed, by striking out a proviso against anticipation of her separate estate, she having executed it on a representation that the most unlimited control, both over principal and interest, was secured to her, it having been agreed before the marriage that she should continue to possess the same power of disposition which she then had. Torre v. Torre, 1 Sim. & G. 815; 1 W. The estates were resettled, and several years afterwards B. discovered that his estate tail had been cut down to an estate for life. B. stated that he had joined in opening the entail on the understanding that, subject to the charge and to certain modifications in A.'s power of jointuring and charging portions, the estates should be settled precisely as they had previously been. A. stated that he had been under the same impression. On evidence that the persons who prepared the resettlement had explained the limitations to A. and B., a bill filed by B. to rectify the settlement was dismissed with costs. Jenner v. Jenner, 2 Giff. 232; 6 Jur., N. 6. A marriage settlement gave the income of the trust funds to the husband, in the event of his surviving the wife, until death or bankruptcy. There was a maintenance clause only applicable after the death of the husband. The wife was dead, and the husband had become bankrupt. The settlement was ordered to be rectified by making the maintenance clause applicable upon the bankruptcy of the husband, upon the oath of the husband and of the solicitor who prepared the settlement, that such had been the intention of the parties at the time of the marriage. Tomlinson v. Leigh, 11 Jur., N. S., 962; 14 W. R. 121.

7. On the settlement of a ward, no clause against anticipation was attached to her separate life estate. She encumbered her interest:—Held, that the settlement could not be rectified to the prejudice of her encumbrancers. Blackie v. Clark, 15 Beav. 595; 22 L. J., Ch., 377.

8. Where a clause in a marriage settlement was framed in a form which did not carry out correctly the intention of the intended wife, and the whole clause was objected to by the intended husband, but the objection ultimately waived, and it appearing that the husband's attention had not been called to the variance between the form of the clause and the intention of the wife:—Held, that this was not a case of mutual error, and a bill for rectification was dismissed. Thompson v. Whitmore, 1 John. & H. 268.

9. Where, under a marriage settlement, a sum was directed to be raised, to which, under the limitations of the settlement, the plaintiff would be entitled, if not barred by a fine levied by the husband and wife (there being no issue), and which was declared to be inoperative to that effect; and by a deed of covenant, a similar sum was charged upon the husband's estate:—Held, that he could not be relieved from such second charge upon the ground of mistake, although clearly intended to be substituted in lieu of the former. Farr v. Sheriffs, 4 Hare 512; 15 L. 10. Three estates belonging to A., two of them being subject to mortgages amounting to 2,400*l.*, and the third being subject to a mortgage for 3,000*l.*, were settled for valuable consideration upon A. for life, remainder to his wife for life, remainder as they should jointly appoint, "for the purpose of raising money, by way of mortgage or otherwise"; and in default of appointment, and subject thereto, to a trustee for a term of years, to raise such a sum, not exceeding 600*l.*, as should be owing by A. in respect of two sums of 300*l.* each, with remainder to the use of the wife for life, with remainder to the husband and wife, in equal moieties. A. and his wife exercised the joint power for the purpose of raising 600*l.* and 400*l.* A. died insolvent:—Held, this was no mortgage of the wife's estate, and, consequently, that she was not entitled to have her moiety exonerated out of the estate of the husband. Scholefield v Lockwood, 9 Jur., N. The settlement was expressly made subject to the subsisting mortgage; but it was stated to be 1,200*l.* instead of 1,400*l.* There was clear evidence of this being a mistake:—Held, that the parties claiming under A. were not estopped by the statements in the settlement, and that it was not necessary in institute formal proceedings to have the mistake rectified. Ib.

11. Lands stood limited, subject to certain powers vested in the plaintiff, and to certain charges for his own benefit and for the jointure of his wife, and for portions for his younger children, to his use for life, with remainder to his sons successively in tail male, with remainder to trustees for 1,500 years, in trust, in the event of failure of his male issue, to raise 100,000*l.* for additional portions for his daughters. In contemplation of the marriage of his only son, the plaintiff and his son entered into an agreement for resettlement, whereby the son should disentail the reversion and limit the estates after the plaintiff's decease, and subject to his life interest and powers, and to the exercise thereof, and all subsisting charges, to such uses as he and his son should then appoint the lands, in remainder, and subject as aforesaid, to the use of the son for life, with remainder to the plaintiff's first and other sons successively in tail male, with remainder to a nephew of the plaintiff and certain other nephews successively for their lives, with remainders to their first and other sons successively in tail, with remainders over. A deed of resettlement was made in pursuance of this agreement, and thereby the lands were appointed, after the plaintiff's death and subject to his life estate and to the powers thereto annexed, and of the jointure and any other charges upon the estates to which he might be entitled, to the use of his son for life, with remainder to his first and other sons successively in tail male, with remainder to his nephews successively, and remainder over. The plaintiff and his solicitor deposed that neither of them intended by the agreement or settlement to displace the terms of 1,500 years or the portions of 100,000*l.* thereby secured, except so far as was necessary for the benefit of his son and issue, but it did not appear that any discussion took place on the subject, or that it was mentioned:—Held, not a case for reforming the resettlement. Elwes v. Elwes, 3 De G. 1. A marriage settlement was drawn, as the intended husband alleged, in a manner contrary to the agreement; but before the marriage he knew its contents and executed it under protest, and reserving his right to set it aside:—Held, that he could not, after the marriage, sustain a suit to rectify the settlement. Eaton v. Bennett, 34 Beav. 196.

2. No order will be made on petition to reform a settlement, though, by mistake, it included a fund not intended to be settled. Neither can any order be made in contravention of its provisions so long as the settlement is unreformed. Re Malet, 8 Jur., N. S., 226; 31 L. J., Ch., 455.

3. By a marriage settlement made in 1858, property belonging to the lady was invested in trustees for the benefit of the wife and husband during their respective lives, and the children of the wife by the then intended or any future marriage, and in default of such children for the wife's nephews and nieces absolutely. The settlement contained no power of revocation, and gave the wife no power of appointment amongst her nephews and nieces, and no power to lease, to appoint new trustees, or to change investments. The husband died in 1865, leaving no issue. On a bill by the wife to set aside the settlement:—Held (on the ground that she had executed the deed in ignorance of its effect, which had not been sufficiently explained to her, and that the nephews and nieces were mere volunteers, and not within the consideration of the marriage), that the trusts of the deed must be declared void, and the trustees be ordered to retransfer to her the property comprised in the settlement. Wollaston v. Tribe, 21 L. 1. Under a marriage settlement trust funds, in the events which had happened and by virtue of an appointment, stood limited upon trusts for A. for life, for her separate use without power of anticipation, remainder to B. absolutely. The trust funds had been paid into court in a suit instituted to carry out the trusts of the settlement. On B. attaining twenty-one, A. and B. executed a resettlement by which the trust funds were limited upon trusts for A. for life, remainder to B. absolutely. On a petition for payment out of the trust funds to the trustees of the resettlement, the Court made the order subject to the insertion in the resettlement of a clause, similar to that contained in the original settlement, restraining A. from anticipating her life interest. De Martana v. De Martana, 33 L. R., Ir., 119; 11 Ir. R., Eq., 130.

By a post-nuptial settlement of 1841, after reciting that in consideration of 352*l.*, a share of residue to which E., the wife, had become entitled under a will taking effect a few days before the marriage, C., the husband, in order to provide for her after his death, and for their issue, had proposed to settle a freehold house and field upon the trusts therein mentioned, the freehold premises were conveyed to T. upon trust for C. for life, or until he should become bankrupt, or assign, or charge "the rents, issues, and annual produce of the trust estate moneys," etc., then upon trust for E. for life; "it being the true intent and the meaning of these presents, and the parties thereto, that the tenements, hereditaments, and premises" should, in the event of any such charge, etc., be for the separate maintenance of E. for life, then, "as to the rents, issues, and annual profits arising off the house and premises," for children, in the usual form, with an ultimate "trust to pay the rents, issues, and annual produce" to C.'s next of kin. The settlement provided, that on the appointment of any new trustee, "all the trust estate moneys and premises" should be assigned to him. T., who was also the trustee of the will, had paid part of the 352*l.* to C. before the execution of the deed, and the rest immediately after. The solicitor who prepared the settlement, on T.'s verbal instructions, had died in 1848, and there were no papers to show what the instructions were; but C., E., and T. all deposed that it had not been intended to settle any part of the 352*l.*, and their bill, filed in 1876, to reform the deed accordingly, was not opposed by the adult children:—Held, that the plaintiffs were entitled to a decree declaring that the word "moneys" had been introduced by mistake into the settlement, which should be construed and take effect as if that form had been omitted. Ib.

3. In a marriage settlement, the property of the wife was assigned on trust to pay the income to the wife for life for her separate use, and after her decease to pay an annuity of 200*l.* a year to the husband, remainder to the issue of the marriage, and in default of issue the trustees were directed to invest the trust money in land, to be held on similar trusts as were subsisting in respect of the family estate of the wife's family under the family settlement. There was no issue of the marriage, and the wife now claimed to have the settlement rectified, on the ground that her attention had not been called to the fact that under the settlement she had no power of disposing of the property in the event of there being no issue of the marriage:—Held, that the settlement must be rectified by inserting a general testamentary power of appointment by the wife during coverture, and a general power of appointment by deed or will on discoverture, in priority to the ultimate trusts. Cordeaux v. Fullerton, 41 L. T. 651; 28 W. R. 320.

2. A marriage settlement recited that upon the treaty for the intended marriage it was agreed, in order to make a suitable provision for the intended wife and the issue of the marriage, that the estate should be settled in manner thereinafter mentioned. There were ante-nuptial articles, under which, according to their true construction, portions were to be raised for a daughter or daughters, under the general designation of younger children. The settlement did not expressly refer to those articles, but there was evidence to show that there was no other agreement between the contracting parties. By the settlement, the estates were limited strictly to the male issue of the marriage, subject to a term, the trusts of which were, "in case there should be issue of the intended marriage an eldest or only son, and also one or more other child or children," to raise a portion or portions for such child or children, of different amounts, according to their number, corresponding with the amounts and numbers of the younger children mentioned in the articles. There was issue of the marriage but one child, a daughter:—Held, that the trusts of the term should be reformed, so as to provide for her a portion of the amount stated in the articles for one younger child. King v. King-Harman, 7 Ir. R., Eq., 446.

3. By a marriage settlement executed in pursuance of articles made under the order of the court on the marriage of a lady, an infant and a ward of court, personalty of the wife was limited on death of the husband and in default of children, both which events happened, to the wife, as she should by will appoint, and in default to her next of kin. Upon her uncontradicted evidence that this was not in accordance with her intention:—Held, that she was entitled to have the settlement rectified by limiting the property, in the events which had happened, to herself, her executors and administrators, absolutely; and declaration to that effect was ordered to be indorsed on the settlement. Smith v. Iliffe, 20 L. R., Eq., 666; 23 W. R. 851; 44 L. J., Ch., 755; 33 L. T. 200.

4. An order was, in 1855, on the application of the father as next friend, made, directing a trustee to pay certain dividends to the father for the maintenance and education of an infant daughter, during her minority, or while unmarried. Previously to the marriage of the daughter, the draft of a proposed settlement, which contained a covenant by the intended husband to settle after-acquired property of the wife, but no provision as to the children by a future husband, was sent to the intended husband, and returned by him without any objection thereto. The marriage took place before the draft was ingrossed. A post-nuptial settlement, which contained no covenant to settle after-acquired property, and no provision for children of the wife by a future husband, was executed. Trustees subsequently paid funds of the wife, who was still a minor, into court. The husband and wife presented a petition for a transfer of the funds to them, and certain inquiries were directed. The chief clerk certified that the settlement ought to contain both provisions. The Court directed only that the after-acquired property of the wife should be made subject to the trusts of the settlement. Re Hoare, 9 Jur., N. S., 167.

5. A lady possessed of about 12,000*l.* consols, being engaged to be married, a draft settlement in the usual form was submitted to the intended husband, who objected to some of its provisions, and insisted that if there should be no children and he should survive his wife, the fund should belong to him. Articles embodying this provision were hastily signed before the marriage; and after the marriage, the fund having been transferred to the trustees, a draft settlement, in execution of the articles, was prepared, but objected to by the husband, and as ultimately executed, contained limitations to the husband and wife and the survivor for their lives, and as to the capital to the children of the marriage absolutely, not to such as should attain twenty-one or marry, and without any limitation over, in the event of the death of a son or of an unmarried daughter under twenty-one. There was also a provision that if there should be no child of the husband and wife, and the husband should survive the wife, the fund should belong to him; but the deed contained no alternative limitation in the events of their being no child, and of the wife surviving the husband. The husband brought no property into settlement. In the event, one child was born, but died an infant in the lifetime of both parents. The husband died; and his representative claiming the fund, subject to the widow's life interest—upon bill by the widow for rectification of the settlement, and for a declaration that she was entitled to the fund:—Held, that the transfer of the fund to the trustees was not a reduction into possession by the husband. Cogan v. Duffield, 20 L. R., Eq., 789; 45 L. J., Ch., 74. Affirmed 2 L. R., Ch. D., 44; 45 L. J., Ch., 307; 24 W. R. 905; 34 L. T., N. S., 593.

Held, also, that the settlement was not in accordance with the articles, and that it ought to be rectified; and that, in the events which had happened, she was entitled to the fund. Ib.

Held, also, that she was entitled to the arrears of income due at the death of the husband. Ib.

6. Where a settlement made before marriage purports to be in pursuance of the articles, but is not in conformity therewith, that is conclusive ground for correcting the settlement without further evidence, and though the articles and the settlement were both before the marriage, and the settlement does not purport to be made in pursuance of the articles, yet if it be clearly established that it was intended to be made in pursuance of the articles, and is not in conformity therewith, the Court will rectify the mistake. Bold v. Hutchinson, 5 De G. M. & G. 558; 2 Jur., N. S., 97; 25 L. J., Ch., 598; 4 W. R. 3. Affirming 20 Beav. 250; 1 Jur., N. S., 365; 24 L. J., Ch., 285.

Upon a treaty of marriage, the father of the intended wife said to the plaintiff, the intended husband, "I pledge you my word that after the death of my wife and myself, my daughter will have 10,000*l.* at the very least." Heads of articles, which were subsequently drawn up under the sanction of and approved by the father, and intended as instructions for a settlement, contained the following passage: "A covenant is to be drawn up by which Sir W. H. (the father) guarantees that his daughter shall, at the decease of both parents, have a property of not less than 10,000*l.*" In the settlement which was afterwards executed, before the marriage, there was a recital to that effect, but there was no express covenant by the father to make good that sum. On a bill filed by the husband, who had survived his wife, against the executor of the father:—Held, that although the settlement, if it stood alone, could not have been rectified, yet that, having regard to the articles and representation made by the father, there was sufficient evidence of mistake to authorise the Court to make the settlement conformable to the articles, and that the estate of the father was bound to make up the portion of his daughter to the stipulated sum. Ib.

Held, also, that the representation of the father, though not afterwards fulfilled, yet being of intention merely and not of fact, did not amount to such a misrepresentation as would entitled the husband to relief in equity on the ground of fraud. Ib.

IV. EVIDENCE AND ONUS OF PROOF.

1. Parol evidence admitted to prove mistake by solicitor in settlement. Rogers v. Earl, Dick. 294.

2. A marriage settlement recited an agreement to convey a certain estate, save and except the lands of Ballyhenry, and its subdenominations, but the operative part of the deed purporting to convey by name, as a separate denomination, the lands of Killahan, which it was proved were reported a subdenomination of Ballyhenry:—Held, that there was not sufficient evidence of mistake to justify the Court in striking Killahan out of the settlement. Alexander v. Crosbie, Ll. & G. temp. Sugd. 145.

Semble, the Court will perform a settlement where the mistake is clearly established by parol evidence, even though there is nothing in writing to which the parol evidence may attach. Id. 150.

3. Parol evidence admitted to show mistake in settlement; also, of loss of letter, and then evidence of contents. Noble v. Noble, 2 Moll. 403.

4. Where a marriage settlement, made by the husband's father, was defective on the face of it, in omitting any limit life estate of the husband and the wife, whereby the reversion to X., the elder brother of th correction of the settlement w against a judgment creditor sought as soon as the omission v the evidence of the intended li sisting of a letter and memoran lady's father, and conversati settlor after the date of the s draft being lost, and the soli pared it being unable to ac omission. Milner v. Milner, 8 1

5. The Court will not reform on the ground of mistake, unles as to the mistake, and as to the of the parties, is perfectly clea tory. 7. In a marriage settlement, the wife was conveyed and a for the wife for life for he remainder to the husband for h to the children of the marriag of issue of the marriage to th wife and his children. Afte the husband and wife filed their bill, charging that the brother, who was one of the trustees of the settlement, in concert with the solicitor's clerk, who took the instructions for and attended the execution of the settlement, had fraudulently omitted or erased from the deed a general power of appointment by the wife in default of issue of the marriage, and praying that the settlement might be rectified by inserting such a power. The wife did not prove the instructions for the insertion of such a power, nor the fraud in omitting or erasing it; but it appeared by the evidence that the power had been introduced in the draft settlement prepared by counsel, and also in the ingrossment; and the answer of the brother stated that the power having been noticed by him when the ingrossment was read over to him, he objected to it as not being according to his understanding of the intentions of the wife, when the solicitor's clerk admitted it was not, and struck it out: the Court held that it was the duty of the brother, as one of the trustees, not to have permitted the power to be struck out without the express directions of the intended wife on that point, and that relief might be given in the suit subject to the question, whether the wife knew, when she executed the settlement, that it did not contain that power. Harbidge v. Wogan, 5 Hare 258; 15 L. J., N. S., Ch., 281; 10 Jur. 703.

1. Parol evidence is admissible to make out a case for the rectification of a settlement, but the jurisdiction in such cases is to be cautiously exercised. Barrow v. Barrow, 18 Beav. 529. Varied on appeal, 24 L. J., Ch., 267.

The erroneous belief of both the husband and wife, on their marriage, that a particular property already stood settled, is no ground for rectifying a settlement so as to make it include it. Ib.

2. A post-nuptial settlement, after reciting ante-nuptial articles, and for the purpose of completing and making the same effectual, proceeded to declare the trusts of the premises, which were materially different from those contained in the articles themselves; in giving a life estate to the father, and providing that only the children who survived the father and mother, or died in their lifetime leaving issue, should take vested interests, while by the articles the children took vested interests upon birth. There was no evidence of the contents of the articles, except so far as appeared by the recital in the settlement, which did not purport to be verbatim. Upon a bill filed after the death of the father and mother:—Held, that the onus lay upon those who claimed under the articles to show that the provisions were contrary to those of the post-nuptial settlement, and that the evidence afforded by the recital itself being insufficient for that purpose, the provisions of the deed must be adopted. Mignan v. Parry, 8 Jur., N. S., 634; 31 L. J., Ch., 819; 10 W. R. 812; 7 L. T., N. S., 88; 31 Beav. 211.

3. No written instructions were given for the preparation of a marriage settlement, and it was afterwards sought to rectify an alleged error in it. Upon the evidence of the husband and the solicitor who had prepared it, as to the intention of the parties to it, and the trustees of the settlement not opposing, on a bill filed by the sole child (an infant) of the marriage, and his father, as next friend:—Held, that the rectification might be made. Tomlinson v. Leigh, 13 L. T., N. S., 516.

4. A court of equity will reform a settlement upon parol evidence alone, and after a long lapse of time, if on due deliberation it arrives at the conclusion that the actual contract made between the parties differs from that expressed in the instrument. M'Cormack v. M'Cormack, 1 L. R., Ir., 119.

By a post-nuptial settlement, executed in 1841, a fund to which the wife became entitled after the marriage, and payable prior to the date of the settlement, was assigned to a sole trustee in trust for the husband and wife for life, and, after their decease, in trust for the children of the marriage; the principal of the fund was, however, paid over to the husband by the trustee, under the impression that it was not included in the settlement. In a suit by the husband and wife and the trustee, the Court refused to reform the deed by excluding the fund from its operation, on their uncorroborated parol evidence, there being nothing repugnant, inconsistent, or improbable on the face of the settlement itself, leading the Court to believe that the words which it was sought to expunge had been erroneously introduced into the instrument. S. C. 11 Ir. R., Eq., 130.

5. By a marriage settlement the property of the intended wife was settled upon the wife for life for her separate use without power of anticipation, and after death as she should, notwithstanding coverture, by will or codicil appoint, and in default of appointment for her next of kin. After the death of the husband, and upon the unsupported testimony of the wife that it was only intended to protect the trust property during her coverture, and not to deprive her of the control of it after the termination of the coverture:—Held, that the settlement ought to be rectified so that the property should be held in trust for the wife, her executors, administrators, and assigns absolutely. Cook v. Fearn, 27 W. R. 212; 39 L. T., N. S., 348; 48 L. J., Ch., 63.

6. A pre-nuptial agreement to settle property on a wife will be enforced even though the letters which constituted such agreement have been lost, if the loss can be proved to have occurred through an unforeseen and an inevitable accident, and if the existence and substance of the letters can be clearly established by the evidence. Gilchrist v. Herbert, 20 W. R. 348; 26 L. T., N. S., 381.

7. By a marriage settlement executed in pursuance of articles made under the order of the Court on the marriage of a lady, an infant and a ward of court, personalty of the wife was limited on death of the husband and in default of children, both which events happened, to the wife, as she should by will appoint, and in default to her next of kin. Upon her uncontradicted evidence that this was not in accordance with her intention:—Held, that she was entitled to have the settlement rectified by limiting the property, in the events which had happened, to herself, her executors and administrators, absolutely; and declaration to that effect was ordered to be endorsed on the settlement. Smith v. Iliffe, 20 L. R., Eq., 666; 23 W. R. 851; 44 L. J., Ch., 755; 33 L. T. 200.

8. The Court will order rectification of a deed on the ground of mistake upon the evidence of the plaintiff alone, where no further evidence can be obtained. Hanley v. Pearson, 13 L. R., Ch. D., 545; 41 L. T. 673.

By a post-nuptial settlement real estate belonging to the wife was conveyed unto A. and his heirs "to the use of" A., his executors and administrators, during the life of the wife, "upon trust" to pay the rents and profits to her for her separate use; and from and after her decease, in case of the death of her husband in her lifetime, "to the use of the heirs and assigns of the wife for ever: but in case of the wife predeceasing the husband, then to the use of the husband, his heirs and assigns for ever. The wife having survived her husband, she brought an action against A.'s legal personal representative to have the settlement rectified on the ground that by a technical mistake in the form of the settlement her equitable life estate and the legal estate in remainder did not coalesce within the rule in Shelley's case, so as to give her, as was intended in the events that had happened, an absolute estate in fee: —Held, that a conveyance of the outstanding legal estate was unnecessary. Ib.

The plaintiff's case was supported by an affidavit by herself alone:—Held, that the uncontradicted affidavit was sufficient, and ordered that the settlement be rectified so as to vest the legal estate in fee simple to the plaintiff. Ib.

1. There is no absolute rule that in no case can a decree for the rectification of a settlement be made upon the uncorroborated evidence of an interested party; but it is the duty of the Court to act upon such evidence with extreme caution. Lovesy v. Smith, 15 L. R., Ch. D., 655; 49 L. J., Ch., 809; 43 L. T. 240; 28 W. R. 979.

An intended husband told his intended wife that he wished every farthing of her property to be settled on her. She then expressed herself willing that he should have a life interest if he survived her, upon which he said he would have counsel employed. Nothing, however, was done until the evening before the marriage, when the intended husband, who was a retired solicitor, began to prepare the settlement of all the lady's property and a small portion of his own, and brought it to her at five o'clock on the morning of the wedding. From her evidence it appeared that he did not explain the settlement to her, nor was any other solicitor employed in her behalf. There were several mistakes in the deed, and it was evident that it had been hastily prepared. The husband having died, the wife for the first time discovered that the settlement gave a moiety of her property after her death to her husband absolutely. The wife then commenced an action against the trustees of the settlement and one of the several next of kin of the husband for the rectification of the settlement by omitting the words giving the moiety to the husband:—Held, that the Court had power to decide the question between the parties then before the Court. Ib.

Held, also, that it made no difference in the wife's right to the rectification of the settlement of her own property that she claimed the benefit of the settlement with husband's property; that und stances the burden of proof that was good rested on those who and that upon the evidence of it being supported by the prob case, the rectification asked for r The order was suspended for order that the next of kin o other than the one who was part might have an opportunity of judgment. Ib.

J., N. S., Ch., 89; 10 Jur. 630.

1. By a marriage settlement, reciting that the intended husband had agreed to secure to his intended wife, in the manner thereinafter mentioned, an annuity, by way of pin-money, during his life, and another annuity, by way of jointure, if she should survive him, certain real estates were demised to trustees for a term upon trusts thereinafter mentioned. The settlor then covenanted to pay the annuities; and the indenture then declared the trusts of the term to be for the settlor, until default should be made in payment of the annuities; and then upon trust to secure the same:—Held, that, as between the real and personal representatives of the settlor, if there was no debt due at the time of the execution of the settlement, and no augmentation of the personal estate of the settlor, the real estate of the settlor was primarily liable for the payment of the annuities, unless some intention to the contrary appeared upon the face of the deed; and that the form of the deed in this case did not show any such intention. Lonsemore v. Knapman, 2 Eq. Rep. 710; 1 Key 123.

2. Part of certain estates was limited for a term of one hundred and fifty years, to secure a jointure of 400*l.* to S. E. By a deed of the same date, H. E. and G. E., in pursuance of a power in the settlement, after reciting that charge, demised the same part to P. for ninety-nine years from the death of the survivor, "in trust that the said S. E. and her assigns should, during her life, have, divide, and take the yearly surplus value and produce of the premises so charged, and the surplus issues and profits thereof over and beside the said annuity":—Held, that S. E. was entitled to the whole estate so demised, free from contribution even to charges upon the settled lands prior to the settlement. Evans v. Evans, 1 W. R. 215; 21 L. T. 14.

4. A., seised of remainder in fee, expectant on estate tail in N., limited same to himself for life, remainder to trustees for ninety-nine years, in trust (amongst other things) to raise and pay such sums of money, and to such persons as A. should by deed or will appoint; and he reserved to himself general power of revocation of all uses thereby limited. A. afterwards by deed appointed that when said estate tail should be spent, and term came into possession, trustees should raise 2,000*l.* for W.; and covenanted that if estate tail should be spent in his own lifetime, then he would pay 2,000*l.* unto W.; but if not till after his death, and he should revoke said term of ninety-nine years, then that his heirs, executors, etc., should, within a year after estate tail should be spent, pay 2,000*l.* to W., with proviso that if N. should suffer recovery of premises, and bar remainder in fee, 2,000*l.* should not be payable. A. afterwards, by will, revoked all uses of first settlement, "to all intents and purposes whatsoever, as if same had never been limited;" and thereby devised all said premises, "subject nevertheless to payment of said sum of 2,000*l.* to W.," in manner therein mentioned. A. died, and afterwards N. died; 2,000*l.* remained in charge on devised premises after death of N., notwithstanding revocation of term; and personal estate of A. was not applicable to it. Wilson v. Darlington (Earl), 1 Cox 172; 2 P. W. 664. n.

5. A. lent B. and C. 200*l.* and took their bond for 800*l.*, payable on the marriage of either, or on the death of either's father. B.'s father died, and C. married, but his portion was vested in trustees; equity would not subject this portion to the payment of C.'s bond. Rich v. Sydenham, 3 Ch. Rep. 75.

6. A testator under covenant, on his daughter attaining twenty-one, or on marriage, to pay to trustees 10,000*l.* for her benefit, with a declaration, that in case she died, leaving no child who should attain twenty-one, or if a daughter should marry, it should form part of his personal estate; during his daughter's minority, in order to liberate his estate, borrowed 10,000*l.*, which was paid by the trustees, who released the covenant, and lent a portion of the fund to the testator, on security of his real estate. The daughter having died under age and unmarried:—Held, that the 10,000*l.* having been actually raised, passed under the testator's will, as his personal estate. Tucker v. Loveridge, 1 Giff. 377. Affirmed 2 De G. & J. 650; 6 W. R. 786; 4 Jur., N. S., 939; 27 L. J., Ch., 731.

7. A testator devised his estate upon trust during lives out of the rents to pay his debts, to keep up the mansion-house, to pay an annuity to his daughters, and subject thereto to pay the rents to his wife and daughters. There were mortgages which exhausted the rents:—Held, that one of the daughters and wife might have part of the estates sold to pay off the mortgage. Cooke v. Cholmondeley, 4 Drew. 244.

8. The debts of A. were charged on his real estates, which were limited to his widow for life, remainder to B. for life, remainder to his first and other sons in tail male, remainder to C. for life, remainder to his first and other sons in tail male, remainder to the right heirs of A., whose heir B. was. A bill was filed by the creditors of A. against his widow, and against B. and C., they having neither of them issue at that time, praying to have their debts raised by sale or mortgage; and by a decree a sufficient sum was directed to be raised by mortgage to pay the debts, and to pay 1,500*l.* to the widow, which she had agreed to take in lieu of her life estate. After the deaths of the widow of B. without issue, and of C.:—Held, that the eldest son of C. was not bound by the decree, but was let in to redeem on payment only of what was raised to pay the debts without paying the sum raised for the widow. Blount v. Winterton (Earl), Romilly's Notes of Cases, 169.

1. A voluntary settlement of freeholds contained a covenant for quiet enjoyment. The settlor afterwards included the settled property in a mortgage, together with other property:—Held, that the parties claiming under the settlement were entitled: 1st, to throw the mortgage primarily on the unsettled property; and 2nd, to prove on the covenant against the settlor's estate. Hales v. Cox, 1 N. R. 344; 8 L. T., N. S., 134; 32 Beav. 118.

The settlor, previously to a mortgage, had re-purchased the share taken by one of the sons under the settlement, and after the mortgage he voluntarily re-settled it:—Held, that the parties claiming under the re-settlement were entitled to throw the mortgage primarily on the unsettled property, but not to prove under the original covenant. Ib.

2. Where by the settlement the wife's fortune was settled in trustees, subject to a life interest in the husband and wife, as to one moiety to the eldest son, and the other amongst the younger children; and a plantation estate of the husband was conveyed to trustees for a term of 500 years, to raise a sum for the husband, if he should so appoint, and subject thereto, for a term of 1,000 years, to raise a sum for the eldest son, then a sum for younger children, and again a sum for the eldest, with proviso for raising their portions according to priority, as stated in the settlement; the husband exercising his right, the trustees borrowed the amount of the trustees of the wife's fortune, executing a mortgage of the husband's estate in the first term: on the death of the husband and wife, leaving five children, the husband, after devising other property, and directing payment of debts, appointed his eldest son his executor and residuary legatee, who entered into possession of the father's settled estate, paid the interest of the younger children's fortunes until he became lunatic, and shortly after died intestate and unmarried; no settlement was ever entered into, nor any other evidence of his intention to extinguish the charges to which he was under the settlement entitled:—Held, that, as being most for his benefit, the charges were to be deemed not extinguished, and that he was not bound to apply the rents and profits in reduction thereof, but that a sum received as compensation for slaves, as between the several charges, ought to be so applied, and that his personal representative was bound to account for interest on that sum during the life of the intestate. Clarendon (Earl) v. Barham, 1 Y. & Coll. C. C. 688; 12 L. J., N. S., Ch., 215; 6 Jur. 963.

3. R. 96; 10 Hare 126; 17 Jur. 336.

8. A charge created by C. S.

to secure the payment of a sum of money borrowed for S. H. S. is a good consideration, not only for a collateral charge upon the estates of S. H. S., to indemnify C. S. and his estate from payment of the money borrowed, but also for the settlement of the S. estates upon his family. A. H., being a trustee for the younger children of S. H., S., advanced a sum of 5,185*l.* 3*s.* 4*d.* upon the security of certain estates in Berkshire, which C. S., on the 20th January 1832, demised to A. H. for 300 years to secure the repayment. The money was borrowed for S. H. S., who was tenant in tail of the S. estates in remainder expectant on the death of his mother, the tenant for life; and on the 21st January 1832 S. H. S. demised the S. estates to C. S. for 2,000 years, to indemnify him and the Berkshire estates from the 5,185*l.* 3*s.* 4*d.* and interest secured to A. H.; and by deeds dated the 23rd and 24th January 1832, in further compliance with an agreement recited in this deed, he settled the S. estates upon various uses for the benefit of his family. On the death of the tenant for life, S. H. S., being greatly indebted to G. S. F., executed a disentailing deed, and conveyed the S. estates to G. S. F., giving him a power of sale over the estates as a security for the money due; this was subsequently confirmed by another deed; and in a suit instituted by G. S. F. insisting that the settlement of the 23rd and 24th January 1832 was voluntary and void against the subsequent alienation for value made to G. S. F., who had notice of the settlement:—Held, that the agreement made by S. H. S. with C. S., to indemnify him against the 5,185*l.* 3*s.* 4*d.* and to settle the S. estates, was such as this Court would specifically perform, and that it was a consideration sufficient to support the settlement; that the recital in the deed of 24th January 1832 of the agreement between S. H. S. and C. S. was sufficient evidence of the contract, and that it was doubtful if evidence to disprove it could have been entertained; that S. H. S. and C. S. were, by executing the deed, estopped from alleging that the recital was false; that the plaintiff, G. S. F., was in the same position as S. H. S.; that the deeds of the 23rd and 24th January 1832 were valid, and not voluntary and void against a subsequent purchaser for value. Ford v. Stuart, 21 L. J., N. S., Ch., 514; 15 Beav. 493.

1. By a marriage settlement stock was settled, subject to the husband's and wife's life interests therein, upon trusts for the children and issue of the marriage (except an eldest son entitled to certain settled estates), as the husband and wife, or the survivor of them, should appoint, and in default of appointment, for the children (except as aforesaid) in equal shares, the shares of sons to be vested at twenty-one, of daughters at twenty-one or on marriage; and it was provided that if the husband should die in his wife's lifetime, leaving an only child a son, such son should be entitled to the whole trust fund; but if the wife should survive the husband, and there should be only two children, or only one child (except as aforesaid) who should attain twenty-one or marry, such two only children or one only child (except as aforesaid) should not be entitled to any part of the trust fund, but it should go to the husband absolutely, as in that event such two children or one child (except as aforesaid) were otherwise provided for by a deed of even date creating a charge upon the settled real estates. There were two children of the marriage, a son who died an infant, and a daughter who married, and became, on her brother's death, entitled to the settled estates. The wife survived the husband. The deed, purporting to create a charge upon the settled estates, turned out to be invalid:—Held, upon the construction of the settlement, and without resting the decision upon the invalidity of the charge, that the daughter took an absolutely vested interest in the trust fund, and that it did not go to the husband's representative. Carter v. Ducie, 41 L. J., Ch., 153; 25 L. T. 656; 20 W. R. 228.

Semble, that if it had been otherwise, the invalidity of the charges would have been sufficient to displace the claim of the husband's representative. Ib.

2. A., being entitled in fee to real estates, subject to a trust to raise 6,000*l.* for B., and in the event of her death without children, for A., on his marriage, conveyed the estate to the trustees of his marriage settlement, subject to the trusts to raise the 6,000*l.* on the trusts (in the will creating it) mentioned, and died, living B. On B.'s death without children, A.'s representative filed a bill to establish the charge. The Court held that the charge was subsisting, and directed the principal, interest, and costs to be raised by a sale or mortgage of the real estate. Johnson v. Webster, 2 Sm. & G. 136; 18 Jur. 619; 23 L. J., Ch., 480. And see 4 De G. M. & G. 474; 1 Jur., N. S., 145; 24 L. J., Ch., 300.

3. On the apportionment of charges between real and personal estate, the respective values of such real and personal estate are to be taken as they are when the apportionment is made, and not on such values at any anterior time. Robinson v. London Hospital (Governors), 10 Hare 29; 22 L. J., Ch., 754.

XV. Fraud on Marital Rights.

— Other Fraudulent or Collusive Agreements respecting Marriage. See MARRIAGE.

4. It seems agreed that if a woman, on the point of marriage, charge or convey her property to a mere stranger, for whom she was not even under a moral obligation to provide, such a conveyance will be considered as a fraud on the marital rights. Lance v. Norman, 2 Ch. Rep. 79; Howard v. Hooker, id. 81.

A widow, before her second marriage, made a settlement without the privity of her intended husband. Set aside as fraudulent, he having married her in confidence of having her estate. Ib.

5. A widow, before her marriage with her second husband, assigns over the greatest part of her estate to trustees, in trust for children by a former husband. Though this was without the consent of the second husband, yet it being to provide for her children by former husband, it is good. And husband suppressing the deed, decreed to pay 800*l.*, being the sum proved to be mentioned in the

2. A widow, before her second marriage, without the privity of her intended husband, assigned a term in trust for herself and child:—Held, good; but a power reserved to dispose of the remainder of the term after the decease of herself and child, held void; for not being disposed of before marriage, it vested in the husband. Blithe's case, 2 Freem. 91.

3. A widow made provision for her children without the privity of her intended husband, who complained of fraud on the marriage treaty, but did not pretend he could make a settlement. His bill, therefore, to avoid the provision for his wife's former children, was dismissed. King v. Cotton, Mos. 261; 2 P. W. 357. 674. n.

4. Bond by a woman about to marry without her intended husband's knowledge, but for valuable consideration in respect of an antecedent debt:—Held, the husband could not be relieved against it. Concealment, however, of such security and debts not to be encouraged. Blanchet v. Foster, 2 Ves. 264.

5. A woman pending a treaty of marriage with A., settled all her property to her separate use with his approbation. A few days afterwards B., by a stratagem, induced her to marry him the day after she first thought of it. B. had no notice of the settlement. Settlement established, and deed of revocation obtained by duress set aside. Strathmore (Countess) v. Bowes, 1 Ves. J. 22. See 2 Bro. C. C. 354; 2 Cox 28. Affirmed 6 Bro. P. C. 427.

6. If a woman conveys her property before marriage without the privity of the intended husband, it is fraudulent, and will be set aside. Ball v. Montgomery, 2 Ves. J. 193; 4 Bro. C. C. 339.

7. Marriage settlement of personal property in general terms; "all money, debts, bills, bonds, notes, etc.":—Held, there is not inference of fraud from cancelling a note, the only instrument of that description, during the treaty, on a fair moral consideration, the marriage not taking place on representation of particulars, or on account of such personal property. De Manneville v. Crompton, 1 Ves. & B. 354.

8. A woman a few days before her marriage, and without the knowledge of her intended husband, transferred a sum of stock to trustees upon a parol trust, as alleged by the trustees, for her separate use for life, and, after her death, for the benefit of her children. The fact of this transfer became known to the husband some time after the marriage. The dividends were received by the wife from the date of the marriage until her death, which took place seventeen years after. After her death the husband filed a bill, praying a transfer of the stock, and containing a statement that the dividends were duly p during the coveture:—Held, u stances, that the husband was asserting his claim to the stock transferred in fraud of his Loader v. Clarke, 2 Macn. & G

1. A lady pending a treaty of marriage, which afterwards took effect, made a voluntary assignment of part of her property to her sister:—Held, that the husband, who was, under the circumstances, presumed to have had notice of the assignment before his marriage, was not entitled to set it aside on the ground of fraud upon his marital right. Relief against a disposition of property by the intended wife, pending a treaty of marriage, can only be given when the husband has been kept in ignorance of the transaction; and, semble, that, in applying the principle upon which conveyances made by the intended wife, pending a treaty of marriage, are avoided on the ground of fraud upon the marital right, the Court will take into consideration the meritorious object of such conveyances, and the situation of the intended husband in point of pecuniary means. St. George v. Wake, 1 Myl. & K. 610; Coop. temp. Brough. 129.

2. As a conveyance made by the woman before marriage is primâ facie good, it is to be impeached only by the proof of fraud. In August a widow having a second marriage in contemplation, settled her property on herself for life for her separate use, with remainder to the children of her first marriage; and in October following she married. The settlement was prepared by her direction, without the privity or assent of "her then intended husband." In a suit to carry the settlement into execution, the second husband insisted on its being a fraud on his marital rights; but it was not proved that in August he was "the then intended husband":—Held, that the evidence was insufficient to impeach the deed. England v. Downs, 2 Beav. 522; 9 L. J., N. S., Ch., 313; 4 Jur. 526.

3. Quære, to what extent the equity of a husband to set aside a settlement of the property of his wife, executed by her without his knowledge during the treaty of marriage, is taken away by the absence of any other settlement in favour of the wife or the poverty of the husband, or the reasonable nature or meritorious object of the impeached settlement, or the ignorance of the husband of the existence of the settled property. It is not necessary, in order to establish his title to this equity, that the husband should prove actual fraud or deception (for deception will be inferred), if after the commencement of the treaty of marriage the wife should have attempted to dispose of her property without the knowledge or concurrence of her intended husband. Taylor v. Pugh, 1 Hare 608; 12 L. J., N. S., Ch., 73; 6 Jur. 890.

A settlement made by a woman without the knowledge of her intended husband pending a treaty for a marriage, held good on the ground that the husband, by his cohabitation with her previously to the marriage, had rendered retirement from the marriage on her part impossible. Ib.

4. Bill by husband against the solicitor of his wife as sole defendant, alleging that the plaintiff and his wife were living separate; that the defendant had been before her marriage, and up to the present time, the wife's solicitor; that he had in that character prepared a deed, by which the wife fraudulently conveyed a sum of 300*l.* to trustees for her own benefit, in fraud of the plaintiff's marital right; and praying that the plaintiff might be declared entitled to the 300*l.*, and for discovery, and that the defendant might pay the costs. Demurrer for want of equity allowed. Kelly v. Rogers, 1 Jur., N. S., 514.

Whether such a bill will lie against the solicitor alone, quære. Ib.

5. A contract for a marriage settlement having been entered into in 1831, under which, in the judgment of the Court, the plaintiff was entitled to an annuity upon certain lives, and the contract having been varied the day before the marriage, by which an annuity on other lives was substituted, the professional adviser of the grantor, the father of the intended wife, being present, and the professional adviser of the grantee, the intended husband, being absent:—Held, on a bill filed by the grantee, in 1845, that he was a creditor on the estate of the grantor for an annuity not according to the varied contract, and that the varied contract did not bind him. Caton v. Rideout, 10 Jur. 890.

6. A. B., trustee of a fund to which C. D. was entitled in reversion, makes advances to the father of C. D. for the purposes of her education as a singer. The day before her marriage, without the knowledge of her intended husband, C. D. assigns her interest to A. B. for a consideration expressed to have been paid (the amount of the advances to the father):—Held, that the deed could not be sustained. Lewellin v. Cobbold, 1 W. R. 211.

The trustee of a fund, to which a young lady was entitled in remainder after the death of her mother, at the request of a needy father, advanced sums of money amounting to 460*l.*, to enable the father to educate her. Shortly after she came of age, being engaged to be married, she, by deed prepared by the father's solicitor, reciting a contract for sale at the price of 250*l.*, for which a receipt was indorsed, assigned the fund absolutely to the trustee, and married on the following day. The trustee was present at the wedding, but the husband was informed neither of the existence of the fund nor of the deed. On a bill by husband and wife:—Held, that the deed, falsely representing the transaction to be an actual sale, must be set aside. S. C. 1 Sm. & G. 376; 17 Jur. 448.

Held, also, that the falsehood of the recitals in the deed alone would have been sufficient to prevent the Court from supporting it as a security, to the amount of the consideration expressed, for a larger sum due from the lady's father to the trustee for money advanced for her education. S. C. 17 Jur. 448.

7. A settlement, made by a woman pending an engagement and seven weeks before her marriage, without the knowledge of her intended husband, and in favour of persons for whom she was under no legal or moral tie to provide, was set aside as a fraud on the husband's marital right. Donnes v. Jennings, 32 Beav. 290.

A lady and gentleman were engaged to be married. Pending the engagement a separation took place, at the instance of the lady's friends, but the engagement was not broken off. They afterwards married. The husband subsequently discovered that the wife had, about six weeks previously to the marriage, executed a settlement of her property, under which he took no benefit. Upon a bill by the husband, the settlement was set aside as a fraud upon his marital rights. S. C. nom. Downes v. Jennings, 9 Jur., N. S., 1264; 32 L. J., Ch., 643; 11 W. R. 522; 8 L. T., N. S., 341.

The delay of the husband to file a bill for two years and a half after his knowledge of the settlement, was not sufficient to disentitle him to relief, it not being shown that any prejudice had been created to the parties by the delay. Ib.

1. A settlement made by a woman of her personal property after her engagement to be married, set aside at the suit of the husband, although he was told before the marriage that she had executed a settlement affecting her property. Prideaux v. Lonsdale, 4 Giff. 159.

Neither she herself nor her husband was accurately informed of the nature and effect of the trusts of the settlement:—Held, that the doctrine of constructive notice of the contents of an instrument was not sufficient to bind the husband on the ground of acquiescence. Ib.

A wife was, before her marriage, entitled to a legacy of stock. About two months before the marriage, and during the engagement which preceded it, she executed a voluntary settlement to which the intended husband was no party, and of which he had no information at the time, whereby the stock was transferred to trustees, to pay to her the dividends during her life, and after her death to hold the fund according to her appointment; and in default of her appointment, for her next of kin according to the Statute of Distributions. This instrument was prepared by the trustee of the will, and the stock was transferred by him into the names of the trustees of the settlement. No solicitor was employed. She died, leaving her husband surviving, who filed a bill to have the settlement set aside as a fraud upon his marital right; and Stuart, V.-Ch., made a decree accordingly (9 Jur., N. S., 488; 32 L. J., Ch., 317; 11 W. R. 531; 8 L. T., N. S., 109; 1 N. R. 565):—Held, on appeal, that, looking to the circumstances under which the settlement was executed, so short a time before the marriage, yet without the intended husband's knowledge, and without proper legal advice, the settlement could not be supported. S. C. 9 Jur., N. S., 507; 11 W. R. 705; 8 L. T., N. S., 554; 2 N. R. 144; 1 De G. J. & Sm. 433.

2. A voluntary conveyance to a mother by a daughter six months after she had attained twenty-one, and seven days before the daughter's marriage, but unknown to the husband, was set aside, both on the ground of the maternal influence, and of the fraud on the husband's marital rights. Chambers v. Crabbe, 34 Beav. 457.

C. had, under her marriage settlement, a power of appointing property among her children, by deed or will; and a further power, if she survived her then husband and married again, of appointing one-half the property as she might think proper. C.'s then husband died, and she married again. She had three children by her former husband. One of those children, B., attained her majority, and soon afterwards received an offer of marriage from A., which offer was accepted. After the proposal for marriage, and about seven days before it took place, B. assigned all her interest under her mot settlement to her mother, wh leave her by will one-third of property. 8. A direction annexed to a bequest of chattels, that they should go as heirlooms, and that the executors should make an inventory:—Held, not to make the bequest executory, or to empower the Court to modify the bequest. Rowland v. Morgan, 2 Ph. 765; 18 L. J., N. S., Ch., 78; 13 Jur. 23. Affirming 6 Hare 463; 17 L. J., N. S., Ch., 339; 12 Jur. 348.

Bequest of plate, jewels, and other chattels, by the Earl of Abergavenny, to his son, Viscount Nevill, and his heirs, Earls of Abergavenny, "to be held as heirlooms," with a direction to the testator's executors to make an inventory of all such chattels and effects; and a subsequent bequest by a codicil, declaring, that, in addition to the articles and things he had in his will made heirlooms, certain other articles should be considered and taken to be heirlooms, and bequeathing the same to his executors "as heirlooms in" his "family," directing them to make an inventory thereof, and sign the same:—Held, that the gift of the chattels was not executory; that the same vested absolutely in the first taker, Viscount Nevill, who succeeded the testator in the earldom; and that, not having been disposed of by him in his lifetime, the same upon his death passed to his executors. The addition in the codicil of the words "as heirlooms in my family," gives rise to no distinction in point of construction. If the gift had been executory, inasmuch as there were the dignity, the family estate, and the purchased estate, and it was not certain, upon the language of the bequest, to which the testator would annex the chattels, the conclusion would have been the same. Semble. Ib.

9. S. had a crotchet of diamonds belonging to his first wife, which by will he gave to his eldest son, to go to his heir in succession, as an heirloom. Afterwards he married a second wife, and then turned the crotchet into a necklace, adding new diamonds of 200*l.* value, which was more than the value of the crotchet. Upon the death of S., his heir-general claimed the crotchet of the widow. Ordered that the Master do separate the diamonds, and deliver the diamonds which were in the crotchet to the heir-at-law, as an heirloom. Calmady v. Calmady, 11 Vin. Abr. 181, pl. 21.

10. S. devised all his books, pictures, and household goods, to such male person when he should attain twenty-one, as should be then entitled to the trust, in possession of his real estate before devised, and till then he directed they should be kept at H., and be used in the meantime by such male person residing there, declaring it to be his will and desire, that they should go in the nature of heirlooms, with his estate, and be used therewith, as long as the law would permit. The pictures, books, and household goods, ought to go as heirlooms as fully as the law will allow, for the devise is a disposition only of the use till some person, who is entitled to the inheritance, should come into possession by attaining twenty-one. Trafford v. Trafford, 3 Atk. 347.

1. A casket containing diamonds was, in 1817, sent to the plaintiff's father, Sir J. H. S., and with them a letter, in which he said the diamonds were to be considered as an heirloom in the family, and to be left to the eldest son, and his heir, after the death of his mother, as long as the family should continue. At the death of Sir J. H. S. the diamonds remained in the possession of his widow, and on her death her acting executor raised the question whether, as she had alleged they were her property, they could be disposed of for the benefit of her creditors; but the Court declared that the diamonds never formed part of her assets, but were the property of the plaintiff, Sir J. S., and that the executor must pay the plaintiff's costs. Seale v. Haynes, 9 Jur., N. S., 1338; 12 W. R. 239; 9 L. T., N. S., 570; 3 N. R. 189.

2. Testator bequeathed a bust, after his wife's death, to "J., now Duke of B.," on condition that he caused it to be placed and remain in W. Abbey, and at the time of the delivery of it to him settle it so as to be held as an heirloom by the persons who under the limitations to which the Abbey should be subject, should then be entitled to the possession thereof, with a gift over in case J. should neglect to do so for twelve months after request by the trustees. J., Duke of B., had died in 1839. F. was Duke of B. at the time of testator's will and death, and was owner in fee of W. Abbey. F. died during the lifetime of the tenant for life, and consequently never received the bust. The present Duke of B. was willing to allow F.'s executors to place the bust in the Abbey:—Held, that the condition could not be performed by the duke's executors, and that the bequest fell into the residue of the testator's personalty. Patching v. Barnett, 45 L. T. 292; 51 L. J., Ch., 74. Reversing 43 L. T. 50; 28 W. R. 886.

3. Chattels Settled with a Title.

3. A testator bequeathed personalty to trustees to pay the interest to Sir G. A., Bart., for life, and after his decease to his eldest son; but in case he should die, leaving no son, then in trust for the persons on whom the baronetcy should devolve, for life; and after the extinction of the baronetcy, to fall into the residue of his estate. At the death of the testator, Sir. G. A. and his two brothers, J. and R., on whom the baronetcy successively devolved, were living. Sir G. A. afterwards died without having had any issue:—Held, that Sir J. became absolutely entitled to the property. Mackworth v. Hinxman, 2 Keen 658; 5 L. J., N. S., Ch., 127.

4. A testatrix, after bequeathing diamonds and china to L., Baron I., declared that she made "the bequest to Lord I. as head of the existing family," and so far as she lawfully could directed that the diamonds and china should be "deemed heirlooms in the family of I., and be held and enjoyed b the time being bearing the t She then made a further bequ Baron I." L., Baron I., died i the testatrix, being succeeded E.:—Held, that, although t was not executory, L., if he h testatrix, would only have tak in the diamonds and china, w the person who should succe consequently E. was entitle chattels delivered to him, b judice to the question whethe for life or absolutely. Mont (Lord), 23 W. 4. Rights of Tenant in Tail.

1. Chattels directed to go as heirlooms with an estate, "as far as the rules of law and equity will permit," vest in the first tenant in tail, who comes in esse. Vaughan v. Burslem, 3 Bro. C. C. 101.

2. Devise of real estate to A. for life, remainder to trustees to preserve contingent remainders, remainder to A.'s first and other sons in tail male, remainder to B. for life, remainder to trustees to preserve contingent remainders, remainder to B.'s first and other sons in tail male, remainder over; and then a bequest of plate and furniture in the house to be held and enjoyed by the several persons who should respectively and successively be entitled to the use and possession of the house in the nature of heirlooms, to be annexed to and go along with the house for ever. A. had a son who died a few days after his birth. The plate vested absolutely in A.'s son as tenant in tail, and from him was transmitted to A. his father, and in A.'s hands was liable to an execution at the suit of his creditors. Foley v. Burnell, Romilly's Notes of Cases, 1; 1 Bro. C. C. 274; 4 Bro. P. C. 319.

3. Furniture, etc., at H. bequeathed for the use of those who should enjoy the estate, to be taken care of and delivered by executors, and to remain at H., as if in his own possession, vests in the first tenant for life. Wyth v. Blackman, 1 Ves. 197.

Devise that the household stuff at H. should remain there for the use of those who enjoy the estate by a settlement, to be taken care of and delivered by executor, etc.; it goes to the representative of the first taker, who was tenant for life, and is not to be sold as heirlooms with the house, although no estate in tail vested. Id. 202.

4. S. devised all his books, pictures, and household goods, to such male person when he should attain twenty-one, as should be then entitled to the trust, in possession of his real estate before devised, and till then he directed they should be kept at H., and be used in the meantime by such male person residing there, declaring it to be his will and desire, that they should go in the nature of heirlooms, with his estate, and be used therewith, as long as the law would permit. The pictures, books, and household goods, ought to go as heirlooms as fully as the law will allow, for the devise is a disposition only of the use till some person, who is entitled to the inheritance, should come into possession by attaining twenty-one. Trafford v. Trafford, 3 Atk. 347.

5. Testator directed that all his plate, furniture, etc., at his mansion-house should remain there as heirlooms, and devised the same to trustees, upon trust, to permit the same to go, together with the mansion-house, to such persons as should, from time to time, be entitled to it for so long time as the rules of law and equity would permit; and devised his real estates to trustees to the use of several persons and their first and other sons, etc., successively in strict settlement. The absolute interest in the personal chattels vested in the first tenant in tail, and upon his death, under age, passed to his representative. Carr v. Erroll (Lord), 14 Ves. 478.

6. Where there is a limitation of realty in strict settlement, and a declaration of trust of chattels to follow the limitations of the real estate simpliciter, the interest in the chattels will vest absolutely in the first taker of an estate of inheritance. Soarsdale (Lord) v. Curzon, 1 John. & H. 40; 6 Jur., N. S., 209, 246; 29 L. J., Ch., 249.

An assignment or a bequest of personal estate, either immediately or by way of trust executed in favour of one or more tenants for life, with remainder in tail, vests the interest absolutely in the first tenant in tail immediately upon his birth, and this whether the limitations are direct or by way of reference to the limitations of real estate, and the expression that the property is to be treated as heirlooms will carry it according to limitations of the realty. Ib.

An addition of the words, "so far as the rules of law and equity will permit," or the circumstance of the legal interest being left in trustees, will not vary this. Ib.

Doubtful words, tending to restrict the interest of the chattels to those who come into possession of the realty, will not overrule the operation of the general canons of construction, nor suspend the interest until possession of the realty is acquired. But clear words imposing such a restriction, will overrule the ordinary construction of a bequest or settlement of heirlooms. Ib.

By a settlement, leaseholds were limited upon trust for the person or persons who, for the time being, should, by virtue thereof, be seised of or entitled to the freehold hereditaments thereby settled; with a proviso that they should not, for the purpose of transmission, vest absolutely in any child of a person thereby made tenant for life, who should not attain twenty-one. By the same settlement, plate and other chattels were limited upon trust for the person or persons who, for the time being, should by virtue thereof be seised of or entitled to the actual freehold of a mansion-house thereby settled, so that the chattels might, so far as the rules of law and the circumstances of the case would admit, accompany the mansion-house as heirlooms for the benefit of the person or persons who, for the time being, should under the limitations thereof be seised of or entitled to the mansion-house; with a proviso that the plate and other chattels should not, for the purpose of transmission, vest absolutely in any child of a person thereby made tenant for life, who should not attain twenty-one; but that such child should, nevertheless, during minority have the usufruct thereof. There were other clauses in the deed, where the words "actual freehold" were used in the sense of freehold in possession. C. was a tenant in tail who attained twenty-one, and died in the lifetime of a prior tenant for life. The plaintiff succeeded C. as tenant in tail, attained twenty-one, and came into possession:—Held, that the leaseholds vested absolutely in C., and the plate and other chattels in the plaintiff. Ib.

7. A testator devised freeholds to A. for life, with remainder to the first son of A. in tail male, with remainders over; and he gave his residuary personal estate in trust to lay it out in the purchase of 3*l.* per cent. bank annuities, and to pay the dividends "unto such person or persons as for the time being should by that his will be entitled to the rents and profits of his freehold hereditaments thereinbefore devised," with gifts over in case of the total failure of the estates tail limited by this will. On a petition by A. and his eldest son for a transfer to them of the fund which had been paid into court:—Held, that the general intention of the testator being, not to create a perpetuity, but to give the personalty so as to go with the freeholds, the first tenant in tail was absolutely entitled to it, and an order was made as prayed. Re Johnson, 2 L. R., Eq., 716; 12 Jur., N. S., 616.

1. A testator possessed of leaseholds for lives, insured each of the lives. By his will he directed the insurances to be kept up, and gave his real and personal estate for a tenant for life, with remainder to her children successively in tail. The eldest child died an infant. Subsequently one of the cestuis que vient died:—Held, that the policy moneys did not belong to the legal personal representative of the deceased tenant in tail. Meller v. Stanley, 12 W. R. 524.

2. Chattels were bequeathed, "in the nature of an heirloom, to the person who, for the time being, shall be in the actual possession and enjoyment of my freehold estates, under the limitations of this my will":—Held, that they did not vest absolutely in a tenant in tail whose estate was defeasible, and who never came into possession. Held, also, that they did vest absolutely in the person who, in the events which happened, would have been tenant in tail in possession, if his estate had not been defeated by the execution of a disentailing deed. To destroy the right of such person to the chattels, his exclusion from possession of the freeholds must arise from some act or disposition of the testator, and not from any foreign circumstance beyond the testator's control. Hogg v. Jones, 1 N. R. 222.

If chattels are given to such person as shall be in possession of settled estates under the limitations of the settlor's will, a disruption of the limitations before the time, by an act not contemplated by the settlor, and over which he had no control, will not accelerate or affect the gift. The chattels will still devolve upon the person who but for the disruption would have been entitled to the estates. S. C. 8 L. T., N. S., 816.

A testator bequeathed plate for the use of his wife during her life, and after her death he gave the same, in the nature of an heirloom, to the person who, for the time being, should be in the actual possession and enjoyment of his freehold estates under the limitations of his will. The real estates were limited to trustees, to receive and accumulate the rents, and make payments thereout to his son during his life; and after his death, for the first and other sons of his son in tail male, remainder to the testator's daughter for life, remainder to her first and other sons in tail male, remainders over. The daughter and B., her eldest son, joined in suffering a recovery. Both died in the lifetime of the son. B. left a son, and devised his r trustees. Upon the death of son without issue, B.'s son wou limitations of the will, have be to the actual possession and enj real estates:—Held, that notwit recovery suffered, he was entitle S. C. 9 Jur., N. 4. A testator, after devisin estates to A. for life, with rem first and other son in tail, and li to B. for life, and to his sons i several others, bequeathed cer personal chattels to trustees, in t and suffer A. to receive the issu thereof for his life, and after "to permit and suffer each and several other persons aforesaid, estate for life in real estates wa limited, successively, and as e shall become seised of said real estates under the aforesaid limi of, to take and receive the rent profits thereof, for and during th and their natural life and lives and from and after the deceas of the said last-mentioned ten as shall become seised in man or if none of them shall so b then from and after the deceas A., upon trust to grant, assign the chattels "to such person or persons as shall then become seised of the said real and freehold estates under any of the limitations aforesaid":—Held, that the chattels vested in a son of A., who was tenant in tail of the real estate, at the death of A., and did not vest in an elder son of A., a prior tenant in tail, who died in the lifetime of A., or remain in contingency until the death of the last of the successive tenants for life. Potts v. Potts, 9 Ir. Eq. R. 577; 3 J. & L. 353. Affirmed 1 H. L. Ca. 671.

1. A testatrix seised in fee of a messuage and mill, subject to the life estate of C., directed the same to be conveyed to the use of C. for life, with remainder to his first and other sons in tail, and directed her trustees to stand possessed of 2,000*l.* stock, upon trust to apply the dividends from time to time in the repairs of the messuage and mill at the request in writing of C., and after the death of C. upon the application or request in writing of the person or persons entitled under the limitations thereinbefore directed, to the end and intent that the stock, and the interest and dividends thereof, might be, and be continued as long as the rules of law and equity would permit, as a fund for keeping the messuage and mill at all times in good and substantial repair for the benefit of the person or persons who might from time to time be so in possession thereof or entitled thereto. The property was settled in accordance with the directions of the will, and the first tenant in tail died in the lifetime of C., without having barred the entail:—Held, that the person who then came into possession as tenant in tail was entitled to the fund, and not the executors of the first tenant in tail. Cox v. Sutton, 2 Jur., N. S., 733; 25 L. J., Ch., 845.

2. S., by will, gave 5,000*l.* to the eldest son of his late brother for life, with remainder upon trusts corresponding with the limitations made by A. of the C. estate in favour of his issue, but subject to an executory limitation over on the death under twenty-one, without issue then living, of any person who, under the said limitations of the C. estate, would be tenant in tail by purchase. A. had never made any settlement, but had registered according to the law of Scotland two deeds of entail of the C. estate, of which he was then tenant in tail in possession. A.'s eldest son, having executed a disentailing deed, and thereby become owner in fee of the C. estate, claimed the 5,000*l.* absolutely:—Held, that he had become absolutely entitled to the 5,000*l.* on the completion of the instrument of disentail. Schank v. Scott, 22 W. R. 513.

3. A testator devised and bequeathed real and personal estates on trust to invest the rents and profits and annual proceeds while any person beneficially interested in the real and personal estate, by virtue of the trusts afterwards declared, should be under twenty-one, for the purpose of accumulation; and subject thereto for the eldest son then living of the testator's daughter C. for life, remainder to his first and other sons in tail, with like remainders to the other living sons of C., with divers remainders over, and an ultimate remainder to the testator's right heirs and next of kin. The will then provided that such person or persons as should thereunder be entitled to an estate tail in possession in the real estate should not be absolutely entitled to the leasehold and personal estates until he, she, or they respectively should attain the age of twenty-one; and that the leasehold and personal estates should absolutely belong only to such person or persons as should first attain the age of twenty-one, and become entitled to an estate tail in possession in his real estate under the trusts therein aforesaid; and in the meantime the same leasehold and personal estates should remain subject to the trusts thereinbefore declared:—Held, that the words "in possession" in the proviso in the will did not mean the actual receipt of the rents and profits of the real estate; and that the proviso included only tenants in tail, by purchase, and was valid, and that the tenant in tail, entitled by purchase, who first attained the age of twenty-one, although in the lifetime of the tenant for life, was absolutely entitled (subject to his father's life interest) to the leasehold and personal estates. Holloway v. Webber, 37 L. J., Ch., 865; 6 L. R., Eq., 523; 17 W. R. 94; 19 L. T., N. S., 514.

5. Directions against Vesting under Twenty-one.

4. By a settlement in 1804, real estate was settled to the use of C., third Earl of Harrington, for life, with remainder to his first son, Lord Petersham, for life, remainder to the first and other sons successively of Lord Petersham, in tail male, with similar remainders in succession to the eight other sons of the third earl for life, and their respective first and other sons in tail male; remainder to the third earl in fee. By his will made in 1824 the third earl gave chattels upon trust "for the person or persons who for the time being should, under the limitations in the settlement, be in the actual possession of the estates, to the intent that the same chattels might be deemed heirlooms, to go along and for ever be enjoyed with the estates, so far as the rules of law and equity will permit, but so, nevertheless, as that the same chattels should not, as to the effect or purpose of transmission, vest absolutely in any person who under the settlement should become seised of or entitled to the estates for an estate of inheritance either in possession or reversion, or otherwise, unless such person should attain the age of twenty-one, or dying under that age should leave issue inheritable under the limitations in the settlement." The testator gave his residuary personal estate upon trusts for investment in lands to be settled to the same uses as those declared in the settlement of 1804. The first tenant in tail in possession died under twenty-one, within the period allowed by the law as to perpetuities:—Held, that the gift was not an executory bequest, and that the estate of the first tenant in tail was thereby terminated, but that there were no words which carried over the chattels in that event to any other tenant for life or tenant in tail, and that the chattels therefore passed by the residuary clause in the will. Harrington (Earl) v. Harrington (Countess), 40 L. J., Ch., 716; 5 L. R., H. L., 87. And life, with remainder to the first son of A. in tail male, with remainders over; and he gave his residuary personal estate in trust to lay it out in the purchase of 3*l*. per cent. bank annuities, and to pay the dividends "unto such person or persons as for the time being should by that his will be entitled to the rents and profits of his freehold hereditaments thereinbefore devised," with gifts over in case of the total failure of the estates tail limited by this will. If chattels are given to such person as shall be in possession of settled estates under the limitations of the settlor's will, a disruption of the limitations before the time, by an act not contemplated by the settlor, and over which he had no control, will not accelerate or affect the gift. A testator bequeathed plate for the use of his wife during her life, and after her death he gave the same, in the nature of an heirloom, to the person who, for the time being, should be in the actual possession and enjoyment of his freehold estates under the limitations of his will. 4. A testator, after dev estates to A. for life, with first and other son in tail, and to B. for life, and to his son several others, bequeathed personal chattels to trustees, i and suffer A. to receive the i thereof for his life, and a "to permit and suffer each several other persons aforesa estate for life in real estates limited, successively, and as shall become seised of said r estates under the aforesaid l of, to take and receive the r profits thereof, for and during and their natural life and li and from and after the dec of the said last-mentioned as shall become seised in m or if none of them shall so then from and after the dec A., upon trust to grant, ass

the chattels "to such person or persons as shall then become seised of the said real and freehold estates under any of the limitations aforesaid":—Held, that the chattels vested in a son of A., who was tenant in tail of the real estate, at the death of A., and did not vest in an elder son of A., a prior tenant in tail, who died in the lifetime of A., or remain in contingency until the death of the last of the successive tenants for life. Potts v. Potts, 9 Ir. Eq. R. 577; 3 J. & L. 353. Affirmed 1 H. L. Ca. 671.

1. A testatrix seised in fee of a messuage and mill, subject to the life estate of C., directed the same to be conveyed to the use of C. for life, with remainder to his first and other sons in tail, and directed her trustees to stand possessed of 2,000*l.* stock, upon trust to apply the dividends from time to time in the repairs of the messuage and mill at the request in writing of C., and after the death of C. upon the application or request in writing of the person or persons entitled under the limitations thereinbefore directed, to the end and intent that the stock, and the interest and dividends thereof, might be, and be continued as long as the rules of law and equity would permit, as a fund for keeping the messuage and mill at all times in good and substantial repair for the benefit of the person or persons who might from time to time be so in possession thereof or entitled thereto. The property was settled in accordance with the directions of the will, and the first tenant in tail died in the lifetime of C., without having barred the entail:—Held, that the person who then came into possession as tenant in tail was entitled to the fund, and not the executors of the first tenant in tail. Cox v. Sutton, 2 Jur., N. S., 733; 25 L. J., Ch., 845.

2. S., by will, gave 5,000*l.* to the eldest son of his late brother for life, with remainder upon trusts corresponding with the limitations made by A. of the C. estate in favour of his issue, but subject to an executory limitation over on the death under twenty-one, without issue then living, of any person who, under the said limitations of the C. estate, would be tenant in tail by purchase. A. had never made any settlement, but had registered according to the law of Scotland two deeds of entail of the C. estate, of which he was then tenant in tail in possession. A.'s eldest son, having executed a disentailing deed, and thereby become owner in fee of the C. estate, claimed the 5,000*l.* absolutely:—Held, that he had become absolutely entitled to the 5,000*l.* on the completion of the instrument of disentail. Schank v. Scott, 22 W. R. 513.

3. A testator devised and bequeathed real and personal estates on trust to invest the rents and profits and annual proceeds while any person beneficially interested in the real and personal estate, by virtue of the trusts afterwards declared, should be under twenty-one, for the purpose of accumulation; and subject thereto for the eldest son then living of the testator's daughter C. for life, remainder to his first and other sons in tail, with like remainders to the other living sons of C., with divers remainders over, and an ultimate remainder to the testator's right heirs and next of kin. The will then provided that such person or persons as should thereunder be entitled to an estate tail in possession in the real estate should not be absolutely entitled to the leasehold and personal estates until he, she, or they respectively should attain the age of twenty-one; and that the leasehold and personal estates should absolutely belong only to such person or persons as should first attain the age of twenty-one, and become entitled to an estate tail in possession in his real estate under the trusts therein aforesaid; and in the meantime the same leasehold and personal estates should remain subject to the trusts thereinbefore declared:—Held, that the words "in possession" in the proviso in the will did not mean the actual receipt of the rents and profits of the real estate; and that the proviso included only tenants in tail, by purchase, and was valid, and that the tenant in tail, entitled by purchase, who first attained the age of twenty-one, although in the lifetime of the tenant for life, was absolutely entitled (subject to his father's life interest) to the leasehold and personal estates. Holloway v. Webber, 37 L. J., Ch., 865; 6 L. R., Eq., 523; 17 W. R. 94; 19 L. T., N. S., 514.

5. Directions against Vesting under Twenty-one.

4. By a settlement in 1804, real estate was settled to the use of C., third Earl of Harrington, for life, with remainder to his first son, Lord Petersham, for life, remainder to the first and other sons successively of Lord Petersham, in tail male, with similar remainders in succession to the eight other sons of the third earl for life, and their respective first and other sons in tail male; remainder to the third earl in fee. By his will made in 1824 the third earl gave chattels upon trust "for the person or persons who for the time being should, under the limitations in the settlement, be in the actual possession of the estates, to the intent that the same chattels might be deemed heirlooms, to go along and for ever be enjoyed with the estates, so far as the rules of law and equity will permit, but so, nevertheless, as that the same chattels should not, as to the effect or purpose of transmission, vest absolutely in any person who under the settlement should become seised of or entitled to the estates for an estate of inheritance either in possession or reversion, or otherwise, unless such person should attain the age of twenty-one, or dying under that age should leave issue inheritable under the limitations in the settlement." The testator gave his residuary personal estate upon trusts for investment in lands to be settled to the same uses as those declared in the settlement of 1804. The first tenant in tail in possession died under twenty-one, within the period allowed by the law as to perpetuities:—Held, that the gift was not an executory bequest, and that the estate of the first tenant in tail was thereby terminated, but that there were no words which carried over the chattels in that event to any other tenant for life or tenant in tail, and that the chattels therefore passed by the residuary clause in the will. Harrington (Earl) v. Harrington (Countess), 40 L. J., Ch., 716; 5 L. R., H. L., 87. And

Held, also, that the proviso that no tenant in tail should take absolutely unless he attained twenty-one, was a condition inseparably annexed to the gift, so that any tenant in tail must take subject to it, and if the proviso was void the whole gift was void. Ib.

1. G. devised freeholds for the use of his nephew for life, with remainder to the use of his first and other sons in tail male, with successive remainders over for life, and remainders to the first and other sons of the successive tenants for life in tail male; and he bequeathed his residuary personal estate upon such trusts as were thereby declared concerning the devised freehold hereditaments, "or as near thereto as the rules of law and equity would permit; provided, nevertheless, that such residuary personal estate should not vest absolutely in any tenant in tail, unless such person should attain the age of twenty-one years":—Held, that the proviso merely narrowed the class who would have taken under the previous words of gift, and did not extend such class to tenants in tail by descent; and, therefore, the personalty vested only in tenants in tail by purchase, and the gift was not void for remoteness. Christie v. Gosling, 1 L. R., H. L., 279; 35 L. J., Ch., 667; 15 L. T., N. S., 40.

Held, also, that the words "as near as the rules of law and equity will permit," would not by their own force have controlled the construction. Ib.

6. Rights of Other Persons.

2. Limitation of personal chattels to go as heirloom with real estate. Chattels shall follow that estate into a contingent remainder. Gower v. Grosvenor, 5 Madd. 337.

Where testator himself refers to "the rules of law," the limitations ought to go as far as those rules will permit. Id. 348.

3. All limitations of personal estate may be good until one vests, carrying the whole interest. Brown v. Higgs, 4 Ves. 717.

4. Courts of equity will carry the limitation of a personal chattel, or trust of it, no further than the judges have done in the case of legal limitation of terms for years. Beauclerk v. Dormer, 2 Atk. 308.

5. Chattels devised as heirlooms to a certain house are removed by the tenant for life of that house to another, and are there taken in execution for a debt of the tenant for life. On a question whether these chattels were liable tobe so taken, it was held they were. But this was so held under the particular words of testator's will. Foley v. Burnell, 4 Bro. P. C. 319; Romilly's notes of cases, 1. Affirming 1 Bro. C. C. 274.

6. Testator, by his will, directed that certain chattels in his mansion house should be annexed thereto, and be inherited and enjoyed by the several persons who should succeed to his real estates under the limitations of his will. By a codicil, he limited his estates to certain other persons, and declared that those limitations should take effect in precedence to the limitations in his will:—Held, that the persons entitled under the limitations in the codicil were entitled to the direction respecting the chat Evans v. Evans, 17 Sim. 108;

Testator gave his freehold and copyhold estates and his personal estate to certain persons (whom he appointed his executors), in trust, out of his personal estate, and by sale or mortgage of his freehold and copyhold estates, to raise money sufficient to pay his debts, funeral expenses, and legacies, and, out of the rents and interest of so much of his real and personal estate as should not be sold or disposed of for those purposes, to pay certain annuities and such sums as his trustees should think sufficient for the maintenance of his son John and his children (if he should have any), and to accumulate the residue of the rents and interests during the life of John, and after John's decease, to stand seised of his real estates in trust for John's first son, and the heirs of the body of such first son successively as they should be in priority of birth, and for the several and respective heirs of the body and bodies of every such son, and, for default of such issue, for A. for life, with remainder to his sons in tail, with remainder to B. and his sons, and to C. and D. and their sons, in like manner, with remainder to his own right heirs for ever; and he declared that his trustees and executors should stand possessed of his personal estate after John's death, in trust for such person and persons, in the same order and succession and for such and the same estates and interest, as were thereby declared concerning his real estates, so far as the nature of the property, the rules of law and equity, the deaths of parties, and other contingencies would admit of. The testator died in 1780; his son John was his heir-at-law and customary heir. John, and A., B., C., D., died without issue:—Held, that the trusts subsequent to the trust for the first son of John were not void for remoteness, and that the ultimate trust of the personal estate, as well as of the freehold and copyhold estates, vested on the testator's death in his son John as his heir-at-law at his death. Ib.

1. The devise to J. W. and C., and their heirs in due succession as named, with usual limitations, gives an estate tail to the first taker, who having a son born alive, and since dead, is, as his personal representative, entitled to the personal estate absolutely. Stratford v. Powell, 1 Ball. & B. 1.

2. Upon the construction of a settlement, containing a direction that personalty should go as nearly as might be in the same course as the realty:—Held, that that direction was not modified by a subsequent clause purporting to be explanatory with reference to the personalty and the limitation of the realty to right heirs. Doncaster v. Doncaster, 2 Jur., N. S., 1066.

A settlement, on marriage, of real estate, upon trust for the intended wife for life, remainder to the husband for life, and, after the death of the survivor, "in trust for and to be released and conveyed unto" the children, as the parents or the survivor should appoint; in default, "in trust for and to be released and conveyed unto" the children, as tenants in common in tail; and in default of issue, if the wife should survive the husband, "in trust for and to be released and conveyed unto" the wife, "her heirs and assigns for ever." By the same deed personal property was assigned to the trustees, upon trust to pay the income and principal "to such person and persons, for such uses, ends, intents, and purposes, and in such manner and form, and subject to the same powers, provisoes, contingencies, declarations, and agreements, as were expressed concerning the payment by the trustees of the rents and profits of the real estate, and concerning their release and conveyance of the same, or as near thereto as circumstances and the nature of the case would admit":—Held, that this trust of the personalty was not rendered executory by reference to the direction to release and convey the real estate, such direction being merely superadded to a distinct declaration of trust of such real estate. S. C. 3 Kay & J. 96.

This construction was not altered by a proviso immediately following the limitation of the personal estate, that the ultimate limitation in favour of the heirs of the wife should, with respect to the personal estate, be construed to be for her next of kin; the meaning of such proviso being only, that if, by the failure of the preceding limitations, the real estate should at any time become vested in possession in the heirs of the wife, the personalty, which was settled upon corresponding trusts, should belong to her next of kin. Ib.

There was only one child of the marriage, who died an infant, in the lifetime of his father. On the death of the father:—Held, that such child took an absolute interest in the personalty, subject to open and let in other children, if any. Ib.

3. A testator bequeathed all his household furniture which should be in his capital messuage at his death, unto trustees to permit the same to be held and enjoyed as heirlooms with his messuage by the person entitled to the messuage under the will. The testator, who died in 1875, was, in 1874, the occupier of a house at Bath, which he had furnished. He ceased to occupy that house in 1874, and removed the furniture with the intention of its being placed in his capital messuage, which was in the occupation of a tenant. The tenant having declined to permit the furniture to be placed therein, it was, in consequence of such refusal, stored in farm buildings belonging to the testator, where it was at his death:—Held, that the furniture passed under the bequest. Rawlinson v. Rawlinson, 3 L. R., Ch. D., 302.

4. A testator devised an estate in strict settlement; he also gave a fund in trust to keep the estate in repair for a term of years, and to pay the surplus to the person for the time being entitled to the land. The testator prohibited any trees from being cut during the term, and deprived any person so doing from any benefit of the fund. At the end of the term, the fund was to go to the person in possession of the estate, if a descendant of either of his sons; otherwise to the descendants of his brothers and sisters:—Held, that by barring the entail the persons became immediately entitled to the fund. Re Colson's Trust, 2 W. R. 111; 1 Kay 133; 23 L. J., Ch., 155; 2 Eq. Rep. 257.

5. A father devised all his real estate, subject to certain settlements, to his eldest son, who was also residuary legatee, in tail male, with remainders over, and bequeathed plate, etc., "to go and remain as heirlooms, together with my estates":—Held, that the son took only a life interest in the chattels bequeathed as heirlooms. Robinson v. Robinson, 33 L. T., N. S., 663.

4. Leaseholds, specifically bequeathed to married women successively for life, for their separate use, with remainder to infants, proved damnosa hæreditas. The Court decreed a sale notwithstanding the executors had so far assented to the bequest as to put the first tenant for life into possession. Lonsdale (Earl) v. Berchtoldt (Countess), 3 Kay & J. 185; 3 Jur., N. S., 328.

And the second tenant for life, who had declined the property in specie:—Held, nevertheless, entitled to a life interest in the proceeds of the sale, and that without such life interest contributing to the charges on the estate which accrued since she became entitled in possession. Ib.

5. The Court has no jurisdiction to order a sale of heirlooms which are settled in strict settlement, simply on the ground that a sale will be for the benefit of all parties interested. D'Eyncourt v. Gregory, 3 L. R., Ch. D., 635; 45 L. J., Ch., 741; 25 W. R. 6.

But where in an administration suit a strong case was made for the sale of heirlooms settled by the will, liberty was given to take proceedings for obtaining a private Act, and to apply in the suit as to the costs of such proceedings if they should prove unsuccessful. Ib.

6. The Court has jurisdiction to order a sale of heirlooms apart from the land to which they are attached for the purpose of paying off mortgages, and will do so at the instance of a tenant for life where satisfied that it will be for the benefit of the parties interested that they should be sold, even where there are infant tenants in tail in remainder. Fane v. Fane, 2 L. R., Ch. D., 711; 46 L. J., Ch., 174.

II. LEASEHOLDS SETTLED ON TRUSTS CORRESPONDING WITH USES OF FREEHOLDS.

7. General rule is, that leasehold estate limited with freehold vests absolutely on birth of first tenant in tail, subject to intention declared or implied, that they shall go together as long as the rules of law and equity permit. Southampton (Lord) v. Hertford (Lady), 2 Ves. & B. 63; 2 Rose 63.

P. C. 204.

1. A testator devised his freehold estates in Worcestershire to his third son and his issue male, with remainder to his fourth son and his issue male, in strict settlement; and he devised his freehold estates in Cardiganshire to his fourth son and his issue male, with remainder to his fifth son and his issue male, in strict settlement. By a shifting clause it was provided that if his fourth son, or any issue male of his fourth son, should become actually entitled to the possession of his Worcestershire estates, and if his fifth son or any of his issue male should be then living, the limitations of his Cardiganshire estates in favour of his fourth son, or his issue male, should absolutely cease. He bequeathed his leasehold estates in Cardiganshire to trustees upon such trusts as, regard being had to the difference in the tenure of the premises respectively, would best or most nearly correspond with the uses declared of the Cardiganshire freeholds. The third son died a bachelor in the lifetime of the son, who thereupon entered into the possession of the Worcestershire estates:—Held, that the fifth son was entitled to the rents and profits of the Cardiganshire leaseholds, because they were given upon an executory trust; and, assuming a shifting clause, if applied verbatim to the leaseholds, to be bad for remoteness, it ought to be so modified as to render it free from that objection. Miles v. Harford, 12 L. R., Ch. D., 691.

Held, also, that the shifting clause was divisible, and in the events which happened was not bad for remoteness. Ib.

2. A testator, after giving several legacies, directed his trustees to invest dividends, and rents, and profits, and the annual proceeds of his real and personal estates, during the time that any person beneficially interested in those estates should be under twenty-one, in order to accumulate the personal estate. They were then to hold his real and personal estates for his first grandson, the eldest son of his daughter, then living, for his life, and after his death for the first and other sons of that grandson in tail, remainder over to the other sons of the daughter. After other remainders there was an ultimate trust for the testator's right heirs and next of kin according to the nature and tenure of the trust estates respectively. Then followed this proviso: "I declare it to be my will and meaning that such person as shall under this my will be entitled to an estate tail in possession in my real estate shall not be absolutely entitled to my leasehold and personal estates until he shall attain the age of twenty-one, and that my leasehold and personal estates shall absolutely belong only to such person as shall first attain the age of twenty-one, and become entitled to an estate tail in possession in my real estate under the trusts aforesaid." The eldest grandson was in possession of the life estate—his eldest son died under twenty-one without issue—but his second son attained that age during his father's lifetime:—Held, that this proviso was not a new and independent disposition, but a qualification of all the preceding limitations. Martelli v. Holloway, 5 L. R., H. L., 532; 42 L. J., Ch., 26.

Held, also, that the second son fulfilled all the conditions of the proviso, and was absolutely entitled to the personal estates. Ib.

And the second tenant for life, who had declined the property in specie:—Held, nevertheless, entitled to a life interest in the proceeds of the sale, and that without such life interest contributing to the charges on the estate which accrued since she became entitled in possession. Ib.

5. The Court has no jurisdiction to order a sale of heirlooms which are settled in strict settlement, simply on the ground that a sale will be for the benefit of all parties interested. D'Eyncourt v. Gregory, 3 L. R., Ch. D., 635; 45 L. J., Ch., 741; 25 W. R. 6.

But where in an administration suit a strong case was made for the sale of heirlooms settled by the will, liberty was given to take proceedings for obtaining a private Act, and to apply in the suit as to the costs of such proceedings if they should prove unsuccessful. Ib.

6. The Court has jurisdiction to order a sale of heirlooms apart from the land to which they are attached for the purpose of paying off mortgages, and will do so at the instance of a tenant for life where satisfied that it will be for the benefit of the parties interested that they should be sold, even where there are infant tenants in tail in remainder. Fane v. Fane, 2 L. R., Ch. D., 711; 46 L. J., Ch., 174.

1. A testator devised his freehold estates in Worcestershire to his third son and his issue male, with remainder to his fourth son and his issue male, in strict settlement; and he devised his freehold estates in Cardiganshire to his fourth son and his issue male, with remainder to his fifth son and his issue male, in strict settlement. By a shifting clause it was provided that if his fourth son, or any issue male of his fourth son, should become actually entitled to the possession of his Worcestershire estates, and if his fifth son or any of his issue male should be then living, the limitations of his Cardiganshire estates in favour of his fourth son, or his issue male, should absolutely cease. He bequeathed his leasehold estates in Cardiganshire to trustees upon such trusts as, regard being had to the difference in the tenure of the premises respectively, would best or most nearly correspond with the uses declared of the Cardiganshire freeholds. The third son died a bachelor in the lifetime of the son, who thereupon entered into the possession of the Worcestershire estates:—Held, that the fifth son was entitled to the rents and profits of the Cardiganshire leaseholds, because they were given upon an executory trust; and, assuming a shifting clause, if applied verbatim to the leaseholds, to be bad for remoteness, it ought to be so modified as to render it free from that objection. Miles v. Harford, 12 L. R., Ch. D., 691.

Held, also, that the shifting clause was divisible, and in the events which happened was not bad for remoteness. Ib.

2. A testator, after giving several legacies, directed his trustees to invest dividends, and rents, and profits, and the annual proceeds of his real and personal estates, during the time that any person beneficially interested in those estates should be under twenty-one, in order to accumulate the personal estate. They were then to hold his real and personal estates for his first grandson, the eldest son of his daughter, then living, for his life, and after his death for the first and other sons of that grandson in tail, remainder over to the other sons of the daughter. After other remainders there was an ultimate trust for the testator's right heirs and next of kin according to the nature and tenure of the trust estates respectively. Then followed this proviso: "I declare it to be my will and meaning that such person as shall under this my will be entitled to an estate tail in possession in my real estate shall not be absolutely entitled to my leasehold and personal estates until he shall attain the age of twenty-one, and that my leasehold and personal estates shall absolutely belong only to such person as shall first attain the age of twenty-one, and become entitled to an estate tail in possession in my real estate under the trusts aforesaid." The eldest grandson was in possession of the life estate—his eldest son died under twenty-one without issue—but his second son attained that age during his father's lifetime:—Held, that this proviso was not a new and independent disposition, but a qualification of all the preceding limitations. Martelli v. Holloway, 5 L. R., H. L., 532; 42 L. J., Ch., 26.

Held, also, that the second son fulfilled all the conditions of the proviso, and was absolutely entitled to the personal estates. Ib.

I. WHAT ARE, AND CONSIDERATION.

4. Conveyance by the king's tenant in chief, in consideration of natural affection, to collateral relations, is not within 32 Hen. 8, c. 1, as conveyance to children's children is. Dyer, 286, pl. 46.

Although gift executed in life of donor be to a stranger, of the entire land, yet the king shall have the ward of premier seisin of third part. Ib.

5. Wife's chose in action, assigned by husband to unprovided child by former wife, natural love and affection recited as consideration, not good. Becket v. Becket, Dick 340. But see Clayton v. Wilton (Earl), cited 3 Madd. 302.

6. A conveyance of a reversionary interest from an uncle to a nephew, under circumstances of gross inadequacy of price and alleged fraud, attempted to be set aside after forty years; but held to be supported by the consideration of natural love and affection, inserted in the witnessing part of the deed, although not expressed in the recital. Quære, as to the effect of length of time in such a case, operating by way of evidence. Whalley v. Whalley, 1 Meriv. 436; 3 Bligh 1.

7. A post-nuptial agreement, in writing, by which a father undertook to make a provision for a child, will be specifically executed, being a contract founded on a meritorious consideration. Ellis v. Nimmo, Ll. & G. temp. 8. A different consideration from what is expressed in deed not to be averred; and though consideration of blood be a good consideration, yet that not to be regarded, if money or the grant of an annuity be expressed in the deed. Also a good objection, that the grant is to two and only one is of kin. Clarkson v. Hanway, 2 P. W. 204.

9. A grant of an annuity to the grantor's sister, though expressed to be made for natural love and affection, may be proved to have been made in consideration of her marriage, and will entitle her to rank as a specialty creditor of the grantor. Tanner v. Byne, 1 Sim. 160; 5 L. J., Ch., 125.

1. Settlement after marriage of a portion paid is on good consideration, and equal to one made before marriage. Ramsden v. Hylton, 2 Ves. 305.

2. Feme seised of a copyhold on marriage of her daughter to J., surrenders it to the use of J. and his intended wife, and the heirs of their bodies; remainder to J. in fee. The marriage takes effect, the husband signs a writing, whereby he owns that the limitation of remainder in fee to him was a mistake, and that it was intended to be to his wife; and accordingly covenants to stand seised of the remainder in fee, in trust for the wife in fee: this is not a mere voluntary covenant, and equity will compel the performance of it. Randall v. Randall, 2 P. W. 464.

3. Where A. agrees to make a provision for a volunteer, in consideration of B.'s doing the like, the contract is not voluntary. Bentley v. Mackay, 31 Beav. 143.

4. A contract for sale for value, which had been entered into by a vendor upwards of ninety years of age, was upon his death resisted by his devisee, first, on the grounds of his incapacity and of undue influence on the part of the purchaser (the evidence as to which, however, entirely failed); and, secondly, on the ground that the vendor had, by a deed executed by him before the date of the contract, conveyed the property in fee to the devisee, his great-nephew. The deed was expressed to be in consideration of natural love and affection, and contained a covenant by the grantee to "commence" a house upon the property according to plans to be furnished by the grantor; and that if the grantor failed to furnish such plans, then the grantee "would build such a house as he, the grantee, should think fit." No house was ever commenced, and the deed contained no proviso for re-entry or other penalties for breach of covenant. Upon a bill by the purchaser for specific performance:—Held, that the deed was purely voluntary, there being an absence of any consideration by way of payment or benefit moving from the grantee to the grantor, and specific performance decreed accordingly. Rosher v. Williams, 20 L. R., Eq., 210; 44 L. J., Ch., 419; 32 L. T. 387; 23 W. R. 561.

In deciding whether a deed is voluntary or not, the Court will anxiously lay hold of any circumstances showing a consideration moving from the grantee to the grantor. Ib.

5. Where property is in the hands of trustees for the parties entitled to it, and there is no adverse claim after the death of the parties in possession, a communication to one of the cestuis que trustent in remainder of his interest in the property, is not a consideration upon which a conveyance of a portion of the property can be sustained as the sale of a secret, for in such a case the disclosure is a nullity. Reynell v. Sprye, Sprye v. Reynell, 8 Hare 222; 21 L. 10. By a private Act of Pa in 1719, lands were annexed t S. so that no earl could aliena the term of his own life, with favour of Protestant earls. sanction to the purchase, stating that the purchase-money was much less than the hereditaments were fairly worth, and that it was a very advantageous purchase whereon to invest 1,000*l.*; and by the order made on the petition, the value and the propriety of the purchase were referred to the Master, who reported in favour of the purchase. The report was confirmed by the Court, and a conveyance was executed for the purpose of carrying out the contract, which, Earl Charles being then dead, was adopted by his successor, Earl John. By this conveyance, other estates belonging to Earl John, of the value of 40,000*l.*, and not comprised in the contract, were settled to the uses of the Act:—Held, that the transaction was a fraud upon the Act of Parliament, its real nature being, not a bonâ fide sale and purchase for valuable consideration, but a voluntary settlement; and a succeeding earl having disentailed and devised the estates so settled, his devisees were entitled thereto on restoring 1,000*l.* to the trust fund. Howard v. Shrewsbury (Earl), 36 L. 1. A person being in prison on a charge of felony, in order to avoid a forfeiture of his property in the event of a conviction, executed a voluntary deed, assigning his personal estate to his brother absolutely. He was tried, found not guilty, on the ground of insanity, and ordered to be imprisoned as a lunatic during her Majesty's pleasure:—Held, that the deed, being without consideration, and executed by an insane person under a total misapprehension, was inoperative, and that the representatives of the brother took no interest under it. Manning v. Gill, 13 L. R., Eq., 485; 41 L. J., Ch., 736; 26 L. T. 14; 20 W. R. 357; 12 Cox C. C. 274.

4. Of two conveyances of property, the first held to be for valuable consideration, the second voluntary; and even if both were voluntary, the first held to be good and irrevocable by a subsequent voluntary settlement. Scott v. Scott, 11 Ir. Eq. R. 487.

5. A. makes a voluntary settlement on her nephew, keeping the deed in her power, in which settlement there is no power of revocation; afterwards, one secretly, and by fraud on behalf of the nephew, gets an attested copy of this settlement, and then the party who made the settlement burns it, and settles the premises on another nephew. The first nephew's bill to establish the copy of the first settlement is dismissed with costs; upon which the second nephew claiming under his settlement, brings a bill to have the attested copy delivered up, and has a decree for it; because such copy has been indirectly gained. Naldred v. Gilham, 1 P. W. 577.

6. A. made a voluntary settlement of lands (subject to an annuity of 100*l.* to his youngest son), in trust for his eldest son and his heirs, which settlement did not contain any power of revocation. The eldest son being dead, the father made another settlement of the same lands, to the use of himself for life, remainder to his younger son for life, remainder to trustees to preserve, etc., remainder to first and other sons to youngest son in tail. The first deed came into the hands of the eldest son's heir, and the other to the second son, who brought a bill to set aside the first; both sons having been otherwise provided for, it was held, that though both deeds were voluntary, yet the consideration of being a younger child was not sufficient to set aside the first deed. Clavering v. Clavering, 7 Bro. P. C. 410; 2 Vern. 473; Pre. Ch. 235.

7. Where a father by a voluntary deed conveyed to trustees upon trust to allow him the rents and profits for life, then to the use of his son. He afterwards on the marriage of his son executed another deed, by which he gave up the rents and profits to the son, and after certain other limitations reserved the ultimate reversion to himself:—Held, that there being no evidence to show that settlor considered the former deed as still subsisting after the execution of the latter, the limitation in the latter did not prevail over the former, and that the reversion belonged to those claiming under the son and not to those claiming under the settlor. Croker v. Martin, 1 Dow N. 8. A single lady, having under a will a general power of appointment, to be exercised whether covert or sole, over a fund in the hands of trustees, executes an appointment upon certain trusts, and containing no power of revocation. Afterwards he executes a deed revoking the former one, and appointing the fund to trustees upon such trusts as she, whether covert or sole, should appoint. She then marries, and after the marriage she executes an appointment declaring the trusts upon which the trustees of the last preceding deed should hold the fund, being trusts for the benefit of herself, her husband, and children. The fund had remained all the while in the hands of the original trustees of the will:—Held, on a suit to establish the trusts of the last deed, that the first appointment was void as imperfect and voluntary, and the fund ordered to be transferred upon the trusts of the last deed. (Sloane v. Cadogan, Sugd. on Vendors, App. 9th edit., No. 26, commented on.) Beatson v. Beatson, 12 Sim. 281.

9. A., by voluntary deed, assigns property to B., in trust for A. for life, and then for C. and her children. Subsequently A. cancels that deed, and, assuming to be absolute owner, assigns it to D., upon trust for B. absolutely. D. marries B., both of them joining in a deed, whereby that property, together with property of D., was conveyed to trustees for D. and B. for life, remainder for their children, D. having no notice of the previous trust in favour of C. and her children:—Held, that the voluntary deed was not revocable, and that this was a breach of trust on the part of B., for which B. and her husband D. were responsible, and that there should be a reconveyance of the property to new trustees for C. and her children. Lanham v. Pirie, 3 Jur., N. S., 704.

III. CONFIRMATION.

By Will.] 1. A father makes a voluntary settlement to trustees and their heirs in trust to receive the profits, and to put them out for the increase of the fortunes of his daughters A. and B., and also executes a bond to the same trustees, to pay them 1,000*l.* at a certain day in trust for the said daughters, but kept both deed and bond by him till his death, and received the profits; and then by will, taking notice of the bond, gives legacies to A. and B. in satisfaction thereof, and the surplus of his separate estate to his said two daughters, and his four younger children: yet A. and B., electing to have the benefit of the settlement and bond, decreed for them, and an account of the profits from the date of the settlement, and the 1,000*l.* with interest from the time it was payable by the bond. Barlow v. Heneage, Pre. P. C. 496.

3. Where a settlement, incomplete as to part of the property comprised in it, is subsequently confirmed by the will of the settlor, the confirmation perfects the settlement, but as a testamentary instrument, so that the doctrines of ademption and lapse apply. Bizzey v. Flight, 3 L. R., Ch. D., 1269; 45 L. J., Ch., 852; 24 W. R. 957.

H., by a voluntary settlement, assigned to trustees several mortgage debts, shares in a bank, and some furniture, and directed the trustees to hold the premises and certain consols which had been previously transferred to them, upon trust for herself for life, and then, as to part of the trust premises, for specified beneficiaries; and as to the residue, for F. F. died in the lifetime of the settlor, who in her lifetime received some of the mortgage debts (the others being received by the trustees), and died without having duly transferred the bank shares, but having by her will confirmed the settlement. The settlement being valid as to the consols, the mortgage debts received by the trustees, and the furniture, but incomplete as to the mortgage debts received by the settlor and the bank shares:—Held, that the confirmation could not operate as to the mortgage debts received by the settlor; but that, notwithstanding that the settlement had not been admitted to probate, the confirmation of it by the will, which had been proved, perfected the settlement with regard to the bank shares as a testamentary instrument, and operated as a specific bequest of them; and that the shares therein of cestuis que trustent under the settlement, who predeceased the settlor, lapsed in favour of the residuary legatee under this will. Ib.

D., settled a part of the persons so named, and reser power of appointing the rema property amongst such sever named, which, in default of given to those several pers afterwards discovered that there were other descendants in existence of C. D., who had been omitted, and to remedy the omission he appointed a part of the fund to an object of the power, upon his executing bonds, for the payment to the persons newly discovered of the amount when received:—Held, that the appointment was void, and that the Court would not, in a suit to have the rights of the parties to the appointed fund declared, determine whether the case was such as to entitle the parties to have the settlement reformed according to the intention of the settlor. Lee v. Fernie, 1 Beav. 483.

1. A volunteer, under a settlement declaring the trusts of property placed in the hands of trustees, is entitled to file a bill to have an error rectified, even though the effect of the error should be to carry back the fund to the original settlor. Thompson v. Whitmore, 1 John. & H. 268.

2. If a voluntary deed fails to carry into effect the intentions of the parties, it cannot be reformed, except with the consent of the donor. Phillipson v. Kerry, 32 Beav. 628.

3. The Court will not rectify a voluntary deed, so as to carry out the alleged intentions of the parties, unless all the parties consent; if any object, the deed must wholly stand or wholly fall. Brown v. Kennedy, 9 Jur., N. S., 1163; 33 L. J., Ch., 71; 12 W. R. 224; 9 L. T., N. S., 302.

A voluntary deed cannot be reformed in equity, as against the grantor. S. C. 33 Beav. 133.

4. The circumstances under which a voluntary settlement may be rectified, considered. Lister v. Hodgson, 4 L. R., Eq., 30; 15 W. R. 547.

Where a sum of money was, without valuable consideration, placed in the hands of a trustee, to be held upon certain trusts then declared; and it was agreed that the transaction should be ratified and completed by the execution of a deed, and a deed was afterwards prepared and executed, which was wholly inconsistent with the trusts declared by parol; the Court ordered such deed to be delivered up and cancelled, and the money repaid to the settlor, who had executed the deed in ignorance of its legal effect. Ib.

5. A father being seised in fee of a large estate, and having a small estate for life with remainder to his son in tail male, the father and son executed a deed of conveyance to the father in fee of the small estate, and a deed of settlement of the large estate to the use of the father for life, with remainder to the son for life, with remainder to the eldest and other sons of the son successively in tail male. The deed contained no powers of jointuring widows or of raising portions for younger children. A joint power of revocation appeared in the draft as originally prepared by counsel, but had been struck out. The father and son had each a wife and a large family, and each declared that had he been aware of the effect of the deed he would not have executed it:—Held, that under the circumstances the deed must be rectified by adding a power of revocation, and with the plaintiff's consent it was directed that a new settlement, with all proper powers, should be made under the direction of the Court. Welman v. Welman, 15 L. R., Ch. D., 570; 49 L. J., Ch., 736; 43 L. T. 145.

Held, also, that the settlement was voluntary as regarded all persons other than the plaintiffs. Ib.

10. Voluntary settlement, without a power of revocation, shall bind the party, and shall not be defeated by a subsequent will. Villers v. Beaumont, 1 Vern. 100.

11. Settlement of leasehold estates is not revoked by subsequent assignment by trustee to settlor entitled for life, or by the will of the latter; no intention to revoke appearing, and the terms of a power of revocation not being complied with. Ellison v. Ellison, 6 Ves. 656.

12. A father, tenant for life, with remainders to his son, joined with the son in executing a post-nuptial settlement, by which the father and the son assigned the lands to a trustee in trust for the father for life, subject to an annuity for the son; and after the father's death in trust for the son, subject to a jointure (charged by the pre-existing deed), and charged with a sum for portions of the younger children of the father. The father and son afterwards joined in a mortgage which did not notice this settlement: it contained covenants for title, but not against incumbrances:—Held, that the settlement as regarded the provisions for the younger children was not voluntary or void as against the the mortgagee, nor revocable by the father and son; and, even if it was revocable, was not revoked by the mortgage. Bennett v. Bernard, 10 Ir. Eq. R. 584.

III. CONFIRMATION.

By Will.] 1. A father makes a voluntary settlement to trustees and their heirs in trust to receive the profits, and to put them out for the increase of the fortunes of his daughters A. and B., and also executes a bond to the same trustees, to pay them 1,000*l.* at a certain day in trust for the said daughters, but kept both deed and bond by him till his death, and received the profits; and then by will, taking notice of the bond, gives legacies to A. and B. in satisfaction thereof, and the surplus of his separate estate to his said two daughters, and his four younger children: yet A. and B., electing to have the benefit of the settlement and bond, decreed for them, and an account of the profits from the date of the settlement, and the 1,000*l.* with interest from the time it was payable by the bond. Barlow v. Heneage, Pre. Ch. 211.

2. Where will recites and refers to a voluntary deed, which does not appear after the testator's death, but is, by a verdict of jury, declared to have existed at the time of such death, this reference and recital in the will shall establish the deed, and it shall be considered as incorporated with and constituting part of the will. Healey v. Copley, 7 Bro. P. C. 496.

3. Where a settlement, incomplete as to part of the property comprised in it, is subsequently confirmed by the will of the settlor, the confirmation perfects the settlement, but as a testamentary instrument, so that the doctrines of ademption and lapse apply. Bizzey v. Flight, 3 L. R., Ch. D., 1269; 45 L. J., Ch., 852; 24 W. R. 957.

H., by a voluntary settlement, assigned to trustees several mortgage debts, shares in a bank, and some furniture, and directed the trustees to hold the premises and certain consols which had been previously transferred to them, upon trust for herself for life, and then, as to part of the trust premises, for specified beneficiaries; and as to the residue, for F. F. died in the lifetime of the settlor, who in her lifetime received some of the mortgage debts (the others being received by the trustees), and died without having duly transferred the bank shares, but having by her will confirmed the settlement. The settlement being valid as to the consols, the mortgage debts received by the trustees, and the furniture, but incomplete as to the mortgage debts received by the settlor and the bank shares:—Held, that the confirmation could not operate as to the mortgage debts received by the settlor; but that, notwithstanding that the settlement had not been admitted to probate, the confirmation of it by the will, which had been proved, perfected the settlement with regard to the bank shares as a testamentary instrument, and operated as a specific bequest of them; and that the shares therein of cestuis que trustent under the settlement, who predeceased the settlor, lapsed in favour of the residuary legatee under this will. Ib.

afterwards discovered that there were other descendants in existence of C. D., who had been omitted, and to remedy the omission he appointed a part of the fund to an object of the power, upon his executing bonds, for the payment to the persons newly discovered of the amount when received:—Held, that the appointment was void, and that the Court would not, in a suit to have the rights of the parties to the appointed fund declared, determine whether the case was such as to entitle the parties to have the settlement reformed according to the intention of the settlor. Lee v. Fernie, 1 Beav. 483.

1. A volunteer, under a settlement declaring the trusts of property placed in the hands of trustees, is entitled to file a bill to have an error rectified, even though the effect of the error should be to carry back the fund to the original settlor. Thompson v. Whitmore, 1 John. & H. 268.

2. If a voluntary deed fails to carry into effect the intentions of the parties, it cannot be reformed, except with the consent of the donor. Phillipson v. Kerry, 32 Beav. 628.

3. The Court will not rectify a voluntary deed, so as to carry out the alleged intentions of the parties, unless all the parties consent; if any object, the deed must wholly stand or wholly fall. Broun v. Kennedy, 9 Jur., N. S., 1163; 33 L. J., Ch., 71; 12 W. R. 224; 9 L. T., N. S., 302.

A voluntary deed cannot be reformed in equity, as against the grantor. S. C. 33 Beav. 133.

4. The circumstances under which a voluntary settlement may be rectified, considered. Lister v. Hodgson, 4 L. R., Eq., 30; 15 W. R. 547.

Where a sum of money was, without valuable consideration, placed in the hands of a trustee, to be held upon certain trusts then declared; and it was agreed that the transaction should be ratified and completed by the execution of a deed, and a deed was afterwards prepared and executed, which was wholly inconsistent with the trusts declared by parol; the Court ordered such deed to be delivered up and cancelled, and the money repaid to the settlor, who had executed the deed in ignorance of its legal effect. Ib.

5. A father being seised in fee of a large estate, and having a small estate for life with remainder to his son in tail male, the father and son executed a deed of conveyance to the father in fee of the small estate, and a deed of settlement of the large estate to the use of the father for life, with remainder to the son for life, with remainder to the eldest and other sons of the son successively in tail male. The deed contained no powers of jointuring widows or of raising portions for younger children. A joint power of revocation appeared in the draft as originally prepared by counsel, but had been struck out. The father and son had each a wife and a large family, and each declared that had he been aware of the effect of the deed he would not have executed it:—Held, that under the circumstances the deed must be rectified by adding a power of revocation, and with the plaintiff's consent it was directed that a new settlement, with all proper powers, should be made under the direction of the Court. Welman v. Welman, 15 L. R., Ch. D., 570; 49 L. J., Ch., 736; 43 L. T. 145.

Held, also, that the settlement was voluntary as regarded all persons other than the plaintiffs. Ib.

12. The father and son afterwards joined in a mortgage which did not notice this settlement: it contained covenants for title, but not against incumbrances:—Held, that the settlement as regarded the provisions for the younger children was not voluntary or void as against the the mortgagee, nor revocable by the father and son; and, even if it was revocable, was not revoked by the mortgage. Bennett v. Bernard, 10 Ir. 2. Retention or Cancellation of Deed by Settlor.

1. W. made a secret conveyance of several estates to his daughter who was married, and had had a portion and was jointured. He kept possession of the estates, and of the deeds, and afterwards by will devised the estates:—Held, the devise good, the conveyance being kept secret, and he continuing in the possession of the estate. There was no evidence that he made the conveyance to avoid being sheriff of London, by putting the legal interest out of himself, and thinking by that means he may swear to his want of qualification, but it appeared he did not take the oath, but paid the fine for not serving the office. Birch v. Blagrave, Ambl. 264.

2. If a parent make a voluntary conveyance in trust for his children, and keep it in his own power, or in the hands of his agent, and this is got from him, it ought not to bind him; but where a feme, having issue by her first husband, makes a suitable provision for them before her treaty for a second marriage, this is good, and not liable to be avoided by a second husband. Cotton v. King, 2 P. W. 358; Mos. 259.

3. A voluntary deed in favour of younger children, though retained in the possession of the grantor, and afterwards destroyed by him, established against legatees. Sear v. Ashwell, 3 Swan. 411. n.

4. Party executing a voluntary deed, is not concluded by the legal ceremonies of formal execution. If he retains it in his custody he shows a plain intent not to divest himself of power over it, but to hold it just as revocable as a will; and whatever words he uses, that intent must determine its character. Uniacke v. Giles, 2 Moll. 268.

A voluntary deed, if perfect, will be executed after the death of the grantor, because, between the executor and the donee, there is no preferable equity. Id. 265.

If a voluntary deed is regularly executed, and delivered over to a trustee, and so put out of the control of the party, showing the design to divest the power of revocation, the party is bound, and the person intended to be benefited by that deed would have a right to come into this court against the trustee, to call upon him to secure the deed, and deposit it so as to be available for him. Id. 267.

A. executes a voluntary deed, assigning a chose in action to a trustee for her nephew, to take effect at her death, which she retains in possession. Her nephew, knowing of the disposition, borrows 400*l.* from her, and arranges with the trustee that so much is to be deducted from the sum assigned by the deed upon the death of A.; but there was no evidence that A. was privy to that arrangement. Upon a bill filed against the personal representative of A., who was the trustee in the deed, by the nephew, to set it up, A. having afterwards destroyed the instrument, and executed a new one, giving over the interest to another person, the wife of the trustee:—Held, that whether it contained a power of revocation or not, and however formally executed, the retention of the deed in the custody of the donor made it revocable, and the bill was dismissed, reversing a former decree in favour of the nephew, but without costs. An equity general question might be 400*l.* if it could have been s privy to the arrangement tou ment of that sum. Id. 257.

11. A settlement whereby to a trustee to the use of the settlor for life, and afterwards in trust for volunteers, and which is not communicated to the trustee until after the settlor's death, is valid, notwithstanding the disclaimer of the trustee. A power to appoint new trustees contained in the indenture is therefore exercisable. Jones v. Jones, 31 L. T. 535; 23 W. R. 1.

3. Settlements contemplating a Future Marriage.

1. A man unmarried cannot recall a voluntary trust deed, which he executes for the benefit of future children, nor can he relieve himself from a provision in the conveyance to trustee, under which the income of the trust property is to be paid to him at the discretion of a third person. Petre v. Espinasse, 2 Myl. & K. 496.

2. A single woman, not immediately contemplating marriage, transfers a sum of stock, to which she was absolutely entitled, to trustees, upon trust to pay the dividends to her until she should marry; and after her marriage, upon trust to pay the dividends to her separate use for her life, and after her decease to pay the same to her husband for his life, or until his bankruptcy, and after his decease or bankruptcy, in trust for the children of the settlor; and if no child, for such person or persons as she should by deed or will appoint, and in default of appointment, upon trust for her next of kin. The settlement is irrevocable. Bill v. Cureton, 2 Myl. & K. 503; 4 L. J., N. S., Ch., 98.

3. Settlement in contemplation of a marriage which never took effect. A feme sole in contemplation of marriage with A. B. settled a certain fund upon trust for herself until the solemnisation (if any) of her marriage; or in case no such marriage should be solemnised, and after the solemnisation (if any) of the same marriage, upon trust for herself and her children. The fund was transferred to the trustees, but the intended marriage did not take effect, and the woman married another person:—Held, on the construction of the settlement, that it applied to any marriage, and that she could not revoke the settlement previous to her marriage; and that the trustees had committed a breach of trust for which they were answerable. M'Donell v. Hesilrige, 16 Beav. 346; 1 W. R. 71; 22 L. J., Ch., 342; 16 Jur. 1148.

See also XII. II. 2 ante.

4. Omission of Power of Revocation.

4. A voluntary settlement, executed by the settlor when he was, or was supposed to be, in extremis, was set aside, on the ground that it did not reserve to him, as it ought to have done, a power of revocation. A settlement on his family by a person in extremis, and not containing a power of revocation, set aside, the Court being of opinion that it was executed in expectation of his immediate death, but not with the intention that it should be operative in case of his recovery. Forshaw v. Welsby, 30 Beav. 243; 30 L. J., Ch., 331; 9 W. R. 225; 4 L. T., N. S., 170; 7 Jur., N. S., 299.

5. A settlement by an aunt on her nephew in fee of all her real estates, reserving a life estate only to herself, without any consideration except a covenant by the nephew to pay charges on the property after her death, and without any power of revocation, upheld, even as a voluntary settlement, it appearing that she had had the deed sufficiently explained to her before she executed it, that she sufficiently understood its nature and effect when she executed it, and that she intended when she executed it that it should operate and be effective according to its purport and tenor, and there being no ground for believing that she consented to execute or did execute it through or under any fraud or misrepresentation or undue influence, or by means or reason of any promise made to her, or in reliance on any promise. Toker v. Toker, 3 De G. J. & S. 487; 8 L. T., N. S., 777; 32 L. J., Ch., 322. Affirming 31 Beav. 629; 9 Jur., N. S., 370; 8 L. T., N. S., 525.

In such cases the evidence in support of the validity of the impeached deed must be clear and decisive. Ib.

The absence from a voluntary settlement of a power of revocation reserved to the settlor, is, in determining the validity of the impeached settlement, only a circumstance to be taken into account in connection with the other circumstances of the case. Ib.

The absence in the like case of advice given to the settlor as to the insertion of a power of revocation stands on the same footing. Ib.

6. The absence of a power of revocation is a ground upon which a voluntary deed will be set aside at the suit of a subsequent purchaser for value, though there be no trace of fraud or undue influence, if it appears that the propriety of reserving the power of revocation was not impressed upon the grantor. Mountford v. Keene, 19 W. R. 708.

An old man aged eighty executed a conveyance of freehold land in consideration of natural love and affection, to his son, to the use of himself for life, with remainder to his son in fee. The deed did not contain any power of revocation, and the propriety of inserting such a power had not been suggested to the grantor. Subsequently the grantor conveyed all his property to his daughter, who by the deed of conveyance covenanted to indemnify him against a mortgage debt, to which part of the property was subject. On a bill by the daughter to set aside the prior voluntary conveyance:—Held, that the deed must be set aside, as it contained no power of revocation, and as it was clear that the propriety of reserving such a power had not been suggested to the grantor; but without costs, as there was no evidence that the execution of the deed had been obtained by fraud S. C. 24 L. T., N. S., 925.

7. In order to support a voluntary settlement, it must be shown that all the provisions are proper and usual; or if there are any unusual provisions, that they were brought to the notice of and understood by the settlor. Phillips v. Mullings, 7 L. R., Ch., 244; 41 L. J., Ch., 211; 20 W. R., 29.

No general rule can be laid down as to the proper and usual provisions in such a settlement, but a power of revocation is not essential. Ib.

A young man of improvident habits, being entitled to a sum of money, was induced by the trustee of the money, and by a solicitor, to execute a settlement by which he assigned a part of the money to trustees to invest and to pay him during his life the income on such part as they should think fit, and after his death on trust to hold the same for his wife and children, if any, and subject thereto for certain cousins of his. He had no power of appointment in default of issue, and no power of revocation, and no power to appoint new trustees. The deed was explained to him, and the particular clauses were brought to his notice:—Held, that the deed could not be set aside by the settlor. Ib.

1. The absence of a power of revocation, and the fact that the attention of the settlor was not called to that absence, do not make a voluntary settlement invalid; they are merely circumstances to be considered in deciding on the validity of a voluntary settlement. A widow instructed a solicitor to prepare a deed settling certain houses and buildings on herself for her life, and after her death for the benefit of her children. The deed, as prepared, did not exactly correspond with the instructions, but was read over to and executed by her. There was no suggestion made to her that the deed ought to contain a certain power of revocation. Some years afterwards she burnt it, and expressed satisfaction at having got rid of it. She executed a mortgage of part of the settled property, after asking the consent of a son who was both beneficially interested and a trustee of the settlement, and made a will purporting to dispose of the whole property:—Held, that, under the circumstances, the deed of settlement was valid, and not affected by the want of a power of revocation or by the divergence from the instructions. Hall v. Hall, 9 L. R., Ch., 430; 21 W. R. 373; 42 L. J., Ch., 444; 28 L. T. 383. Reversing 27 L. T. 115; 20 W. R. 797.

2. An aged lady of weak intellect having made a voluntary settlement, containing no power of revocation, and without independent advice, under the impression that she was making a will, at the instance of some members of the family:—Held, that she was entitled to a decree to set aside the deed, and to have the stock transferred by her under its provisions, retransferred into her name. Henshall v. Fereday, 27 L. T., N. S., 743; 21 W. R. 240. Affirmed 29 L. T., N. S., 46; 21 W. R. 570.

The solicitor who drew the deed read it over to her, but admitted that he had not expressly told her that it contained no power of revocation; he was ordered to pay his own costs. Ib.

3. In 1872 plaintiff, in order to protect his property, executed a voluntary post-nuptial settlement of all his real and personal estate, except a sum of cash under 1,000*l.*, in favour of his wife (for her separate use) and children. The settlement contained no power of revocation. In 1880 plaintiff brought an action against the trustees and his infant children, to set aside the deed on the ground of undue influence, misrepresentation, and ignorance of its effect:—Held, that the wife must be joined as a defendant. Henry v. Armstrong, 44 L. T. 918; 18 L. R., Ch. D., 668; 30 W. R. 472.

Held, also, that the burden of proof of a sufficient ground for setting t on the plaintiff. Ib.

1. A voluntary settlement which conveys real estate to a trustee for the settlor for life, with remainder to her nephew absolutely, will not be set aside upon unsupported allegations of fraud, undue influence, intimidation, and coercion. Toker v. Toker, 31 Beav. 629; 9 Jur., N. 2. Where donor and donee were dead at the time of the institution of a suit, the Court set aside a voluntary deed, on the ground that it was not fully explained to the donor. Phillipson v. Kerry, 11 W. R. 1034.

If a voluntary deed does not express the intentions of the parties, it cannot be rectified so as to carry out such intentions; but, if impeached, it must wholly stand or wholly fall. Ib.

3. A married woman living apart from her husband, by a voluntary deed appointed all her property to herself for life, with remainder to the husband of her sister, irrevocably. She had the deed read over to her before execution, and it was pointed out to her that it was irrevocable. She never again saw the deed, and kept no copy of it, and subsequently executed a settlement and will inconsistent with it. The husband of her sister had notice of the settlement, but stood by and did not produce the deed till three months after her death:—Held, that the deed must be set aside, as it was not proved to be the well-considered act of hers. Coutts v. Acworth, 17 W. R. 1121; 8 L. R., Eq., 558; 38 L. J., Ch., 694; 21 L. T., N. S., 224.

A voluntary gift not subject to a power of revocation, but not meant to be irrevocable, may be set aside by the donor. Ib.

5. Circumstances under which a voluntary deed will be set aside. Henshall v. Fereday, 21 W. R. 570; 29 L. T. 46. Affirming 27 L. T. 743; 21 W. R. 240.

6. A voluntary deed, by which a father purported to convey his property to his son absolutely, but which did not carry into effect the whole arrangement between them, was set aside at the instance of the father after the son's death. Hughes v. Seanor, 18 W. R. 1122.

A mortgage effected by the son upon the property, the father, though in possession, allowing the son to act as if absolute owner, upheld. Ib.

7. Where, in an action to obtain the cancellation or modification of a voluntary deed on the ground of undue influence and want of independent advice, the plaintiff admits that he had an accurate general knowledge of what he was doing, and only refused to receive a detailed explanation of the deed because he trusted his solicitor to look into those details on his behalf, he was as much bound as if he were himself a lawyer, and had drawn the deed with his own hand. Lovell v. Wallis (No. 2), 50 L. T. 681.

8. The Court will not set aside a voluntary settlement if the settlor understood and approved of its object, and it contains the usual clauses for carrying out that object; but if the settlement contains unusual clauses, it will be set aside unless it is clearly proved that the settlor understood the effect of and approved of the insertion of the unusual clauses. Phillips v. Mullings, 20 W. R. 129; 41 L. J., Ch., 211; 7 L. R., Ch., 244.

9. Where an action is brought by the settlor against the trustees to set aside a voluntary settlement, the Court will not consider the propriety or impropriety of the clauses, except as evidence that the settlor did not understand what he was doing; the only question being whether the settlor understood what he was doing, and its effect on his position with regard to the property. But quære, whether this applies to cases in which there are persons claiming adversely to the settlor. Per Cotton, L. J. Dutton v. Thompson, 23 L. R., Ch. D., 278; 52 L. J., Ch., 661; 49 L. T. 109; 31 W. R. 596.

6. Duty and Liability of Solicitor.

10. It is the duty of a solicitor, in preparing a settlement executed by a person in articulo mortis, to reserve a power of revocation; and where such a deed was executed without a power of revocation being reserved, the Court ordered it to be cancelled. Forshaw v. Welsby, 7 Jur., N. S., 299; 30 L. J., Ch., 331; 9 W. R. 225; 4 L. T., N. S., 170; 30 Beav. 243.

11. An aged lady of weak intellect made a voluntary settlement, which was set aside as it contained no power of revocation. The solicitor who drew it admitted that he had not expressly told her of the absence of such a power:—Held, that he must pay his own costs. Henshall v. Fereday, 27 L. T. 743; 21 W. R. 240. Affirmed 29 L. T. 46; 21 W. R. 570.

12. In the absence of fraud, the Court has no jurisdiction to make a solicitor pay the costs of an action rendered necessary by his mistake or carelessness. Clark v. Girdwood, 26 W. R. 90.

The client's remedy is by an action for damages. Ib.

13. A. made an irrevocable voluntary settlement of his estate in favour, amongst others, of a relative, who acted as his solicitor. The Court considered that A. intended to reserve a power of revocation, but that the deed was in other respects unobjectionable. A. made his will, prepared by the solicitor, making a general devise, but not revoking the settlement. The Court then held that it was the duty of the solicitor, when he prepared the will, specifically to have asked the testator whether he intended to revoke the deed; and not having done so, and it appearing to have been the intention of the testator that the estate should pass to his devisees, the Court decided, that although the deed would have been operative if A. had died intestate, yet that in the events which had happened, and as against all persons claiming under the settlement, the estate was subject to the trusts of the general devise obtained in the will. Nanney v. Williams, 22 Beav. 452.

1. A solicitor, acting both for donor and donee, prepared a will and several deeds containing no power of revocation, by which the donor reduced herself to absolute dependence upon the donee. The documents were afterwards set aside on the ground of undue influence, and the solicitor was ordered to pay, not only his own costs, but the costs of the suit if the estate of the donee should prove insufficient for that purpose. Baker v. Loader, 21 W. R. 167.

2. The party taking a benefit under a voluntary settlement or gift containing no power of revocation, has thrown upon him the burden of proving that there was a distinct intention on the part of the donor to make the gift irrevocable. And, where the circumstances are such that the donor ought to be advised to retain a power of revocation, it is the duty of a solicitor to insist upon the insertion of such power, and the want of it will in general be fatal to the deed. Coutts v. Acworth, 8 L. R., Eq., 558; 17 W. R. 703; 38 L. J., Ch., 694; 21 L. T., N. S., 224.

3. A deed of settlement, whereby the settlor is delivered, bound hand and foot as to the property settled, into the power of his trustee, cannot be maintained in equity without the clearest proof that it was made at and with the request, consent, knowledge, or instance of the settlor; and a solicitor who takes upon himself to prepare such a deed for execution by his client, without the clearest evidence of the concurrence of the latter, does so subject to all the consequences and liabilities of the deed being set aside, notwithstanding the solicitor may have been influenced by motives for the benefit of his client in preparing the settlement. Therefore, where the plaintiff, alleged by the defendant to be young and extravagant, applied to a solicitor to raise a certain sum on mortgage, and the latter, with a view to prevent the former from dissipating his fortune, tied up the whole of his property and constituted himself sole trustee; the Court, on bill filed by the plaintiff, alleging that the deed of settlement had been prepared without his authority, consent, or knowledge, and there not being any evidence to the contrary, declared the deed void in equity, and directed a reconveyance of the trust property by the trustee. Moore v. Prance, 9 Hare 299; 20 L. J., N. S., Ch., 468; 15 Jur. 1188.

7. A. by a voluntary deed assigned a mortgage debt and securities to E. upon trust for A. for life, remainder upon trusts in favour of L. and her children. She afterwards assumed to cancel and revoke this deed, and to assign the property therein comprised upon trust for the sole use and benefit of E. Previously to the marriage of E. with her present husband P., the property in question was made the subject of settlement. Upon a bill filed by L. and her children to have the trusts of the voluntary settlement carried into execution:—Held, that P. was liable to make good the trust fund under the voluntary deed, in assigning which E. had been guilty of a breach of trust. Lanham v. Pirie, 5 W. P. was past the age of childbearing:—Held, that notwithstanding the fact that the next of kin of B. L. P. were volunteers under the settlement, B. L. 2. A trustee under a voluntary settlement of chattels, policy of assurance, and mortgage, filed a bill against the representatives of the settlor for the recovery thereof:—Held, that if the property was legally vested in the plaintiff, he might recover it at law, and apply it on the trusts; but if otherwise, then, as the deed was voluntary, the Court could afford the plaintiff no assistance in recovering it. Ward v. Audland, 8 Beav. 201; 14 L. 4. By a voluntary settlement a husband and wife assigned all the property which the wife then was or which she or her husband in her right might become entitled to, upon certain trusts for the benefit of the wife, the husband, and the children of the wife, by her present or any future husband. 1. The testator, by a voluntary deed, covenanted with trustees that in case A. and B., his two natural sons, or either of them, should survive him, his (the testator's) executors and administrators should within twelve months after his death pay to the trustee named in the deed 60,000*l.*, upon trust for such of them (A. and B.) as should attain twenty-one and be living at the time of his death; and if neither of them, having survived him, should attain twenty-one, then upon trust for him (the testator), his executors and administrators. The testator retained the deed in his own possession until his death, and did not communicate it either to the trustees or to A. and B. The testator, by his will, dated some years later then the deed, bequeathed all his property upon trust for the benefit of his wife, his said sons A. and B., and his legitimate children. After the death of the testator, the deed of covenant was found amongst his papers. A. survived the testator, and attained twenty-one:—Held, that although the deed of covenant was voluntary, it nevertheless created a trust for A., and that the refusal of the trustee to sue at law upon the covenant did not prejudice the right of A. to recover the payment of the debt out of the assets of the testator. That the deed was not of a testamentary nature, there being no power of revocation reserved to the covenantor. Fletcher v. Fletcher, 4 Hare 67; 14 L. J., N. S., Ch., 66; 8 Jur. 1040.

2. H., by a voluntary deed, assigned, inter alia, moneys secured on mortgage, notes of hand, furniture, and other effects, to W. upon trust for himself the settlor for life, and after his death upon trust (among other payments) to pay 40*l.* to the plaintiff. He afterwards devised and bequeathed all his property, real and personal, upon trusts in which the plaintiff took no interest. Upon a bill filed by her to have the general trusts of the previous voluntary settlement carried into execution:—Held, that she was entitled to relief not extending beyond that portion of the trust property which was charged in her favour; and that it was not necessary that the other persons entitled under the same set of trusts should appear as plaintiffs. Held, also, that the deed was sufficient to vest in the trustee the notes of hand, etc., upon which the trust was fastened; and that the trustee, who was himself the principal cestui que trust, having concurred in allowing the settlor to receive moneys thereunder, and having joined with him in committing a breach of trust, was liable to the plaintiff; and, as a defendant, had no right to ask that the trust of the settlement should be carried out to an extent greater than was necessary in order to enable the plaintiff to enforce her claim. Directions as to the costs of all parties to the suit. Parnell v. Hingston, 2 Jur., N. S., 854; 4 W. R. 794.

3. Residuary estate, consisting of money in the funds, was bequeathed to a mother and daughter, in trust for the mother for life, and afterwards for the daughter absolutely. By a settlement made in contemplation of the daughter's marriage, the daughter assigned her interest under the will to trustees, upon trust for the issue of the intended marriage, and for a niece of the daughter and the issue of the niece. The daughter's husband died soon after the marriage, of which there was no issue. The mother was not a party to the settlement, but had notice of it before the husband's death:—Held, that even if the settlement was voluntary as regarded the trusts in favour of the niece, it was a complete alienation, so as to be capable of enforcement at the instance of the trustees of the settlement against the daughter, and the trustees of another settlement which she made upon a second marriage inconsistent with the former settlement. Kekewich v. Manning, 1 De. G. M. & G. 176; 16 Jur. 625; 21 L. J., Ch., 577.

4. A cestui que trust, though a volunteer, can enforce his rights against the trustee, as soon as the trust funds come to the hands of the trustee. A was indebted to three creditors, B., C., and D.; B. obtained a judgment and sued out a right of fi. fa. Before the writ was executed, A. gave a bill of sale to C., upon trust to pay himself and D., but D. was no party to the bill of sale, and had not assented to it:—Held, that, in the absence of any question arising out of the law of bankruptcy, the bill of sale gave priority to D. as well as to C. over B. Westbury v. Clapp, 3 N. R. 633. 12 W. R. 511.

2. Burden of Proof.

5. When a grantee, under a deed purporting to be a conveyance for valuable consideration, attempts to support the grant as a gift, the onus of proving that such a gift was intended and made is thrown upon the grantee, and clear evidence in support of the gift will be required. Coultwas v. Swan, 22 L. 8. C., in 1855, mortgaged a house to the plaintiff in fee, handing over to him the deed of conveyance to himself, with the receipt of the vendors indorsed. In 1851 C. had made a voluntary conveyance of the house to trustees in trust for his wife and children, the consideration expressed being natural love and affection:—Held, that though evidence might be adduced to show that valuable consideration had been in fact given for the settlement, such evidence must be of a most conclusive kind, and that on the evidence adduced the mortgage must prevail. Levy v. Creighton, 22 W. R. 605.

I. GENERAL PRINCIPLES.

9. When the ancestor by any gift or conveyance takes an estate of freehold, and in the same gift or conveyance an estate is limited either mediately or immediately to his heirs in fee or in tail ; the word "heir" in such case is always taken to be a word of limitation, not of purchase. Ambrose v. Hodgson, 3 Bro. P. C. 416.

10. A devise to A. for life, and to the heirs of his body, so unites the two estates as to make the first taker tenant in tail. Sheppard v. Gibbons, 2 Atk. 444, 797.

trust terminating with that life, and a remainder following to the same trustees upon the death of tenant for life for a term of years. A subsequent remainder, therefore, to the heirs of the body of tenant for life:—Held, a legal estate, united with the legal estate for life, and vesting an estate tail, according to the rule in Shelley's case, not an equitable estate capable of taking effect only as a contingent remainder. Curtis v. Price, 12 Ves. 89.

1. G. A., after devising part of his estate to his wife for life or during widowhood, and after devising another part to trustees for a term, to raise money for the payment of debts, etc., devised the said estates, and all the rest of his estates (subject to certain mortgages), to A. B., his eldest son, for the term of ninety-nine years, in case he should so long live; and subject thereto, to trustees during the life of his son, in trust only to support contingent remainders; and from and after the determination of the said estates, unto the heirs of the body of his said son; and for want of such issue, then over to his second son, with like limitations. G. A. by a codicil, after confirming his will, devised all his freehold and copyhold estates unto four trustees, in trust to convey unto the trustees of his marriage settlement so much of the said estates as, together with the provision in the said settlement, would make up 1,200*l.* a year as the jointure for his wife, and in trust for the payment of debts. After executing a disentailing deed, A. C. devised the estates to H. A.:—Held, that the rule in Shelley's case did not apply; that the devise to the heirs of the body of A. B. was a contingent remainder, which was not destroyed by the disentailing deed of 1836; and that the plaintiff, as the heir of G. C., the daughter of A. B., was entitled as equitable tenant in tail. Coape v. Arnold, 18 Jur. 506; 2 W. R. 482. Affirmed 4 De G. M. & G. 574; 1 Jur., N. S., 313; 24 L. J., Ch., 673.

2. In devise to C. for life, remainder to trustees during his life to preserve contingent remainders, remainder to the heirs of the body of C.:—Held, that C. took only an estate for life, and that heirs of the body were to be construed words of purchase. Colson v. Colson, 2 Atk. 246; 2 Eq. Abr. 318.

3. W. T. devised to his wife for life, remainder to trustees to preserve contingent remainders, remainder to E. for life, remainder to trustees ut supra, remainder to the heirs of body of E., remainder over. In a subsequent clause he declared his intention that E. should have only a life estate; upon a bill filed by the remainderman for a conveyance in which E. should take only a life estate, it was demurred to, and the demurrer allowed, because these are all legal estates. Thong v. Bedford, 1 Bro. C. C. 313.

4. Devise to G. and heirs of his body, the males having the preference, and succeeding according to their birth, and the trustees to preserve contingent remainders during the life of G.:—Held, that G. took an estate tail. Sayer v. Masterman, Ambl. 344.

testator and his heir at law, Jekyll, Master of the Rolls, declared that A., the devisee (abovementioned), was entitled only to an estate for life, with remainder to his eldest son, and if but one for his life, and that the remainder would go over to W. R., testator's heir at law. S. C. 3 Atk. 738.

1. One devises his lands for payment of his debts, and then to A. for life, with power to make leases, etc., remainder to the heirs male of the body of A.; though this be but the devise of a trust, and executory, and expressed to be to A. for life, yet it is an estate tail in A., barrable by a fine and recovery: secus, in case of marriage articles, to settle an estate on A. for life, remainder to the heirs male of his body, this being an agreement to do a future act, and in which the issue are particularly considered, and looked upon as purchasers. Bale v. Coleman, 1 P. W. 142.

2. Devise to L. for his natural life, and no longer, provided he takes the name of R., and after his decease to such son as he shall have lawfully to be begotten; and for default of such issue to W. and his heirs for ever:—Held, that on construction of whole will, L. must be construed to take an estate in tail male. Robinson v. Hicks, 3 Bro. P. C. 180.

3. Devise to trustees to pay debts, then to stand seised to the use of A. for life, without impeachment of waste; after his decease, to the use of the heirs male of his body severally, respectively, and in remainder, is an estate tail in A. Jones v. Morgan, 1 Bro. C. C. 206.

4. Devise to the use of the devisor's second son A. for life, without impeachment of waste, and from and after his decease to the heirs of his body, to take as tenants in common, and not as joint-tenants; and in case of his decease without issue, to the devisor's eldest son B., his heirs, etc.; and in case both sons should die before twenty-one, over:—Held, an estate tail in the land, and absolute interest in personalty bequeathed with it. Bennett v. Tankerville (Earl), 19 Ves. 170.

5. Devise to W. for life; remainder to trustees during the life of W.; remainder to the heirs of the body of W., was held an estate for life, there being words of restriction that W. shall not sell for any longer than his own life, and the estate being devised to that intent:—but held, in error, to be an estate tail. Perrin v. Blake, 1 W. Bl. 672; 4 Burr. 2579.

6. Devise in trust to permit A. B. to enjoy estate during his life, and after his decease his first and other sons and daughters now living, successively for life, as they were in priority of birth, but the sons to be preferred in succession to the daughters, and the heirs of the body or bodies of such sons and daughters respectively issuing, and for default of such issue in trust to testator's own right heirs for ever:—Held, on death of A. B., his eldest son entitled to estate as tenant in tail, and not a mere life estate, and then to next child of A. B. in succession. Green v. Staples, 5 Madd. 85.

7. A father left and bequeathed his fee simple estate at B. to his eldest son R., charged with 1,000*l.* each for his sons T. and J., subject to the restrictions mentioned in his will; he also left and bequeathed houses of a freehold tenure to each of his sons and daughters, and 1,000*l.* to each of his daughters on her marriage with consent, subject to the same conditions and restrictions which he had attached to any bequest in his will; he directed that none of his sons or daughters should alien or mortgage, or incumber any of the houses or lands to which they should become entitled under his will, but that on their death his or her portion of the property should go to his or her heirs, being issue lawfully begotten of him or her so dying, and so to continue in succession from father or mother to his or her heirs being issue lawfully begotten; and, in case any of his sons or daughters should die unmarried, and without issue, or on failure of lineal descendants of his or her lawful issue, he directed that his or her portion should go to and be equally divided among the survivors: by a codicil reciting the death of his youngest son J., since his will was made, and that his daughter P. had determined to become a nun, he charged 500*l.* on the lands of B. for his son T., in addition to the 1,000*l.* given by the will, and he left the residue of his estate at B. to R., and left both sons the full power he was invested with to enforce their claims, subject to the conditions and restrictions contained in his will:—Held, first, that the estates given by the will to the testator's children, whether in possession or in remainder, were estates tail. O'Hanlon v. Unthank, 7 Ir. R., Eq., 68.

Held, secondly, that under the codicil the eldest son R. took an estate tail in B. Ib.

8. A testator devised to B., in trust for his (the testator's) eldest son A., a certain landed property, as also one-fourth of the issues and profits of the estate of C., as also the testator's interest in the house in which he resided, in K. street, to hold as tenant for life, remainder to his heirs lawfully begotten—"A. to be considered as strict tenant for life of all the above-stated property." The will then contained the following clauses: "To B., in trust for my son, H. M., one-fourth of the issues and profits of the estate of C., as tenant for life, and to his heirs lawfully begotten;" as also, "my interest in the two houses in K. street, Dublin, let to H. J. and R. C.; also the two houses in D. street, Dublin, all as tenant for life. . . . In case there should be default of issue in my children to inherit my freehold property in lands or houses, I bequeath, in this case, the fees and freehold to the use of M. and his heirs." The houses in K. street were held under a lease for lives renewable for ever, which was afterwards converted into a fee-farm grant:—Held, that H. M. took an estate, in quasi tail, in the two houses in K. street, devised to him. Macnamara v. Dillon, 11 L. R., Ir., 29.

9. A. testator devised his residuary real estate to his son A. and his heirs; but his will was, that his son should not have power to sell the estates devised to him. Upon the death of his son, the estates to go to his lawful issue absolutely; but if he should not leave any lawful issue him surviving, then he willed that the estates should go and be absolutely held by his, the testator's, nephew, his heirs and assigns for ever:—Held, that A. took an estate tail general in the estates. Marshall v. Grime, 6 Jur., N. S., 390; 29 L. J., Ch., 592; 8 W. R. 385; 28 Beav. 375.

trust terminating with that life, and a remainder following to the same trustees upon the death of tenant for life for a term of years. A subsequent remainder, therefore, to the heirs of the body of tenant for life:—Held, a legal estate, united with the legal estate for life, and vesting an estate tail, according to the rule in Shelley's case, not an equitable estate capable of taking effect only as a contingent remainder. Curtis v. Price, 12 Ves. 89.

1. G. A., after devising part of his estate to his wife for life or during widowhood, and after devising another part to trustees for a term, to raise money for the payment of debts, etc., devised the said estates, and all the rest of his estates (subject to certain mortgages), to A. B., his eldest son, for the term of ninety-nine years, in case he should so long live; and subject thereto, to trustees during the life of his son, in trust only to support contingent remainders; and from and after the determination of the said estates, unto the heirs of the body of his said son; and for want of such issue, then over to his second son, with like limitations. G. A. by a codicil, after confirming his will, devised all his freehold and copyhold estates unto four trustees, in trust to convey unto the trustees of his marriage settlement so much of the said estates as, together with the provision in the said settlement, would make up 1,200*l.* a year as the jointure for his wife, and in trust for the payment of debts. After executing a disentailing deed, A. C. devised the estates to H. A.:—Held, that the rule in Shelley's case did not apply; that the devise to the heirs of the body of A. B. was a contingent remainder, which was not destroyed by the disentailing deed of 1836; and that the plaintiff, as the heir of G. C., the daughter of A. B., was entitled as equitable tenant in tail. Coape v. Arnold, 18 Jur. 506; 2 W. R. 482. Affirmed 4 De G. M. & G. 574; 1 Jur., N. S., 313; 24 L. J., Ch., 673.

VI. REMAINDER TO HEIR OR HEIR OF BODY.

1. In General, 6317.
2. Words Qualifying, 6317.

1. In General.

2. A devise to A. for life, and to the heir of his body, so unites the two estates as to make the first taker tenant in tail. Sheppard v. Gibbons, 2 Atk. 444.

3. A house, together with the furniture thereof, is limited to a feme, and such heir of her body as should be living at her death, and in default of such, remainder over. The feme has an estate tail in the house, and the absolute property in the furniture. Richard v. Bergavenny, 2 Vern. 324.

Devise to A. for life, remainder to the heir of his body (though in the singular number) is an estate tail. Ib.

4. Devise of land to W. for life, remainder to his first son for life, remainder to the right heirs male of his body, remainder to the second, etc., sons of W., and the heirs male of their bodies, remainder to T. for life, and after to his first heir male of his body, and for want of such, over:—Held, T. took an estate in tail male. Dubber v. Trollope, Ambl. 453.

A devise to a man for life, and if he died without heir male, remainder over, makes an estate tail. The words, "for want of such issue," make an estate tail by implication. Id. 465.

5. Devise in trust for a son of the testator's nephew A., at the age of twenty-four; if he have no son, to a son of the testator's great-nephew B.; but if neither have a son, then to a son of the testator's great-niece's daughter, taking his name; whoever should take, not to be put in possession of any of the testator's effects until twenty-four; nor the executors to give up their trust "till a proper entail be made to the male heir by him," is an executory trust in tail for an only son of A., in ventre at the testator's death, and not void for uncertainty, nor too remote. Blackburn v. Stables, 2 Ves. & B. 367.

"Heir," or "heir male of the body," in the singular number, words of limitation, not of purchase, unless words of limitation superadded, or the context shows that those words are not used in their technical sense, as the word "issue," or "without impeachment of waste;" a limitation to trustees to preserve contingent remainders; or a direction so to frame the limitation, that the first taker shall not have the power of barring the entail. Id. 371.

6. Devise to A., B., and C. for their lives, and after their decease unto the next lawful heir of A. for ever:—Held, that A. took an estate in fee simple, under the rule in Shelley's case (1 Rep. 93). Fuller v. Chamier, 2 L. R., Eq., 682; 12 Jur., N. S., 642; 35 L. J., Ch., 772; 14 W. R. 913.

In order that the exception to that rule, established by Archer's case (1 Rep. 66, b.), may apply, the intention that the heir should take as purchaser must be clearly shown by words of limitation added to the word "heir." Ib.

2. Words Qualifying.

7. Subsequent words of limitation affect not the legal operation of the preceding words of limitation, unless the word "heir" is used in the singular number, or an express estate for life limited to the first taker. Minshull v. Minshull, 1 Atk. 413; 1 Co. 66 (b).

8. Deviseof real estate to trustees upon trust for the testator's son W. for life, and after his decease to the heir male of his body begotten of an European woman, and the heirs of such heir male; and in case his son should die without leaving such heir male of his body, the trustees to pay the rents equally between the testator's daughters, M. and A., for their lives, and the whole to the survivor; and after the decease of the survivor, upon trust for the heir male of the body of M. and the heirs of such heir male, and in default of such heir male of her body upon trust for the heir male of the body of A. and the heirs of such heir male. W. and M. both died without issue, and A., having a son, suffered a recovery of the devised estate, and resettled it to new uses, under which a remote interest was limited to the surviving trustee, and died leaving her son surviving, who thereupon filed his bill against the surviving trustee of the will for a conveyance of the legal estate. Decree made against the trustee with costs: the Court holding clearly that, under the devise, A. took a life estate only, with remainder to her son in fee. Willis v. Hiscox, 4 Myl. & C. 197; 4 Jur. 738.

9. Testator directs 20,000*l.* which he has in the 3 per cents. to be firmly fixed there, to remain during the life of his wife for her to receive the interest, and after her death to be in the same manner firmly fixed on the infant W. C., "to be so secured that he may only receive the interest during his life, and after his decease to the heir male of his body, and so on in succession to the heir at law, male or female;" with a direction that the principal sum is never to be broken into, but the interest only to be received; "his intent being that there should always be the interest to support the name of Cobb as a private gentleman." Though the intention be manifest to give only a life interest to W. C., yet, there being nothing to show that the word "heir male" was not used in a strict technical sense:—Held, that W. C. took the absolute interest, the words being such as would create an estate tail of freehold property; secus, if the words "for life" had been added to the words "heir male," in which case the latter words might have been construed to be a mere designatio personæ:—Held, the declaration that the principal stock should not be broken into, not sufficient to turn the heir into a tenant for life, being like an attempt at perpetual restraint of alienation, which in the case of land would not prevent the creation of an estate tail. Britton v. Twining, 3 Meriv. 176.

1. A devise of real estates upon trust to and for the use of W. for his life, with remainder to the use of the heir male of his body lawfully begotten, according to their respective seniorities and priority of birth, in tail, with remainder to his daughters, as tenants in common in tail, with remainder over, with an ultimate remainder in case W. should die without leaving any such issue as aforesaid, and there should be only one of the testatrix's daughters then surviving, to such only daughter, her heirs and assigns for ever, was:—Held, to create an estate tail. Johnson v. Rutherford, 3 L. T., N. S., 649.

2. A deed is construed more strictly than a will, according to the legal import of the words. Therefore in a marriage settlement, after life estates to the husband and wife, a remainder to the heir male of her body by him to be begotten, and to his heirs, and for want of such to the daughters, and if there should be no issue of the marriage to the right heirs of the husband:—Held, a contingent remainder in fee in such person as should be heir male of the wife at her death. Bayley v. Morris, 4 Ves. 788.

3. A testator gave his residuary real estate and personal estate to a trustee, upon trust for J., for life, and after his decease, for the heir or heiress at law of J., his or her heirs and assigns for ever:—Held, that J. took an equitable estate for life only, with a remainder in fee to the person who at his death was his heir. Greaves v. Simpson, 10 Jur., N. S., 609; 33 L. J., Ch., 641; 12 W. R. 773; 10 L. T., N. S., 448.

4. Lands were limited by deed to the use of the settlor for life; remainder to the use of his wife for life; remainder to the use of the heir female of the body of the settlor, on the body of his wife already begotten and now living, or which may be begotten hereafter; and in default of such issue, to the use of the heir male of the body of the settlor on the body of his wife to be begotten; remainder to the right heirs of the settlor. At the deed was executed, the settlor issue four daughters, and no i his death the same four dau several sons of the marriage, Held, that under the limitat female," the daughters took a lands as purchasers. Cham Myl. & C. 376; 6 L. VI. REMAINDER TO HEIR OR HEIR OF BODY.

1. In General, 6317.
2. Words Qualifying, 6317.

1. In General.

2. A devise to A. for life, and to the heir of his body, so unites the two estates as to make the first taker tenant in tail. Sheppard v. Gibbons, 2 Atk. 444.

3. A house, together with the furniture thereof, is limited to a feme, and such heir of her body as should be living at her death, and in default of such, remainder over. The feme has an estate tail in the house, and the absolute property in the furniture. Richard v. Bergavenny, 2 Vern. 324.

Devise to A. for life, remainder to the heir of his body (though in the singular number) is an estate tail. Ib.

4. Devise of land to W. for life, remainder to his first son for life, remainder to the right heirs male of his body, remainder to the second, etc., sons of W., and the heirs male of their bodies, remainder to T. for life, and after to his first heir male of his body, and for want of such, over:—Held, T. took an estate in tail male. Dubber v. Trollope, Ambl. 453.

A devise to a man for life, and if he died without heir male, remainder over, makes an estate tail. The words, "for want of such issue," make an estate tail by implication. Id. 465.

5. Devise in trust for a son of the testator's nephew A., at the age of twenty-four; if he have no son, to a son of the testator's great-nephew B.; but if neither have a son, then to a son of the testator's great-niece's daughter, taking his name; whoever should take, not to be put in possession of any of the testator's effects until twenty-four; nor the executors to give up their trust "till a proper entail be made to the male heir by him," is an executory trust in tail for an only son of A., in ventre at the testator's death, and not void for uncertainty, nor too remote. Blackburn v. Stables, 2 Ves. & B. 367.

"Heir," or "heir male of the body," in the singular number, words of limitation, not of purchase, unless words of limitation superadded, or the context shows that those words are not used in their technical sense, as the word "issue," or "without impeachment of waste;" a limitation to trustees to preserve contingent remainders; or a direction so to frame the limitation, that the first taker shall not have the power of barring the entail. Id. 371.

6. Devise to A., B., and C. for their lives, and after their decease unto the next lawful heir of A. for ever:—Held, that A. took an estate in fee simple, under the rule in Shelley's case (1 Rep. 93). Fuller v. Chamier, 2 L. R., Eq., 682; 12 Jur., N. S., 642; 35 L. J., Ch., 772; 14 W. R. 913.

In order that the exception to that rule, established by Archer's case (1 Rep. 66, b.), may apply, the intention that the heir should take as purchaser must be clearly shown by words of limitation added to the word "heir." Ib.

2. Words Qualifying.

7. Subsequent words of limitation affect not the legal operation of the preceding words of limitation, unless the word "heir" is used in the singular number, or an express estate for life limited to the first taker. Minshull v. Minshull, 1 Atk. 413; 1 Co. 66 (b).

8. Devise of real estate to trustees upon trust for the testator's son W. for life, and after his decease to the heir male of his body begotten of an European woman, and the heirs of such heir male; and in case his son should die without leaving such heir male of his body, the trustees to pay the rents equally between the testator's daughters, M. and A., for their lives, and the whole to the survivor; and after the decease of the survivor, upon trust for the heir male of the body of M. and the heirs of such heir male, and in default of such heir male of her body upon trust for the heir male of the body of A. and the heirs of such heir male. W. and M. both died without issue, and A., having a son, suffered a recovery of the devised estate, and resettled it to new uses, under which a remote interest was limited to the surviving trustee, and died leaving her son surviving, who thereupon filed his bill against the surviving trustee of the will for a conveyance of the legal estate. Decree made against the trustee with costs: the Court holding clearly that, under the devise, A. took a life estate only, with remainder to her son in fee. Willis v. Hiscox, 4 Myl. & C. 197; 4 Jur. 738.

9. Testator directs 20,000*l.* which he has in the 3 per cents. to be firmly fixed there, to remain during the life of his wife for her to receive the interest, and after her death to be in the same manner firmly fixed on the infant W. C., "to be so secured that he may only receive the interest during his life, and after his decease to the heir male of his body, and so on in succession to the heir at law, male or female;" with a direction that the principal sum is never to be broken into, but the interest only to be received; "his intent being that there should always be the interest to support the name of Cobb as a private gentleman." Though the intention be manifest to give only a life interest to W. C., yet, there being nothing to show that the word "heir male" was not used in a strict technical sense:—Held, that W. C. took the absolute interest, the words being such as would create an estate tail of freehold property; secus, if the words "for life" had been added to the words "heir male," in which case the latter words might have been construed to be a mere designatio personæ:—Held, the declaration that the principal stock should not be broken into, not sufficient to turn the heir into a tenant for life, being like an attempt at perpetual restraint of alienation, which in the case of land would not prevent the creation of an estate tail. Britton v. Twining, 3 Meriv. 176.

1. A devise of real estates upon trust to and for the use of W. for his life, with remainder to the use of the heir male of his body lawfully begotten, according to their respective seniorities and priority of birth, in tail, with remainder to his daughters, as tenants in common in tail, with remainder over, with an ultimate remainder in case W. should die without leaving any such issue as aforesaid, and there should be only one of the testatrix's daughters then surviving, to such only daughter, her heirs and assigns for ever, was:—Held, to create an estate tail. Johnson v. Rutherford, 3 L. T., N. S., 649.

2. A deed is construed more strictly than a will, according to the legal import of the words. Therefore in a marriage settlement, after life estates to the husband and wife, a remainder to the heir male of her body by him to be begotten, and to his heirs, and for want of such to the daughters, and if there should be no issue of the marriage to the right heirs of the husband:—Held, a contingent remainder in fee in such person as should be heir male of the wife at her death. Bayley v. Morris, 4 Ves. 788.

3. A testator gave his residuary real estate and personal estate to a trustee, upon trust for J., for life, and after his decease, for the heir or heiress at law of J., his or her heirs and assigns for ever:—Held, that J. took an equitable estate for life only, with a remainder in fee to the person who at his death was his heir. Greaves v. Simpson, 10 Jur., N. S., 609; 33 L. J., Ch., 641; 12 W. R. 773; 10 L. T., N. S., 448.

4. Lands were limited by deed to the use of the settlor for life; remainder to the use of his wife for life; remainder to the use of the heir female of the body of the settlor, on the body of his wife already begotten and now living, or which may be begotten hereafter; and in default of such issue, to the use of the heir male of the body of the settlor on the body of his wife to be begotten; remainder to the right heirs of the settlor. 1. On the 20th August the sheriff, under a fi. fa. against A., took possession of B.'s furniture in A.'s house. Both before and after seizure B. gave formal notice to the sheriff that the furniture was his, and on the 23rd issued the writ in this action against the sheriff for an injunction and damages. On the 25th August the sheriff issued an interpleader summons, under which an issue was directed and an order made for the sheriff withdrawing from possession on payment of 100*l.* into court. The sheriff accordingly withdrew from possession on the 1st September. B.'s title was afterwards admitted by the judgment creditor, and the 100*l.* paid out of court to B. B. now brought this action to trial against the sheriff for damages and costs:—Held, that the sheriff had not exceeded the scope of his duty in retaining possession till ordered to withdraw under the interpleader order, and that the action must be dismissed, but without costs, on the ground that the sheriff might have applied to the judge, under the interpleader order, to dispose of the matters in question between him and the plaintiff. Aylwin v. Evans, 52 L. J., Ch., 105; 47 L. T. 568.

2. Although the sheriff is an agent for those who put writs into his hands to execute, he is also a public functionary, having at the same time duties to perform towards whom such writs are directed. Hooper v. Lane, 6 H. L. Ca. 443; 3 Jur., N. S., 1026; 27 L. J., Q. B., 75; 6 W. R. 146. Affirming 10 Q. B. 546; 17 L. J,. Q. B., 189.

If the sheriff, having two writs in his hands, one valid, the other invalid, arrests on both at the same time, he may rely on the valid writ, and treat as detainers any number of valid writs which he may then have, or which may afterwards come to his hands. Ib.

But if, having two such writs, he arrests on the invalid writ alone, he cannot afterwards justify the arrest by the good writ. Ib.

The sheriff cannot, while a person is unlawfully in his custody by virtue of an arrest on an invalid writ, arrest that person on a good writ; to permit him to do so would be to allow him to take advantage of his own wrong. Ib.

Distinction on this point between writs against the person and against goods. Ib.

Action against a sheriff for neglecting to arrest B. on a ca. sa. of L. There was a second breach, that the sheriff wrongfully arrested B. under the illegal pretence of another writ, which never existed, by reason of which B. was ordered by a judge to be discharged, whereby the sheriff deprived himself of the means of taking or detaining B. The sheriff pleaded not guilty, and traversed that he could have arrested B. The evidence was, that long after the delivery of L.'s writ to the sheriff, another writ (void for defects on the face of it), at the suit of A., was delivered to the sheriff, who thereupon issued his warrant, under which his officer arrested B., but had no other warrant at that time in his possession. B. was discharged from custody under the void writ by a judge, and on the sheriff detaining him under L.'s writ, he was discharged from that also by a second judge's order. The judge directed the jury that there had been no arrest at the suit of L., and left it to them to say whether there was culpable negligence on the part of the sheriff in arresting B. on the void writ, in that the sheriff could with reasonable care have discovered it to be void. He also ruled that B. was set free from all writs by his discharge by the judge, and that such discharge was no justification to the sheriff. The jury found for L. on all the issues except the second breach, and as to that not guilty for the sheriff. On exception, the Exchequer Chamber upheld the ruling of the judge:—Held, that the first arrest being illegal, the detainer on the second writ was equally unlawful; that there was evidence for the jury that the sheriff was guilty of a breach of duty in arresting on the void writ; and that there was no such inconsistency in the findings of the jury on the first and second breach as to make a venire de novo necessary. S. C. 3 Jur., N. S., 1026.

Mode and Place.] 3. A sheriff's officer, in execution of available writ, peaceably obtained entrance by the outer door, but before he could make an actual arrest was forcibly expelled from the house, and the outer door fastened against him. The officer obtained assistance, broke open the outer door, and made the arrest:—Held, that the officer was justified in so doing. Held, also, that demand of re-entry under such circumstances was not requisite to justify his breaking open the outer door. Aga Kurboolie Mahomed v. Reg., 4 Moo. P. C. 239.

Where, therefore, a fi. fa. had been levied in some of the apartments in the palace:—Held, that the sheriff was not liable to an information for intrusion. Ib.

5. Where a writ of attachment has issued against a party to an action for contempt of court in non-compliance with an order for the delivery over of deeds and documents, the officer charged with the execution of the writ may break open the outer door of the house in order to execute it. Harvey v. Harvey, 26 L. R., Ch. D., 644; 51 L. T. 508; 33 W. R. 76.

Interference with Receiver.] 6. Judgment was entered up against a railway company at the suit of a creditor. In a suit by creditors against the company a receiver was, by the consent of all parties, appointed over the property of a company. Afterwards the judgment creditor issued a writ of fieri facias against the company, under which the sheriff levied execution. A motion was made by the plaintiffs for the committal of the sheriff for contempt of court, in having interfered with the receiver, but the execution creditor was not served with notice:—Held, that he must be served. Russell v. East Anglian Railway Co., 14 Jur. 967.

Property in the possession of a receiver appointed by the Court, in a suit, was in two instances seized by the sheriff under writs of fieri facias issued by judgment creditors of the defendant. On motions in the suit to commit the sheriff:—Held, that he was not warranted in making the seizures, and that he could not justify the seizures by questioning the propriety of the order under which the receiver was appointed; and on the submission of the sheriff an order was made in each case for him to withdraw from possession and to pay the costs, the Court considering this order as sufficient under the circumstances for the maintenance of its jurisdiction. The Court at the same time protected the sheriff against proceedings by the judgment creditor, in one of the cases where the judgment creditor had been served with notice and appeared on the motion, but refused to make this addition to the order in the other case, where the judgment creditor had not been served and was not present. S. C. 3 Macn. & G. 104; 6 Rail. Ca. 501; 20 L. J., N. S., Ch., 257; 14 Jur. 1033.

1. When the sheriff entered, a receiver, appointed by the Court, was in possession of the partnership premises and effects. The sheriff took out an interpleader summons against the receiver and partnership creditor. Ordered, that the sheriff and creditor must pay the costs consequent on the contempt, and also of the summons, without prejudice to any question which might arise as between themselves. Lane v. Storne, 10 W. R. 555; 3 Giff. 629; 9 Jur., N. S., 320.

2. After an order for, but before the actual appointment of, a receiver in a suit for dissolution of partnership, the sheriff had taken possession of part of the partnership property under a fieri facias, and afterwards refused to quit possession when the receiver was appointed; a motion to commit the sheriff for contempt was refused with costs. Defries v. Creed, 11 Jur., N. S., 360; 34 L. J., Ch., 607; 12 L. T., N. S., 262; 13 W. R. 632.

Delay and Negligence.] 3. If a sheriff refuse to try to execute an attachment which has issued to compel an appearance in an equity suit, he will be attached. Morgan v. Copeland, 1 Jones 248.

4. The Court, on motion, will order a sheriff to pay such a sum of money as it appears has been lost in consequence of his refusing or neglecting to execute, with due diligence, an attachment issued out of the court, and directed to him. Re Comyns, 1 Ir. Eq. R. 72.

Plaintiff then moved that the sheriff might make a return on the writ (which, however, could not be, as the writ was returned in court); and after searching precedents, the sheriff was ordered to return the chamberlain's mandate within six days, which he did accordingly. Clough v. Cross, Dick. 555.

Three orders are said to be necessary to compel the sheriff to return the writ: first, that he do return it; secondly, that he return it in a certain number of days, or stand committed; thirdly, that he do stand committed. Ib.

1. Plaintiffs sued out a teste scire facias against defendant, directed to the chancellor of the county palatine of Lancaster, or his lieutenant or deputy; the chancellor issued his precept to the sheriff of the county, who made no return. The question was, whether plaintiffs were to call on the sheriff in open court, or to move that the chancellor might return the writ of scire facias. The latter method was adopted, and an order made accordingly. It was agreed that the next step must have been against the sheriff, praying that he might return the precept. Seddon v. Curghey cited, Dick. 555.

2. To a writ of extent in aid against a bankrupt, sued out long after the issuing of the commission, the sheriff returned that the bankrupt was entitled to a sum standing in the name of the accountant in bankruptcy in the books of the Bank of England, that the accountant held the money in trust for the bankrupt, and that the sheriff had seized such money. On this return the Court of Exchequer made an order, that the sheriffs should pay over to the prosecutor of the extent the amount of his debt. On a petition by the sheriffs to the Court of Review to order this money to be paid over to them by the accountant in bankruptcy, a conditional order for payment having been previously made:—Held, that the finding of the inquisition, and the sheriff's return, were alike erroneous, and the Court, therefore, refused to make any such order. Exp. Magnay, Re Austen, 2 M. D. & De G. 671.

3. The sheriff's return of a caption and rescue is a sufficient ground, without affidavit, for an absolute order of commitment for contempt. Blackwell v. Tatlow, 2 Myl. & K. 321; Coop. temp. Brough. 186.

4. Equity will relieve against a fraudulent and partial assignment of dower by the sheriff. Hoby v. Hoby, 1 Vern. 218; 2 Ch. Ca. 160.

5. An attachment issued against defendants in a county palatine for not making an affidavit of documents. The sheriff, after caption, let the defendants out on bail, they having filed the affidavit. The sheriff being afterwards ordered to return the writ, made default, and on a motion that he should return the writ or stand committed:—Held, that it was not competent for the sheriff to object to the first order, on the ground that it ought to have been directed to the Chancellor of the county palatine of Lancaster, and not to the sheriff. Sugden v. Hull, 23 Beav. 263.

Held, secondly, that the Court would not, on this occasion, allow him to enter into the merits, to show that the plaintiff had not been prejudiced by the irregularity, but that a return must be made. Ib.

6. The sheriff of a colony is liable, without proof of malice or want of probable cause, in an action for a false return of rescue made by him upon a writ of capias ad respondendum for the damage which results to the plaintiff therefrom. Brasyer v. Maclean, 6 L. R., P. C., 398; 44 L. J., P. C., 79; 33 L. T., N. S., 1.

Such return was conclusive at that stage of the proceedings as to the truth of the alleged rescue by the plaintiff, whom it rendered liable to attachment for a contempt of court without being allowed to show that the facts returned were untrue, and constituted a misfeasance by a public ministerial officer in the discharge of his duties. Ib.

7. Where a sheriff had failed to make any return to a writ of fi. fa., notwithstanding an order of course directing him to make his return forthwith, he was, upon an application ex parte against him for an order nisi, directed, upon the authority of Davies v. Evans (7 Beav. 81), to pay both the costs of the order nisi and of the previous order of course. Re Heiron's Estate, Hall v. Ley, 12 L. R., Ch. D., 795; 48 L. J., Ch., 688; 27 W. R. 750.

III. ESCAPE.

8. Sheriff taking party on attachment for contempt for not paying costs, and suffering party to go at large, ordered himself to pay those costs, and costs of contempt. Solly v. Greathead, 11 Ves. 170. S. P. Levett v. Letteney, Beam. Costs, 138. n. 352; 11 Ves. 170. n.

9. A defendant to an action, in which the East India Company were plaintiffs, having had a verdict given against him, and judgment signed for damages and costs, was imprisoned in the gaol at Bombay under a writ of capias ad satisfaciendum. The medical officer in attendance having reported that a temporary release from confinement was necessary for his health, the Government at Bombay gave orders to the sheriff and the superintendent of police that he should be permitted temporarily to reside outside the gaol, under such surveillance as might prove as little irksome as possible to the prisoner while consistent with its perfect efficiency. On being informed of the proposal the defendant gave a written reply, "I shall be grateful for any change, and the consideration for my health is indeed most welcome." He was removed to a residence outside the gaol, under the charge of the sheriff's peons, and after remaining under their charge for some months he was remitted to the gaol. An application was made to the Supreme Court at Bombay that he should be discharged from custody, and was refused:—Held, on appeal, by the Judicial Committee of the Privy Council, that the removal of the defendant to a residence outside the gaol did not, under the circumstances, operate as a discharge; that the custody continued; and that the defendant, having assented to such removal, was estopped from alleging that he did not continue in the custody of the sheriff; and that the judgment of the Court below must be affirmed. Haines v. East India Co., 5 W. R. 159.

1. The bill had been dismissed at the hearing, with costs, which the plaintiff refused to pay; he was taken under an attachment. Afterwards, but before the costs were paid, the sheriff let the plaintiff out of custody, upon bail, but re-took him before the writ was returnable. The Court refused to order the sheriff to pay the costs. Collard v. Hare, 5 Sim. 10; 1 L. J., N. S., Ch., 180.

2. Where the sheriff had taken parties on an attachment for nonpayment of money into court pursuant to order, and let them go out of custody on giving bail, the Court allowed his liability to be terminated by the defendants paying into court, to the credit of the cause, the sum mentioned in the order, and depositing the 20*l.* in the sheriff's hands, for the relator's costs occasioned by the default, and thereupon discharged the defendants. Att.-Gen. v. Mills, C. P. C. 261.

3. Escape lieth not against the warden of the Fleet, for escape of one in execution for breach of a decree. Anon., 2 Freem. 146.

4. The liability in equity of a sheriff for an escape, is the loss actually sustained, and the Court will ascertain the amount of damages. Moore v. Moore, Re Moyley, 25 Beav. 8; 4 Jur., N. S., 250; 27 L. J., Ch., 385; 6 W. R. 288.

The principle on which the amount is to be ascertained is, by charging the sheriff with the debt, and throwing on him the onus of proving that less would have been recovered if the debtor had remained in custody or given bail. Ib.

A person was taken upon an attachment for nonpayment of money. The sheriff, without taking bail, allowed him to go at large on his promise to surrender. The sheriff's officer, having called on him to surrender, he shot himself before a recapture, but the officer retained his body:—Held, that the sheriff was liable as for an escape. Ib.

IV. PAYING OVER MONEYS LEVIED.

5. Motion granted, that the sheriff of Kent might be ordered to pay the party money under an attachment for not paying costs, with the costs of the motion. Anon., 11 Ves. 170; Solly v. Greathead, Beam. Costs 353. S. P. Levett v. Letteney, id. 352.

6. A bill in equity does not lie by the assignees of a bankrupt against a judgment creditor and the sheriff, for moneys levied under an execution upon a judgment by nil dicit. Mitchell v. Knott, 1 Sim. 497.

7. An attachment for costs was issued by A. and B. (A.'s solicitor), against C., who paid the amount to the sheriff, and lodged with him a sequestration for a larger amount against A.:—Held, that the sheriff was not justified in paying the amount received on the attachment to the sequestrators, without the order of the Court. Williams v. Reeves, 12 Ir. Ch. R. 173.

8. The sheriff, having taken a defendant under an attachment for nonpayment of a large sum of money, in obedience to an order of the Court, received part of the amount, and a deposit of title deeds as security for payment of the balance on the return of the writ. At the return of the writ the defendant did not pay the balance. U

Held, also, that the Vice-Chancellor ought not to have granted the injunction without hearing the execution creditor, who should have been made a party to the action, or at any rate served with notice of it. Ib.

VI. FEES AND SALARY.

1. A recognisance of a tenant under the court, and his sureties, is not a debt due to the Crown; and upon the execution of a levari grounded on such recognisance, the sheriff is only entitled, under the equity of the 6 Ann., c. 7, to such fees as by that Act he should have upon the execution of a ca. sa. or fi. fa. at suit of a subject, i.e., to 1*s.* on the first 100*l.*, and 6*d.* on the residue of the sum levied by virtue of the writ; the 21 & 22 Geo. 3, c. 20 not applying to such an execution. Creed v. Creed, 4 Ir. Eq. R. 299.

The levari having been marked for 944*l.*, the sheriff, on the 21st December 1839, levied 139*l.* 3*s.* on account; and on the 11th June 1840 received the balance, 624*l.* 17*s.*, but did not pay over the amount until the 1st May 1841; it further appeared that he had received from the defendant in execution the sum of 73*l.* 10*s.*, as and for his fees upon the execution, and a further sum of 50*l.* for forbearance, and afterwards deducted from the sum levied 49*l.* 14*s.* for his fees upon the execution. The Court declared him entitled to the sum of 26*l.* 2*s.*, and no more, for fees, and ordered him, within ten days, to refund the 73*l.* 10*s.* and the 50*l.*, and also the difference between 49*l.* 14*s.* and 26*l.* 2*s.*, with interest at 6 per cent. from the time of the payments, and also to pay interest on the sum levied for the time he held it in his hands, and all the costs of the motion as between solicitor and client. Ib.

2. A deed of deputation, by which high-sheriffs appoint a sub-sheriff, and which provides that the first 2,400*l.* received by the sub-sheriff for fees in the office, are to be paid to the high sheriff, then the surplus (if any) to the extent of 800*l.* to the sub-sheriff as a salary, and the further surplus (if any) to the high sheriff, is not illegal, nor in violation of 12 Geo. 1, c. 4. Drummond v. Ponder, 1 Ir. Eq. R. 223.

3. Where the goods of a trader have been taken in execution for a sum exceeding 50*l.*, and, bankruptcy ensuing, the sheriff has been restrained from selling, the sheriff is entitled to be paid by the trustee out of the estate of the bankrupt all expenses properly incurred by him in keeping and taking possession of the goods and preparing for a sale, notwithstanding that no sale has taken place. Re Craycroft, Exp. Browning, 47 L. J., Bky., 96; 8 L. R., Ch., 596; 26 W. R. 559; 38 L. T., N. S., 364.

VII. OTHER MATTERS.

4. Goods formally seized by the sheriff under an execution remain in the apparent possession of the debtor within the meaning of the Bills of Sale Act. Exp. Mutton, Re Cole, 14 L. R., Eq., 178; 41 L. J., Bky., 57; 26 L. T. 916; 20 W. R. 882.

5. Agreement to procure the performance by a sheriff of an act which would be a violation of his duty:—Held, illegal. See Moher v. O'Grady, 4 L. R., Ir., 54.

6. Assignment by the sheriff proved by the bill of sale of the under-sheriff, without proof of the authority by the sheriff to the under-sheriff. Wood v. Rowcliffe, 6 Hare 186; 11 Jur. 707, 915.

7. When a sheriff had under a pressure of a writ extorted different sums from the person against whom the execution had issued, the Court ordered him to refund the money with interest at 6*l.* per cent. Creed v. Creed, Fl. & K. 396; 4 Ir. Eq. R. 299.

2. Damages under Merchant

7. By the Act 53 Geo. 3, c. of a shipowner for damage without his fault or privity, is limited to the value of th damage, and her appurtenanc Held, that the value of the damage is the price at whi sold; and that price must b by making deductions from proportioned to her age, bu and appraisement, and that be ascertained as at the time Dobree v. Schroder, 2 Myl. & 6 Sim. 291.

8. In a suit under the 53 was held that where an A required that, to all bills whi under its provisions, an affid form should be annexed, a the affidavit had been sworn the bill was filed was overruled. Walker v. Fletcher, 1 Ph. 115; 11 L. J., N. S., Ch., 103; 12 Sim. 420; 6 Jur. 4.

1. In a bill filed under the provisions of the Merchants Shipping Act 1854, to stay actions in other courts for damages occasioned by a collision with the plaintiff's ship, and to have the alleged damage ascertained, the plaintiff must aver that he has incurred liability in respect of some damage. Hill v. Audus, 1 Kay & J. 263; 24 L. J., Ch., 229; 3 W. R. 230; 3 Eq. Rep. 422.

2. Form of order made on motion for injunction in a suit by shipowner to restrain actions for damage occasioned by loss of the ship and cargo under the provisions of the Merchant Shipping Act 1854, part 9. Re African Steamship Co., 1 Kay & J. 326; 3 W. R. 316.

3. The value of a ship, within the meaning of the Merchant Shipping Act, 17 & 18 Vict., c. 104, s. 504, is not the value which the owner would have set upon his ship; nor is the sum for which the owner may have recently insured his ship the only criterion, although it is one of many criteria of its value; but, under ordinary circumstances, and, with the exception of a case where there is no market for a ship of the kind, such value will be taken to be what the ship would have fetched if sold immediately before her loss. African Steamship Co. v. Swanzy, 2 Kay & J. 660; 25 L. J., Ch., 870; 4 W. R. 210, 692.

Semble, in the excepted case, the Court would ascertain the price given for a ship, and the subsequent deterioration. Ib.

Shipowners, being under a contract to replace their ship immediately, if lost, insured her for 10,000*l.*, two months after which the ship was lost:—Held, that they were not estopped from proving in a suit instituted by them under the 514th section that the value of the ship, at the time when she was lost, did not exceed 5,900*l.* Ib.

In a suit instituted by a shipowner under the 514th section of the Merchant Shipping Act, to determine the amount of his liability in respect of the losses there mentioned, to have such amount distributed ratably amongst the several claimants, and to stop actions at law in relation to the same subject-matter, there being no adverse litigation amongst the claimants themselves, nor any other special circumstance occasioning an increase of costs, and over which the plaintiff has no control, the shipowner, as the party eased by the proceedings, must pay all the costs of all claimants whose claims are established, including the costs of actions at law commenced by any of such claimants, but stayed by injunction in the suit. Ib.

In such a suit, the Court has no power to give interest upon money ordered to be paid into Court. Ib.

4. The provisions of the 504th section of the 17 & 18 Vict., c. 104, limiting the liability of a shipowner to the value of his ship and freight, and the provisions of the 514th section, giving the Court of Chancery jurisdiction to stop actions and suits pending in any other court in relation to the same subject-matter, are applicable, notwithstanding the circumstances that the adverse claimant has obtained a definitive sentence or judgment of the Court of Admiralty condemning the ship; and the utmost to which the latter is entitled under such a judgment, in respect of the loss he has sustained, is to share ratably with the other claimants in the value of the ship and freight. Leycester v. Logan, 3 K. & J. 446; 26 L. J., Ch., 306; 5 W. R. 334.

But a court of equity has no control over the ship itself, and cannot prevent the party who has obtained such a judgment from proceeding to a sale of the ship, and retaining out of the proceeds such costs as he may be entitled to retain under the order of the Admiralty Court. Ib.

Subject, however, as above mentioned, the shipowner is entitled to an injunction, under the 514th section, restraining the party who has obtained such a judgment from proceeding further in the Court of Admiralty. Ib.

The value of a ship within the meaning of the 17 & 18 Vict., c. 104, s. 504, is what she would have fetched if sold immediately before the collision, without deduction in respect of costs of sale. S. C. 4 Kay & J. 725; 6 W. R. 849.

Therefore, when a ship had run down another, and was afterwards sold, and her owners claimed the benefit of the Act:—Held, that they were accountable for the gross proceeds of the sale, without deduction in respect of disbursements and fees retained by the Admiralty. Ib.

5. Where damage is done by a ship both to persons and goods, the ship is to be estimated at not less than 15*l.* per ton, for the purpose of adjusting the compensation to be paid to claimants in respect of loss of life or personal injury. Nixon v. Roberts, 1 John. & H. 739; 7 Jur., N. S., 820; 30 L. J., Ch., 844; 9 W. R. 890; 4 L. T., N. S., 679.

But where all demands in respect of personal injury or loss of life have been settled, and the only claimants against the ship are the owners of property, which has been damaged, the ship is not to be estimated at more than her actual value, notwithstanding the fact that loss of life or personal injury has occurred. Ib.

Where claimants of both kinds appear, the owners of property are entitled to have the compensation for loss of life and personal injury marshalled, so as to throw it primarily on the excess (if any) of the value at 15*l.* per ton over the actual value of the ship. Ib.

Rule as to interest on value of ship. Ib.

6. The Court of Chancery will follow the practice of the Court of Admiralty as to giving interest upon the amount recoverable in cases of damage to vessels or goods. Straker v. Hartland, 10 Jur., N. S., 1143; 34 L. J., Ch., 122; 11 L. T., N. S., 622; 5 N. R. 163.

The owners of a ship causing a collision are liable to pay interest upon the sum payable as damages, although such damages may amount to the maximum sum limited by 25 & 26 Vict., c. 63, s. 54. Ib.

A vessel in ballast was cut down by a steamship. A bill having been filed by the owners of the steamer for the protection of the Court:—Held, that they ought to pay into court, in addition to the limited amount of damages for which they were liable, interest upon that amount calculated from the date of the collision, payment having been delayed. Ib.

7. The 17 & 18 Vict., c. 120, did not repeal, but only modified, the 9 & 10 Vict., c. 93, so far as the latter created liability for the loss of life by collision at sea. Glaholm v. Barker, 1 L. R., Ch., 223; 12 Jur., N. S., 82; 35 L. J., Ch., 259; 14 W. R. 296; 13 L. T., N. S., 653. Affirming 34 Beav. 305; 11 Jur., N. S., 434; 34 L. J., Ch., 533; 13 W. R. 671; 12 L. T., N. S., 317; 6 N. R. 14.

The 25 & 26 Vict., c. 63, s. 54, fixing the limit of liability of the owner of a ship "in respect of loss of life or personal injury caused by the improper navigation of his ship to persons carried in another ship," extends to the crew of such other ship as well as to other persons carried thereby. Ib.

By the joint operation of the 9 & 10 Vict., c. 93, and the 25 & 26 Vict., c. 63, the liability of the owner of a sailing vessel for loss of life occasioned by collision with another vessel at sea is limited to 15*l.* per ton of the registered tonnage of his vessel. Ib.

The liability of a shipowner in respect of loss of life to the seamen of a vessel run down by his ship, is not limited to 30*l.* for damages payable in each case of death; and this rule applies to all cases, whether the Board of Trade does or does not institute proceedings in respect of such loss of life. S. C. 2 L. R., Eq., 598; 12 Jur., N. S., 764; 35 L. J., Ch., 657; 14 W. R. 1006; 14 L. T., N. S., 880.

Where the damage sustained by all the claimants exceeds in the aggregate the whole amount for which the shipowner is liable (viz. at the rate of 15*l.* per registered ton of his ship), the fund must be distributed ratably amongst all the claimants in proportion to the damages sustained by them respectively; but where the whole amount of damages is less than the whole amount for which the shipowner is liable, the amount of damages sustained by each claimant is to be paid in full. Ib.

1. A railway company carrying passengers and goods partly by railway and partly by its own ships, is entitled to the limitation on the liability of shipowners imposed by the Merchant Shipping Acts. London & South-Western Railway Co. v. James, 8 L. R., Ch., 241; 42 L. J., Ch., 337; 28 L. T., N. S., 48; 21 W. R. 151.

A railway company, known to be also shipowners, contracted to carry passengers and goods from London to Guernsey. The passengers and goods were taken by railway from London to Southampton, and were there put on board a ship which belonged to the company. The ship, on her way to Guernsey, came into collision with another ship and sank with several of the passengers and all the goods. Actions were brought against the company by surviving passengers for loss of luggage and for delay, by shippers of goods for loss of goods, and by the administrators of lost passengers for damages:—Held, that, as to all the damages (except those for delay), the liability of the company was, by the Merchant Shipping Acts, limited to the amount of 15*l.* per ton on the tonnage of the ship; that the amount so payable should be distributed by the Court of Chancery, and that all the actions against the railway company (except those for delay) should be restrained. Ib.

1. A collision took place on the high seas between two foreign ships, by which one was sunk. The owner of the sunken ship recovered judgment in the Admiralty Court, whereupon the owners of the other ship filed a bill, praying an injunction, and to have the value of their ship and her cargo ascertained. To this bill a demurrer was put in, and the V. Ch., in allowing the demurrer, decided as follows: that in construing an Act of Parliament the Court is bound by the verbal construction of the section in question, if plain and simple; but if there is any doubt upon that, it is entitled to look, first, at the circumstances attending the passing of the Act; next, to the preamble; and, lastly, to the whole purport and scope of the Act, beyond the section immediately under consideration; that, primâ facie, the Acts of an independent legislature must be supposed to deal with those matters only which are within its own jurisdiction; that part ix. of the 17 & 18 Vict., c. 104, limiting the liability of shipowners, in case of loss or damage to any other ship, has no application where one of such ships is a foreign vessel, and, therefore, none where both are foreign, and that the lex loci applies only to the form of procedure, and not to the substance of the proceeding itself:—Held (affirming 6 W. R. 537; 4 Kay & J. 367; 4 Jur., N. S., 451), that, excepting when foreign ships are expressly mentioned, the 17 & 18 Vict., c. 104, part ix., applies only to British ships. Cope v. Doherty, 4 Jur., N. S., 699; 27 L. J., Ch., 600; 2 De G. & J. 614; 6 W. R. 695.

2. The provisions of the 17 & 18 Vict., c. 104, limiting the liability of the owners of seagoing ships, apply in the case of damage done by a British ship to a foreign vessel, when such damage occurs within three miles of the coast of this country. General Iron Screw Collier Co. v. Shurmans, 1 John. & H. 180; 6 Jur., N. S., 883; 8 W. R. 732; 4 L. T., N. S., 138.

Semble, that such provisions would not apply to a case of damage done by a British ship to a foreign vessel where such damage occurred on the high seas beyond three miles from the coast of this country. Ib.

A British ship came into collision with a foreign vessel within three miles of the English coast, causing loss of life to those on board, and complete destruction of the ship and cargo of the foreign vessel:—Held, that the owner of the British ship was only answerable to the extent of the value of such British ship as against the owners of the foreign ship and cargo, although the owners of the foreign ship had proceeded in the Admiralty Court and recovered damages for the value of the foreign ship and her cargo. Ib.

3. Section 54 of the Merchant Shipping Act Amendment Act, 1862, which limits the liability of the "owners of any ship, whether British or foreign," applies to a British ship which has run down a foreign ship on the high seas, and is not to be interpreted as though the phrase "within the jurisdiction" were inserted in the clause. Foreign, as well as British ships, are entitled to the benefit of the limited liability provided by the Act. This Act has expressly provided for the case suggested in Cope v. Doherty (4 K. & J. 381), and General Iron Screw Collier Co. v. Schurmann (1 John. & H. 180). The Amalia, 2 N. R. 533.

5. In all sea-adventures the acts of the majority of partners shall bind the whole. Falkland v. Cheney, 5 Bro. P. C. 476.

6. An account of the profits of a voyage settled by the major part of the part owners shall conclude the rest. Robinson v. Thompson, 1 Vern. 465.

7. Part owners are tenants in common of a ship, but jointly interested in her use and employment; and the law as to the earnings of a ship, whether as freight, cargo, or otherwise, follows the general law of partnership. Green v. Briggs, 6 Hare 395; 17 L. J., N. S., Ch., 323; 12 Jur. 326.

A part owner of a ship has a right to require the gross freight to be applied, in the first place, in payment of the expense of the outfit of the ship for the voyage in which the freight was earned, notwithstanding he might sue his co-owners for their proportion of the expenses before the adventure ends. The same rule applies to the expenses of repairs to the hull of the ship, where such repairs were done with a view to the particular adventure in which the earnings were made, and without which that adventure could not have been undertaken; and it would seem that the circumstance that such repairs are not exhausted in the adventure does not create any exception to the rule. Ib.

8. Part owners of a ship are tenants in common, not joint tenants; the other partners have no lien, therefore, on the share of one, a bankrupt, having been also managing owner for outfit, freight, etc. Exp. Younge, 2 Ves. & B. 242; 2 Rose 78. n.

9. The owners of a ship are not interested in it as joint tenants, but as tenants in common: upon a bankruptcy, therefore, the bankrupt's share passes to the creditors under the bankruptcy, without being liable specifically to the claims of the other part owners, in respect of their disbursements and liabilities for the ship. Exp. Harrison, 2 Rose 76.

10. One part owner of a ship freighted against the express dissent of the other: the ship and cargo are lost; the loss falls wholly on the partner who freighted. Horn v. Gilpin, Ambl. 255.

1. Money paid to part owners for their votes in the appointment of a captain is no profit of the ship. Moffatt v. Farquharson, 2 Bro. C. C. 338.

2. A., one of three part owners of a ship, refuses to navigate; B. and C., the other two, navigate without his consent, and ship is lost in the voyage. A. shall bear his proportion of the loss, for he would have been entitled to an account of the profits. Strelly v. Winson, 1 Vern. 297.

3. A part owner of a ship, which had been let to the East India Company for a voyage to India, after the other part owner had expended a large sum in repairing and fitting it out for the voyage, arrested the ship by process out of the Admiralty Court, and compelled the other part owner to give security for his share; the ship afterwards sailed to India, and returned home:—Held, that the part owner who had taken the security was not entitled to any share of the profits of the voyage, but was bound to pay his portion of the repairs and outfit. Davis v. Johnston, 4 Sim. 539.

Construction of an agreement, entered into by the part owners of a ship, with regard to the management of the ship, and the allowance for brokerage and commission. Ib.

No question arises as to the jurisdiction of this Court in enforcing the rights of some against the other part owners of a ship, with regard to the management of the ship and the possession of the certificate of registry, where those rights are regulated by an agreement entered into between all the owners of the ship. Ib.

5. The managing owner of a ship chartered by the East India Company, receives the warrants for the freight, and pays them into a banker's in his own name, drawing cheques from time to time for various sums out of the proceeds, part of which are applied for the use of the ship, and part for other purposes:—Held, that the other part owners have no lien on this fund in the hands of the bankers, nor any claim against the bankers as their debtors. Exp. Gribble, 3 Dea. & Ch. 339.

6. Certain persons entered into an agreement in writing for forming themselves into a company, one of their rules being to manage the affairs by a committee, but no time being fixed for the duration of the company. Four of the members took upon themselves the exclusive management of a ship, the property of the company, and were about to send her on a voyage disapproved of by some of the members, whereupon the latter filed a bill to restrain the four from proceeding otherwise than under the direction of the committee, and to obtain delivery up of books, etc. A demurrer for want of equity was allowed. Miles v. Thomas, 9 Sim. 606.

7. A court of equity will not interfere by injunction to restrain a part owner of a ship from retaining part of the machinery of the ship, unless the Admiralty Court has been previously applied to, and refused to interfere. Brennan or Brenan v. Preston, 1 W. R. 69; 1 W. R. 112, 322.

2. Part owner of a ship in the East India Company's service is liable to pay the bills of the tradesmen employed by the husband of the said ship in fitting her out. Tolson v. Hallett, Ambl. 269.

3. The plaintiffs (who were part owners of the ship), having founded their title to relief on their rights as charterers, and stated that they were managing owners, not for the purpose of relief as managing owners, but in order to protect their rights as charterers, are not entitled to an injunction founded merely on their right as managing owners, but can only be so on the foundation of their rights as charterers. Lidgett v. Williams, 4 Hare 464; 14 L. J., N. S., Ch., 459.

A ship was chartered to proceed to such places on the west coast of Africa as the charters should direct, and there load from their factor a full cargo of guano, and proceed to a port of the United Kingdom, to be paid at a certain freight per ton. The ship was directed to Ichaboe. The factor there, one of the charterers, endeavoured to provide a full cargo, but failed to procure more than a small quantity. The master of the ship, who was also a part owner, after waiting thirty-one days, seeing no probability of obtaining a full cargo from the factor, applied himself to complete the cargo by his own exertions and at his own expense, and finally succeeded in doing so, after having been ninety-three days at Ichaboe:—Held, on motion for an injunction, that the charterers were not entitled to that part of the cargo which had been procured by the exertions of the master without the assistance of the factor, and which the master claimed to hold as the property of the owners, and not of the charterers. Ib.

4. A being interested in a moiety of a cargo, and having entered into a contract with B. to let him have half his share, wrote to C. and D., the consignees, informing them and authorising them to sell the cargo, and carry the proceeds to their separate accounts. The consignees acted upon this, and made advances to B., and B. also charged his interest in favour of E. It had been agreed between A. and B. that they should pay for the cargo by two bills, each to be paid by one of them. B. did not pay his bill. It did not appear whether A. had paid it or not:—Held, that A. had no lien on the proceeds of B.'s share, either as against him or as against C. and D., or against E. Holroyd v. Griffiths, 3 Drew. 428.

5. C. A., a part owner of the ship D., entered upon the duties of a ship's husband without any special agreement on the subject of commission; but he knew that his predecessor, also a part owner, had been paid by commission, and, as alleged, without any special agreement. C. A. rendered certain accounts of the earnings of the ship, and of payments made on her behalf, all of which were signed by the plaintiff, but he did not charge any commission for his services as ship's husband. Afterwards an account was rendered by C. A., in which he charged commission. On bill praying, inter alia, for an account, and that C. A. might not be allowed to charge any commission, it was ordered, that in taking the accounts of the dealings and transactions of C. A. as ship's husband, a reasonable commission should be allowed to him in respect of his labour and services as such, the chief clerk to have regard not only to the commission paid to C. A.'s predecessor, but to the nature and amount of the services performed by C. A. himself. Salter v. Adey, 1 Jur., N. S., 930.

6. One of several co-owners of a ship, who acts as ship's husband, is only entitled to charge the cost price of supplies to the ship furnished by him in the course of his business. Ritchie v. Couper, 28 Beav. 344.

7. As to the right of a part owner or partner in ships, who acts as ship's husband, to charge the usual commission. Semble, that, in the absence of any agreement, express or implied, he is not entitled. In a case in which no express agreement appeared, and the books showing the usual course of dealing were not produced at the hearing, an inquiry was directed. Miller v. Mackay, 31 Beav. 77.

The plaintiff and the defendant were partners; they were joint owners, with B., of some ships, as to which B. acted as ship's husband, but the duties were principally performed for him by the defendant. There being no agreement on the subject between the parties:—Held, that B. was entitled to the profits derived as ship's husband, and that the plaintiff was not, as partner, entitled to participate in any share of them received by the defendant, by arrangement with B. S. C. 34 Beav. 295.

8. The managing owner of a ship is competent to appoint himself to act as broker to the ship in collecting and distributing the freight, there being no incompatibility between those services (as, semble, there would be between the services of ship's chandler or ship's carpenter) and his fiduciary character as managing owner. Smith v. Lay, 3 Kay & J. 105.

But, before allowing him a commission in respect of the services in question, the Court directed an inquiry whether, according to the custom of shipowners or otherwise, he, being managing owner, was entitled to any and what commission in respect of duties performed by him, and which duties are ordinarily performed by shipbrokers. Ib.

9. M. contracted with his co-owners for use of their ship on a voyage to S., and he shipped in her some thousands of bricks, which, on the arrival of the ship, were reduced to dust. No freight was paid at S., nor was the dust removed, but the agent of the other owners at S. used it as ballast on a voyage by the same ship from S. to C., where it was sold for a small sum. In taking the accounts between them, the chief clerk charged the ship's husbands with the freight of the bricks, although they had received no part of it; and a motion by them to vary was dismissed, with costs. Garrett v. Melhuish, 4 Jur., N. S., 943.

10. T. was captain of a ship; S. & Co. were the ship's husbands; and S. & Co. and T. were the owners of the ship. S. & Co., to secure a debt due to W. & Co., gave them an order for the whole freight to arise from the ship's next voyage. W. & Co. remitted the order to the plaintiffs at L. S. & Co. had accepted bills in payment of repairs done for them to the ship. S. & Co. failed, and the bills were dishonoured. The ship arrived at L., and T. proceeded to get in the produce of the cargo, which realised more than was sufficient to pay the debt due to W. & Co., and T.'s expenses of the voyage. S. & Co. filed a bill for, and obtained, an injunction to restrain the captain from receiving the freight, without, however, alleging in the bill that he intended to misapply the freight when received :—Held, that a part owner, who is ship's husband, has not the right, as against other part owners, of making an assignment of the whole freight to secure moneys advanced to him; that the legal right to receive the freight was in the captain, and that, in the absence of any sufficient allegation and proof that he was about to misapply it, the injunction ought not to have been granted. Guion v. Trask, 1 De G. Purchase of by Partner.] 2. A ship was purchased by a partner for himself, but was paid for out of the partnership assets. The firm became bankrupt :—Held, that the firm had no interest in the ship, or any lien on it for the amount of the purchase money. Walton v. Butler, 29 Beav. 428.

6. An agreement was entered into for the sale of a ship to A. and B. (one-third to A. and two-thirds to B.), at the price of 750*l.*; and, if default should be made by the purchasers, for the re-sale of the ship, the deficiency, if any, upon the re-sale to be made good by the defaulting purchasers. Possession of the ship was delivered to the purchasers by the vendors, who received 250*l.* from A., and two bills of exchange, drawn by them, and accepted by A. for the remaining 500*l.* In the bills of sale, by which the agreement was carried into effect, the purchase money for the one-third and two-thirds of the ship was expressed to have been paid by A. and B. respectively. The acceptances of A. were dishonoured and he became bankrupt. On a bill filed by the vendors, who had become entitled to the whole interest in the purchase money, against B., who had become the sole owner of the ship by purchase from A.'s assignee, praying specific performance of the agreement by B., or that the ship might be sold, and the proceeds applied in payment, the Court held that it had jurisdiction, and decreed an account and payment of the unpaid purchase money by B., or a re-sale of the ship, in default of payment in a limited time. Lynn v. Chaters, 2 Keen 521.

7. When the vendor of a share in a ship has executed the bill of sale, and a receipt for the purchase money, without its being in fact paid, a court of equity will give relief as well as discovery. Ryle v. Haggie, 1 Jac. & Walk. 234.

8. No jurisdiction in bankruptcy to compel bankrupt to perfect bill of sale of a ship. Exp. Stewart, 1 G. & J. 344.

9. The owner of a ship proposes to his agent, to whom he was indebted on account, to transfer the ship to him, provided the agent would answer the owner's draft for repairs, in respect of which the owner was indebted to a third party not named. The ship was, in pursuance of this proposal, transferred to the agent, and the vendor afterwards became bankrupt, without having drawn on the purchaser, and without any communication of the terms of the purchase having been made to the creditor to whom the vendor was indebted for the repairs. There is no consideration between the purchaser and the vendor's creditor to entitle the latter to recover from the purchaser the amount of the repairs. Rattenbury v. Fenton, 3 Myl. & K. 505; 3 L. J., N. S., Ch., 203.

10. Assignment of outward-bound ship without possession and delivery of bills of lading, policies, etc., good against creditors. Brown v. Heathcote, 1 Atk. 160.

11. Bill of sale of a whaler, then absent on a fishing adventure, together with all masts, etc., boats, oars, and appurtenances:—Held, not to pass the cargo of oil, etc., acquired during the adventure. Langton v. Horton, 5 Beav. 9; 11 L. J., N. S., Ch., 233; 6 Jur. 357, 594.

12. R., trading under the name of R. & Co., contracted with a company for the sale and delivery to them of two vessels, to be sent by him to the Danube; and he undertook to advance a sum not exceeding 1000*l.* to furnish them for the voyage. The purchase money was paid in part, and the remainder was to be secured by a mortgage of the vessels. The plaintiffs were directors of the company. In order to further the objects of that company, they, on its behalf, and at the request of R., accepted, indorsed, and handed to him certain bills of exchange. R., on his part, gave them a guarantee that they should not be called upon to pay more than a portion of the amount for which they had so become sureties; and not that until a time that was named in the guarantee. No transfer of the vessels from R. to the company was ever completed, and no mortgage of them was executed to R. R. treated himself as the agent of his own firm of R. & Co., and of the company in the matter; but instead of sending the vessels from Newcastle-on-Tyne, where they were registered, to the Danube direct, as agreed upon, dealt with them as if he had been the complete owner of them, speculated with them, mortgaged one of them, indorsed over some of the bills of exchange, sent one of the vessels to a port which was far away from the Danube, after having freighted it with contraband of war for the use of the Circassians, and did all those acts without the knowledge of the plaintiffs. Upon a suit instituted by them, to be relieved from the liabilities incurred by them on behalf of the company, in respect of the two vessels: —Held, that as the dangerous nature of the cargo, which exposed the vessel to extraordinary risk, was concealed from the company by R., he could not have enforced the agreement against the company, and that the plaintiffs were entitled to be relieved from their liability. Burke v. Rogerson, 12 Jur., N. S., 635; 14 L. T., N. S., 780. Affirming 13 L. T., N. S., 415.

Held, also, that the delivery of a vessel by a vendor to a purchaser means, that the purchaser is to have the control of the vessel, and not necessarily that he is to be put into the manual possession of it. To complete the delivery he must be able to direct where the vessel shall go, what it shall do, what performances it shall be required to undertake; in fact, to have exactly the same power over it as exists with respect to any other chattel which is sold and delivered to a purchaser. Ib.

1. B. contracted to purchase a barge of H., the purchase money to be paid by instalments. Part of the money so to be paid was paid, and H. gave notice to B. that he had sold the barge to another person, and he must give it up, and gave a formal notice to that effect. On petition under the Merchant Shipping Act 1854, s. 65, to restrain the dealing with the barge until a day specified, order made on the terms of bringing the arrears of instalments into court, and giving security for the completion of the contract. Exp. Baker, 18 L. T., N. S., 313.

Where a petitioner under those sections claims as sole executor and general legatee of the registered owner, and makes the application within a year, though more than four weeks after the occurrence of the event on which the transmission took place, it is not necessary to serve the Crown or any other person. Ib.

Where jurisdiction was given in respect of a particular kind of proceeding, by an Act passed before the passing of the Judicature Acts, to the Court of Chancery alone, but, by a later Act, still before the passing of the Judicature Acts, the jurisdiction was extended to the Court of Admiralty, the Chancery Division now has jurisdiction under the Judicature Acts. Ib.

1. A purchaser under a judicial sale of a beneficial interest in a British ship is not entitled to be registered as owner of it. Chasteauneuf v. Caperyon, 7 L. R., App. Cas., 127; 51 L. J., P. C., 37; 46 L. T. 65.

3. Registry Acts, Effect of.

2. Sale of a ship at sea valid, notwithstanding the bankruptcy of the vendor before her arrival in port; and, therefore, before the title is complete by the indorsement on the certificate of registry, if the other requisites of the Ship Registry Act were previously complied with. Mestaer v. Gillespie, 11 Ves. 639.

Whether, the legal title under an assignment of a share in a ship failing under the Ship Registry Acts (26 Geo. 3, c. 60, 34 Geo. 3, c. 88), or for want of the indorsement upon the certificate, within ten days after the return of the ship to port, if that was prevented by fraud, relief can be had in equity, sed quære, in what form, and quære whether it may not be had as to the freight, if not as to the ship, though both were comprised in the same bill of sale. Id. 621.

3. Sale of a share of a ship is good without actual delivery. Whether an executory agreement for the sale of a ship must recite the registry under the 26 Geo. 3, c. 18, s. 17, quære. Addis v. Baker, 1 Anstr. 222.

4. If on sale of a ship there is no bill of sale or indorsement of certificate of registry, no relief can be given in equity on ground of accident or fraud. Thompson v. Leake, 1 Madd. 39.

5. Transfer of a share in a ship to another part owner, void by not procuring the indorsement upon the certificate, within the time prescribed by the Registry Acts after the arrival of the ship. Speldt v. Lechmere, 13 Ves. 588.

6. The bill of sale passes the absolute property in a ship at sea, subject only to be devested in case the indorsement on the certificate of registry not being made within ten days after the return of the ship to port; power of attorney to sign an indorsement on the certificate not revoked by bankruptcy of the vendor, subsequently to the execution of the power, but previously to the indorsement, being a power only to do a mere formal act, which the bankrupt himself might have been compelled to execute, notwithstanding his bankruptcy, and for a valuable consideration; therefore, in this case, the indorsement on the certificate being made within the ten days, under a power of attorney, the grantor of which had since become bankrupt:—Held, a sufficient compliance with the terms of the Registry Act. Dixon v. Ewart, 3 Meriv. 322.

7. A bill of sale of a ship was made a collateral security, and the papers, etc., delivered, but there was no recital in the bill of sale of the registry, pursuant to Act 26 Geo. 3, c. 60. This cannot be supplied against assignee of a bankrupt, and bill for that purpose dismissed. Hibbert v. Rolleston, 3 Bro. C. C. 571.

8. No relief given to aid a defective contract, etc., not conformable to the Ship Registry Acts. Curtis v. Perry, 6 Ves. 745.

9. Agreement for sale of a ship void under the Registry Acts (26 Geo. 3, c. 60, and 34 Geo. 3, c. 68), for want of the certificate of registry being duly recited in the memorandum of sale, although a copy of such certificate was thereto annexed. The policy of these acts prevents a Court from looking on one who has not strictly complied with their provisions in the light of a purchaser. Brewster v. Clarke, 2 Meriv. 75.

10. The vendor of a ship, with a covenant for title, retains after the sale (in order that he may fulfil his contract, and defend himself against an action brought upon his covenant) such an interest in the certificate of registry as enables him to sustain a suit for its delivery against a party unlawfully detaining it. Gibson v. Ingo, 6 Hare 112.

11. The non-registration of a ship, required by the 8 & 9 Vict., c. 89, ss. 37, 38, by the first purchaser, did not affect the title of a subsequent bonâ fide purchaser. Lapraik v. Burrows, 13 Moo. P. C. 132.

12. The transfer of a British ship is governed by the express provisions of the Merchant Shipping Acts, which make a clear distinction between the legal estate and mere beneficial interests therein:—Held, that a sale by licitation of a British ship (or of a share therein) without a conveyance by bill of sale did not create such an interest in the purchasers as rendered it compulsory on the registrar, under the Merchant Shipping Act 1854, to register them as owners, and that the registrar was right in refusing so to do, and to erase from his books the inscriptions contained in the register against the ship in the names of the mortgagees. Chasteauneuf v. Caperyon, 7 L. R., App. Cas., 127; 51 L. J., P. C., 37; 46 L. T. 65.

13. There is nothing in the policy of the Ship Registry Acts to prevent a third party not having any registered share in a ship from acquiring from the owner an interest in the proceeds of the sale of the ship in the hands of a purchaser, when the ship shall have been sold, the Court not being required to recognize any interest in such third person in the ship itself, semble. M'Calmont v. Rankin, 8 Hare 1; 19 L. J., N. S., Ch., 215; 14 Jur. 475.

But whether, under a contract by which a party has an interest in the proceeds of the sale of a ship, such party can compel the owner to sell the ship, or obtain a decree for the sale, quære. Ib.

The provisions of the Ship Registry Acts apply equally to contracts as to sales; and the whole frame of these Acts negatives any equity resulting out of the doctrine of notice.

An unregistered agreement, therefore, with the registered owner of a ship, which the owner subsequently transfers for value to another person who has notice of the agreement, cannot be enforced either as against the ship or its proceeds. S. C. 2 De G. M. & G. 403; 22 L. J., Ch., 554.

Whether upon such a contract an action for damages could be sustained, quære. Ib.

How far actual fraud in such a case would be relievable in equity, quære. Ib.

1. According to the proper construction to be put upon the 34th section of 8 & 9 Vict., c. 89, a court of equity will not enforce specific performance of a contract for the purchase of a ship, although such contract does not affect to make a transfer of the ship, but is merely executory. Quære, whether an action may not now be maintained at law on such a contract, although it would have been void under the old Registry Acts (26 Geo. 3, c. 60, and 34 Geo. 3, c. 68). Hughes v. Morris, 2 De G. M. & G. 349; 16 Jur. 603; 21 L. J., Ch., 761.

On a sale by auction of shares in a ship, part of a bankrupt's estate, one of the conditions was, that the purchase money should be paid to the solicitor of the assignees on or before a certain day, when the purchase was to be completed, and the purchaser to have possession, and a bill of sale; the purchaser paid part of the purchase money to the solicitor before the day appointed for the completion of the purchase, and had possession, but not a bill of sale:—Held, that the payment, and the execution of the bill of sale, ought, in pursuance of the condition, to have been contemporaneous; that the assignees, not having received the money from the solicitor, or executed the bill of sale, would not be restrained from taking proceedings to recover possession of the ship; and that the purchaser was not entitled to a decree for specific performance of the contract, by the execution of the bill of sale by the assignees, upon payment to them of the balance of the purchase money. S. C. 9 Hare 636.

A contract for the sale of a ship, or a portion of a ship, cannot be recognized in a court of equity, unless it has been registered, in conformity with the provisions of the Ship Registry Act, 8 & 9 Vict., c. 89. S. C. 16 Jur. 603; 21 L. J., Ch., 761.

Whether upon such a contract an action for damages would lie, quære, per Lord Cranworth, L. J. Ib.

2. The policy of the Ship Registry Act (8 & 9 Vict., c. 89), in disregarding interests not appearing on the register, is inapplicable both to the money arising from the sale of a ship, and to the produce of the freight. Armstrong v. Armstrong, 21 Beav. 78; 1 Jur., N. S., 859; 24 L. J., Ch., 659; 3 W. R. 563; 3 Eq. Rep. 973.

When a party who appears on the registry to be the absolute owner of a ship, enters into an agreement for valuable consideration, admitting he is a trustee, and engaging to sell the ship, and hand over the produce to the true owner, the Court, notwithstanding the 8 & 9 Vict., c 89, ss. 34-39, will enforce the agreement. Ib.

G. afterwards transfers his security (the mortgagor joining) to third persons, and C. files a bill against those third persons and the mortgagor for payment of his incumbrance, and an injunction to restrain selling, or, if sold, parting with the proceeds, on the ground of notice, and that the registry was void, the ship not being in a condition to register, and the representations as to ownership, etc., being false:—Held, that this Court has no jurisdiction to relieve against even manifest fraud in the case of a ship, nor does the equitable doctrine of a notice apply to the Ship Registry Acts. The registry is conclusive evidence of the title, and an endorsement on that registry good against a prior equitable mortgagee, although the party subsequently obtaining registry of his incumbrance had full notice of the prior charge. Bill dismissed without costs. S. C. nom. Coombs v. Mansfield, 3 W. R. 345; 3 Eq. Rep. 566.

1. Registered first mortgagees of a ship, with power of sale, took from the mortgagor, by an unregistered document, a declaration that the mortgage should be a security, not only for the mortgage debt, but for such sums as might, for the time being, be due from the mortgagor, either alone or with any partner to the mortgagees or their firm, however composed. Subsequently another incumbrancer took a registered mortgage, expressed to be subject to the first mortgage, but not referring to the unregistered charge, of which, however, the last mortgagee did not deny having had notice when he took his security:—Held, that the unregistered document was not merely a further charge but a new security, and that the Shipping Act, 8 & 9 Vict., c. 89, s. 34, excluded it from priority over the last mortgage. Parr v. Applebee, 7 De G. M. & G. 585; 24 L. J., Ch., 767.

But quære, if the memorandum of further charge had been for the benefit of the first mortgagees exclusively, whether they could not have tacked it to their security, although unregistered. Quære also, if the first mortgage had been a distinct trust for sale, and the further charge a mere charge upon the produce, whether the further charge ought to have been registered. S. C. 3 W. R. 645.

2. A. mortgaged a ship for 1,200*l.* to B., who transferred the mortgage to C. A. afterwards executed a second mortgage for 400*l.* B. afterwards paid off C., and C. signed a statutory receipt instead of a re-transfer. This receipt was produced to the registrar, who made an entry in the register-book, under the Merchant Shipping Act 1854, s. 68, to the effect that the mortgage had been discharged. C. afterwards executed a deed purporting to be a re-transfer of the 1,200*l.* mortgage to B., which was registered, and at the same time a note was made by the registrar against the entry of the receipt, stating that the receipt was signed in error, and the mortgage was afterwards again transferred to C., to secure a balance on account current, and this deed remained in C.'s hands, after satisfaction of all that was due on the account. B. then took a fresh mortgage from A. for 2,500*l.*, which included the 1,200*l.* and 400*l.*, and had since been transferred to the plaintiff. After the new mortgage, B. agreed with C. that the mortgage for 1,200*l.* should be a security for advances on an account current. The transfer of the mortgage to the plaintiff was not registered until after this agreement. Upon a question of priority between C. and the plaintiff:—Held, that the plaintiff's security had priority over that of C.:—Held, also, that the receipt with the entry on the register operated as a discharge of the first mortgage, and the same could not afterwards be revived by the note made by the registrar. Bell v. Blyth, 38 L. J., Ch., 178; 4 L. J., Ch., 136; 17 W. R. 194; 49 L. T., N. S., 662. Affirming 6 L. R., Eq., 201; 16 W. R. 885.

3. The jurisdiction conferred on the Court of Admiralty by the Admiralty Court Act 1861 (24 Vict., c. 10), s. 5, "over any claim for necessaries supplied to any ship elsewhere than in the port to which the ship belongs," does not create a maritime lien, or render the ship chargeable for necessaries. Johnson v. Black, The Two Ellens, 4 L. R., P. C., 161; 41 L. J., Adm., 33; 26 L. T. 1; 20 W. R. 592; 8 Moo. P. C., N. S., 398. Affirming 3 L. R. Adm., 345; 40 L. J., Adm., 11; 24 L. T. 592; 19 W. R. 983.

A British colonial vessel was mortgaged by her owners. The mortgage was duly registered under the Merchant Shipping Act 1854. In February 1868, whilst lying in the port of London, the material men, on the order of the master, did work and furnished supplies to the ship necessary to put her in a seaworthy condition. In July 1868 the mortgagee executed an instrument transferring the mortgage to B. This transfer was without any valuable consideration, and was not registered, being made to enable him to take charge of the ship for the mortgagee. In the same month B. took possession of the ship. The material men having instituted a suit against the ship to recover the amount due to them for the work and supplies, B. intervened. At the time of the institution of the suit, the ship was under the arrest of the Court, at the instance of two of her crew who had instituted a cause of wages; the owners of the ship were domiciled in Nova Scotia. The ship having been sold, the proceeds were found insufficient to satisfy the claim of the material men and the mortgage debt:—Held, that the assignee of the mortgagee was entitled to have his mortgage debt satisfied before the material men were paid the amount of their claim. Ib.

4. The legal title of a mortgagee of a ship who, for the purpose of facilitating a sale by the mortgagor, conceals his mortgage, cannot prevail in equity against a purchaser for valuable consideration without notice. Hooper v. Gumm, M'Lellan v. Gumm, 36 L. J., Ch., 282; 2 L. R., Ch., 282; 15 W. R. 464; 16 L. T., N. S., 107. Affirming 15 L. T., N. S., 187.

Certain shipbuilders in America built several ships, mortgaged them there, sent them to England for sale, sold them there, and paid the mortgagees in America. The mortgages were duly registered in America; but notice of the mortgage having been indorsed on the certificate of registry in one case, and having impeded the sale, it was agreed that no such notice should be indorsed in future. Another ship was accordingly sent over and sold; the shipbuilders received the purchase-money, and failed, leaving the mortgagee unpaid. The mortgagee filed a bill to establish his claim against the purchaser:—Held, that the rights to the ship acquired under American law must be recognized; but that the purchase, having taken place in this country, must be governed by English law. Ib.

A ship is not like an ordinary chattel, which passes by delivery, and there is no market overt for ships. Ib.

The purchaser of a foreign ship is bound to make inquiries as to the title. Ib.

Held, also, that that which furnishes the title to a ship in America will furnish the title to the ship in this country. Ib.

2. User of Ship by Mortgagee.

1. Semble, a mortgagee of a ship has power, under the 70th section of the 17 & 18 Vict., c. 104, to use as well as sell the ship. European & Australian Royal Mail Co. v. Royal Mail Steam Packet Co., 4 Kay & J. 676; 5 Jur., N. S., 310.

Where a mortgagee claimed under a special contract, which did not contemplate a sale by him until two months had elapsed after a demand for payment:—Held, upon the construction of the agreement, and especially having regard to the circumstance that the ship would otherwise remain useless in that interval, that he was at liberty to use the ship. Ib.

In such a case, the circumstance of the mortgagee being registered as absolute owner is not conclusive as to the rights of the parties. Ib.

2. A. took a mortgage of a ship, with a power of sale, with full notice that the ship was under contract by charter-party to carry a cargo for B. from N. to S.:—Held, that B. was entitled to an injunction to restrain A. from doing anything to interfere with the voyage of the ship from N. to S.; B. undertaking to abide by any order the Court might think proper to make as to damages. De Mattos v. Gibson, 5 Jur., N. S., 347; 28 L. J., Ch., 165; 7 W. R. 152; 32 L. T. 268.

Where property, either immovable or movable, is disposed of, with notice of a prior contract entered into by the person disposing of it for its use in a particular manner, the person taking it with such notice may be restrained from using it otherwise. S. C. 4 De G. & J. 276.

Semble, a mortgagee of a ship is entitled to take possession and sail her, and upon doing so becomes an owner within the meaning of 17 & 18 Vict., c. 104, and subject to all the liabilities consequent thereon. Ib.

Where, on granting an injunction against the use of a ship by an owner, an undertaking for damages is given, the measure of damages would include the loss of profit by the detention of the ship. S. C. 1 John. & H. 79; 7 Jur., N. S., 282; 30 L. J., Ch., 145.

But where an injunction was against a mortgagee of a ship, which was an insufficient security, who had declared his intention to sell, and had not suggested the loss of possible profit as part of the damage anticipated:—Held, that the loss of such profit was too speculative to be taken into account; and that the measure of damage was

1. Before the mortgagee of a ship obtained possession, and after the arrival of the ship in port, the agent of the owner, who was also the agent for the charterers and consignees, made an arrangement with the charterers and consignees, by which the freight was to be discharged by a sale by him of a portion of the cargo, instead of being paid in the manner provided by the charterparty; and the cargo was landed and stored with wharfingers upon this arrangement:—Held, that the mortgagee's lien for freight was at an end. Belfast Harbour Commissioners v. Lawther, 17 Ir. Ch. R. 54.

Where a portion of the cargo of a vessel is shipped on account of the owner, a mortgagee who takes possession under his mortgage cannot claim freight with respect to that portion. Ib.

2. A., a shipowner, mortgaged a ship, then on her road home, to B., and afterwards gave a written authority to C., to whom he was indebted, to receive the ship's freight. A., becoming bankrupt, his assignees, under an order in bankruptcy, sold the equity of redemption in the ship, and, after deducting the amount due to them, paid the balance into court under the Trustee Relief Act:—Held, that C.'s claim for freight could not be sustained, no notice of the assignment by A. having been given to the charterers or their agents. Re Pride of Wales and Annie Lisle, 15 L. T., N. S., 606; 15 W. R. 381.

Held, also, that it was not necessary that the mortgagors should admit the accuracy of the mortgagee's account, in order to entitle them to payment of the fund in court. Ib.

3. An owner of a ship assigned twenty-four sixty-fourth parts to A., and the remaining forty sixty-fourth parts to B., and afterwards, representing himself to be the owner of the ship, gave C. a charge upon the freight then being earned. A. registered the transfer to him prior to the date of C.'s charge, but B. did not:—Held, that C. had a lien upon the freight in priority to B. Lindsay v. Gibbs, 2 Jur., N. S., 1039; 22 Beav. 552; 4 W. R. 788.

Held, also, that the expenses incurred in earning the freight were the first charge upon it. Ib.

The wages of the captain and seamen of a ship, being the expenses which produce the income thereof, are proper deductions to be made from the gross freight, as between the part owners of the ship and the assignees of the freight belonging to the other co-owners. S. C. 5 Jur., N. S., 376; 28 L. J., Ch., 692. Affirming 3 De G. & J. 690; 26 Beav. 51; 4 Jur., N. S., 779.

A., owner of a ship, which was on a voyage under a charterparty, transferred to B., in November 1854, three-eighths of the ship, and the transfer was registered in the same month. In December he gave a charge to C. on the freight. Before this he had transferred his other shares in the ship to other persons, but their transfers were not registered till January 1855. C. gave notice of his charge to the charterers, but did not search the register, nor ascertain any of the charges in the ownership of the ship, and none of the transferees from A. had any notice of C.'s charge until after the end of the voyage. In February 1855 the ship's brokers, by the authority of the owners, insured the ship and freight, and on the termination of the voyage paid the wages of the captain and seamen. It having been decided that B. was entitled to three-eighths of the freight, and C. to the remaining five-eighths:—Held, that as against C. the wages of the captain and seamen, and the expenses of insurance, must be allowed as deductions from the gross freight. Ib.

4. A vessel was chartered to proceed to A., there take in a cargo to be shipped by the charterers, and return direct to London. After the ship's arrival in the port of London, and whilst the cargo was in course of delivery, a mortgagee, under an ordinary statutory mortgage made prior to the date of the charterparty, took possession:—Held, that he thereby acquired a right to the freight in priority to an assignee of the freight by a deed executed subsequently to the charterparty, notice of which had been given to the charterers. Brown v. Tanner, 37 L. J., Ch., 923; 3 L. R., Ch., 597; 18 L. T., N. S., 624; 16 W. R. 882.

5. The first registered mortgagee of a ship, by taking possession of her before the freight is completely earned, obtains a legal right to receive the freight, and to retain thereout not only what is due on his first mortgage, but also the amount of any subsequent charge which he may have acquired on the freight, in priority to every equitable charge of which he had no notice; and it makes no difference that a subsequent incumbrancer was the first to give notice to the charterers of his charge on the freight. Liverpool Marine Credit Co. v. Wilson, 7 L. R., Ch., 507; 41 L. J., Ch., 798; 20 W. R. 665; 26 L. T., N. S., 717.

6. The mortgage of a ship carries with it a right to receive the freight earned by the ship; and although the mortgagee cannot recover back from the mortgagor freight which he has allowed the mortgagor to receive, yet he may at any time intercept the freight by giving notice to the mortgagor, consignee, or charterer that he intends to exercise his right of property, and to require the freight to be paid to him. Wilson v. Wilson, 14 L. R., Eq., 32; 41 L. J., Ch., 423; 20 W. R. 436; 26 L. T., N. S., 346.

The owner of a British ship assigned by deed all freight then or thereafter to be earned by her to A. as security for an advance. This assignment, not being within the Merchant Shipping Acts, was not registered. The owner subsequently mortgaged the ship to B. without notice of A.'s rights. The mortgage to B. was duly registered. Freight subsequently became payable on the arrival of the ship at Marseilles by certain consignees there. Before the ship arrived at Marseilles, B. took possession of her, and also gave notice of his rights to the consignees:—Held, that he was entitled to receive the freight. Ib.

Semble, that B. would equally have been entitled to the freight, although he had not taken possession of the ship, so long as he gave notice of his rights to the consignees before they paid the money. Ib.

7. By the terms of a charterparty it was provided that the charterers should advance necessary funds for the ship's disbursements, not exceeding a specified amount at the port of lading. Previously to entering into the charterparty the owner had mortgaged the ship and freight. The charterers made advances for the ship's disbursements, considerably in excess of the amount specified in the charterparty. Before the freight became due the mortgagee took possession of the ship, and stopped the cargo for freight:—Held, that the charterers were not entitled to deduct from the amount due for freight the advances made by them in excess of the sum provided by the charterparty. Tanner v. Phillips, 27 L. T., N. S., 480; 21 W. R. 68; 42 L. J., Ch., 125.

Disbursements charged against the freight of a vessel, but not expressed in the charterparty, are mere loans, and cannot be properly deducted. Ib.

1. A mortgagee of a ship does not, ordinarily speaking, obtain, by the mortgage alone, a transfer, by way of contract or assignment, of the right to freight. The mortgagor remains the dominus of the ship, with regard to everything relating to its employment or non-employment, or to any rate of freight to be earned by its employment, until the mortgagee takes possession. The mortgagee on taking possession becomes the owner, and it is by virtue of that ownership, and not by virtue of any antecedent contract or right, that he is entitled to receive the freight, which, by contract or otherwise, is lawfully payable. Keith v. Burrows, 2 L. R., App. Cas., 636; 46 L. J., C. P., 801; 37 L. T., N. S., 291; 25 W. R. 831. Affirming 2 L. R., C. P. D., 163; 46 L. J., C. P., 452; 36 L. T., N. S., 567; 25 W. R. 446, which reversed 1 L. R., C. P. M. mortgaged his ship, then in California, to K. & Co., but the mortgage was not registered. A cargo was afterwards put on board in California on account of the ship, and bills of lading were drawn for a nominal freight of 1*s.* per ton. Before the ship arrived in England, B. & Co., without notice of the mortgage, advanced money to M. on the security of the cargo, and then sold the cargo to J. by a contract containing the following clause: "As cargo is coming on ship's account, freight is to be computed at 55*s.* per ton, and invoice to be rendered accordingly." M. paid for the cargo, and received the bills of lading, and handed them to B. & Co. with an assignment indorsed of his interest in "the within freight," expressed to be "at the rate of 55*s.* per ton, and not the nominal amount of 1*s.* per ton." K. & Co. registered their mortgage, and on the arrival of the ship took possession, and claimed freight at the rate of 55*s.* per ton:—Held, that the sum of 55*s.* per ton was not really freight, but was part of the price of the cargo kept back till the arrival of the ship, and that the mortgagees were not entitled to more than 1*s.* per ton, the freight specified in the bills of lading. Ib.

4. Rights of Mortgagor in Possession.

2. Under the Merchant Shipping Act 1854, so long as the mortgagee of a ship does not take possession, the mortgagor, as the registered owner, subject to the mortgage, retains all the rights and powers of ownership, and his contracts with regard to the ship will be valid and effectual, provided that his dealings do not impair the mortgagee's security. Collins v. Lamport, 4 De G. J. & S. And see Keith v. Burrows, 636; 37 L. T., N. S., 291; L. J., C. P., 801.

1. A., the owner of forty-eight shares in a ship belonging to the port of Liverpool, gave a power of attorney to B., the other part owner, empowering him to sell A.'s share of the ship. The ship then sailed from Liverpool under the command of B., having on board her certificate of registry and the power of attorney. While she was at sea A. mortgaged his forty-eight shares in the ship and all future freight to the plaintiffs, who had no notice of the power of attorney, and a memorandum of the mortgage was entered in the Liverpool Register. Subsequently B. sold all the shares in the ship and cargo at Sydney (as to A.'s shares by virtue of the power of attorney) to C., who had no notice of the mortgage made by A. The ship was thereupon registered de novo at Sydney, and was freighted by C. at his own expense with a new cargo for England. She sailed, and arrived in London without having been to Liverpool. The plaintiffs took possession of the ship and cargo in the London docks, and gave notice at all the wharves of their claim to forty-eight shares of the ship and freight. The defendants afterwards also took possession:—Held, that the plaintiffs had the better title under the Registry Act to forty-eight shares of both the ship and freight, and that they had properly taken possession of them under the circumstances. Cato v. Irving, 5 De G. & Sm. 210; 21 L. J., N. S., Ch., 675; 16 Jur. 161.

2. An assignment of a ship by way of mortgage, which is defective by not having complied with the Registry Act, cannot be made good in equity. Exp. Bulteel, 2 Cox 243.

3. Bill of sale of a ship, though absolute in its terms, may, notwithstanding the Ship Registry Act, be in equity held a mortgage, if such appears to have been the real intention of the parties. Langton v. Horton, 5 Beav. 9; 11 L. J., N. S., Ch., 233; 6 Jur. 357, 594.

4. The owner of eight sixty-fourths of a vessel, in consideration of 100*l.*, assigned them by bill of sale; contemporaneously with its execution, a memorandum was endorsed thereon, signed by an agent of the assignee, stipulating that, on the assignor repaying to the assignee the 100*l.* and interest, the bill of sale should be void. Subsequently, the assignee received interest, and gave a receipt for it, as for interest on 100*l.* advanced on security of the bill of sale. The registry at the custom-house was of an absolute sale. The assignee sold the eight sixty-fourths, and the bill of sale to the purchaser was duly executed; but, before its registry, a bill to redeem by the original owner was filed, and the Court restrained the registry of the bill of sale, and made a decree for redemption on payment of the 100*l.* and interest, with costs so far as they were increased by the dispute of the plaintiff's right to redemption. Whitfield v. Parfitt, 4 De G. & Sm. 240; 15 Jur. 852.

5. Although the 17 & 18 Vict., c. 104 contains no provision negativing the validity of a mortgage made otherwise than according to the terms of the Act, the whole scope of the Act is to that effect, and an equitable mortgage is still invalid. Liverpool Borough Bank v. Turner, 2 De G. F. & J. 502.

Under the 17 & 18 Vict., c. 104, mortgages of ships can only be made in the manner prescribed by the Act. S. C. 1 John. & H. 159; 6 Jur., N. S., 935; 29 L. J., Ch., 827; 8 W. R. 730. Affirmed 3 L. T., N. S., 494.

Therefore, an unregistered contract to assign an interest in a ship when required as a security for past and future advance is inoperative. Ib.

6. There is no provision in the Merchant Shipping Acts which authorises the registrar to erase entries of mortgages. In case of their having been duly discharged, an entry to that effect may be made under s. 68 of the Act of 1854. Chasteauneuf v. Caperyon, 7 L. R., App. Cas., 127; 51 L. J., P. C., 37; 46 L. T. 65.

7. In August 1874 a shipbuilder, having overdrawn his account with his bankers, offered to give them a security over a ship which he was then building. This offer was declined in the first instance, with the intimation, however, that circumstances might arise which might render it desirable for the bank to have the security offered, whereupon he promised that whenever he was required to give it he would do so. Two months later, his account being still largely overdrawn, the bankers requested him to give them the promised security. Accordingly he deposited with them the builder's certificate of the ship, which was still unfinished, and the following day they put a man in possession. At the same time he, in consideration of 770*l.* then advanced to him, assigned to the bankers a trade debt of 2,384*l.* 2*s.* 8*d.*, as a further security for the general balance of his account. Two days afterwards he filed a petition for liquidation:—Held, that the deposit of the builder's certificate was a good equitable mortgage of all his property and interest in the ship, and that although unfinished, it did not require registration under the Bills of Sale Act 1854. Exp. Winter, Re Softley, 33 L. T., N. S., 62; 24 W. R. 68; 44 L. J., Bky., 107; 20 L. R., Eq., 746.

Whether a ship not yet finished, and therefore incapable of registration under the Merchant Shipping Acts, is properly called a ship or not, it is a thing capable of assignment by certificate in the usual way. Ib.

6. Sale.

8. A mortgagee of a ship had a power of sale by his security. The ship subsequently arrived at Glasgow, and the mortgagee advertised her for sale by public roup in Scotland. An interdict of the Scotch court was obtained to suspend the sale. In the meantime, the parties claiming other interests in the ship, proposed to the mortgagee to enter into a charterparty for a voyage of the ship, pending the disputes which had arisen. The mortgagee refused to enter into such charterparty. The ship afterwards arrived, and was then, at Liverpool:—Held, that the mortgagee had a clear right to refuse, as being a speculation which could not be imposed upon him. Samuel v. Jones, 7 L. T., N. S., 760.

Held, also, that the interdict having thrown a cloud upon the mortgagee's title, he was entitled to a decree for a sale, and an account as against all parties claiming an interest in the ship. Ib.

By 25 & 26 Vict., c. 63, s. 3, the Court has jurisdiction over all equitable rights and claims of owners and mortgagees of ships. Ib.

1. A merchant at Gibraltar acted as agent for L., a merchant in Liverpool, and also for M., another merchant in the same place, L. and M. having also dealings together. The Gibraltar merchant was accustomed to send to L. monthly accounts of sales of coal which L. had sent to Gibraltar, giving him credit for the proceeds, and debiting him with commission and other expenses. In 1854 L. applied to M. to make him advances, which he agreed to do, provided L. would give orders to the Gibraltar merchant to remit him out of the proceeds of the sale of L.'s coals the sum he might advance. The Gibraltar merchant having a general account with M., instead of actually remitting these advances to him, entered to his credit the amount which he was instructed from time to time by L. to remit, and in the course of his business remitted bills to M. for collection, including some drawn on L. In March 1856, M. requiring further security for any future advances he might make, L. gave him a mortgage on a ship for them, he having previously given him security on the ship for two sums, which had been advanced to him. In August 1856 L. assigned the equity of redemption in the ship to the plaintiff, and on the 2nd September he became bankrupt. On the 4th September the plaintiff sent to Gibraltar to take possession of the ship, tendering to M. 900*l.*, being the amount he thought due to him. The ship, which had previously been advertised for sale, was sold to the defendants, who were registered as owners. Some of the bills drawn by the Gibraltar merchant on L., and remitted to M., were dishonoured, but the amounts credited to M. by the Gibraltar merchant remained undiminished and undisturbed. Upon the plaintiff filing a bill to have the sale of the ship set aside, and for an account:—Held, that as M. had consented to substitute for the remittance a credit in the general monthly account, and as the bills remitted were not in respect of those particular items, but indiscriminately for collection, he had no right to select any particular item of credit, and attribute the dishonoured bill to that item, so as to prejudice third parties. M'Larty v. Middleton, 9 W. R. 861; 4 L. T., N. S., 852.

Held, that M. was not justified in selling the ship on the 19th September, as nothing was due to him at that time beyond the 900*l.*; he was, therefore, liable to pay the plaintiff the value of the ship beyond that sum. Ib.

Held, also, that the equitable title to the ship would not prevail against the legal title of the registered owners, the 17 & 18 Vict., c. 104 not having altered what was previously the national policy with respect to shipping. Ib.

2. A first mortgagee of a ship, with the concurrence of the second mortgagee, sold the ship and received the proceeds. The second mortgagee, being unable to obtain an account, filed a bill for an account, also charging that the defendant was liable for stores which he had improperly allowed the mortgagor to retain. The defendant alleged that the proceeds of the sale were not sufficient to pay off his mortgage. 1. The owner of a British ship, having mortgaged it in England, employed a Liverpool firm to consign it to their agents at New Orleans. As the New Orleans firm happened to be creditors of the owner, the Liverpool firm, in consideration of their having the consignment, instructed their agents not to proceed against the ship at New Orleans, but to remit the proceeds to the mortgagees. Afterwards, the Liverpool firm getting into difficulties, some of the mortgagees insisted on the consignments being changed, and the Liverpool firm withdrew their instructions. When the ship arrived, the New Orleans firm brought actions in their courts against the owner; and, as the courts of Louisiana do not recognize the rights of mortgagees without possession, writs of attachment were obtained, under which the ship was seized. The mortgagees then, to prevent the ship being sold, gave to the New Orleans firm bonds for the amounts to be recovered in the actions, upon which the ship was released. The mortgagees filed a bill to restrain the holders of the bonds from suing on them, and to have the bonds delivered up:—Held, that the Court had no jurisdiction to stay proceedings on the bonds; first, because the Court would not have restrained execution of the attachment at New Orleans, as it could not have placed all the creditors, foreign and domestic, on an equal footing; secondly, because if it could have done so, the mortgagees should have sought to restrain the attachment, and not have placed themselves in a worse position by giving the bonds; and, thirdly, because if the prayer was granted, the courts of New Orleans would never in future release an English ship on the bond of a mortgagee. Liverpool Marine Credit Co. v. Hunter, 4 L. 8. Other Matters.

2. Mortgage of a ship in the port of Dublin, and delivery of muniments; the mortgagee insured her there, and made a second mortgage; the second mortgagee took possession as soon as he was informed she was in an English port; this is a sufficient possession to take it out of the stat. 21 Jac. 1, c. 19. *Exp. 4. A registered mortgagee of a ship having deposited with a creditor the instrument of mortgage thereof, and subsequently become bankrupt:—Held, that such deposit took the ship out of the order and disposition of the bankrupt, and constituted the creditor equitable mortgagee of the ship. Lacon v. Liffen, 32 L. J., Ch., 25; 11 W. R. 135; 7 L. T., N. S., 411; 1 N. R. 44.

P. & Co. being registered mortgagees of ships, deposited on the 20th December 1858, before bankruptcy, the instruments of mortgage with their bankers, to secure the amount of an overdrawn account. On 22nd December two cheques were presented by P. & Co. for payment, but the bankers refused to pay them; and thereupon a bill of sale was executed by P. & Co. of their goods and effects, to secure the balance due, and further advances. On the 23rd December the bankers paid the cheques. Transfers of the mortgages were not executed to the bankers. On the 28th the bankers sold under the bill of sale some of the effects. On the 30th P. & Co. were adjudicated bankrupts:—Held, that the bill of sale being an assignment of all the trader's property, as a security for an antecedent debt as well as for future advances, was an act of bankruptcy. 5. T. lent D. 600*l*. D. assigned a one-sixteenth in a ship, and, by defeasance, it was declared that T., out of the earnings, should pay himself 600*l*., and should account to D. for the surplus, but there was no covenant for payment of the money. The ship was lost, and T. brought his bill against D.'s executrix for the debt; she denied assets prætor to satisfy specialty debts. Decreed, she should account for testator's estate, and T. to account for the earnings, and to be allowed for the outfit of the ship, though cast away. Tyrell v. Thomas (Lady), 1 Vin. Abr. 183, pl. 5.

6. Moneys were advanced by the plaintiffs to M. M., upon the agreement that they should be reimbursed by the proceeds of a ship then about to be launched in New Brunswick, and of her cargo, which were to be consigned by M. M. to the plaintiffs for sale; and a bill of lading of the cargo, and a power of attorney from the registered owner, enabling the plaintiffs to sell the ship, were transmitted by M. M. to the plaintiffs. M. M. afterwards transferred the ship and cargo to the firm of C. & G. The ship was thereupon registered in the names of C. & G. C. & G. sold the ship and cargo to the firm of R. & P., and the ship was then registered in the name of P. A new master was appointed, and a new bill of lading signed, and the ship and cargo were consigned by R. & P. (with a power of attorney from P. to sell the ship) to R. & G., in which firm all the members of the firm of R. & P. were partners, except P. The plaintiffs filed their bill against C. & G., R. & P., and R. & G., and the assignees of M. M., to establish a lien on the proceeds of the ship, and on the cargo, under their agreement with M. M. The defendant R., one of the partners in the firms of R. & P. and R. & G., was alone within the jurisdiction and served with the subpœna:—Held, that in the absence of P., who appeared to be the registered owner of the ship, the Court could not make any decree establishing the plaintiffs' lien on the proceeds of the sale of the ship; that, although it appeared by the result of an inquiry directed before the Master, that the ship had been sold by R. & G., pending the suit, under the power of attorney from P., and that the proceeds had been accounted for by R. & G. to R. & P., no fraud being proved in the transactions under which those firms had acquired the ship and the proceeds, the plaintiffs were not entitled to any relief in respect of the proceeds of the sale in the suit in which R. only appeared; that the claim of the plaintiffs in equity to the proceeds of the ship would not be assisted by proof of notice by P. of the transactions between the plaintiffs and M. M. M'Calmont v. Rankin, 8 Hare 1; 19 L. J., N. S., Ch., 215; 14 Jur. 475.

1. B., the owner of a ship registered in his name, entered into a treaty with A. for the sale of a moiety of the ship; payment to be made one-half by bill of exchange, and one-half in cash. A. agreed to purchase, and sent to B. his acceptance for half of the purchase-money, but did not pay any portion of the cash. Subsequently the transaction ended in the conveyance by B. to A. of one-fourth of the ship. During the early part of this transaction C. supplied the ship with goods. C. claimed to establish his demand for such goods against the estate of A. in bankruptcy. The Court, being of opinion that at the date of the supply of the goods there was no completed contract between A. and B., disallowed the claim. Anon., 1 Ir. R., Eq., 2160.

3. The Court possesses, and will exercise jurisdiction over a bottomry bond in a case of fraud, and will for that purpose restrain proceedings upon the bond in the Admiralty Court by injunction. Glascott v. Lang, 3 Myl. & C. 451; 8 Sim. 358; 2 Jur. 909.

Semble, a bottomry bond given by the captain of a ship at a foreign port is not necessarily void because there was time during the ship's stay at such port for the captain to have written home to his employers, and to have received an answer. 5. Before taking a bottomry bond from the master of a vessel, a party is bound to use reasonable diligence in inquiring whether the wants of the vessel can be supplied by the personal credit of the owner, and for want of such diligence (in a case where the sufficiency of the personal credit might very easily have been ascertained) a bond was held void on appeal, reversing the judgment of the Court below. Heathorn v. Darling, 1 Moo. The inquiry before the sum of money, on a partic and payable upon a certain b what was necessary for disc demands against the ship as be discharged, and of defray as it was necessary to incur to proceed home:—Held, th of the captain was not with the inquiry, although it might prevent his returning with the ship. Ib.

Held, secondly, that a sum of money, which was required for the purchase of stores and payment of wages at a port into which the ship put on the homeward voyage, was within the meaning of such inquiry, although, on the particular day named, such sum could not be definitely foreseen. Ib.

Thirdly, that a sum which became payable for seamen's wages, dues, and other expenses, immediately upon the completion of the homeward voyage, was also within the meaning of the inquiry. Ib.

The obligee in a bottomry bond also chartered the ship for the homeward voyage:—Held, that, from the time the charterparty was made the sum that would become due for the freight was a resource of the captain, applicable to procuring such sums as were necessary to discharge the expenses mentioned in the inquiry. Ib.

1. The authority of a master to pledge by bottomry, for the purpose of raising money for the absolute necessaries of the ship, only arises when he cannot obtain the necessary advances upon the personal credit of the owner, and such power to raise money by bottomry is vested in the master, although the owner resides in the same country, provided there are no means of communication with the owners, and the exigency of the case requires it. Wallace v. Fielden, 7 Moo. P. C. 398.

2. Bottomry bond upon ship, freight, and cargo, taken up by the master of a small Swedish vessel at a port in Sweden. Part of the cargo was consigned to England:—Held, that, considering the distance between Sweden and England, and the means of communication, it was essential to the validity of the bond, so far as the cargo was concerned, that the master should communicate with the owners of the cargo before resorting to hypothecation of the cargo, as he could have obtained an answer within a period not inconvenient with the exigency of the circumstances of the case. The Bonaparte, 8 Moo. P. C. 459.

A Swedish vessel, bound from a port in Sweden to Hull, was driven, by stress of weather, to put back into another port in Sweden. This took place in November 1848. Ten days afterwards the cargo was unladen, and the ship found to be greatly damaged. The repairs were completed, and the cargo reloaded. The master at once communicated with the owners of the ship resident at Sweden who, being without funds, consented to the master taking up a bottomry bond for payment of the necessary repairs, and the British consul at the port where the vessel lay wrote on behalf of the master, and as his agent, to the consignees at Hull, informing them of the damage sustained by the vessel, but made no application for money, nor referred to the necessity of repairs. No answer was made to this letter, and the master, in March 1849, hypothecated the ship, freight, and cargo, for the money borrowed for the repairs:—Held, that such letter to the consignees was a sufficient notice to authorise the master raising money by bottomry on the cargo. Ib.

3. A master cannot bottomry a ship without communication with his owner, if communication is practicable, and, à fortiori, he cannot hypothecate the cargo without communicating with the owner of it, if communication with such owner is practicable. Such communication must state not merely the necessity for expenditure, but also the necessity for hypothecation. Kleinwort v. Casa Marittima of Genoa, 2 L. R., App. Cas., 156; 25 W. R. 608; 36 L. T., N. S., 118.

A statement by the master of the injuries sustained by a ship and of the repairs necessary is not a sufficient communication with the owners to justify him in giving a bottomry bond upon the ship and cargo, if unaccompanied by a statement that such bond is necessary. Ib.

The mere receipt by the owners of the cargo of general information that the ship is damaged and in need of repairs does not impose upon them the duty of supplying money for such repairs without further information. Ib.

4. A bottomry bond is not invalid merely because the advance secured by the bond is made by agents of the ship, provided that they could not be expected to advance on the personal credit of the owners, and gave the master an opportunity of obtaining an advance on the owners' personal credit elsewhere by refusing such an advance. Smith v. Bank of New South Wales, The Staffordshire, 4 L. R., P. C., 194; 41 L. J., Adm., 49; 27 L. T. 46; 20 W. R. 557; 8 Moo. P. C., N. S., 443; 25 L. T. 137.

A bottomry bond can only hypothecate something which is in danger of perishing by maritime risk during the time that the bond is running, and therefore cannot validly pledge freight to be earned on a voyage after that maritime risk is ended and the bond is forfeited. Ib.

A ship being mortgaged to G., sailed on a voyage to Melbourne and back. On her arrival at Melbourne she required necessary repair, and the agents having refused to make further advances upon credit, the master entered into a bottomry bond, hypothecating the ship and her freight to Melbourne and back, and drew bills on G. for the amount secured by bottomry. Before the bills arrived in England G. died, and the holders of the bond and bills failing to obtain either acceptance or payment took proceedings on the bond:—Held, that they having failed in obtaining acceptance or payment of the bills were entitled to sue upon the bond, but that the bond could not validly hypothecate freight which had not been earned at the time the bond was payable. Ib.

Held, also, that the bond was not invalidated by the absence of a previous communication between the master and the co-owner. Ib.

Held, also, that the mortgagee of a ship cannot, for the purposes of such previous communication as is necessary between the party hypothecating the ship and the owner, be deemed an owner; though it may be otherwise if the mortgagee is also the ship's agent and agent for the owner. Ib.

5. Before resorting to bottomry for raising necessary supplies, it is absolutely necessary, where practical, that notice should be given by the master to the owner of the vessel, and an allegation that such owner was insolvent is no excuse for not communicating to him, unless he has been judicially declared insolvent, and the ownership of the vessel vested in his assignees, to whom such notice must then be given. The

1. Where the master, in consequence of damage sustained on the voyage, and the ship becoming unseaworthy, and no advances on loan or bottomry could be obtained to repair her, sold her to the plaintiffs, who repaired and sent her with a cargo to her registered port in England, but the owners refusing to ratify the sale, or consent to the registry of the ship in the plaintiff's names, put men on board to take possession of her and the cargo:—Held, that the bill of sale of the ship could not be treated as in the nature of a bottomry bond, as it was not intended so to operate. Ridgway v. Roberts, 4 Hare 106.

I., D. G.). Deck beams, ties, diagonal ties, main and spar deck stringers, and all iron work, to be in accordance with Lloyd's rules for classification": —Held, that the shipbuilders were bound to supply without extra charge any new plates required to enable the vessel to be classed 100 A 1 at Lloyd's; and that neither the letters of the parties before the contract was signed, nor the initialed deleted words in the contract, could be considered for the purpose of interpreting the intention of the parties. Inglis v. Buttery, 3 L. R., App. Cas. (Sc.), 552.

Held, also, the costs of Lloyd's survey, and the Board of Trade tonnage measurement, should be borne by the shipowner. Ib.

3. A shipbuilding company, at the time of being wound up, was under a contract with a steam-packet company to do certain repairs to a ship within a given time, and under orders obtained in the matter of the winding up the official liquidator was authorized to complete the repairs, the rights of all parties being reserved. The repairs not having been completed within the stipulated time, leave was given to the steam-packet company to go in under the winding-up order and prove in respect of any damage that might have accrued from the delay:—Held, that the measure of damages was the net profits which the steam-packet company might have made if the contract had been completed in time, but that the company was not entitled under the order to prove for damages arising from imperfect workmanship during the delay. Re Trent and Humber Shipbuilding Co., 38 L. R. 811; 8 L. T., N. S., 563; 1 N. R. 307.

As to the memorandum of the 20th May:—Held, that under it the plaintiff was entitled to a lien on the unfinished ship for the 500*l.* actually advanced. Ib.

Held, also, that no registration under the 17 & 18 Vict., c. 36 was necessary. Ib.

Held, also, that the vessel was not within the order and disposition of the builders at the time of their bankruptcy. Ib.

1. L., who was executor of H., and manager of a bank, agreed to take a security on the ship E., belonging to F., in lieu of a security given by F. to H. on another ship, and he abstracted money from the bank, which he advanced to F. to enable him to complete repairs on the ship E., taking from F. a security on the ship to himself, as executor, for these advances, as well as for the sum advanced by H. The bank, having discovered L.'s improper abstraction of their money, required security for it, and L. assigned to them the securities on the ship. The ship was sold for a sum much less than the amount originally advanced by H.:—Held, first, that as the bank took the assignment from L. to secure a pre-existing debt due from him personally to them, and had notice that the securities belonged to the estate of H., they could have no better title against the estate than L. would have had if he had advanced his own money, instead of that of the bank. Collinson v. Lister, 2 Jur., N. S., 75; 25 L. J., Ch., 38. Affirming 20 Beav. 356.

Held, secondly, that L. would in that case have had no claim against the estate, as he had not advanced the money for repairs from necessity and bonâ fide, and therefore could not set up his claim in respect of these advances against the security for the sum lent by H. Ib.

Held, thirdly, that the bank could not claim a lien on the proceeds of the sale of the ship on the ground of following trust moneys of theirs improperly disposed of by L., for that they had, by taking the security from him, treated the transaction as a loan from them to him; and moreover, as he was their agent, they were affected by his acts in making the advances. Ib.

Held, fourthly, that whether the title to the ship could or could not be affected by the trusts of the mortgage from F. to L., the moneys received from the sale of it were subject to those trusts, and that the registered transfer of the securities to the bank did not enable the bank to retain the moneys discharged from those trusts. Ib.

6. No lien on a ship or proceeds from sale of it for repairs done, except in course of a voyage; liberty given to bring an action as to the personal liability of the part owners who received the benefit. Lord Hardwick's decision in Doddington v. Hallet (1 Ves. 497) has been overruled, and now settled that part owners in a ship are not to be considered as partners. Buxton v. Snee, 1 Ves. 154.

7. A ship belonging to the defendants, registered in the port of London, sustained serious damage on her voyage to New Zealand, and on her arrival there was surveyed and pronounced not seaworthy. The master was unable, either by loan or bottomry, to raise money for her repair, and he at length sold the ship to the plaintiffs, and on receiving payment of the purchase money by a bill of exchange in London, executed to them a bill of sale of the ship. The plaintiffs repaired the ship, and sent her to England with a cargo. The defendants refused to ratify the sale or consent to the registry of the ship in the plaintiffs' names, and on the arrival of the ship in the port of London the defendants put several men on board to take possession of the ship and cargo for them. The plaintiffs thereupon applied for an injunction to restrain the defendants from interfering with the ship, or removing her out of the jurisdiction, and for a manager and receiver of the ship and cargo:—Held, that the plaintiffs had no equitable, as distinct from a legal, title to the ship, and inasmuch as their title (if they had acquired any) was a purely legal one, and the case of interference, if wrongful, was therefore a mere trespass, the Court could not interfere in favour of the plaintiffs by injunction. That the plaintiffs, according to the case made on the motion, if they failed at the hearing to establish their right to the ship, would be entitled to equitable relief in respect of the bill of exchange given for the purchase money, and that they were entitled to have the trial of the legal right put in a course for determination, and to have the property protected in the mean time. Semble, in such case, independently of the relief in respect of the bill of exchange, if engagements had been contracted of which the conduct of the defendants would prevent the fulfilment, and if there could be no adequate compensation to the plaintiffs in damages, or if the defendants were about to carry away or destroy the property, the Court might interfere by injunction. Ridgway v. Roberts, 4 Hare 106.

Held, also, that if the plaintiffs had acquired no legal title by the purchase, they had no lien in respect of the moneys laid out by them in the repairs, nor could the bill of sale of the ship be treated as in the nature of a bottomry bond, as it was not intended so to operate. Ib.

2. A lien upon chattels confers no right of sale upon the person holding such lien, though the retention of the chattels may be attended with expense; and therefore, where shipbuilders, having a lien for the unpaid purchase money on a ship built by them according to contract, filed a bill to enforce their lien by a sale, a demurrer to such a bill was allowed. Thames Ironworks and Shipbuilding Co. v. Patent Derrick Co., 1 John. & H. 93; 6 Jur., N. VIII. PASSENGER SHIPS.

3. In an action, in which one of the questions between the parties was, whether the defendant was justified in expelling the plaintiff from a berth in a steamer, it was proved that the plaintiff placed his coat upon the berth while it was vacant, afterwards applied at the office of the company to which the steamer belonged for the purpose of engaging the berth, and caused the company's clerk or agent, then in attendance at the office, to enter the plaintiff's name on the way-bill opposite the number of the berth, but that the defendant having also applied for the same berth, another agent or clerk of the company altered the way-bill by inserting the defendant's name opposite the berth, and allotting another one to the plaintiff, and that the plaintiff, upon returning to the berth in dispute, after the steamer had started, found the defendant's servant at the door, who refused to allow him to enter. The plaintiff afterwards entered the berth and was removed by the defendant. Evidence was also given that, according to the usage on board the steamer, the rights of the passengers inter se to berths during the voyage were to be determined by the way-bill as finally settled and sent on board, and that disputes during the voyage with respect to passengers' accommodation should be decided by the captain or steward:—Held, first, that the plaintiff was not entitled to a direction that he was in possession of the berth in dispute. Dysart v. Montgomery, 8 Ir. R., Eq., 245.

Held, secondly, that the way-bill, as finally settled and delivered to the officers on board, determined the right to the berth as between the plaintiff and the defendant. Ib.

1. Where the master of a ship on behalf of the owner lets the ship on charterparty to A., and the owner becomes bankrupt, and his assignees give notice to A. not to pay any further sums of money on account thereof to the master; this notice will affect A. as to all sums paid afterwards by him to the master, beyond what the master had actually paid or stood engaged for on account of the ship, at the time of the notice; but will not defeat payments made to that extent. Wilkins v. Mure, 1 Cox 150.

2. A ship pledged abroad by the master for expenses, etc., well hypothecated, and the part owners liable. Samson v. Braggington, 1 Ves. 443.

3. Whoever lets a ship to hire, must take care that the hirer is substantial, for if he be not competent the master must pay for his neglect; yet a factor may retain goods to pay custom for salvage. Paul v. Birch, 2 Atk. 621.

4. The master of a ship who had expended all the money furnished to him by his employers, entered into a contract abroad for the purpose of obtaining funds to enable him to lay in the cargo which constituted the main object of his voyage:—Held, under the circumstances, and upon its appearing that the owners had derived benefit from the contract in question, that they had no right to repudiate the claim of the party by whom the advance was made, upon the ground that the master had exceeded his authority in the transaction, or that he had obtained the advance by means of representations to the lender the truth of which the latter was not in a position to prove. Ashmall v. Wood, 5 W. R. 397; 3 Jur., N. S., 232. And see 4 W. R. 694; 2 Jur., N. S., 827.

2. Barratry.

5. A master of a ship, without the owner, entered into a charterparty with plaintiff to undertake a voyage on certain terms, and for due performance he bound the ship, tackle, etc., valued at 300*l*. The master deviated, and committed barratry, for which plaintiff obtained a sentence against him in Spain. The owner brought trover for the ship, and an action against plaintiff for the freight. Per cur., the master is liable for the deviation and barratry, but the owner is not liable beyond the sum at which the ship was valued in the charterparty. Anon., 2 Ch. Ca. 238.

6. When a master ships and carries Polynesian native labourers without a licence, against the provisions of the Kidnapping Act 1872, 35 & 36 Vict., c. 19, proof that the master, although he may never have seen the Act itself or the proclamation thereof in the Australasian Colonies, was informed before shipping the labourers that such an Act existed, and that it was illegal to carry them, is sufficient evidence to justify a jury in finding that he shipped and carried the labourers wilfully and with knowledge of the prohibition, so as to make his act barratrous. Australian Insurance Co. v. Jackson, 33 L. T., N. S., 286.

3. Infringement of Patent.

7. An action was brought against the master of a ship to restrain him from using pumps which were an infringement of the plaintiff's letters patent. He denied having used any pumps which were an infringement of the patent, and did not suggest that the owners ought to be parties. It was shown that the ship was fitted up exclusively with pumps which were an infringement of the letters patent, but had been so fitted up before the defendant, who was not a part owner, had taken command of her; he had nothing to do with putting them on board, and they had never been worked in British waters:—Held, that the injunction was rightly granted on the ground that the defendant, being in command of a ship exclusively fitted up with pumps which were an infringement of the letters patent, was intending to use the patented invention. Adair v. Young, 12 L. R., Ch. D., 13; 40 L. T. 598.

4. Sale of Ship or Cargo.

8. The master of a vessel has no power to sell her so as to affect the insurers, except under circumstances of stringent necessity: such circumstances as, after sufficient examination of her condition, and after every exertion in his power, within the means at his disposal, to extricate her from peril or to raise funds for the repair, leave him no alternative but to sell her as she is. Cobequid Marine Insurance Co. v. Barteaux, 6 L. R., P. C., 319; 32 L. T., N. S., 510; 23 W. R. 892.

9. On the 19th of April an Austrian ship, with a valuable cargo on board, ran upon a rock on the eastern side of Algoa Bay, distant fifty miles by sea, and about eighty by land, from Port Elizabeth. The Austrian consul at Port Elizabeth came to the spot, and, there being no hope of getting the vessel off, he advised the master to sell her with the cargo. The master accordingly advertised the ship and cargo for sale, and they were sold in one lot by auction on the 30th of April for 9,500*l*. after a brisk competition. The purchaser got some part of the cargo out of the wreck, but on the 19th of June the ship went to pieces with the rest of the cargo on board. The owners of the cargo having abandoned it to the underwriters as a total loss, the underwriters filed their bill to have the goods which had been brought to land delivered to them as not having been effectually sold. The master had not gone to Port Elizabeth, nor endeavoured to procure funds to enable him to save the cargo; nor had he made any effort to induce any persons to undertake the salvage of the cargo. Several witnesses at Port Elizabeth deposed that in their opinion no person could have been induced to undertake the salvage; others gave their opinion that offers to save the cargo could have been obtained if a large percentage of the net proceeds had been offered. There was a good deal of evidence to show that, in the opinion of persons on the spot, the course which had been adopted of selling the wreck and cargo was the most advisable one in the interest of all parties concerned:—Held, that no such necessity was proved to have existed as would make the master the agent of the owners of the cargo to effect a sale; that the sale was void; and that the plaintiffs were entitled to the cargo saved, subject to a proper allowance for salvage and other expenses. Atlantic Mutual Marine Insurance Co. v. Huth, 16 L. R., Ch. D., 474 ; 44 L. T. 67 ; 29 W. R. 387.

1. Where a master has no authority from the owner to sell a ship, there must be a strong case of necessity to justify the sale. The necessity which the law contemplates is not an absolute impossibility of getting the vessel repaired, for if the ship, being in a foreign port, cannot be sent upon her voyage without repairs to be done at such a great cost as no prudent person could venture to incur, that will constitute a case of necessity, and justify the master in selling. Lapraik v. Burrows, 13 Moo. P. C. 132.

Unnecessary delay on the part of the owner, dissatisfied with the sale of the ship by the master, may import acquiescence in the sale. Ib.

If there has been acquiescence by the owner, however unauthorized the sale might have been at the commencement, it amounts to a ratification by the owner. Ib.

The onus probandi to establish such necessity is upon a first purchaser. How far such onus attaches to a second purchaser depends upon the circumstances of each particular case. Ib.

The fact of the purchasers being surveyors, employed by the master to survey the ship, does not necessarily invalidate the sale. Ib.

2. The authority of the master to sell the goods of an absent owner is derived from the necessity of the situation in which he is placed ; and consequently, to justify his selling, he must establish a necessity for the sale ; and an inability to communicate with the owner. Australasian Steam Navigation Co. v. Morse, 4 L. R., P. C., 222 ; 27 L. T. 357 ; 20 W. R. 728 ; 8 Moo. P. C., N. S., 482.

Under these conditions, and by force of them, the master becomes the agent of the owner, not only with the power, but under the obligation (within certain limits) of acting for him ; but he is not, in any case, entitled to substitute his own judgment for the will of the owner, in selling the goods, where it is possible to communicate with the owner. Ib.

The possibility of communicating with the owner depends on the circumstances of each case, involving the consideration of the facts which create the urgency for an early sale, the distance of the port from the owner, the means of communication which may exist, and the general position of the master in the particular emergency. Ib.

Such a communication need only be made when an answer can be obtained, or there is a reasonable expectation that it can be obtained, before the sale. Ib.

When, however, there is no ground for such an expectation, every endeavour, so far as the position in which he is placed will allow, should be made by the master to obtain the owner's instructions. Ib.

The master is bound to employ the telegraph as a means of communication, where it can usefully be done ; but the state of the particular telegraph, the way in which it is managed, and the possibility of transmitting explanatory messages, are proper subjects to be considered in determining the question of the practicability of communication. Ib.

1. A master of a ship has no lien on the ship or freight for wages, or for any expenditure which he may make in the ordinary discharge of his duties as master, however necessary for the performance of the voyage. But the case becomes one of ordinary principal and agent, where he makes a special contract, in itself ultra vires, in order to fulfil which he incurs special expenses; if the owner adopts the benefit of that contract, he must, in equity, also bear its burthens. Bristow v. Whitmore, 9 H. Where, therefore, the master of an ordinary sea-going ship entered into a charterparty, under seal, to carry troops from the Mauritius to England, and stipulated, on his own responsibility, in the charterparty, that he would make certain alterations in the ship, in order to enable him to carry the troops, and at the Cape of Good Hope entered into another charterparty, not under seal, to a similar effect, and made the specified alterations, and paid money, and drew bills to meet the expenses necessary to the making of these alterations, and the voyage was performed:—Held, that, in equity, the master was first entitled out of the freight earned under these charterparties to be repaid the sums advanced, and to be indemnified against the bills, and that the owner (or his mortgagee) was only entitled to the net freight after deducting these charges. Ib.

2. The master of a ship belonging to a company drew a bill on the company for necessaries supplied to the ship, which was accepted, but was dishonoured at maturity. He paid the bill, and claimed repayment from mortgagees who had taken possession of the ship. On the following day an order was made for winding up the company. The master then applied in the winding-up for leave to take proceedings in the Admiralty Court, and obtained an order giving him leave. The liquidator applied to discharge this order, and an order was made for the liquidator to pay into court to a separate account to meet the claim 150*l.*, which exceeded the principal and interest, the master undertaking not to proceed in the Admiralty Court; the payment to be without prejudice to any application by him to increase the amount. The 150*l.* was paid in, and he applied to increase the amount so as to cover the costs of defending an action brought against him by the holder of the bill, and his costs of the application in the winding-up. The Vice-Chancellor ordered the principal and interest on the bill to be paid to the master out of the 150*l.*, and the residue to be paid to the liquidator:—Held, that though if there had not been mortgagees in possession of the ship, the proper mode of enforcing the master's lien on the ship would have been by application in the winding-up, the order giving leave to proceed to the Admiralty Court was a proper order, the mortgagees not being parties to the winding-up; and that the master was entitled to all his costs before the Vice-Chancellor as costs properly incurred by a mortgagee in enforcing his security. Re Rio Grande Do Sul Steamship Co., 25 W. The ship is lost, and the seamen sue the captain for their wages:—Held, that those bonds were unjust and void in law. Buck v. Rawlinson, 1 Bro. P. C. 138.

The owners of a ship let it out to freight, and by the charterparty it was agreed, that no freight should be paid to the owners until six days after the ship should return to the port of London, and make a full delivery of her lading, but the master might detain the imprest money; and if the ship should be lost in her voyage, the master and owners should not expect any other satisfaction than the imprest money for the freight and demurrage of the ship. The ship was lost; and upon a question who was liable to pay the seamen's wages:—Held, that the master was liable in the first instance, as having hired them, but that he had his remedy against the owners. Ib.

5. East India Company takes bond from the mariners and officers of the ships, etc., not to demand their wages unless the ship returned to the port of London. Decreed J. shall be paid in due course of administration. Mitchell v. Edes, 2 Vern. 391; Pre. Ch. 125.

8. The captain of a ship served a notice on the trustees of the docks, in which the cargo of the ship was being discharged, not to suffer its removal till the freight was paid, and wrote to the owners of the ship to inform them that he had stopped the cargo till the wages of himself and the seamen had been paid. In a suit between the owners and the mortgagee of one of them, the captain was made a party, and did not, by his answer, disclaim. The chief clerk found that certain sums were due to him in respect of wages, but that other sums claimed were not due:—Held, that the plaintiff was justified in making the captain a party, and that the latter was justified in not disclaiming, and was therefore entitled to his costs. Alexander v. Simms, 20 Beav. 123 ; 24 L. J., Ch., 618.

1. A shipowner assigned fifteen-sixteenths of a ship to his creditor, in trust to sell and retain his debts, and afterwards became bankrupt. The ship was afterwards sold :—Held, that the creditor must bear his proportion of the seamen's wages and other expenses on account of the ship. Douglas v. Russell, 4 Sim. 533.

3. Semble, that a bill of lading, in which the words "or order or assigns" are omitted, is not a negotiable instrument. Henderson v. Comptoir d'Escompte de Paris, 5 L. R., P. C., 253 ; 21 W. R. 873 ; 29 L. T., N. S., 192.

When goods have been delivered to the person to whom the bill of lading was made out, and they have then been delivered to indorsees of the bill of lading, so that the indorsees unite in themselves a legal and an equitable title to the goods, the omission of the words "or order or assigns" in the bill of lading is not sufficient to give the indorsees constructive notice of some equitable arrangement between the person to whom the bill of lading was made out and the consignors. Ib.

4. A bill of lading, in mentioning the freight payable for a cargo, did not use the ordinary words "he or they paying freight for the same," but, after giving the names of the consignees to whose order the cargo was to be delivered, employed the words "freight for the goods 4*l.* 5*s.* per ton or 20 cwt. net, delivered, with primage and average accustomed":—Held, that the two forms of expression were in effect the same, and constituted the ordinary condition that the goods were to be deliverable only on paying freight. Weguelin v. Cellier, 6 L. finally delivered to the consignees in Toronto. No notice of damage was given until thirteen days after the delivery was completed:—Held, that the condition, though in its first clause limited to insurable damage, clearly applied, as regards its second clause, to all damage, whether apparent or latent, which could, by examination of the packages conducted with reasonable care and skill at the place of removal, have been discovered. Moore v. Harris, 1 L. R., App. Cas., 318; 45 L. J., P. C., 55; 34 L. T., N. S., 519; 24 W. R. 887.

The bill of lading in this case was a contract to be governed and interpreted by English law, and therefore no substantive defence arising from delay in making the claim could be made apart from the express condition contained therein, notwithstanding the provisions of Article 1680 of the Canadian Civil Code. Ib.

1. A condition in a bill of lading provided, in effect, that, on the arrival of the vessel in dock, the consignee of a portion of the cargo should be ready to receive the goods, and that, in default, the master or agent of the ship should be at liberty to land the goods and warehouse them at the consignee's risk and expense. The vessel arrived, and the agent of the consignee made an immediate application for the goods, but was told that it was not known in what part of the ship they were. On receiving the same answer on the following day, the agent withdrew, handing to the mate a notice desiring him to give twenty-four hours' notice of his readiness to deliver the goods, in accordance, as the notice alleged, with 25 & 26 Vict., c. 63, ss. 66, 67. No such notice of readiness was given, and, there being no one to receive the goods, they were placed in a warehouse by the master of the ship, a charge of 5*l.* 17*s.* 3*d.* being thereby incurred. The consignee having threatened to charge his agent with the value of the goods unless he obtained delivery of the same, the agent paid the said sum under protest, and brought this action against the shipowner to recover such sum:—Held, that the special contract in the bill of lading excluded the operation of the Merchant Shipping Act Amendment Act; and that the Act did not apply to a case where the shipowner was in bonâ fide ignorance of the position of the goods, regard being had to the premature demand of the agent of the consignee. Oliver v. Colven, 27 W. R. 822.

2. In the absence of express words to the contrary a bill of lading implies a warranty of seaworthiness, and all the exceptions in it must be taken to refer to a period subsequently to the sailing of the ship with the goods on board. Steel v. State Line Steamship Co., 3 L. R., App. Cas. (Sc.), 72; 37 L. T. 333.

When special clauses in a bill of lading exonerate the shipowner from the liability of even the perils induced by the negligence of his servants, it is necessary that the jury should find whether the vessel was or was not seaworthy when starting on the voyage. Ib.

A cargo of wheat was shipped at the port of New York for conveyance to Glasgow, and a specially worded bill of lading contained clauses excepting "peril of the seas of whatever nature or kind soever and howsoever caused," including negligence of the crew. On the voyage the sea burst through an insufficiently fastened port hole, damaging the cargo. A jury found by special verdict that this porthole had been insufficiently fastened, but did not find whether this happened before starting on the voyage:—Held, that there was an implied engagement to supply a seaworthy ship. Ib.

Held, also, that the jury not having found whether the vessel started on her voyage in a seaworthy condition, there was no finding upon which judgment could be entered; therefore the case must be reheard. Ib.

Whether the ship was seaworthy was a question of fact which lay at the very root of this case; but no answer to this question was found in the special verdict; therefore there was no finding on which the judgment could be entered either way. Ib.

4. Transfer.

3. Indorsement of bill of lading is not a valid assignment, unless goods are directed to be delivered to assignee. Brown v. Heathcote, 1 Atk. 160.

4. A., a merchant in London and in Hong Kong, purchased goods for shipment from B., and paid for them by his acceptance of B.'s draft against the shipment, on the terms that A. should send them to his firm at Hong Kong, and that the proceeds should be remitted to A. in bills specially to meet such acceptance. A.'s firm at Hong Kong owed a large sum to C., and were under engagement to secure the debt by depositing shipping documents with him. Being threatened by C. with immediate legal proceedings, they promised him that if he would forbear to take such proceedings, and would release them from their obligation to deposit shipping documents, they would deposit with him a bill of lading for goods of a certain value, upon the understanding that the bill of lading, or the goods represented therein, should be returned to them upon payment of a sum equivalent to the value thereof. The bill of lading of the goods purchased from B. was accordingly indorsed to C., who had no knowledge of the terms made with B., and it was returned by C. according to agreement, on receipt of an equivalent sum:—Held, that C. by such forbearance and release gave valuable consideration; that the legal interest in the goods passed by the indorsement of the bill of lading, and that B. could not enforce his claim against the proceeds of sale received by C. in respect thereof. Chartered Bank of India, Australia, and China v. Henderson, 5 L. R., P. C., 501; 30 L. T., N. S., 578.

5. When goods are at sea, the parting with the bill of lading, which is the symbol of the goods, is parting with the ownership of the goods themselves. Barber v. Meyerstein, 4 L. R., H. L., 317; 39 L. J., C. P., 187; 22 L. T. 808; 18 W. R. 1041.

The same principle applies to goods which for the convenience of parties have been landed at a sufferance wharf. Ib.

As long as the engagement of the shipowner has not been completely fulfilled, the bill of lading is a living instrument, and the transfer of it for value passes the absolute property in the goods. Ib.

It has not been fulfilled when the goods, though actually landed at a wharf, are subject to a stop order. Ib.

The person who first gets the bill of lading (though only one of a set of three) gets the property which it represents; he need not do any act to assert his title which the transfer of the bill of lading of itself renders complete, and any subsequent dealings with the others of the set are subordinate to the rights passed by that one. Ib.

Though the shipowner or wharfinger, having no notice of the transfer of one bill of lading, may be excused for delivering the goods to a person who produces to him another bill of lading, which has in reality been subsequently taken, that does not affect the legal ownership of the goods as between the holders of the two bills of lading. Ib.

1. A. having ordered goods from B., a firm at Calcutta, through C., their agent in this country, received an invoice of the goods, with a notice that B. had drawn upon him for the price at six months. On calling at C.'s office, A. was met by C.'s messenger, who handed to him for his acceptance the bill of exchange drawn upon him in respect of the goods, and the bill of lading, which was pinned to the bill of exchange. A. accepted the bill of exchange, and afterwards deposited the bill of lading with E. as a security for an advance, together with a policy of insurance upon the goods effected by himself in his own name, C. having declined to part with the original policy on the ground that it included other goods besides those purchased by A. A. having become bankrupt, and unable to take up his acceptance, the goods were claimed by B. and C., on the ground that the bill of lading had been improperly pledged, having come into A.'s hands irregularly, and without their knowledge, and contrary to an alleged custom amongst East India merchants not to part with the bill of lading of goods until the vendee has taken up his acceptances on account thereof:—Held, that the alleged custom of trade was merely exceptional, and was not established by the evidence as being the usual course of business; and that the title of E., as bonâ fide assignee for value, must prevail over any claim by the unpaid vendors. Coventry v. Gladstone, 4 L. R., Eq., 493; 37 L. J., Ch., 30; 16 W. R. 304.

2. A cotton broker of New Orleans was in the habit of sending cotton over to England, and the plaintiff was in the habit of accepting his bills, in consideration of the assignment to him of bills of lading of the cotton. In 1870, in the course of this business, a bank to whom two bills of the cotton broker on the plaintiff were indorsed sent them for the plaintiff's acceptance, and with the bills they sent a memorandum, "The bank holds bills of lading for 504 bales of cotton." The plaintiff thereupon accepted the bills, and retiring them before they became due received the bills of lading, and went to the captain of the ship on his arrival and presented the bills of lading, which turned out to be forgeries:—Held, that, notwithstanding the representation contained in the memorandum sent by the bank, the plaintiff could not call on the bank to repay him the value of the bills. Leather v. Simpson, 40 L. It was left in his bill-box for acceptance on the morning of the 24th October, and a formal letter, demanding compliance with the conditions of N., was written to him from H. & Co. In the course of the same day D. wrote to H. & Co., requesting the loan of the bills of lading, saying, "We will return them to you, if from any cause we do not accept the bill for 1,312*l.*" They were sent to him on the same day; but after D.'s request had been complied with, H. & Co. accepted the first of N.'s drafts, and wrote to him that they would "give protection" to all. On the morning of the 25th October a clerk of H. & Co. learned at D.'s counting house that the draft for 1,312*l.* had not been accepted; but in the middle of that day it was sent to H. & Co., accepted. D. however refused to give up the bills of lading, and on the advice of a solicitor (obtained before he had accepted the draft for 1,312*l.*) attached the goods in the hands of H. & Co. They brought an action against him to recover the bills of lading, and he filed a bill to stay the action:—Held, that he had not such equitable right on account of anything occurring before the 24th October as would prevail against the legal rights which H. & Co. acquired on that day. Hoare v. Dresser, 7 H. 1. B., a merchant at Newcastle, agreed to accept bills of exchange drawn by C., a merchant residing in Prussia, on receipt of a bill of lading. C. sent a forged bill of lading with the bills of exchange, which were accepted by B. C. then indorsed the bills of exchange to D. for value. On discovering the fraud B. applied to D. to deliver up the bills of exchange, which he refused to do. B. thereupon filed a bill for an injunction to restrain D. from proceeding against him at law, and praying that the bills of exchange might be delivered up to be cancelled. The Vice-Chancellor granted the injunction (1 Giff. 142; 5 Jur., N. S., 855; 7 W. R. 627; 33 L. T. 298), but, on appeal, the injunction was refused, and the bill dismissed with costs. Theidemann v. Goldschmidt, 1 L. T., N. S., 50.

2. Goods were sold by D. to A., to be paid for on delivery, and were delivered on board a ship, which was to take them to the East Indies, but not paid for. The bill of lading was delivered to B., the agent of A. A. bought the goods, in fact, as agent of C. D. filed a bill to restrain B. from parting with the bill of lading, alleging that A. was insolvent, and that the mode of obtaining the goods was a fraudulent contrivance, by which C. was to obtain satisfaction of a debt owing to him by A. There being no proof of fraud:—Held, that the bill could not be maintained, and D. was ordered to pay the costs. Straker v. Ewing, 34 Beav. 147; 13 W. R. 286; 11 L. T., N. S., 588.

3. 4. A bank presented a bill of exchange to the drawees for their acceptance, accompanied by a ticket representing that the bank held bills of lading to cover it. The drawees thereupon accepted the bill, relying on the statement that the bank held bills of lading which both parties thought to be genuine. The bills of lading had been forged by the drawer of the bill of exchange:—Held, that the drawees were not entitled to demand from the bank genuine bills of lading before paying the amount of the bill of exchange. Baxter v. Chapman, 29 L. T. 642.

5. B. consigned a cargo of maize to O. & Co. for sale by them on a joint speculation of himself and them, and he drew upon them against the cargo six bills of exchange for sums amounting to 1,500*l.* He wrote them a letter advising them of the bills, and sent them the bill of lading of the cargo, and asked them to protect the bills on presentation. They replied that they would do so. The bills of exchange were on the face of them expressed to be on account of the cargo. B. afterwards indorsed three of the bills to R. & Co. Before the bills were presented to O. & Co. for acceptance they had heard that B. had stopped payment, and when the bills were presented they declined to accept them:—Held, that R. & Co. were not entitled to any lien upon the cargo as against O. & Co. in respect of the three bills indorsed to them. Robey & Co.'s Perseverance Iron-works v. Ollier, 7 L. 6. When a bill of lading, and a bill of exchange to cover the goods included in the bill of lading, are sent in a letter to a vendee of the goods, it is a well-understood rule that the bill of exchange must be accepted, or the bill of lading cannot be retained. Shepherd v. Harrison, 5 L. When the bill of exchange is not accepted, but the bill of lading is retained, the bill of lading, acquired in that manner, gives no right of property to the person so acquiring it. Ib.

7. Bills were drawn against cotton consigned to England. The cotton was hypothecated, by means of a letter in favour of a bank which bought the bills; at the same time bills of lading and a policy were handed to the bank. The letter contained a power to keep insured, and a power to sell the cotton in case of non-payment, and to apply any balance, after satisfaction of the bills, towards other debts due from the consignor to the bank:—Held, that money received on the policy could not be applied in payment of anything beyond what was due on the bills. Latham v. Chartered Bank of India, China, and Australia, 17 L. Goods having been shipped for London consigned to C. & Co., the shipmaster signed a set of three bills of lading marked "First," "Second," and "Third," respectively, making the goods deliverable to C. and Co., or their assigns, freight payable in London, the one of the bills being accomplished, the others to stand void. During the voyage C. & Co. indorsed the bill of lading marked "First" to a bank, in consideration of a loan. Upon the arrival of the ship at London the goods were landed and placed in the custody of a dock company in their warehouses; the master lodging with them notice under the Merchant Shipping Act 1862, s. 68, etc., to detain the cargo until the freight should be paid. C. & Co. then produced to the dock company the bill of lading marked "Second" unindorsed, and the dock company entered C. & Co. in their books as proprietors of the goods. The stop for freight being afterwards removed, the dock company bonâ fide and without notice or knowledge of the bank's claim delivered the goods to other persons upon delivery orders signed by C. & Co.:—Held, that the dock company had not been guilty of a conversion, and that the bank could not maintain any action against them. Fearon v. Bowers (1 H. Bl. 364) reflected on. Ib.

By a printed regulation of the London Dock Company orders for delivery cannot be acted upon unless signed by the party in whose name the goods stand in the company's books, or by a person duly authorised, in writing under the hand of the principal, to sign them. Wine was entered in the books of the company in the name of S., clerk to W., but the bills of lading were in the hands of H., the consignee of the wine. The wine not having been approved by W., H. agreed to take it back, and applied to W. to return a part of it; but W. refused to do so until his acceptance for the wine should be returned to him. H. then exhibited the bills of lading to the company, which informed W. that it would deliver the wine to H. unless it should be restrained from so doing. W. and S. thereupon filed a bill against the company and H. for an injunction to restrain the company from delivering the wine to H. without the written order of W. and S., or one of them, and praying that the company and H. might be ordered to pay the costs of the suit :—Held, that as the legal title to the wine was in H. by virtue of the bill of lading, the company was entitled to its costs, which, under the circumstances of the case, were ordered to be paid equally by W. and S. and H., W. and S. and H. also bearing their own costs equally. Wright v. London Dock Co., 5 Jur., N. 4. It is important not to give to mercantile instruments such as a charterparty an unnecessarily strict construction, but such a construction as with reference to the context and the object of the contract would effectuate the obvious and expressed intention of the parties. Dimech v. Corlett, 12 Moo. 5. An agreement between the owners and the merchants for the employment of the ship on a certain voyage, not in writing, but acted upon by the parties, is equivalent to a charterparty. Lidgett v. Williams, 4 Hare 462 ; 14 L. J., N. S., Ch., 459.

2. Seaworthiness.

6. A ship was chartered to sail to Manilla for orders to load there, or at Yloilo, a full and complete cargo of sugar in bags, hemp in compressed bales, and/or measurement goods, and therewith to sail to Cork, etc., the freight to be at the rate of 4*l.* 2*s.* 6*d.* for dry sugar, 4*l.* 5*s.* for wet sugar, and 4*l.* 15*s.* for hemp or measurement goods ; the master engaging that the vessel before and when receiving cargo should be a good risk for insurance, and that during the voyage he would take all proper means to keep the vessel tight, staunch, and strong, and in every way fitted and provided for the voyage. At Yloilo the charterer provided a full cargo of wet sugar in bags. In the course of loading it was found that the quantity of molasses which had drained, and which might have been expected to drain, from the wet sugar was so great as to render the ship unseaworthy unless removed, and that the ship's pumps were unable to remove it. The ship was in all other respects seaworthy, but could not have been rendered seaworthy for that cargo without a delay which would have frustrated the objects of the voyage: —Held, that the charterer was entitled under the charterparty to supply a full cargo of wet sugar, and to have a ship provided which was fit for such a cargo. Stanton v. Richardson, 24 W. R. 324 ; 45 L. J., C. P. D., 78.

3. Unloading and Demurrage.

7. A charterparty for a ship to sail to "London Surrey Commercial Docks" is not satisfied by the ship arriving at the gate of the docks, but not entering into the docks. Dahl v. Donkin or Nelson, 6 L. R., App. Cas., 38 ; 50 L. J., Ch., 411 ; 44 L. T. 381 ; 29 W. R. 543.

The provision in a charterparty that a ship is to be brought to a particular place, "or as near thereto as she may safely get," refers to the ship being prevented from getting to her primary destination by any permanent obstacle other than an accident of navigation ; not merely by an obstacle endangering her safety. S. C. 12 L. R., Ch. D., 568.

There is no established custom in the port of London by which the charterer of a timber-loaded ship is bound to secure for the vessel, on its arrival in the river, and in close contiguity to the docks named, the authority to enter into the docks. The charterparty was to "London Surrey Commercial Docks, or as near thereto as she may safely get, and lie always afloat." As the docks were full the ship could not be given a discharging berth, and the dock manager therefore refused it entrance into the docks. Both parties having named these docks in the charterparty, this refusal of the dock authorities was held not to be the fault of either party. The cause of the delay as to being admitted into the docks was immaterial; the length of the delay was material. The charterer would not name any other docks to which the ship might be taken. The ship's master therefore took it to the Deptford Buoys (the nearest place to the Surrey Commercial Docks where it could lie in safety afloat), and there discharged the cargo by lighters, carrying the timber into the Surrey Commercial Docks, where it was afterwards sorted and put in order on the wharf:—Held, that under the circumstances existing in this case, the delay in discharging the cargo was to be attributed to the charterer, who therefore became liable to demurrage, and to the charges for unloading. Ib.

The contract in the charterparty as to demurrage was this:—The cargo was to be supplied as fast as it could be taken on board, "and to be received at port of discharge as fast as steamer can deliver as above . . . and ten days' demurrage over and above the said laying days" (there were no laying days mentioned in the charterparty) "at 30*l.* per day, payable day by day, it being agreed that for the payment of all freight, dead freight and demurrage, the owner shall have absolute charge and lien on the said cargo. . . ." "The cargo to be brought to and taken from alongside the ship at merchants' risk and expense." The ship did not fulfil the engagement in the charterparty to proceed to the Surrey Commercial Docks by merely going to the gates of the docks, but when it had fulfilled the alternative to go as near thereto as it could safely get, the charterer was bound to take the cargo from alongside at his risk and expense. The shipowner was not bound to wait for an unreasonable period, until the dock authorities should be able to assign the ship a discharging berth in the docks. When that difficulty arose about the ship being admitted into the Surrey Commercial Docks, and the charterer would not name any other docks or place where the vessel might be unloaded, the shipowner gave notice to the charterer of the discharge of the cargo by lighters, and, on taking the timber into the docks, gave notice to the dock authorities that it was delivered there subject to the claim for freight, demurrage, and delivery charges:—Held, that he was warranted in so doing. Ib.

1. The duty of providing, and making proper use of sufficient means for the discharge of a cargo, when a ship, which has been chartered, arrives at its destination and is ready to discharge, lies upon the charterer. But that general duty may be qualified by words in the charterparty, and by the circumstances of the case. If, by the terms of the charterparty, the charterer has agreed to discharge the ship within a fixed period of time, that is an absolute and unconditional engagement, for the non-performance of which he is answerable, whatever may be the nature of the impediments which prevent him from performing it. If there is no fixed time, the law implies an agreement, on his part, to discharge the cargo within a reasonable time. Postlethwaite v. Freeland, 5 L. R., App. Cas., 599; 49 L. J., Exch., 630; 42 L. T. 845; 28 W. R. 833.

4. Enforcing in Equity.

1. Parties who have mutually bound themselves, will be restrained from doing any act inconsistent with a charterparty which they have entered into bonâ fide. Levin v. Deslandes, 7 Jur., N. S., 837; 30 L. J., Ch., 457; 9 W. R. 218.

The Court has jurisdiction to deal with questions relating to charterparties; and so when a charterparty has been entered into bonâ fide, it can, on a sufficient case being made, grant an injunction to restrain the breach of such a contract. S. C. nom. Serin v. Delandes, 3 L. T., N. S., 461.

2. The master of an American vessel arriving in England, authorised by the owners to sell or charter the ship, entered into a charterparty with the plaintiff for a voyage to Ceylon and back. A few days afterwards the defendant purchased the ship from a party acting under a power of attorney from one of the owners to sell her. The greater part of the cargo had been put on board under the charterparty. The defendant attempted to stop the sailing of the ship:—Held, that the master having authority to charter the ship, which he had done, and the defendant knowing of the charterparty, an injunction would lie to restrain the purchasers from interfering with the sailing of the ship, in pursuance of the charterparty. Messageries Imperiales Co. v. Baines, 11 W. R. 322; 7 L. T., N. S., 763.

3. A vessel having been chartered to convey a cargo of coals to China, and having become damaged, the master was forced to discharge the cargo, and the owner declined to re-ship it, on the ground that, having become wet, it was liable to spontaneous combustion. On a bill by the charterers to restrain the owner from employing the ship in any manner inconsistent with the charterparty, the Court directed an inquiry as to the state of the cargo, and granted an injunction pending such inquiry. Heriot v. Nicholas, 12 W. R. 844.

4. The Court of Chancery cannot decree the specific performance of a charterparty, but it can restrain the parties from employing the ship in a manner inconsistent with the rights under a charterparty. Le Blanch v. Granger, 35 Beav. 187.

5. Although a court of equity cannot enforce the specific performance of a charterparty, yet it will restrain the employment of the vessel in a different manner, whether such employment is expressly or impliedly forbidden. De Mattos v. Gibson, 5 Jur., N. S., 555; 28 L. J., Ch., 498; 4 De G. & J. 276; 5 Jur., N. S., 347; 28 L. J., Ch., 165.

C. mortgaged a ship to D., with a power of sale. The ship was under contract by charterparty, to carry a cargo from U. to S., of which the mortgagee had notice. On a bill filed by the charterer of the vessel for a specific performance against the mortgagor, and for an injunction to restrain the mortgagee from interfering to interrupt the voyage:—Held, that the contract was not enforceable in a court of equity, and that the charterer was bound to show that the mortgagee had done or threatened to do some act which had interfered with the performance of the contract, to entitle him to an injunction. Ib.

6. A shipowner entered into a contract to carry a cargo of coals from Birkenhead to Bombay. The charterparty contained the ordinary exception of perils of the sea. The ship, soon after sailing, was overtaken by a storm and put into Belfast. The master of the ship had the coals unshipped, and, being advised that they were in too dangerous a state to be reshipped, he had them sold. The charterers filed a bill to restrain the shipowner from using the ship in a manner inconsistent with the charterparty. The Vice-Chancellor granted an injunction accordingly, with the intention of compelling the shipowner to send the ship back to Birkenhead to take on board a new cargo of coals for Bombay:—Held, upon appeal, that no such injunction could be granted. Adamson v. Gill, 16 W. R. 639; 18 L. T., N. S., 278.

1. Rights of Holders and Consignees, 6357.
2. Lien on, 6358.

1. Rights of Holders and Consignees.

7. A lien is a right to possess or retain. A. consigns a cargo to B., with a direction to pay to C., out of the proceeds, a sum of money, and writes C. to that effect; C. has no lien on the proceeds. Exp. Heywood, 2 Rose 355.

8. A., by deed, assigns the cargoes of two ships to B. and C., but has no charterparty or bill of lading to deliver to them. On the arrival of one of the ships, he assigns to another person, and afterwards commits an act of bankruptcy:—Held, that B. and C., not having been ready to take possession of the ship on her arrival, had thereby permitted A. to continue reputed owner under the stat. 21 Jac. 1. Philpott v. Williams, 2 Eden 231.

9. Under an assignment of a ship and her present and future cargo, freight, and earnings, by the owner, for securing to the assignees all moneys which they had advanced, or might become liable to pay, on account of the vessel and her cargo, which they had furnished the means of purchasing:—Held, that the assignees, who were also the ship's agents, were entitled to retain a bill which was given for the purchase of part of the homeward cargo, and was remitted but not indorsed to them by the owner; notwithstanding he denied that it was remitted in payment, and stated that they had not paid, and, contrary to an express understanding, had left him personally liable to some of the debts incurred in fitting out the vessel; and an injunction which had been obtained by the assignees, restraining an action of trover for the bill, was continued until the hearing. Curtis v. Auber, 1 Jac. & Walk. 526.

10. Observations on an opinion expressed by Lord Cottenham, that when a merchant enters into a charterparty in his own name, containing a clause that no goods shall be taken aboard without the consent of the freighter or his agent, and that the vessel shall be consigned to the freighter's agent, both in England and abroad, a third party may deal with the correspondent abroad with respect to the cargo, without enquiring as to the rights and relations existing between the charterer and his correspondent. Zulueta v. Tyrie, 15 Beav. 577.

A. chartered a ship in his own name, and consigned it to B. in Cuba, under an agreement that B. should ship goods and consign them to A., and that A. should accept B.'s bills for their value. After B. had accepted bills on the faith of the agreement, B. sold the cargo to C., who had notice of the terms of the charterparty, and it was consigned to another person :—Held, that assuming that the fact of A.'s appearing principal on the charterparty made it incumbent on C. to ascertain the relations between A. and B., yet that, as B. was actually the principal, and not the agent of A., C. could safely deal with him for the cargo, and that the circumstance that B. had committed a fraud on A. did not prevent C. from obtaining a good title to the goods. Ib.

A merchant in Cuba sold part of a cargo shipped by him to B., and C. (who was A.'s correspondent in England), being informed thereof by B., made no claim until four months afterwards, when he insisted on a paramount right over B. to the cargo :—Held, that even assuming he had originally such right, his conduct had been such, that a court of equity would not allow him to enforce it against B. Ib.

1. When by a bill of lading goods are made deliverable to the shipper, or his order, and not to the consignee, the jus disponendi, or control over the property in the goods shipped, remains with the shippers, although the invoice states that the goods were shipped "on account of and at the risk of" the consignee; such statement being not conclusive, of itself, that the right to the possession of, as well as the property in, the goods was intended to be unconditionally passed to the consignee. Shepherd v. Harrison, 5 L. R., H. L., 116; 40 L. J., Q. B., 148; 24 L. T. 857; 20 W. R. 1.

The burthen of showing the existence of a different state of things lies on the person who contradicts what would be the ordinary legal conclusion from the transaction. Ib.

2. Goods which, by the terms of the bill of lading, have been carried upon a nominal amount of freight, can be lawfully demanded, by the holder of the bill of lading, on payment of that amount. Keith v. Burrows, 2 L. R., App. Cas., 636; 46 L. J., C. P., 801; 37 L. T. 291; 25 W. R. 831.

The owner of a ship cannot, by his subsequent acts, give to his mortgagees, as against the holder of a bill of lading, rights different from those possessed by himself under it. Ib.

2. Lien on.

3. If the consignee of a cargo, by agreement with the owner, charter a ship, and expend the money necessary and proper in order to enable her to fetch the cargo, he is, without any special agreement to that effect, entitled to a lien on the proceeds of such cargo in his hands for the advance so made, and a person who is not the consignee has, under such circumstances, a similar lien on the proceeds of the cargo, if he

1. Assignment.

1. An assignment by the owners of a ship of freight to be earned is good. Douglas v. Russell, 4 Sim. 524. Affirmed 1 Myl. & K. 488.

A shipowner assigned to B. the freight earned and to be earned by one of his ships, and afterwards chartered her to C., for a voyage to S. The outward freight was paid to A. before the ship sailed. The charterparty afterwards was delivered to B., by A.'s direction, and B. gave notice of the assignment to C. Afterwards, but before the ship returned, A. became bankrupt:—Held, that the homeward freight was not in A.'s order and disposition at his bankruptcy; and, therefore, that B. was entitled to it. Ib.

2. Under a charterparty, entered into by a broker, on behalf of the owner of a vessel, whose name did not appear on the charterparty, the freight was to be paid to the broker, on behalf of the owner. The owner assigned the freight to A., who gave notice of the assignment to the broker, but not to the Lords of the Treasury, by whom the freight was to be paid:—Held, that after such assignment and notice, the freight was no longer in the order and disposition of the owner, and consequently did not, on his subsequently becoming bankrupt, pass to his assignees:—Held, that the money due to the charterparty was not in his order and disposition at his bankruptcy. Gardner v. Lachlan, 4 Myl. & C. 129; 8 L. J., N. S., Ch., 82; 2 Jur. 412, 1056. Affirming 8 Sim. 123; 5 L. J., N. S., Ch., 332. And see S. C. 6 Sim. 407 on motion for an injunction.

3. A shipowner on the 20th March 1857 chartered his ship to A. for a voyage to Hong Kong. The freight was payable "by approved bills on London, at three months' date, or cash under discount, following the delivery of a certificate to the charterers, signed by the consignees," of the delivery of the cargo. On the 24th March the shipowners assigned the freight to C., who gave no notice to A. until November following. It turned out that on the 23rd March A. had sub-chartered the ship to B., whose agent at Hong Kong had paid the freight to the agent there of the shipowner:—Held, that A. was liable to C. for the freight, and that C.'s laches in giving notice had not deprived him of his rights. Young v. Lindsay, 27 Beav. 405.

4. The assignee of a particular freight who gives to the charterers notice of his security, is entitled in priority to the general assignee of all freight to be earned by the same ship, who is prior in date, but gives no notice, and takes no steps to enforce his mortgage until after the particular assignee has given notice to the charterers, and the cargo has been in part discharged. Brown v. Tanner, 2 L. R., Eq., 806; 12 Jur., N. S., 791; 14 W. R. 911; 14 L. T., N. S., 825.

A. took an assignment of a ship by way of mortgage, which was duly registered at the custom house in 1862, and which referred to an assignment of all freights and earnings, of even date, given as an additional security, but not registered. Subsequently B. took an assignment by way of mortgage of the freight of a particular voyage. A. and B. were both ignorant of each other's claims, but B. gave notice of his claim to the charterers before the termination of the voyage, while A. did not give notice of his claim till after the ship had broken bulk:—Held, that B.'s claim on the particular freight must prevail over the general claim of A. Ib.

5. The right to freight is incidental to the ownership of the vessel which earns it, and therefore a transfer of a share in a ship passes the corresponding share in the freight, under an existing charter-party, without the mention of the word "freight." Lindsay v. Gibbs, 22 Beav. 522; 2 Jur., N. S., 1039.

In equity an assignment of freight to be earned is valid. Ib.

A ship was chartered by her owner. Afterwards, in June 1854, he sold twenty-four shares of the ship to A., and the remaining forty shares to B., and in December he assigned the freight to C. A. registered before, and B. after, C.'s assignment; but C. gave the first notice to the charterers:—Held, that C.'s right to the freight had priority over B., but not over A. Ib.

One who is interested in the freight alone saved from the ship held liable to contribute his proportion of the expenses incurred by the ship in earning the freight. Ib.

6. A. was the owner of a vessel. B. was to charter it for a particular voyage to seek a particular cargo. Its tonnage was larger than B. required. A. was willing to undertake the half risk, and was to have half the profits. A charterparty was executed on the 24th April 1845, by which the vessel was declared to be let to freight, at 16*s.* a ton per month to B., and bills were to be given, and payments from time to time made by B., which taken together would cover one-half of the amount stipulated for the freight. On the arrival of the ship at home, B. was to give a bill at ninety days' date for the remainder of the freight. Two other instruments were executed on the same day; by the first of which A. was to join in the adventure, and, "after payment or deduction of the freight, and all incidental expenses," the profit or loss was to be borne by the parties in equal moieties; and by the other, A. gave to B. a guarantee for the due performance by the clerk of the stipulations he had entered into. On the 1st December 1845, while the ship was on the voyage, A. assigned to C. the charterparty, and wrote on the margin thereof a note addressed to B., requesting him to pay "what is due." C. gave B. notice of this assignment and note. The notice was in the ordinary form, and C. made no inquiries of B. B. continued the payments which by the stipulations in the charterparty he was bound to make. The vessel returned in August 1846, and the adventure turned out a loss. B. claimed, as against C., to balance the accounts of profit and loss, as he would have been entitled to do with A. had the charterparty not been assigned:—Held, that in equity he was entitled to do so. Mangles v. Dixon, 3 H. L. Ca. 702. Reversing 1 Macn. & G. 437; 1 H. & Tw. 542; 19 L. J., N. S., Ch., 240.

2. When Earned and Payable.

1. Though freight may not be payable in respect of a man's own goods conveyed in his own ship, it becomes so if he makes third persons, who have advanced him money, the consignees of those goods, and the goods are by the bill of lading deliverable to their order. Wequelin v. Cellier, 6 L. R., H. L., 286; 42 L. J., Ch., 758; 22 W. R. 26.

T. & Co., who acted as the London bankers for Holm, of Stockholm, consented to open a credit in his favour with merchants at Akyab for the purchase of "rice for the English market shipped by vessels of my own, the Java, etc., at, etc., f. o. b." The rice was purchased, and shipped on board the Java, and made deliverable to the order of T. & Co., who accepted bills to cover the purchase. The bill of lading was indorsed to them; it described the goods "to be delivered in like good order, etc., unto T. & Co., or their assigns; freight for the goods 4*l.* 5*s.* per ton of 20 cwt. net, delivered with primage and average accustomed." While the Java was on its voyage, Holm obtained advances from C. & Co., to whom he assigned the freight as security:—Held, that, under these circumstances, C. & Co. were entitled to the freight, and T. & Co. were, like all other consignees of a cargo, liable to pay it under the terms of the bill of lading, although the cargo was in fact brought to England in Holm's own vessel, the Java. Ib.

2. Goods, which by the terms of the bill of lading have been carried upon a nominal amount of freight, can be lawfully demanded by the holder of the bill of lading, on payment of that amount. Keith v. Burrows, 2 L. R., App. Cas., 636; 46 L. J., C N. S., 291; 25 W. R. 831.

6. A charterparty made merchants at Valparaiso, Prussian ship, provided t proceed and deliver carg named by the charterers on the Continent between The charterer named Dunk of the ship off Dunkirk, formed by a pilot that between Prussia and F thereupon took the ship refused to deliver the cargo without payment of full freight. War was not in fact declared until three days afterwards:—Held, first, that the master was entitled to a reasonable time to make inquiries as to the war, and that the time taken was not unreasonable. Duncan v. Köster, The Teutonia, 4 L. R., P. C., 171; 41 L. J., Adm., 57; 26 L. T. 48; 20 W. R. 421; 8 Moo. P. C., N. S., 411.

Held, secondly, that as the port named by the charterer was an unsafe port, and Dover was a port which might have been named within the terms of the charterparty, the owners were entitled to full freight. Ib.

3. Lien of Master.

1. Master being turned out of possession upon the vessel's being captured does not deprive him of his lien for the freight in case of her re-capture. Exp. Cheesman, 2 Eden 181.

2. When by a charterparty and bill of lading, freight is "to be paid on unloading and right delivery of the cargo," the master having a lien by common law for freight and general average, and a lien by contract for demurrage, the payment of the freight and the delivery of the goods are concurrent acts in which all that is required from the owner of the cargo is readiness and willingness to pay at the time of delivery: and before paying any sum for general average, the owner of cargo is entitled to be satisfied that the amount claimed is the result of a proper adjustment; and if the owner of cargo on arrival of the ship in port, and before discharge, refuses to pay the amount claimed for freight and general average before the amount due is finally ascertained, but offers to pay a large proportion of the freight, and, there being no doubt as to his solvency, to sign an average bond for the payment of the general average when ascertained, but the master, nevertheless, insists upon retaining the cargo on board ship until his lien for freight and general average is satisfied, detention by the master is not wrongful. Miedbrodt v. Fitzsimon, The Energie, 32 L. T., N. S., 579; 23 W. R. 932; 6 L. R., P. C., 306; 44 L. J., Adm., 25.

3. Freight is the reward payable to a carrier for the safe carriage and delivery of goods. It is payable only on safe carriage and delivery. If the goods are safely carried, the master of the ship has a lien on the goods for the amount of the freight due for such carriage, and cannot be compelled to part with the goods till such freight be paid. Kirchner v. Venus, 12 Moo. P. C. 361; 5 Jur., N. S., 395; 7 W. R. 455; 33 L. T. 81.

Where parties, instead of trusting to the general rule of law with respect to freight, make a special contract for a payment which is not freight, it must depend upon the terms of that contract whether a lien does or does not exist. When the contract made gives no lien, a court of law will not supply one by implication. Ib.

D. & Co. of Liverpool shipped goods for Sydney. The bill of lading stated the goods to be to the shipper's order or assigns, "he or they paying freight for the goods here as per margin." In the margin it was stipulated as follows: "Freight payable in Liverpool to M., one month after sailing, vessel lost or not lost." The bill of lading passed into the hands of K. & Co., as indorsees for value. On the ship's arrival at Sydney, the port of delivery, the master was advised by the shipowner that the sum agreed to be paid as freight at Liverpool had not been paid; and he refused to deliver the goods to K. & Co., the assignees of the bill of lading, unless the freight was paid, claiming a lien on the goods for the unpaid freight:—Held, first, that the amount agreed to be paid by the shippers at the port of shipment, one month after sailing of the ship, did not acquire the legal incident of freight, though described under that name in the bill of lading, it being merely money to be paid for taking goods on board and undertaking to carry, and not for carrying the goods; and that there was no right of lien on the goods by the shipowner in respect of such sum of money being unpaid. Ib.

Held, secondly, that as the bill of lading provided that the freight was payable to a third party, M., and not to the shipowner, payment for freight to the master or shipowner would be no answer to an action in England by M., in the name of the shipowner, for non-payment of freight. Ib.

Evidence was admitted of a custom in Liverpool, that a lien on goods for a sum agreed to be paid there as freight continued:—Held, also, that as the assignees of the bill of lading were resident in Sydney, in New South Wales, and there was no evidence that they were acquainted with the local usage in Liverpool, such evidence of custom was not admissible for the purpose of explaining the effect of the memorandum in the bill of lading, or of showing the terms on which the goods were shipped, in the construction of such bill of lading. Ib.

4. The loss of part cargo having been occasioned by perils of the seas:—Held, that under the bills of lading and charterparty the master's lien on the residue for freight extended to the entire lump freight without deduction. The Norway, 1 B. & L. 404.

5. W., a London merchant, shipped on board a French ship (the Galam) at Hayti, a cargo of wood, to Europe. The Galam became unseaworthy at Terceira, was there condemned, and the cargo discharged and stored, and the captain then raised 1,000*l.* from M., on a respondentia bond on the cargo, payable on arrival at Falmouth, but did nothing to forward the cargo. W., hearing of the accident, chartered the Mary Jane to go to Terceira and bring home the cargo, and to call at Scilly for orders, which was done; but on reaching Scilly she ran ashore, and expenses were incurred in saving ship and cargo. W., in order to defeat the respondentia bond, ordered the cargo to proceed to Hamburg, instead of Falmouth, and discharge the cargo; but before the Mary Jane started, M., the respondentia bondholder, instituted a suit and arrested the cargo at Scilly, by warrant out of the Admiralty Court. The cargo was afterwards removed to London for sale, and fetched 808*l.*:—Held, that the master of the Mary Jane, not having known of the respondentia bond, and being prevented by the orders of the Court of Admiralty, occasioned by the default of the owner of the cargo, from carrying the cargo on to Hamburg, had a lien for freight on such cargo. Cleary v.

Macandrew, The Cargo ex Galam, 9 L. T., N. S., 550.

Held, secondly, that the master having complained and obtained a settlement from his underwriters for a total loss, they were entitled in his right to such lien. Ib.

Held, thirdly, that the master's lien for freight was preferable to the claim on the respondentia bond, for the carrying on of the cargo was essential for making the bond available, and the bondholder had done nothing towards forwarding the cargo. Ib.

Held, fourthly, that the master's claim for general average was also preferable to the respondentia bond, for he had a possessory lien for such average at common law, and the sale at London did not displace this lien. Ib.

4. Lien of Owner.

1. It was provided by a charterparty that 250*l.*, part of the freight, should be advanced in cash on signing bills of lading and clearing at the custom-house, and that for the security and payment of all freight, dead freight, demurrage and other charges, the master or owners should have an absolute lien and charge on the cargo. The ship was loaded and cleared at the custom-house, but the 250*l.* was not paid, and consequently the captain did not sign bills of lading, and the ship never started on her voyage. The charterer having become insolvent, his trustee in liquidation gave notice to the owner that he disclaimed all interest under the charterparty. The owner claimed a lien on the cargo for the 250*l.* as freight :—Held, the ship never having earned or commenced to earn freight, no lien arose. Exp. Nyholm, Re Child, 43 L. J., Bky., 21 ; 22 W. R. 174 ; 29 L. T., N. S., 634.

2. The Merchant Shipping Act 1862 (25 & 26 Vict., c. 63), s. 68, requires a shipowner, in order to preserve his lien for freight on goods after they have been discharged from a ship, to serve a notice of his claim on the wharfinger at the time when the goods are landed ; and the subsequent sections prescribe a course of procedure which the wharfinger is to adopt, after such notice shall have been given, in order to liberate the goods from the lien, and discharge the claim for freight. A cargo of timber consigned to A. was discharged at the wharf of B., and the landing of the goods was completed on the 12th October. On the 15th October following, C., who claimed to be owner of the ship, served a notice on B. of his claim for freight, and required him to hold the goods until his claim was discharged. B. having retained the goods in pursuance of that notice, an action of detinue was brought against him by A. On an application by B. for an interpleader order, on the ground that he could not proceed under the 25 & 26 Vict., c. 63, s. 68, as the notice of the 15th October was not served in time :—Held, per Christian, J., that as the Act imposed on the wharfinger the duty of resorting to prescribed course of procedure in all cases coming within it, the question whether any particular case comes within the Act must be decided by the wharfinger on his own responsibility, and is not the proper subject for an interpleader between the consignee of the goods and the shipowners. 1. When a vessel about to sail is advertised as a general ship, an intending shipper is not bound to inquire as to the existence of any charterparty. Peek v. Larsen, 12 L. R., Eq., 378; 25 L. T., N. S., 580; 19 W. R. 1045; 40 L. J., Ch., 763.

A person who, without notice of any charterparty, has placed goods on board a vessel which has been advertised as a general ship, is entitled to have his goods returned to him if the captain refuses to sign bills of lading except subject to a charterparty containing objectionable provisions. Ib.

A firm of brokers, having chartered a ship, advertised her as about to sail, and invited shippers to send their goods by her. Under the charterparty, the captain was to have an absolute lien on the cargo for freight, dead freight, and demurrage. The plaintiff, who had no notice of the charterparty, dealing with the charterers only, sent some tea on board, to be carried at a rate of freight agreed upon between himself and the charterers. Afterwards, the charterers were unable to fill the ship, and so to carry out their contract with the owner, and the ship accordingly did not sail. No bills of lading for the tea had been signed, and the captain refused to sign them unless they were expressly made subject to the charterparty. The shipowner claimed a lien on the tea for the expenses incurred by him through his dealings with the charterers:—Held, that he had no such lien, the plaintiff having had no notice of the charterparty, and there being nothing to put him on inquiry; and the tea was ordered to be given up to the plaintiff, the intended carriage thereof having failed. Ib.

2. "Dead freight" means not freight, but an unliquidated compensation for the loss of freight recoverable in the absence and place of freight. M'Lean v. Fleming, 2 L. R., H. L. (Sc.), 128; 25 L. T. 317.

The shipowner, therefore, is entitled to be paid for a deficiency of cargo, not at the rate assigned per ton in the charterparty for actual cargo, but a reasonable sum, deductions being made for charges saved to the shipowner in consequence of the deficiency. Ib.

No consideration of inconvenience can prevent a right of lien where a charterparty has expressly created that right. Ib.

Where indorsees of a bill of lading are also the charterers of a ship, they are bound by a stipulation as to lien in the charterparty. Ib.

3. Under the Merchant Shipping Act Amendment Act 1862 (25 & 26 Vict., c. 63), s. 67, a shipowner may land goods whenever the delivery of them to the owner within the proper time has been prevented by the force of circumstances, whether the owner of the goods is or is not to blame. Miedbrodt v. Fitzsimon, The Energie, 23 W. R. 932; 6 L. R., P. C., 306; 44 L. J., Adm., 25; 32 L. T., N. S., 579. Affirming 9 Ir. R., Eq., 58.

If, on landing the goods, the shipowner warehouses them under a stop order for a sum manifestly, and, to his knowledge, in excess of the amount of his lien, such conduct is equivalent to a wrongful detention of the goods, for which the owner of them may bring an action. Ib.

A fortiori, an action will lie against the shipowner if, on payment of a sum due for average by the owner of the goods, he refuses to reduce the stop order to the amount for which he then has, or can reasonably claim, a lien. Ib.

5. Other Cases.

4. The Court will not entertain a bill by a shipowner against a freighter for an account of what is due in respect of freight, though the charterparty expressed that the freight was to be paid according to the quantity of the cargo, and it was charged that, in the bill of lading, that quantity was stated untruly. Long v. Young, 2 L. J., Ch., 139.

5. The Court will entertain a suit for an account of the freight of a ship grounded on a contract which also contains stipulations affecting to give an ultimate right of property in the ship, and which may not be capable of being recognised or enforced as a whole, for want of being registered; provided the title to the freight is distinct from, and does not necessarily depend upon a title to the ship claimed under such contract. Davenport v. Whitmore, 2 Myl. & C. 177; 6 L. J., N. S., Ch., 58.

6. Where a consignee in Denmark had paid charges for freight, etc., on a ship, the property of the bankrupts:—Held, that he had a lien for the amount of such charges on the money awarded to the assignee for compensation. Exp. Good, Re Atkinson, 3 Mont. & A. 246; 2 Dea. 389; 7 L. J., N. S., Bky., 7; 1 Jur. 456.

7. Shipowner and charterer may agree, by the terms of a charterparty, that a portion of the stipulated freight shall be prepaid; and such prepayment will not affect its legal character of freight; the remainder may be the subject of insurance by the shipowner. Allison v. Bristol Marine Insurance Co., 1 L. R., App. Cas., 209; 24 W. R. 1039; 34 L. T., N. S., 809.

A ship was chartered to sail from Greenock to Bombay, to carry a cargo of coals. Freight was to be paid on unloading and right delivery of the cargo at and after the rate of 42*s.* per ton of 20 cwts. on the quantity delivered. It was provided that "such freight is to be paid, say one-half in cash on signing bills of lading, less four months' interest at bank rate, but not less than 5 per cent. per annum, 5 per cent. for insurance, and 2½ per cent. on gross amount of freight in lieu of consignment at Bombay, and the remainder on right deliverey of the cargo, less cost of coals short delivered, in cash, at current rates of exchange for bills on London at six months' sight." Half of the estimated amount of the freight was paid in London. The shipowner effected two insurances, one for 500*l.* on freight valued at 2,000*l.*, the other for 700*l.* on freight payable abroad valued at 2,000*l.* The ship was lost before entering Bombay harbour, but one-half of the cargo was saved and delivered. The master, in the belief that the prepayment had satisfied the freight on this half so delivered, made no demand on the charterer. The shipowner claimed on his policies as for a total loss of the other half of the freight:—Held, that on the proper construction of the policy the whole sum agreed upon constituted freight; that half of the whole sum of that freight had been paid in England; that it was not a prepayment of half the rate of freight calculated as distributed

Macandrew, The Cargo ex Galam, 9 L. T., N. S., 550.

Held, secondly, that the master having complained and obtained a settlement from his underwriters for a total loss, they were entitled in his right to such lien. Ib.

Held, thirdly, that the master's lien for freight was preferable to the claim on the respondentia bond, for the carrying on of the cargo was essential for making the bond available, and the bondholder had done nothing towards forwarding the cargo. Ib.

Held, fourthly, that the master's claim for general average was also preferable to the respondentia bond, for he had a possessory lien for such average at common law, and the sale at London did not displace this lien. Ib.

4. Lien of Owner.

1. It was provided by a charterparty that 250*l.*, part of the freight, should be advanced in cash on signing bills of lading and clearing at the custom-house, and that for the security and payment of all freight, dead freight, demurrage and other charges, the master or owners should have an absolute lien and charge on the cargo. The ship was loaded and cleared at the custom-house, but the 250*l.* was not paid, and consequently the captain did not sign bills of lading, and the ship never started on her voyage. The charterer having become insolvent, his trustee in liquidation gave notice to the owner that he disclaimed all interest under the charterparty. The owner claimed a lien on the cargo for the 250*l.* as freight:—Held, the ship never having earned or commenced to earn freight, no lien arose. Exp. Nyholm, Re Child, 43 L. J., Bky., 21; 22 W. R. 174; 29 L. T., N. S., 634.

2. The Merchant Shipping Act 1862 (25 & 26 Vict., c. 63), s. 68, requires a shipowner, in order to preserve his lien for freight on goods after they have been discharged from a ship, to serve a notice of his claim on the wharfinger at the time when the goods are landed; and the subsequent sections prescribe a course of procedure which the wharfinger is to adopt, after such notice shall have been given, in order to liberate the goods from the lien, and discharge the claim for freight. A cargo of timber consigned to A. was discharged at the wharf of B., and the landing of the goods was completed on the 12th October. On the 15th October following, C., who claimed to be owner of the ship, served a notice on B. of his claim for freight, and required him to hold the goods until his claim was discharged. B. having retained the goods in pursuance of that notice, an action of detinue was brought against him by A. On an application by B. for an interpleader order, on the ground that he could not proceed under the 25 & 26 Vict., c. 63, s. 68, as the notice of the 15th October was not served in time:—Held, per Christian, J., that as the Act imposed on the wharfinger the duty of resorting to prescribed course of procedure in all cases coming within it, the question whether any particular case comes within the Act must be decided by the wharfinger on his own responsibility, and is not the proper subject for an interpleader between the consignee of the goods and the shipowners. A person who, without notice of any charterparty, has placed goods on board a vessel which has been advertised as a general ship, is entitled to have his goods returned to him if the captain refuses to sign bills of lading except subject to a charterparty containing objectionable provisions. Ib.

A firm of brokers, having chartered a ship, advertised her as about to sail, and invited shippers to send their goods by her. A ship was chartered to sail from Greenock to Bombay, to carry a cargo of coals. Freight was to be paid on unloading and right delivery of the cargo at and after the rate of 42*s.* per ton of 20 cwts. on the quantity delivered. It was provided that "such freight is to be paid, say one-half in cash on signing bills of lading, less four months' interest at bank rate, but not less than 5 per cent. per annum, 5 per cent. for insurance, and 2½ per cent. on gross amount of freight in lieu of consignment at Bombay, and the remainder on right deliverey of the cargo, less cost of coals short delivered, in cash, at current rates of exchange for bills on London at six months' sight." Half of the estimated amount of the freight was paid in London. The shipowner effected two insurances, one for 500*l.* on freight valued at 2,000*l.*, the other for 700*l.* on freight payable abroad valued at 2,000*l.* The ship was lost before entering Bombay harbour, but one-half of the cargo was saved and delivered. The master, in the belief that the prepayment had satisfied the freight on this half so delivered, made no demand on the charterer. The shipowner claimed on his policies as for a total loss of the other half of the freight:—Held, that on the proper construction of the policy the whole sum agreed upon constituted freight; that half of the whole sum of that freight had been paid in England; that it was not a prepayment of half the rate of freight calculated as distributed over the whole cargo, but of half the whole gross freight; that half of the whole remained to be paid abroad on right delivery of the cargo; that that half had been lost through perils of the sea, and that the shipowner was entitled on his policies on freight to recover as for the total loss of that half. Ib.

1. When the charterers of a ship stipulate that they shall be entitled to insure their advances "against freight," at the owner's expense, and when they fail to insure, they have, in the event of the ship perishing, no claim against the owners for repayment. Watson & Co. v. Shankland, 2 L. R., H. L. (Sc.), 304; 29 L. T., N. S., 349.

By a charterparty made at Bombay a ship belonging to merchants at Greenock was to proceed from Bombay to Calcutta, and there load a cargo to be conveyed to the United Kingdom. A clause in the charterparty was as follows: "Sufficient cash for ship's ordinary disbursements to be advanced the master against freight; subject to interest, insurance, and 2½ per cent. commission; and the master to indorse the amount so advanced upon his bills of lading." While the ship was at Calcutta preparing for the voyage, various advances for the ship's ordinary disbursements were made by the indorsees of the charterparty, and the master gave them on account of such advances a bill drawn on the shipowners. They refused to accept the bill, on the ground that the master had no power to give it, and that under the charterparty the indorsees should have effected an insurance on freight to the amount of their advances. No such insurance was, however, effected, though they had time to insure after notice of the refusal to accept the bill. The ship having been lost on the voyage to the United Kingdom, the indorsees brought an action to recover the amount of their advances:—Held, that under the charterparty the shipowners had a right to rely on an insurance upon the advances being made by the indorsees, who had stipulated for and received the right to charge the premium; and that they having chosen not to insure must bear the loss. Ib.

In the meantime the owner of the cargo chartered a second ship to fetch and import the cargo which had been previously unshipped. 1. A bill for an account of the earnings of a ship described some of the owners as resident in England and the others in India, and stated the ship to have been built by B. & Co., of Newcastle; but it did not contain any positive averment that the ship was British built:—Held, that for want of such averment, a demurrer founded on the Ship Registry Acts could not be supported. Smith v. Small, 14 Sim. 119.

2. T. lent D. 600*l*., D. assigned one-sixteenth in a ship, and by defeasance it was declared, that T. out of the earnings should pay himself 600*l*. and should account to D. for the surplus, but there was no covenant for payment of the money. Decreed, she should account for testator's estate, and T. to account for the earnings, and to be allowed for the outfit of the ship though cast away. Tyrrel v. Thomas (Lady), 1 Vin. 183, pl. 5.

3. A., one of three part-owners of a ship, refuses to navigate; B. and C., the other two, navigate without his consent, and ship is lost in the voyage. 5. By statute 59 Geo. 3, c. 3, navy agents are entitled to make the usual charge for passing accounts before that Act, and to charge commission on the full amount of pay, without being limited to the money passing through their hands: the defendants having received a sum as returned premiums, without bringing it to account for many years, alleging, that they waited the final adjustment of average; it was referred to the Master to enquire whether they were entitled to retain it, according to the custom of merchants. Drury v. Atkins, Taml. 75.

6. A part owner of a ship, which had been let to the East India Company for a voyage to India, after the other part owner had expended a large sum of money in repairing and fitting it out for the voyage, arrested the ship by process out of the Admiralty Court, and compelled the other part owner to give security for his share; the ship afterwards sailed to India and returned home:—Held, that the part owner who had taken the security was not entitled to any share of the profits of the voyage, but was bound to pay his proportion of the repairs and outfit. Davis v. Johnston, 4 Sim. 539.

7. Certain consignments of oil were made from Columbo, to certain persons resident in England. During the voyage several of the casks in which the oil was contained leaked; some part of the oil which so escaped was wholly lost, but the greater part was collected together, and sold in one mass by the captain, in the course of the voyage, for 750*l*. The consignees then agreed to share the proceeds in proportion to their respective losses:—Held, first, that a bill in equity was sustainable, by the consignees against the shipowner, for an account of the oil lost and the oil sold; and that several actions having been brought by the shipowner against the consignees to recover freight and average, they might all join in one bill against him for an account and equitable set-off. Jones v. Moore, 4 Y. & Coll. 351; 10 L. 8. A., in 1799, purchased shares in a ship of G. R., who, having also shares in the same ship, was intrusted by A. and the other part owners with the whole management of the ship, and to keep the accounts relating to it from the time of the purchase until the ship was sold by G. R. with the consent of all the owners in 1805. Upon the occasion of the sale, G. R. stated and settled accounts with W., one of the part owners, and paid him the balance due upon the earnings of the ship and the proceeds of the sale. In 1824 G. R. died. Upon a bill filed by A. in March 1826, for an account against the executors of G. R., it appeared by a ledger (found in a room wholly disused by G. R.) containing the accounts of the ship, that the credit and debit account between him and A. was not carried beyond 1805. On the debit side there were two items, one in 1811, and another in 1812. It appeared in evidence that A. left England in 1820, and some time after his departure his brother-in-law (a witness for A.) called several times upon G. R. with messages from A., and on those occasions asked him to come to a settlement with A. respecting the ship, that G. R. evaded the subject, but never stated that he was not indebted to A. Under these circumstances an account was decreed against the executors of A., and that decree affirmed on appeal. Robinson v. Alexander, 8 Bli. N. S. 352; 2 Cl. & F. 717.

9. An agreement recited that A. was desirous of purchasing, and B. of selling to A., the half of a schooner for 200*l*., and that B. had agreed to lend A. 370*l*., on having the repayment and the interest secured by a mortgage of a rent-charge to which A. was entitled, and of the dividends of certain stock, and by a policy of insurance and two houses; and B. agreed to dispose of the schooner to A., and to execute the necessary deed for that purpose, the 200*l*. purchase money of the schooner to be part of the 370*l*., for which the mortgage was to be given by A., and that A. should execute a mortgage of the schooner to B. as a further security for the 370*l*., which A. was to pay back by annual instalments of 50*l*., until the principal and interest should be paid; and if A. neglected to pay off all or any of the instalments, with interest, B. should have power and authority to call in the 370*l*., or so much as should be then due. The schooner proved unseaworthy, and was by mutual consent returned to B. A. afterwards assigned the other property comprised in the agreement to C., who had notice of the agreement:—Held, that a suit could be maintained against C. for an account of the sum due on foot of the 170*l*. actually advanced, and for a sale, although the agreement quoad the schooner had been rescinded. Murphy v. Moorehead, 16 Ir. Ch. R. 454.

Held, secondly, that the return of the schooner to B. was not to be considered as a payment of instalments. Ib.

XVII. WRECK.

XVIII. INJUNCTION AGAINST SAILING.

2. The Court of Admiralty is open all the year round to applications by part owners, to restrain the sailing of ships without their consent, until security given to the amount of the respective shares. But where the shares are not ascertained, the Court of Chancery will exercise a concurrent jurisdiction, by injunction, to restrain the sailing of a ship, until the share of the party complaining shall be ascertained, and security given to the amount of it. In this case it was referred to the Master to make the inquiry, and to settle the security accordingly. Haly v. Goodson, 2 Meriv. 77.

3. Injunction to restrain the sailing of vessel, containing goods sold to a person who had become insolvent, but over which the plaintiff retained a right of stoppage in transitu, refused. A court of equity has not jurisdiction in any case to stop goods in transitu, semble. Goodhart v. Lowe, 2 Jac. & Walk. 349.

4. Injunction to restrain the sailing of a ship, upon the application of a part owner, refused, where the ship was intended to sail the next day, and it did not appear by the affidavit filed in support of the motion that there were any circumstances to account for the plaintiff's delay in applying. Christie v. Craig, 2 Meriv. 137.

5. The Court will not restrain a ship from sailing, on the application of the part owner of the smaller ascertained share. The proper application is to the Court of Admiralty, to compel the larger part owner to give security. This Court interferes only where the shares are unascertained. The application to restrain is too late when the ship is on the point of sailing with emigrants. Hallaran v. Donal, 9 Ir. Eq. R. 217.

6. A bill, by several members of a shipping company dissoluble at any moment, to prevent a vessel being sent on a voyage they disapproved, cannot be sustained. Miles v. Thomas, 9 Sim. 606.

Semble, that the Court will interfere between co-partners to prevent a destruction of the partnership property, although a dissolution of the partnership may not be prayed. Ib.

7. Semble, the Court of Chancery will not, in a case within its jurisdiction, interfere beyond or otherwise than the Court of Admiralty would interfere, at the suit of some part owners, to restrain the sailing of a ship, or control her management; there being no question as to the ownership, and the only dispute being as to the powers of the owners inter se. Castelli v. Cook, 7 Hare 89; 18 L. J., N. S., Ch., 148; 13 Jur. 675.

B., or whoever might represent him, might exact payment of the loan and interest at any time and in any manner. The plaintiff was the transferee of the mortgage, and the defendant and the vessel being at the port of Q., within the jurisdiction, the plaintiff commenced an action against the defendant to enforce the mortgage, and for an injunction to restrain the defendant from removing the vessel out of the jurisdiction, and duly served the defendant with a copy of the writ. He now moved for an interlocutory injunction to restrain the defendant from removing the vessel out of the jurisdiction until the hearing:—Held, that the Court had jurisdiction to grant such an injunction, and it was granted accordingly. Clavering v. Aguire, 5 L. R., Ir., 97.

XIX. REGISTRATION (LLOYD'S).

1. The defendants were an association for the registry of iron ships, and classed the ships in a register of merit according to the reports of their own surveyors. A list from the register might be obtained by any one. The plaintiffs were members of the association and the owners of a ship which in 1870 was ranked in the highest class in the register. The plaintiffs in 1870 made an alteration in the ship, and submitted her to the defendants' inspection, who, not approving of the alteration, entered in the register, "Class suspended, 1871," and refused to restore the previous first-class entry unless some further alteration was made. The advisability of the alteration was a matter of opinion, as since the alteration the vessel was classed in the highest rank at Lloyd's (London). The plaintiffs continued to use the vessel, but it was proved that her value had depreciated in consequence of the entry in defendants' register. On a bill being filed by the plaintiffs in November 1873 to restrain the defendants from disposing of any copies of their list containing the words "Class suspended 1871":—Held, that the plaintiffs were not entitled to relief, first, because the entry was the bonâ fide opinion without malice of the society to whose judgment the plaintiffs had submitted the vessel; secondly, because of their laches in applying to the Court for relief. Clover v. Roydon, 29 L. T., N. S., 639; 17 L. R., Eq., 190; 43 L. J., Ch., 665; 22 W. R. 254.

Held, also, that the committee was justified in notifying to their subscribers and the public their honest opinion as to the merits of the ship, and had a right to suspend the class until the plaintiffs should have altered the ship according to their requirements. Ib.

2. A firm of shipbuilders agreed to lengthen and repair an iron steamship; the object being that she might be classed 100 A 1 at Lloyd's. The specification forming part of the contract contained this stipulation,—"Iron work:—"The plating of the hull to be carefully overhauled and repaired, but if any new plating is required the same to be paid for extra (fourteen words deleted, signed A. and J. I., D. G.). Deck beams, ties, diagonal ties, main and spar deck stringers, and all iron work, to be in accordance with Lloyd's rules for classification": —Held, that the shipbuilders were bound to supply without extra charge any new plates required to enable the vessel to be classed 100 A 1 at Lloyd's; and that neither the letters of the parties before the contract was signed, nor the initialed deleted words in the contract, could be considered for the purpose of interpreting the intention of the parties. Inglis v. Buttery, 3 L. R., App. Cas. (Sc.), 552.

Held, also, the costs of Lloyd's survey, and the Board of Trade tonnage measurement, should be borne by the shipowner. Ib.

SLAVERY AND SLAVE TRADE.

Right of Property in Slaves. Nature of.] 1. Slaves in Antigua cannot be equitably mortgaged by a deposit of a registered title-deed, containing a schedule of slaves, if the memorandum accompanying the deposit, which is registered, do not contain a list of the slaves. Exp. Borrodaile, 2 Mont. & A. 398. Reversing S. C. sub nom. Exp. Rucker, 1 Mont. & A. 481; 3 Dea. & Ch. 704.

By the laws of Antigua, slaves were declared to be inheritance and affixed to the inheritance; and by 59 Geo. 3, c. 120, s. 9, no deed or instrument conveying any interest in slaves was valid, unless the registered names and descriptions of the slaves were set forth in the instrument or in some schedule thereof. The bankrupts deposited with R. & Co., as security for a loan of money, a deed of conveyance to the bankrupts of a plantation and slaves in Antigua, with a written memorandum accompanying the deposit. The deed contained a schedule of the registered names and descriptions of the slaves, but they were wholly omitted in the memorandum of the deposit:—Held, that this was not a good equitable mortgage of the slaves mentioned in the deed; and secondly, that the slaves, being real property in the island of Antigua, could not be considered as within the order and disposition of the bankrupts at the time of their bankruptcy. Ib.

2. A testator resident in Jamaica devised the rents, issues, and profits of his estate, called Islington and Cove's Pen, in that island, to A. and B.:—Held, that the estate and the slaves, mules, cattle, and machinery thereon, passed under this devise. Stewart v. Garnett, 3 Sim. 398.

3. The compulsory manumission or sale of slaves effected by the Abolition of Slavery Act (3 & 4 Will. 4, c. 73), so impressed slaves with the character of personal estate from the passing of the Act, that the compensation money for slaves passed under the will of a testator, made after the passing of the Act, and who died before the period of manumission had arrived, although the will was not attested so as to pass real estate. Richards v. Jamaica (Att.-Gen.), 13 Jur. 197; 6 Moo. P. C. 381.

4. In estimating the compensation due for the loss of sugar estates unduly held under sequestration for a number of years, and of the actual produce of which during that time there was no evidence:—Held, that the allowance of 10*l.* per annum for each negro on the estate is not a right principle to proceed upon. Semble, that the proper principle to proceed on, under such circumstances, would be to ascertain the average number of hogsheads of sugar such estates usually produced, and to award compensation for the value of that number in each year, after deducting a proper sum for the expenses of cultivation. A country reconquered from an enemy reverts to the same state that it was in before its conquest. The British inhabitants of a part of the French dominions which was conquered by the Dutch, and afterwards reconquered by the French, ought therefore to have had, after its reconquest, the same protection that they were entitled to under the treaty of commerce of 1786; and were awarded compensation in respect of losses, after the reconquest, by sequestration of their property, in contravention the French Government.

Offences against the Slave Trade Acts may be established by circumstantial evidence; but the circumstances must be such as to satisfy a reasonable mind that the suspicion as to the character of the vessel is well founded. Ib.

Where articles of merchandise usually employed for the purpose of the slave trade, but capable of being employed for lawful commerce, are found on board a vessel seized on suspicion of being so employed, it is not sufficient to consider merely of what the cargo of the vessel accused of being implicated in the unlawful trade consists, but all the circumstances of the case, and more especially the locality in which the vessel may be found, must be taken into consideration. Ib.

A native of the Ionian Islands purchased an American ship, and, upon a declaration that he was a British subject, obtained from the British consul at Cuba a provisional registry of the ship as British. The ship was afterwards seized and condemned for a breach of the Slave Trade Acts. Upon a preliminary objection taken on appeal to the jurisdiction of the Court below, on the ground of the national character of the owner of the ship and cargo:—Held, first, that the registry, flag, and pass of a ship carry with them the presumption that they are true and correct, and that the owner was estopped from proving that he was not a British subject, and consequently that the registry of the ship was void. Ib.

Held, secondly, that even if he could have established that the registry was void, and the ship not entitled to claim the protection of any flag or nation, yet that the ship was, by 2 & 3 Vict., c. 73, liable to be adjudicated upon by a Vice-Admiralty Court for a violation of the Slave Trade Acts. Ib.

1. An Italian merchant ship was seized by an officer (acting unofficially) in the harbour of Sierra Leone, under the impression that she was a slaver, and had violated the provisions of the 5 Geo. 4, c. 113. The master applied to the Vice-Admiralty Court of Sierra Leone for the release of his ship, and for damages and costs for its detention:—Held, that the seizure of the vessel was quite unjustifiable, and that the master ought to recover damages and costs for its detention. The Ricardo Schmidt, 1 L. R., P. C., 268; 12 Jur., N. S., 895; 36 L. J., P. C., 3; 4 Moo. P. C., N. S., 121.

2. The O., a Portuguese vessel, was seized on the 5th December 1876, whilst lying at anchor in the harbour and port of F., in Sierra Leone, as liable to be forfeited for offences committed against the provisions of 5 Geo. 4, c. 113, and 36 & 37 Vict., c. 88 (the Slave Trade Act 1873), but was subsequently released by the Court on it appearing that she was not engaged in the slave trade, but was chartered and intended to carry free immigrants:—Held, on appeal, that the seizor was rightly condemned in costs and damages. Although certain articles on board (shackles, an extraordinary number of empty casks, an extraordinary quantity of rice and mats) are included among the equipments which are declared to be primâ facie evidence of a vessel being engaged in the slave trade, both by the treaty between England and Portugal, carried into effect by 6 & 7 Vict., c. 53, and by the Slave Trade Act 1873; yet the seizor having had the means from the surrounding circumstances and from the ship's papers of informing himself of the true character of the vessel, and the true condition of the men on board who were alleged to be slaves, had no reasonable grounds for the suspicion that the vessel was engaged in or fitted out for the purpose of the slave trade. Reg. v. Casaca, 5 L. R., App. Cas., 548; 49 L. J., P. C., 41; 43 L. T. 290.

The obligation upon a seizor to justify the seizure under the Slave Trade Acts of a vessel plainly engaged in bonâ fide trade within a harbour is a very strict obligation. Ib.

The Ricardo Schmidt (1 L. R., P. C., 268; 4 Moo. P. C. 121) approved. Ib.

A reasonable suspicion that the alleged slaves had been kidnapped on board with the object of carrying them as free labourers, and not of consigning them to slavery, would not have justified the seizure and detention of the vessel. Ib.

According to the true construction of the Portuguese treaties, the consent on the part of Portugal that certain articles mentioned in the first schedule to the Slave Trade Act 1873, when found on board a Portuguese vessel, shall be considered as primâ facie evidence of her being engaged in the slave trade, relates only to vessels on the high seas, and does not extend to vessels in a foreign port or foreign territorial waters. The fourth section, therefore, of the Act cannot be extended to a Portuguese vessel lying in British waters. Ib.

3. Proceedings taken against a vessel seized under the 2 & 3 Vict., c. 73, are to be according to the rules and regulations established under the 2 & 3 Will. 4, c. 51, and not according to the forms of the civil law. Guimaraens v. Preston, 4 Moo. P. C. 167.
